I want to be limitless I want to know myself as limitless many people feel that the form that this moment takes how could I accept that because this form limits me so much and this could be where you live, it could be relationships it could be your physical body you cannot not encounter limitations in the world of form you can change, you can have slightly more pleasant limitations you could be sitting in a tiny little room and saying I'm so limited here, I want to expand I want to live in a mansion and you might succeed ten years later, five years later you live in a mansion you seem to have expanded and then you sit in your mansion what now? for a while it feels great you have expanded because you have identified with the thought form of mansion you have expanded but sooner or later the mansion will limit you in other ways your new life situation will suddenly show you there are other limitations you may become famous and suddenly discover that great limitations come with fame you are free of the limitations that came with poverty and now you encounter other limitations that come with that so it's yes you can play around with different forms in your life and experiment and expand into other forms not expecting to find the limitless in the world of form and realizing in one way or another the form that this moment takes will be some form of limitation that it is in the nature of form to be limited and that's a deep realization and then the running away from the form that this moment takes the reactive relationship to the form that this moment takes isn't there anymore when you see the truth of this and are able to say yes to the form that this moment takes instead of resisting the form that this moment takes internally which keeps you trapped in your own mental form so what does that mean? it means quite simply you become friendly with what is it doesn't mean now you are condemned to non-action out of that state of yes, intelligent action arises when it's needed not when it's not needed you embrace what is even if it seems very limited or limiting because it already is you can't remove is out of existence so you become internally aligned with that so when you say yes to what is space arises so to speak around what is this is a way of speaking but that's all we can do here a sense of space or spaciousness arises around the form that this moment takes and that liberates you from the limitations of form and you cannot find the spaciousness by always running away from the forms that arise but being with them surrendering to the form that this moment takes is the key the inner surrender whatever is part of the totality the web of interconnectedness that is the universe this event is part of that there is a certain inevitability to the form that this moment takes yes, then perhaps action arises and it changes you're actually amazed how quickly the form that this moment changes and you don't resist it anymore internally because a greater intelligence comes into play now and things, miraculous things can happen even on the level of form but they didn't happen when you lived in non-alignment with is they only happen when you live in alignment with is and to some people that means yes to the most dreadful limitation and that is why traditionally people who reached that realization found the most dreadful limitation in their life and surrendered to that the archetype of that is Jesus on the cross this is the human the human archetype this is true for each human being the most unacceptable form of limitation that a human, you don't need to be a Christian to believe this or to see the truth of it in fact if you are a Christian you may not see it because they tend to have a narrow interpretation of something that is very deep so you have somebody a human being in a situation that is a manifestation of the most extreme limitation totally and symbolically the words that came out of his mouth were at first why has thou abandoned me God, the last no no the next words that came were not my will but thy will be done which means thy will is the will of the one not to make it into a mental concept the will of the one is whatever is now not my will but thy will be done, a complete yes and at that moment the cross which is the symbol of the ultimate limitation becomes a symbol of the divine it's the dual symbolism of the cross it's a torture instrument and it's a symbol of the divine and that is whatever may be happening in your life and be the limit the greatest limitation in your life it is not only the limitation it's also the opening when it's not internally resisted the opening into space because space comes with a yes to what is you are no longer bound to what is you are no longer bound to the form you know yourself as the formless one life one consciousness ah that's the true happiness that lasts the heart of happiness the core of happiness not the superficial happiness that goes in the next moment that's so nothing needs to change for this to happen in your life this transition whatever is is the best that is for you at this moment you work with that, say yes to that don't believe the mind when it says ok I'll say yes when I get this out of the way and enormous power moves into your life the very intelligence of the universe manifests through this form which then becomes an opening and it's the end of suffering the end of the suffering entity you may still get a toothache from time to time but that is how it is too you surrender to that also surrender that's all no time is required for the shift in consciousness you can only do it now yes to now and find yourself through that

[Speaker 4] (6:03:57 - 6:04:05)

thank you

[Speaker 2] (0:07 - 0:10)
Conscious sitting down.

[Speaker 1] (0:12 - 2:55)
There's a species that has developed out of Homo sapiens, a branch species called Homo turisticus. And they walk around continuously with either camera or something. You see them every day, they come in buses.

Now a strange thing is happening right now, the internet is down. Which means those of you who are joining us from elsewhere will be watching this in the future. No, I forgot the future doesn't exist.

So you'll be watching it in the present. Now when you're not, did you disappear when you're not thinking? When you're not remembering your problems, when you're not remembering whether your life is a big success or a big failure, to take two extremes.

If you think your life is a big success, you're in a state of temporary delusion. And just wait a little. A few times abdominal, a few abdominal breaths and you are in the body and out of your mind, in a good sense.

You're out of your mind, thank you, I am. Who am I? Because that also, when you ask yourself, who am I?

Consciousness awakening, at first it's painful. And then it says, what am I doing here? Not another incarnation.

I don't go into, I don't advise you to do it either, saying, I have no conceptual identity. They probably won't let you in.

[Speaker 2] (2:56 - 3:07)
We don't want people who have no conceptual identity. Technology is very difficult.

[Speaker 1] (3:08 - 2:11:15)
But then suddenly you realize you're nobody, beyond your job description and your function that you fulfilled for decades, perhaps an important function, member of the board. And suddenly you're not a member of the board, you're just bored. So a lot of our knowledge is just covering up our ignorance with words.

Entire PhDs are like that. I'm sorry that my chair is more comfortable than yours. And then there are other types of challenges that come at you seemingly out of nowhere.

It could be that an earthquake could happen here in a minute, or let's not manifest it. People who expect the conventional responses become confused. What, this is a weird person.

And so she decided to stay. And a few weeks later, when I got to know her better, she explained to me that that first night she was in her bedroom, and she said, I found you so weird that I thought you might creep in in the middle of the night and murder me. And if you're not careful, you think that all the important things is what's on the news, CNN or others, not to mention others.

I mean, they are trying to present what they think is important. I understand that, and it's their livelihood, that's fine. But if that deceives you and you think those things are really, those are the things that really matter going on in the world at this moment.

And all you look at is the deepest manifestations of unconsciousness. That should be the name for the news. So you have the six o'clock deepest manifestations of unconsciousness.

I was walking not long ago on my daily walk on this forest trail, and a couple were coming in the opposite direction, a young man and his girlfriend, wife. And as they were walking past me, he stopped and said, I know you from somewhere. Where do I know you from?

What's your name? I said, Eka, oh yes, YouTube, I'm watching you on YouTube all the time. Then he said to his girlfriend, he's a famous YouTuber.

So I have a new identity now. And now my ambition is, perhaps I too can become an Instagram influencer. All I need is weight for a different body.

In Thailand, just near Bangkok, somebody, they interviewed some near a Buddhist monastery. They interviewed some farmers and farm workers. They would give food to the monks.

That's the tradition in Buddhism in Thailand, the South Theravada tradition of Buddhism. The monks come with their begging bowls every morning. They just stand there.

And then the local people come and put food. They're dependent. It's done on purpose.

There's a wisdom behind it. All the Westerners would say, why don't they work for a living? The monks stand there with their begging bowls.

And then the poor people who hardly have enough, who hardly have enough themselves, they come and put some food, a bit of rice, whatever, in the begging bowl. And the monks just stand. They don't say thank you, because it's a privilege for you to give food to the monks.

That's part of the tradition. So the Westerners interviewed the farm workers. They said, why do you give your food to the monks when you have so little yourself?

And they began talking to each other and said, well, because we want a better incarnation next time. So we are accumulating merit. So next time we come, we are born into a better condition.

And then the Westerner asked, so what do you want to come back as in your next lifetime? And then they talked amongst each other. And finally the agreement was, we want to come back as tourists.

It's a wake-up call. Being is the one thing, of course it's not a thing, you're just using words, is the one thing that you can be absolutely sure about. The only thing that is beyond doubt in your life.

The only thing whose reality is beyond doubt. Everything else could be a dream or an illusion. Whatever you perceive could be a dream, an illusion.

You don't know that it's not a dream or an illusion. Because when this meditation comes to an end, then it evaporates into the so-called past. And everything that happens quickly dissolves, dissolves, dissolves.

The same way that a dream comes to an end when you wake up. Except that this dream seems to go on and on, replaced by another and another, if it is a dream. But what is it then that cannot be doubted?

That there is a consciousness in which, if it is a dream, whether it's a reality or a dream, it doesn't matter, the matter in which it arises, in which it is known, the light in which it appears. So your presence cannot be doubted. Whatever happens in that presence can be doubted.

But for it to happen, there must be a presence. And of course, I said your presence, it's not your presence, it's the One Universal. I particularly welcome those of you who are getting tired of their personality, that cumbersome thing, that weight you carry around, and creates the same old stuff again and again.

It's a good point to reach, to become tired of yourself. That is sometimes misperceived, and then you think you're tired of the world, you're tired of living, you're tired of... It's a misperception.

What you're really tired of is the self and the world that it creates, or seems to create, out there. And the same old conflict, the same old problems, or different problems, but basically the same, if you're deep down, the same old thoughts in your head again and again, the same complaints, oh dear. So the spiritual path, there are many practices you can use in order to access the dimension of presence, which is the spiritual dimension.

But the most direct practice that immediately accesses that dimension, we could call that surrender. What is that? It is to offer no resistance or opposition to whatever arises in the present moment.

Whatever happens, whatever arises, whatever people say or do, to become one with the is-ness of the present moment. The present moment always already is the way it is. There's no doubt about that.

Whatever form this moment takes, it is as it is. And if internally then you give up opposing, which is the normal state associated with dense personalities, instead of opposing internally what is, getting upset, getting angry, arguing with what is, either just in your head or out aloud, telling people what they should have done or should be doing, what they're not doing, what it should be like, what it isn't like, what I should be doing, what I'm not doing, whatever form the opposition takes, and I mentioned a few minutes ago, those of you who are getting tired of the old personality, and of course this is part of the old personality, the way in which it interacts with people and events and places, it's not usually pleasant.

There's always some resistance, always something not good enough, always something missing here and now. Wherever you go, the structure stays with you, goes with you. So you recognize that that's an important part of the false self that lives through opposition to what is.

It strengthens itself through that sense of separation, separating itself from what's going on, condemning it, judging it, and people. And then you realize, what happens if I just accept that whatever arises in the present moment, say, oh, that's what it is. You can still take action, but the foundation is acceptance, surrender.

And then immediately the false self can't really operate anymore. And something else comes in which is essence, which is awareness, which is consciousness itself. So the most fundamental spiritual practice is surrender, so that internally you're one with what is.

And immediately you are a spiritual master, because that's all a master. A master does not necessarily have more knowledge than you. You may have much more knowledge than a spiritual master, but the master lives in alignment with the is-ness of the present moment, that's all.

And that's where the power arises, because when you're aligned with the is-ness, that inner spaciousness opens up, essence is there, and that is the power that then moves through you and can become a thought, it can express itself in form through a thought, an action, a movement, something you do or make in many ways, or just as an emanation. That is true power, but it's not your power. It's universal power, and you become one with it.

Welcome to another live meditation. Sometimes people ask, what is meditation? And meditation could be defined in negative terms, simply by saying, you're no longer waiting for the next thing to happen, but you're not going to sleep either.

And, of course, to be added to this, you're no longer dwelling on the last thing that happened, or the one before, or the one before, but there's simply complete attention to this moment, and this is what we are here to learn and deepen, paying complete attention to this moment, without reference to the past. We're not imposing the past on the present. How do we usually impose the past on the present?

By commenting, interpreting, labeling, liking, disliking, saying good, bad. That's how we impose the past on the present, in other words. So in thinking, we perceive the reality, the external reality, through the veil of thought, which is conditioned by our past, the culture you grew up in, your personal history, the collective history, and so on.

When enormous liberation comes, the only true liberation, we no longer compulsively label and interpret things as they happen, or as they are. Whether it's things that are happening around you, things that other people say or do, and one could say that a higher form of intelligence begins to operate in your life, and you're able to pay attention to something without labeling or interpreting it. And that's a wonderful practice in itself, and we're practicing this now.

We can allow this moment to be as it is, without having to call it anything. The Buddha used the expression, or something like that, freedom from opinions. Actually, it points to the same thing.

So any situation in your life that arises, you can approach it through the veil of preconceptions and opinions and conditioned thinking and interpreting and labeling, or you can face it as it is, in that pure space of awareness. Just that. And look at it.

Look in a wider sense, not just visual looking. So you look at what is, and there's an enormous intelligence behind that, which is non-conceptual. It's nothing to do with knowledge.

And as this emerges, that which before had run your life, which we could call the personality, or the person that consists of incessant mind activity accompanied by waves of emotion, that which normally runs a person's life, a person's identified with, recedes, still there somewhere, of course, but something else emerges. We could call that, and I've called it that before, your essence identity, as opposed to your form identity, which is all that most people know about themselves, is their form identity, physical form, psychological form, the me, the psychological me entity. And that in itself, without the essence, awareness of essence, which is awareness itself, your personality is a kind of present, an enormous limitation that confines you, trapped in a personalized sense of self, and nothing else, nothing, not aware of anything beyond that at all.

The spaciousness, the depths within you, the vastness of that, the peace, the aliveness that's there, completely unaware of that, and just continuously preoccupied with protecting, defending, and strengthening that purely personalized sense of self. And that's what makes up most people's lives. And it's boring, it's so boring once you see that there's no solution there ever to the dilemma that the personalized sense of self finds itself in, even considers, it considers itself to be, most people are a problem to themselves, a walking problem in search of a solution.

Part of that is that sense of, there's always something missing here, not quite right, something lacking still. Of course there's something lacking, but it's not to be found within the realm of form, that which this personalized sense of self consists of. It can only be found beyond that.

And so there's suddenly a cessation in the stream of thinking, and just a sense of alive presence. As it first arises in you, perhaps you need to set aside a time or space every day when you access that, when you're not being disturbed, but ultimately that essence identity is not something that then exists in a separate compartment from the form identity, you as the personality, which of course is still there. It's not that occasionally you take a vacation from your personality.

At first it might seem like that. That's quite a relief too, from time to time take a vacation from your personality, and that's why people meditate, and other people might take drugs, but they're very different things. So it's not ultimately a question of taking a vacation from your personality, your person, the person, but of bringing the essence identity into everyday life, not as a separate thing that you do only when you're not being challenged, but to bring that spaciousness into everyday life, even while you're engaged in activities.

And then you move in the two dimensions, you embody the two dimensions, which we could call the physical realm, the physical and mental realm, the old world of form, whether it's physical forms or mental formations, to embody the physical and mental, and to use an ancient term, the spiritual dimension. In other words, the spiritual dimension coming into this world, so to speak. We are here to deepen our sense of I.

This is the most important thing, really, that you can do in this lifetime. Most humans, that's a sad fact, are not very deep at all. Most humans are superficial.

Their sense of I is derived from external things and is derived from certain ideas in their head. About who they are. Those ideas, of course, are connected to external things, what other people think of me, what I own, what I possess, my history, all things, ideas in your head.

So when the average person says I, he or she refers to that superficial sense of self that really is derived from the movement of thought and the emotions that go with it. But the wonderful thing is that there is the possibility in every human of deepening their sense of I, so that when they say I, they no longer refer to the mind-made, idea-based sense of self, but a much deeper sense of self or being that has nothing to do with thinking and has nothing to do with external things. And you arrive there, you get there, by dropping down, taking your sense of your attention behind thinking, let's call it that.

And that's what meditation is about. And that's why we're here. And that's what's happening while you listen to these words.

Already there is a deepening in you, which is part of the transmission, which miraculously works even through electronics and the camera. And you notice that there is a sense of presence or beingness behind your thinking. And that realization is already the deepening.

And of course, I'm inviting you to enter that state of realizing that there is a presence there in you, a presence that is more essentially you, or that's I, really, that is more essentially who you are than anything in the realm of external things, physical body, or ideas in your head. So there is a dimension in you that's much more real, deeper than anything in the world of form, because that's really what the superficial sense of self comes down to. It's identification with some form, external form, thought form, emotional form.

And identification with form means, what does that mean, identification? It means you derive your sense of self, of I, of who you are, from a few, some accumulation of forms, ultimately thought forms, emotional forms, thought forms. External forms are really also ultimately experienced as thought forms.

You cannot experience anything out there as it is. It has to become through sensory perception, and as your mind is transformed into a mental image, and that's the thought form. So identification with form is, if there's nothing else, of course the form dimension is there, you cannot deny it, but if that's all there is in your life, then you are a superficial human being, and a superficial human being is anxious, fearful, easily upset, worries a lot, gets depressed when things don't go as they should, gets temporarily elated when something so-called good happens, but it never lasts very long, and often even the elation turns out to be a delusion.

So a superficial human being is continuously frustrated in their search for something more real, more lasting, but because they are looking for that which is more real, more lasting and more fulfilling in the realm of forms, they never find it. And they remain superficial. But that which is more deeply fulfilling than anything in the realm of form is very close to you.

You don't need time to arrive at it. You don't need to acquire it. It is very close.

That space where you are essentially formless but intensely alive, intensely intelligent, but formless, that formless inner space is very close. There was an astronomer who once said that outer space, we don't realize how close outer space is. He said you can get in your car, and if your car could drive vertically upward, within an hour's drive from where you are, you would be in outer space.

An hour's drive is not that far. So if you go upward, you drive for an hour, and you are in outer space, a totally different dimension. Now inner space is even closer than that.

And when we call it space, it's another word for formless, undifferentiated. So on the one hand, your I is the surface I of the physical body, of all the sense perceptions, of thoughts and emotions. That's the surface I with its name and its history, its temporary form.

And then there is the deeper I. As far as the surface I is concerned, you and I are different. Physical appearance, different kinds of thoughts, different history, different name.

But as you go deeper within, behind thought, where all there is is a sense of presence, beingness, or aliveness, that's exactly the same presence, beingness, or aliveness that is in me. And if we both go to that dimension of depth within ourselves, we can meet there in a sense of oneness. The surface self, there is no oneness there.

It's all differentiated. So if I'm stuck only on the surface dimension, every other human being is totally other. That's the egoic dilemma.

The ego actually wants it, because it defines its identity through the otherness of others. So it loves to criticize and judge and dismiss and gossip about the faults of others. So it makes the others more other than it feels more itself.

Love is totally impossible in that state. And what the ego calls love, of course, is not love at all. It's a clinging and a wanting.

It's only when I realize that apart from my surface self, there is a deeper I that has nothing to do with thinking or any form, and if I can sense that deeper I as a silent presence within, not just when I go and sit on the floor and meditate, it's fine there as an introduction to it, but in everyday life, so that you can simultaneously be the form I, the form identity, and the deeper sense of self. You can function in this world on the two levels.

Welcome to our live meditation. And I trust you're not waiting for me to start the meditation. Because then you would have missed that it started already, and you would think about meditation in terms of doing something, but you don't actually do a meditation.

As long as you're doing a meditation, you're not really meditating, or the meditation is not fulfilling its purpose. Meditation, true meditation, is not a technique or a mantra. It's about becoming aware of the being dimension, that's already the essence of who you are, and you don't have to do anything to become aware of the being dimension.

In fact, all you have to do is to stop doing, and that's not a doing. Now, to stop doing does not necessarily mean stop external activities, but it means not to be focused exclusively on doing, so that your entire attention is continuously absorbed by the doing dimension, which, of course, all goes back to thinking. Thinking is doing.

And then it becomes some external activity, which is fine, because that is one level of who you are. You have to do things in this world, and you have to think. And it's good.

Doing and thinking is good. But if that's all there is in your life, then you're missing the deeper dimension. And then doing and thinking, this continuous absorption in that dimension of form, becomes frustrating, leads to anxiety or depression, burnout, a sense of meaninglessness after a while.

And all those who are not in touch with the deeper dimension, the dimension of being, which is the essence of who you are, which I sometimes call the essence dimension, or your essence identity, being able to sense, and this is why we are here now, being able to sense your essence identity, in addition to having a form identity, which is always connected with some kind of doing or thinking, that is liberating.

So what you are liberated from is an exclusive identification with who you are, on the level of form, the body, the mind, and whatever the mind identifies with in the realm of form. Mental images that arise, that the mind identifies with and says, that's me, that's my body, me, my possessions, my status in society, my work, my function, my social function, my social and economic position, my class, social class or background, my knowledge that I have accumulated, or any other image, which may not necessarily be positive, it could be negative, me, the victim, me, the one that was never given a chance, all these are mental images that you derive your sense of self from, and usually it's a certain bundle of images, which in every image is also a little story, and this bundle of images becomes the self, the me, or what you refer to when you say I, and yes, that is, one could say, who you are on the level of form, but even on that level, it's certain stories that you believe in, that tell you something about who you are in relation to others, and your past and your history, your successes, failures, achievements, these are perspectives on what happened to you, or what you did or failed to do, what other people did to you, one could have other perspectives, you could have the perspective, I'm a successful, wealthy professional, and your ex-wife might have a different story about you, call you an obnoxious jerk, or you can have a negative story about yourself, on this dimension of form, or one could easily have a story, I could tell you a story why I am a very unfortunate human being, you may not believe it, but I could, and it would be very convincing, and I could tell you a story why I'm one of the greatest, there would be stories, and every one of you, you could have a story that proves that you are justified in being miserable, or you could have another story that says you are actually very good, but they are all just stories, so there will be some stories in your mind, but is that who you are?

And the stories, of course, refer to other people, your reflection in the lives of others, and so they don't exist in isolation, and they are reinforced by others, and so on. Who am I? So the question is, are you what your mind tells you about yourself?

On the level of form, that's one way of looking at who you are, but there's a deeper dimension. We've just been talking about form identity, and what most humans don't know yet, because it's not taught at school, whereas it should be one of the most important things, it's not one of the most, the most important thing taught at school, there is in you a deeper dimension, and there's an essence identity that you can sense, even while you play whatever your role is, or your function is, in the world of form, and even while you do things, and deal with things, and speak to people, and even think, it is possible to sense, in the background of your life, your essence identity, and what is that?

It's this, being aware that there's a presence in you, which is not the right way of describing it, let's put it differently, being aware that you are a presence, being aware of the presence that you are, I am, another way of pointing to it, being aware, quite simply, right now, that you are aware, that you are, I am, and that has no content, it's just a knowing, a sensing, of a presence, and that is who or what you are, the one thing that you cannot doubt is that, there is a conscious presence here, I am that, before there's any content to it, that is the light of consciousness, and then things appear in the light of consciousness, or illuminated by the light of consciousness, or the light of consciousness, becomes those things, thoughts, sense perceptions, but there would be no sense perceptions, without the light of consciousness, there would be no thoughts, without the light of consciousness, in other words, there would be no world, without you, because you are the light of consciousness, in which the world appears, and that's form, the world of form, so it's a simple realization, of your own presence, or, of presence, the moment we use words to describe it, it gets distorted, because it's not, you don't become aware of presence, but when we form a sentence, we have a subject and an object, but what happens is that, presence becomes self-aware, or awareness becomes self-aware, consciousness becomes conscious of itself, and that is the awakening of consciousness, to itself, to its own essence, that can be felt or sensed more strongly, in the gap between two thoughts, when there's a space within you, of simple presence, much still taking sense perceptions, but there's no thinking, right now you don't need to think, you can just be aware, in that awareness, the words that I speak, are perceived, they're also understood, without any additional thinking on your part, the words are recognized, because they point to something that's beyond words, and you can only recognize the truth of these words, by sensing, that towards which they point, which is beyond words, and suddenly it makes sense, so, our meditation here, and as I'm talking, this is the meditation, only makes sense, if you can sense, what the words are pointing to, in yourself, and it has no form, it is, essentially, who you are, conscious presence, we don't need to go here, to the question of whether, is that conscious presence, not as many mainstream scientists, would say, is that not just an epiphenomenon, of brain activity, is it not just a byproduct, of the chemical soup, in your brain, or molecular activity, in the brain, or we might say, well, no, there is a consciousness, is not produced by the brain, although that would be the mainstream, scientific belief, if they even recognize, the existence of consciousness, or is consciousness, does consciousness pervade the universe, and is the brain only a, an instrument, highly complex instrument, that receives consciousness, and focuses consciousness, into a particular form, in which then, the universe perceives itself, as form, so is consciousness, perhaps more like a radio receiver, or a television receiver, which does not produce the program, it just receives it, and so if you destroy the television, or you destroy the receiver, and if the brain no longer functions, then that would mean, not that consciousness is lost, just mean consciousness, no longer manifesting, through that form, welcome, are you there, of course you're not there, you're here, I sometimes quote, I don't know who said it, when you get there, there's no there there, in other words, wherever you are, it's here, that applies to, the spatial dimension, it also applies, to time, there, can be used, with reference to, some other place in space, there can also be, some place in the future, I want to get there, tomorrow, I want to get to tomorrow, tomorrow, so when you get there, there's no there there, can be applied to space, and also applied to time, you're always here, and it's always now, there's no there there, let's talk about it briefly, with special reference to, the temporal, there's no there there, with reference to the temporal means, that there is never, a future, moment, there is no such thing, as a future moment, the there, the temporal there, there's only ever, the here, the here and now, nothing else exists, it just seems to, it appears to, and that appearance, that something else is there, is very strong and, it runs most people's mind, they live unconsciously, as if the there, were more important, than the here, that's the unawakened state, or one aspect, of the unawakened state, so any meditation, and our meditation here, if you want to call it meditation, is to bring your attention into, the now, so you become aligned, with reality, so that you learn to dwell, in the now consciously, that's really, the awakened state, so I'm inviting you, not just to listen, or try to understand, the simple fact, that there is only now, there isn't much to understand there, there's only now, or let me think about that, of course it's true, so there's not much to understand, but, there's only now, is a powerful pointer, to a shift in consciousness, so I'm not asking you, to agree conceptually, or figure something out mentally, but to experience, or to sense, what that implies, or what that means, there's only now, so, I'm inviting you to, to sense, let's put it like that for a moment, the presence, that is, the now, now whether you perceive that as something outside of you, or inside of you, it doesn't matter, ultimately, it's one and the same, this is a wonderful realization, if you can, join me in that, to feel or to sense, the now, itself, the presence, not what happens, in the now, what happens in the now, in this very simple now, are just words that, you perceive, and, other, the visual perception, the focus of your visual perception, and the peripheral visual perception, wherever you are, on the periphery of your vision, you see the room, or whatever it is, just as I do, but when I say, become aware of the now, the now, yes, it includes, the sense perceptions, but that's not the main thing that I'm referring to, becoming aware of the now, is to become aware of something that is, deeper than, the things you perceive, a presence, let's just say it's within you, it is, it's also without, but let's stay with the within, once you sense it within, you can also sense that, it pervades everything, a presence, that never changes, eternal, eternal, which does not mean, it goes on and on, but, it has nothing to do with time, there is no time in there, it is presence itself, another dimension, coming into this dimension of space and time, there are other pointers, one could use, to point to, that presence, that you can sense, and another one that I sometimes use, of course, is stillness, you feel a stillness, within, that presence, or that stillness, although I just said, that it is something that you feel or sense within, that's language, we're using language, it's not quite right, of course, because, you don't sense the presence, or feel the presence, subject and object, I feel the presence, that's how language works, it breaks things up into duality and multiplicity, that's the mind, but it's not really correct to say, although I sometimes do say it, I feel the presence, because, in that arising of presence, there isn't you and the presence, there is no duality, there is only, the presence, and you are, that, I don't need to point out to you, I'm sure you know that, that, as I speak, the presence can be felt, most strongly, by paying attention, so to speak, to the silence, or the stillness, in between the words, and underneath the words, that's why we call it a meditation, so again, there is no duality in that presence, you don't achieve it, attain it, it is you, it is the essence of who you are, the very foundation of your sense of identity, and that foundation of your sense of identity has no form, it is formless, timeless presence, so your true identity has nothing to do with that which arises in the dimension of form, which of course is first of all the physical body, and then it is the thought forms that arise in the mind, and then it is emotional formations that come and go, and then it is external things you identify with that give you a sense of who you are, that's all very limiting, you don't need to push that away, or push that out of your life, but realize there is something much vaster than that, if you miss that vastness, then your life is a very limited affair, reduced to the merely personal, and the most you can hope for is to identify, perhaps to go beyond the personal, a bit more with the collective, you identify with us, a group, which is dangerous by the way, if there is no transcendental dimension to who you are, so if you are unable to leave the world of form, then you have only the personal sense of self, or the collective sense of self, so the me, or the us, both are very limiting, both are ultimately egoic, but that's all people know, now in quite a few people, the formless dimension, the timeless presence, sometimes shines through a little bit, although they are identified with form, there are moments and on occasion that some presence shines through, they don't realize that, but it comes through when there is pure contemplation of beauty, for example, it comes through when there is an appreciation of just the presence of another being, without wanting anything from them, it comes through when there is some selfless action, helping somebody or being truly open, listening to somebody in that state of openness, when there is an experience of joy and aliveness, there is some presence coming through, and some people have that more than others, so the degree to which people are trapped in form, varies from person to person. For today's meditation, I'd like to have a little bit more silence, I believe we are ready for that, at least most of you, I'd just like to explain how this works in the context of our technology here, when I'm not speaking, all you do is you look at the screen and you look at the image on the screen, my job is to be here in the state of presence, which means to hold the state of not thinking, and as you look at me, please realize that you're not really looking at a person, it looks like a person, but when there's no thinking, no form consciousness, no concepts, where is the person? The person is generated by thought, so when there is no thought, all there is is something that's prior to the person, more fundamental, more basic, more real, formless, just consciousness, so it can be helpful then, if you're receptive, to be with someone, even if it's only through the means of technology, to be with someone who is in that state of no thought, which means above thinking, not below thinking, because that apparent person has become transparent to the light of consciousness, and somehow if there's even the slightest opening in you to that, you can sense that there is something there that is deeper than the person, in fact the person becomes irrelevant, but that in you that senses that, is of the same frequency as consciousness itself, so if you even have the slightest glimpse of there's something that transcends the person when you look at the image on the screen, you're right, but at that moment, you have already transcended to some extent your own person, person being form identity, psychological form identity, consists of thoughts and images, so it may look at first a little weird, as the human mind would tell you, to be staring at a person on the screen who is staring back at you, and perhaps once or twice a thought will come into your head, this is weird, it's just a thought, it's not really weird, it's much more weird to be trapped in your mental noise for most of your life, and to live on the basis of that, which is a false sense of identity, so what you endeavour is to, as you look at the screen, and don't wait for me to say let's start now, let's consider that we've already started with our silent meditation, because silence underlies the words, that is in between the words, all you need to do then, it's not doing at all really, is you're looking at the screen and you're aware of the sense perception, and you're aware that you're aware, you can sense the presence that you are as you look at the screen, and you're alert, you're aware that there is awareness, otherwise you wouldn't be seeing anything, or hearing anything, so the prerequisite for any sense perception is awareness, consciousness, so you become aware of that in yourself, and what the technology here provides is a reflection of the consciousness that you are, a helpful reflection, that's all, when thought comes in, you realise the thought has arisen, and you watch it like a cloud, and then it drifts past, and there's a space again, don't believe when any thought tells you, as we sit here, don't believe when a thought tells you that this thought is more important than sitting here in presence, thought likes to do that, it comes in to think about this, no, you've decided that the most important thing as you sit here is to be just present, if you like you can think for the rest of the day when we finish here, plenty of time for thinking, but this is a time for not thinking, rising above thinking, looking at the image on the screen will help you to stay above thinking, when you're feeling drowsy or sleepy, then it's a sign you're falling below thinking, so continuously looking at the image helps you to stay alert, connects you with alertness, those of you who find it hard to sit here in presence, and whose mind is still very active, thinking, feel the inner body as you sit here, feel the aliveness in the body as you sit and look at the screen, feel the aliveness in your hands, your feet, your legs, your arms, there's a field of aliveness, the life within the body, feel that in the background, that takes attention away from thinking, and then you have two things, you have the sense perception, that is helpful, takes attention away from thinking, and the connection with the inner body, and those two should keep your mind fairly clear, if you're able to hold attention there, it's no effort, just effortless, close your eyes for a moment, presence, spacious awareness, aliveness, life itself, the life that you are, consciousness, open your eyes, present, within and without, look at your left or right hand for a moment, see the hand, the skin, the texture, how it reflects the light, without thinking, just present awareness, sense perception, appearing in the field of awareness, looking back at the screen, awareness remains, what appears, changes, that's sense perception, form, look away for a moment, any object where you're sitting in the room, no matter what it is, look at it for a moment, take in its shape, its color, no mental labeling, just an aware presence behind the sense perception, amazing shift from continuously labeling everything and just being there as the presence, look back at the screen, space of awareness remains, this is how you gradually become free of being dominated by the person, of course you're still a person in your daily life, but there's something more vital and more powerful that arises from behind the person and begins to shine through the person, everything else is meaningless in this life, if that doesn't happen in your life, what's the point? It means evolution hasn't happened for you, no, it doesn't matter to the universe, but to the little entity it does, in ultimate terms it doesn't matter at all, only in relative terms, of course in miracles there's delay, does not matter in eternity, but it is tragic in time, there's nothing to think about now, now there are two movements inside you, one is the awakening consciousness and the other is the pull of the person of unconscious thinking that wants to continue to be in control and run your life, you cannot fight the person or the thinking mind, you can only recognize yourself as the presence behind it, there's an inertia in everything and the person is the principle of inertia, the gravitational pull, back into my drama, into my imagined problems, back into the old reactivity that keeps the person alive, just waiting for another excuse for a reaction, that's the inertia of the person, as you know the word person comes from Latin and it's original meaning is mask, so it is not something that is ultimately real, it is a mask, it's a mask that actors used to wear in ancient theatre, the word consists of two parts, per, p-e-r, means through, s-o-n is the same root as the word sound, s-o-n, sound through, it's the mask through which the actor speaks, the sound comes through, your primary task is to transcend that in this lifetime because that's part of the evolution of the universe, consciousness coming in.

Make sure you're not waiting for anything so that you're completely present, not waiting for me to add anything to this moment, not waiting for anything to be added to this moment so that this moment is completely self-contained, fulfilled, fulfilling, not waiting for anything is for many people something that they very rarely experience, occasionally, accidentally, when a certain desire has just been met and then for brief moments they are not waiting for anything to be added, but most people, most of the time, are never fully present, they're always more focused on some future moment, whether it's a minute from now or an hour from now or tomorrow or next week or next year or even just getting ready to do, to go somewhere, to do something or the intervening, it's always, your entire life is an intervening period, the arriving is just very little because then you wait for the next thing, you look to the next thing, it's all a journey, but if you are excessively focused on the destination, then you miss 99% of your life because the destination, the arriving at a destination is the end of this very little there. Now what? The habit is, if the habit, the mind habit is not to be present, you can't even appreciate the destination, very briefly perhaps, and then because of the underlying mindset of ignoring, denying, diminishing, devaluing the present moment, you can't even appreciate your destination in whatever form it arrives, the achievement, the destination, the end of a task, the outcome, and so you spend your entire life on a journey to some place that always changes, but always it's some future place, some future time, that never really arrives.

The fulfillment that the future moment promises is always very short-lived. So the Buddha saw that already, perhaps the most famous statement of the Buddha, one of the most well-known statements is, in order to go beyond suffering, he says, because he says suffering is a normal state of human beings, suffering in a wider sense, it doesn't necessarily always mean you're in intense agony, but a sense of dissatisfaction, a sense of unfulfillment, unhappiness in whatever form, an underlying discontent is usually connected with this waiting for something to take you out of the present moment. All that is what the Buddha calls suffering, so unhappiness, non-fulfillment, misery, including, of course, extreme forms of unhappiness, minor forms of unhappiness, like slight irritation, the Buddha would say is already a form of suffering.

Anger is a form of suffering, although it's not recognized as such by the ego, because the ego thrives on anger, but if you observe what anger does to your body, then you will know that it is a form of suffering. So the Buddha recognized that most humans are in that non-satisfying state most of the time, unhappy, except, as I said, when some desire has just been fulfilled and then there's a brief moment of, ah, and then the next thing comes. So the Buddha says life is suffering, and in order to go beyond suffering, you have to let go of desire.

Now, doesn't that not imply that you would no longer do anything? If you let go of desire, for what reason would you engage in any activity? Wouldn't you just sit there, nothing, whatever, there would be no civilization, because nobody would be, has no desire to create anything or do anything.

So that can, I don't think he was talking about it in that sense, but it can be misunderstood easily. When he used the term desire, he was talking about, the better translation might be craving, this needing the next moment, and needing to get away from this unsatisfying present, this pull, longing, a craving that manifests in different ways, craving for sensual pleasure, sex, and of course, adding things to your psychological sense of self, obtain this or that, get this or that, I must have this, I must attain it. So the desire is that state of craving, and in order to get rid of the dissatisfaction, humans then engage in activity in order to free themselves from an unsatisfying state. That is how many humans, most humans operate, but whatever they obtain, they're not happy, doesn't make them happy, except very briefly.

It doesn't free them from unhappiness, except very briefly, but we need to realize that craving is not the only possible motivating force behind action, behind doing. You can have an intention to create something, to engage in some kind of activity. You have an intention to do this or to do that.

It does not necessarily mean that there is this force of craving behind it, which ultimately is an extreme dissatisfaction with what is, and looking for some future satisfaction, something that will be, but if you create, if you have an intention to create something, it does not necessarily imply that there's also a craving. So these are two modalities of creating in this world. One is you create because your state of consciousness is a state of dissatisfaction and lack and neediness, and so you engage in activities in order to either cover up that state, desensitize yourself to the underlying pain, emotional pain, physical, even mental, or to the belief that something or someone can free you from that state of lack and dissatisfaction.

And so that's how craving arises. And many things in this world are created out of that state of consciousness. And then a kind of civilization arises, but it's not a happy civilization.

It's a civilization where millions of people are basically unhappy, needing medication to keep going. Millions upon millions need medication just to continue to function in this life because they haven't been told that another state of consciousness is possible for every human. Nobody at school, nobody told them.

At university, nobody told them. In the media, nobody tells them, or very rarely might get in accidentally, but it's normal to live like that. You see it everywhere.

In every movie, people live like that, the characters in the movies. But there is another way, and it does not mean that you no longer engage in activities, that you no longer create things, you no longer do, but it means that the activity, the motivating force behind your activity is no longer a state of neediness or dissatisfaction. Because if it is, then the activity is stressful.

[Speaker 2] (2:11:17 - 2:11:19)
I need to get there.

[Speaker 1] (2:11:20 - 2:48:53)
I'm not there yet. I need to get there. And stress is not a happy way to live.

It's not a skillful way, as the Buddhists would call it. It's not a skillful way to lead your life. To be motivated by unhappiness, neediness, dissatisfaction, a sense of not enough, never enough, never have enough, never am enough.

And whatever you achieve or get, always gets, well, that's not quite, there's always something that very quickly comes in that is another form of suffering, no matter what you achieve. Fame, wealth, you achieve it, for a while you're elated, and then, oh, you can see it has a huge downside. Not that fulfilling at all.

So in other words, doing, acting, manifesting, creating, is not enough. It's only one part of the equation. It's only one half of the whole.

What's the other half? If doing is only one half and your life will remain unfulfilled because you're not aware that there is another dimension other than the doing, then you get lost in the doing, consumed by the doing, consumed even by thinking and lost in your thinking because thinking is also doing. So what's the other part?

So we only have one half, it's the doing, the other is the being, being. If you lose awareness of being, then you are basically lost in doing. And only if you become aware of being, which is present, then you can act, you can do from that foundation of that rootedness in being, then an intention can arise, you can delight in creating something, enjoy doing something rather than being excessively focused on the outcome, what you want to achieve through the doing.

When you're rooted in being, then you can act while you're in connectedness with being and then the action is joyful, it's invigorating. In other words, you begin to enjoy the journey, every step of the journey, it's all the journey. The arriving is relatively meaningless and then you can create, you can manifest whatever it is that wants to be manifested through you, but you become a powerful manifester.

And why are you powerful? Because you're not needy anymore. You don't need whatever it is that your intention is to manifest.

You don't need it for your happiness. You don't need it for your fulfillment. You don't need it to be who you are because you already have access to the dimension of being, the timeless dimension of consciousness itself, which is inherently fulfilling.

That's the only true fulfillment. And that arises whenever you experience a cessation in the stream of thinking. For example, now, you don't need to think while, when I finish one sentence before I start speaking again, there's a gap in which you can be conscious, fully conscious, without any mental noise, without any thought, but just presence, just awareness.

For example, now, that's the portal into being, the dimension of being. So there's nothing happening there. There's no doing in being.

There's just being. We're only interested in one thing here for our live meditation, and that is to sit together, not physically together, but nevertheless together in presence. Thinking is not important here.

As much as possible, let go of thinking without any effort and realize that you are more fully yourself when you're not thinking. And when you're not thinking, you can realize what being is, what it means to be, and you can sense the being that you are, which can be expressed as the first person singular of the verb to be, I am. So you sense, or you are, the presence prior to thinking, the clear space of presence.

That's why we're here, to be that, to realize that we are that. I don't think as I sit here. The words just come out of the stillness.

There's no thinking prior to the words, and as soon as a word has been uttered, there's just presence or stillness. So you can join me in that. As I don't need to think, you don't need to think right now, but just be present.

The great teacher Ramana Maharshi, who taught during the first half of the 20th century in India, was once asked by a visitor to his ashram, this question, how do I know whether I'm making progress on the spiritual path? And he said, the degree of absence of thought is the only true criterion for your progress on the spiritual path. The extent, in other words, to which you are free of thought in daily life, still able to use thought whenever it's needed, perfectly, more efficiently than before, more creatively, because you have access to the unconditioned intelligence itself, which is presence.

How long you can sit in meditation, formal meditation, is not a good criterion for progress on the spiritual path, but to what extent presence comes into your daily life, which initially may just mean little moments of presence in between all the doings of your life, little moments of being, awareness, alertness, alert stillness, conscious, consciously looking at something, consciously listening, consciously walking across the room, consciously washing your hands, which does not mean when you walk across the room you're thinking, I am now crossing the room, or when you look at something, I'm now looking at that tree, that you're not present yet.

It can be an intermediate step, but the actual presence is when there's no background commentary. And when there's virtually no background commentary throughout your life, that is the awakened state. There may still be fragments of thoughts saying this or that, but basically or fundamentally free of the involuntary, compulsive background commentary in your daily life.

That's an enormous evolutionary leap to live like that. But you don't need to have that as some aim, I want to be totally free, just be free of background commentary now, that's easier, than to say throughout my life I want to be free of that, well, just do it now. Renounce unnecessary thinking, be present instead.

Then the ego diminishes and eventually cannot survive in you when you're present. People have practiced traditionally all kinds of renunciations in spiritual life, in Christianity and Buddhism and Hinduism and so on. And they're still being practiced in many cultures to some extent.

Renunciation of possessions, renunciation of your name, let go of your old name, adopt a new spiritual name, renunciation of physical comforts, exposing the body to discomfort. All these can be helpful, but if the most basic renunciation is not known, then the most basic attachment will still be there, and that's attachment to your thoughts, you haven't renounced unnecessary thinking. Then setting aside a period for being present is traditionally called meditation.

So you could say that's what we are doing here, although we are not really doing anything. All we are doing, which is not a doing, is realizing our presence, realizing presence. Right now, in different parts of the planet, little points of consciousness waking up, where before there was only a person, there's now conscious presence arising.

Different parts of the planet at the same time. Chip, chip, chip, chip. And this, of course, has no form, and there's no time.

Past and future become irrelevant in presence. And that's an amazing realization that who you essentially are, your feeling of identity, of essential identity, does not need the future to complete itself. It is already complete.

It does not need the past. So you don't need past to know who you are. That's a delusion.

That's a story. You don't need future to finally arrive at some more complete version of yourself, because presence is already complete. You are already complete in presence.

One could say presence is the cream, and whatever happens in time, and whatever happens in future to you, is the skimmed milk. But once you know the cream and have the cream, then skimmed milk is not that important anymore. So as more presence arises, you lose the fear of death, which, of course, arises, because you unconsciously think you need more time to be fully yourself.

Of course, the truth is you need to get out of time to be fully yourself. So we are here relaxed and alert at the same time. Alertness does not require tension, and to be free of tension does not mean that you are going towards sleep.

And at this moment, who are you? With no reference to your story, the space of presence, not a person. You still look like a person from the outside.

So with this shift, the person recedes, and presence arises. You don't lose anything real in this. But what about my personal identity?

I don't want to lose that. If you look more deeply, at the bottom of what you feel is your personal identity, there's the fact that right now you are conscious. That's the foundation of what you sense and call your personal identity.

Consciousness is your personal identity. It gives light to the story of who you are, which consists of thoughts and your past. Past is thoughts.

The consciousness is the light behind your story. Without it, there would be nothing. Let's close our eyes for a moment and just continue to be present without any visual perception.

If thoughts interfere, take your attention into the inner body. Feel the aliveness inside the body. Be present with every cell of the body.

Presence, of course, transcends the body, but it shines through the form. Open your eyes. Look around the room, wherever you are, and stay present.

Be the awareness behind the perceptions. Innocent, fresh perception. Alert perception.

And back at the screen. As we finish our meditation, you may want to sit a little longer in the stillness. And when you then start moving again, start doing things, carry that presence as much as possible with you.

As I don't have my bell with me, I will now simulate the bell as best I can.

[Speaker 6] (2:48:59 - 2:49:00)
Bing!

[Speaker 1] (2:49:16 - 2:49:18)
I think once is enough.

[Speaker 6] (2:49:21 - 2:49:21)
Thank you.

[Speaker 3] (2:49:47 - 2:49:50)
Your latest book is Lost and Found.

[Speaker 1] (2:49:52 - 2:50:34)
This is a very interesting challenge that came into your life not that long ago. The challenge was mercifully provided by one of your, or perhaps your most important spiritual teacher, whose name is Bhagavan Bernie Madoff. And he mercifully took away from you 30 years of savings, all their life's savings, to help you experience the essence of who you are.

[Speaker 6] (2:50:34 - 2:50:34)
Yes.

[Speaker 1] (2:50:35 - 2:50:40)
However, you did not immediately experience the essence of who you are.

[Speaker 4] (2:50:40 - 2:50:42)
I'd say that was an understatement.

[Speaker 1] (2:50:43 - 2:51:11)
And you describe it in the book, how it starts, and that's wonderful, I believe it's chapter one or two, beginning the incredible amount of the reaction and the fear that comes when you lose all your life's savings. And you describe what it did to your state of consciousness, wonderfully explained and illustrated. I don't know if you want to talk briefly about it.

[Speaker 4] (2:51:11 - 2:51:12)
Sure.

[Speaker 1] (2:51:12 - 2:51:14)
And then something happened.

[Speaker 4] (2:51:14 - 2:55:13)
Yes. For those of you, those few of you who might not know who Bernie Madoff is, he ran a Ponzi scheme and actually all over the world, and ended up stealing $65 billion of people's money. And as my husband is very fond of saying when he tells his stories, and not all of it is mine.

So we did have our life's savings in there, and we got a phone call, or I got a phone call one day, my husband was away. We believed it was very safe. A friend of ours was friends with Bernie Madoff, whose father was friends with Bernie Madoff, and anybody could put, in our particular fund, anybody could put anywhere from $600 or $1,000 to whatever amount you had in this fund.

And we just kept on putting all of our money in there because our friend had been in it for 30 years. And also, as my husband says, that you start believing in gravity when every time you throw a ball up in the air, it comes down, every time for 30 years. So we absolutely believed it was safe, and then it wasn't.

And then we got the phone call saying it was gone, and I was shocked, and in terror, I think. First I was shocked, and then hysterical, and then in terror, and then I called a couple of very dear friends and teachers who I would say, we've lost all our money, and this was very soon after the phone call, and two of them said to me, you've lost your money, but nothing of any value is gone. And I said in that moment to both of them, now is not the time to be spiritual.

I was convinced, you know, like, don't give me that. We've lost our money. What are we going to do?

We're going to be homeless. We're going to be out on the street. And what are we going to eat?

And it was such a panic. And I started very soon realizing that it was going to be unbearable to live inside my mind, that I could not, absolutely could not live inside the mind that was telling me, what did you do? I can't believe you did that.

What's the matter with you? How come you didn't diversify? Even a four-year-old knows to diversify.

And I started blaming, of course, everybody, and then myself. And the ranting and the raving was so intense that I understood pretty immediately, within a day, that unless I brought myself back to what I had, not what I had lost, to what I could find instead of the money that I couldn't, what was already here, which is that animating aliveness or that indwelling aliveness that I've heard you speak of, unless I could bring myself back moment to moment to moment, every single time my mind wandered, then I was going to be lost.

I was going to be living in abject terror.

[Speaker 5] (2:55:38 - 2:56:26)
Because when people say to me, you know, how have you lasted so long as being this sensual, sexual? I say, you know, I'm a good listener. That's what's gotten me by all these years.

I'm really just a good listener, because what reads on screen as some kind of sexual attraction or chemistry, whether it's between someone of the same gender or a younger person, an older person, that's not really what determines it. What determines that chemistry that reads on screen is when the audience believes that those two people see each other in a way that nobody has seen them before. And they make a connection that way.

And they listen to each other. And you see that they feel that they're seen. And they feel that they're listened to in a way that they haven't experienced before, whatever the story is.

[Speaker 1] (2:56:26 - 2:56:39)
That's amazing you should say that, because last night I was looking at my notebook where I occasionally write down something that I read that's interesting. And I actually then scribbled it. I brought it to read to you.

It connects with what you just said.

[Speaker 5] (2:56:39 - 2:56:39)
Really?

[Speaker 1] (2:56:41 - 2:57:02)
And this is from an interview with Richard Gere. And he was interviewed, and he talked about acting. And he said, movie acting is primarily listening.

If you're really engaged, that's all a movie audience wants to see. They want to see you processing what's happening in your world.

[Speaker 5] (2:57:03 - 2:58:09)
Oh, that's interesting, because we just played husband and wife. It hasn't come out yet. But I've known him for a long time, so that's a good...

Maybe our essence have communicated somehow over the 20-some years we've known each other. That's funny. Well, I think it's true.

And that's why acting is such a great job. Because you're trained, if you're going to be good at what you do, to listen. You're trained to be present.

You're training to be somehow authentic, and at the same time, to be open to whatever the other person feeds to you. Really, the good actors have an idea of the boundaries. But within those boundaries is the freedom to react to whatever happens.

And when you're really... What's addictive about acting is when you're with somebody like Richard and something happens that's unexpected, and everything gets quiet, and you're there in that moment, and it's actually working. Now, whether or not anybody gets it on film is another question, but that exchange is so strong that you want to find that.

[Speaker 2] (2:58:30 - 2:58:37)
What's a day like in the life of Eckhart? It sounds like a bad reality TV show.

[Speaker 1] (2:58:38 - 3:00:10)
It's not terribly interesting. It's very ordinary. Unless when I'm traveling it gets a bit more interesting, because there's a plane to catch, and there's a hotel, and so on.

But when I'm not traveling, it's extremely ordinary. I love being, so there's always set aside time for just being still or walking in nature. And I'm notorious for not meeting deadlines.

everybody knows when they say this needs to be done, this thing needs to be done by so and so. Well, we'll see. And I love night times, so I sometimes don't go to bed until 1.30 or 2, and sleep about 5 hours. And I like little things, going to a cafe, have a coffee somewhere. Nature, as I said, love walking in nature, reading occasionally, being, doing whatever needs to be done, people call, there's always things that need to be done, I do them quietly. Some things don't get done at all, and then they disappear.

[Speaker 5] (3:00:12 - 3:00:14)
Laughter Easier for you, right?

[Speaker 1] (3:00:14 - 3:21:26)
Laughter Are you still able to go out in public, though? What? Still able to go out in public?

Well, that is interesting, I go out usually with a baseball cap, which I never really liked, but I've been wearing them for years now. And the, because I love privacy, I love to be invisible, I love to be in a room and being able to just observe what goes on in the room without anybody being aware that I'm there. That's more difficult now, so often people come up, even with a baseball cap, they come up and usually it's lovely, they say some, that it's been so wonderful, my life has changed, it happens almost every day.

And that's wonderful, I prefer not to be recognized, but the moment it happens, I'm happy, and I respond, and it's a loving interaction. But my preference is not to be seen. I'm an introvert by nature, so even to go out and give talks was a very strange thing for me.

I knew that this is what the universe wanted me to do, or the universe acting through me, so it's things, one surrenders into things, and then they're fine. It's not my nature to go out on stage and talk. And so every situation brings its own challenges, the loss of privacy and so on, could be seen as a challenge, and requires then surrender, to see in this world there are polarities, you gain something here, you lose something there, in the world of polarities, on the surface level, you experience polarities.

The gain here has to be paid for something. So the fact that the teaching has gone out to so many people, that's wonderful, of course then, yes, privacy is lost, you need to accept that. Before I had privacy, but very few people were reached by the teaching.

I did workshops in the 80s and early 90s, there was one evening talk in England that had been scheduled, nobody turned up. I was alone, I just sat there. But I had my privacy.

And then I had a workshop once scheduled, usually I had about 7, 10, 12, 15 people for little workshops, one workshop had been, somebody had organized a workshop for me, and I arrived for a weekend, Saturday and Sunday, one person turned up, waiting at the door, and said, OK, let's do it. So not that many people were reached, but wonderful privacy. So that's how it is, it's simple, I don't live in an ashram, where some spiritual teachers live in ashrams, where they're surrounded by people who go, and that can be, of course, comforting for a while, to the ego, if you still have an ego, hopefully not the spiritual teacher, but it's not, I prefer to be in normal, everyday life, and go to the supermarket, so it's not interesting, unfortunately, and not even glamorous, except occasionally when I visit Oprah, then suddenly it's, ah! Driving into the big, the gates open to the big mansion, and you drive in, oh! But otherwise not that much glamour.

Teach the child to be aware of their pain body, not while it happens, because nobody will be listening to you. You cannot make even an adult, you cannot make them aware of their pain body in the middle of a pain body attack. That does not work.

The human ego has to, at that point, the human ego has to develop and grow. Unfortunately, the way it is for most humans on the planet so far, is the human ego should be a limited time period when it grows in a human being, let's say up to the age of 20, 25, at the most 30, let's say mid-20s. Then the, you cannot prevent the arising of ego in a child and an adolescent, nor should you want to prevent it, it's not possible.

They need to develop a sense of separate identity that is part of the evolution. The tragedy is, unfortunately, if people get stuck with that ego for the rest of their lives, they never go beyond it. So, for a parent to begin with parents, it's to observe the growth of the ego in the child, which already starts with, may start at the age of two or three, when the child begins to, well, the child learns his or her name, and then the child learns that it is possible to possess something.

It learns the concept of mine fairly early, and so it possesses a toy, and it learns the concept of my toy, that's the beginning of ego. And then, also the beginning of the suffering that comes with ego identification, because if the toy is lost or disappears or somebody takes it, enormous suffering arises. Oh, my toy, mine!

This is the early suffering of egoic consciousness. The next step would be for the child to assert that it is better in some ways than another. I can jump higher than you.

Can you jump this high? No, you can't, look at me. I can do it.

And parents say, you're great, you're doing it, and that's fine, if you don't overdo the praise. Give praise when praise is deserved, but don't just praise anything, because then there comes an inflation of praise, and that can create a narcissistic personality, which is an overblown ego. Many parents these days do that.

They say, everything you do is so great, you're the greatest, you're wonderful. It feels good for the child, but, you know, when you print money, when you print money, it loses its value. It's called inflation.

I know that, but many politicians these days don't seem to know it. And they probably have a degree in economics, but that's on the side. So you are there to gently guide them, you observe the growth of their ego, has to gently guide them, and school, ideally, should prepare children for adulthood, and should also prepare them, perhaps, for the transcendence of ego.

Perhaps they can even, just when I said 25 years old, just a number came to me, could already be at 21. Ego is something that needs to be overcome, but something that is necessary for a certain stage of human development. So schools should encourage children not to excessively identify with concepts.

And there are a few alternative schools, I believe, that already, to some extent, do that. There are, perhaps, I don't know, Montessori schools, or Rudolf Steiner schools, and so on. To some extent, they encourage children not to be excessively drawn into conceptualization at an early age.

That is very dangerous. Also, to be given the devices at a very early age has a very detrimental effect on their development. I know it's an easy thing to do for parents, to keep them quiet, but it is not good for the growth of their consciousness.

Children need to remain in touch for as long as possible with nature. Some way, they need to be taken out into nature. Even if it's just a park, but preferably out of the city, periodically, where they are encouraged to interact with nature, leave all the devices behind.

Every school should do that, take them out in groups where they spend time connecting with nature without their devices. These are all important things. Also, to teach even abstract subjects, like mathematics, and so on, at too early an age is also detrimental for their development.

So, there are many things that I know, I have met quite a few teachers over the years who are already bringing that into their classrooms. But so far, it's mostly on an individual basis. It's rare that it has become, for it to become already part of the official curriculum, that's still relatively rare.

Although there are some schools now also, I don't know what schools they are, they may be private schools, that teach mindfulness, so-called. I don't often use that term, but basically, mindful is to be present in what you do. I don't use that term because it implies that your mind is full.

So, I'd rather not use that. But they teach mindfulness. So, for a parent to encourage the child not to get lost in conceptualization, to encourage the child to continue to interact with nature.

If you can't have an animal in the house, that is nature too, a cat or a dog, to encourage the child to look after the animal, to relate to the animal. Very important. Animal presence can be very important in a home, especially for children.

So, it requires teachers to finally establish the teaching of presence as part of the curriculum, and that implies also, it signifies help children to become aware of their emotions. That's one of the most vital things. And if it's not taught at school, the parents have to do it.

Well, the parents should do it anyway. Help the children to become aware of their emotions, because the emotions can wreak havoc with the child's life, and sometimes they get amplified in the teenage years, when many adolescents become very hostile, and they're consumed by negative emotions, by self-hatred, by hatred of others, by hatred of everything. Very destructive emotions.

So, the most vital thing that a child already at an age of four or five, needs to begin to be taught to observe his or her emotional field, rather than be always taken over by it. Many children, almost all children, already have pain bodies. Some stronger than others, and that's another important point here, where when you observe the tantrum, earlier, in the previous session today, somebody said their mind sometimes feels like a toddler's tantrum taking place in their mind.

Yes, the tantrums of toddlers can be quite violent. They may throw themselves on the floor, and scream, or throw, and that is the pain body. So, I would highly recommend, and this should be done at schools, as part of the curriculum, and there should be children, there are a few children's books that teach that also, teach the child to be aware of their pain body.

Not while it happens, because nobody will be listening to you. You cannot make even an adult, you cannot make them aware of their pain body in the middle of a pain body attack. That does not work.

Because the only person you'll be speaking to is the pain body, and the pain body won't like it. But afterwards, the next day, you talk to the child, what happened yesterday when you threw yourself on the floor? What was that?

What was that thing that got into you? Do you remember that? What was that thing?

What did that feel like? If you had to make a drawing of it, what would it look like, that thing that got into you? What would that look like?

What color is it? Encourage the child to place attention on the emotion. In other words, there's a presence there of rather, instead of being the emotion, the child can begin to become aware of the emotion.

This does not necessarily prevent the next pain body attack. But then you do it again. Next pain body, and then the next day, that happened again.

Was it the same thing? Did it feel the same as before? Was it the same little grumbling there?

But let the child use the terms. Yes, it was the same, okay. Encourage perhaps the child to make a little painting of it.

And the next time it happens, then you can say in the middle of it, or at the beginning of it, the tantrum is starting to happen, then you can say, ah, there it is again, isn't it? And that can bring in awareness even while it's happening, but you need to prepare the child first, otherwise it won't work. And that may not necessarily stop it, it will probably continue, but at least a little bit of awareness will have come in, there it is again, isn't it?

No, it isn't, it's not. Laughter Laughter So, I also remember as a child, there was a time in my early teens, I had very negative emotions, very self-destructive, violent emotions. I didn't act them out, fortunately, but they were, I was almost consumed by very destructive emotions, and of course nobody had any idea of presence or mindfulness at that time anywhere, would have been unheard of, and virtually all parents were very unconscious.

At least nowadays there are, there's a certain percentage of parents that are relatively conscious and bring up their children consciously as much as possible, but even then, you will find the difficulty of dealing with the child's emotions, so very important at an early age, begin to teach the child to be conscious of their emotions, rather than being taken over by the emotions. The worst thing you can do is when the child has a pain body attack, allow it to trigger your pain body, which unfortunately happens quite a lot too, because the energy of this, of the pain body is so raw, and so, there's such aggression in it, that an unconscious parent will be drawn into deeper unconsciousness, and then react and start shouting, Stop it! Stop it!

Of course it won't stop it. So the pain body has spread even to the parent. So that's, these are all important things to bring presence, so that the teenage years then become a little easier.

Another important thing that also should be practiced at school, but at home environment is very important, how do the parents live? When you bring up children, the greatest teaching is how the family relates to it, how the parents relate to each other, and so on. That's what the children absorb, rather than what they are being told.

That there should be the household, there should be presence in the household, in the family environment, and a very important aspect of that is to listen to the child. It's amazing that this should be practiced also at school, but more importantly at home, for the parent to listen to the child, and you would be amazed how many cases it doesn't happen at all, because the parents are so lost in doing, they have a busy life, they are lost in doing, and the only way they interact with the child is either telling the child what to do, or what not to do. So as you can guess, I'm in the summer, the southern hemisphere, we just finished our retreat here on the sunshine coast of Australia.

It's very warm, but a cooling breeze coming from the ocean.

[Speaker 2] (3:21:37 - 3:21:42)
So let's settle into the present moment.

Access the stillness that's already within you, even though you might not have realized it. Even with people who have the most turbulent and chaotic minds, there is stillness underneath it. And to find that, it is vital to find that stillness within, because otherwise you are at the mercy of your mind, and you are lost in that continuous noise.

So here, it's helpful for you to, as I'm sure you know already, to become aware of the silent spaces between the words, rather than just pay attention to the words. In fact, be more interested, so to speak, in the silent spaces than the words. The silent space on the external level is when I stop speaking, so the sound is no longer produced.

There's an absence of sound, and that's what we call silence. Maybe not complete silence here, because there are some background noises, or perhaps you can hear birds and the noise.

But, when I don't speak, there's the absence of noise, except for the birds.

[Speaker 1] (3:25:14 - 3:25:44)
And when you're aware that there is an absence of noise, there's a silence, which is an external thing. Simultaneously, something happens inside you, and that's why it is so wonderful to be aware of external silence. You may know this already, but whether you've heard this before or not, it doesn't matter.

[Speaker 2] (3:25:44 - 3:25:47)
The important thing is to realize it now.

[Speaker 1] (3:25:48 - 3:27:57)
So, when you pay attention to silence, what is it you pay attention to? Nothing in particular. There is no content to silence.

When I speak, the words, the sounds are the content. When I stop speaking, there's no content. And if you're new to this, you might even ask, what is it that I pay attention to when I pay attention to silence?

And the answer is, nothing, really. Well, then the question arises, how can I pay attention to nothing? Well, you pay attention to that space of no content.

And then something happens inside you simultaneously. You might notice that when you pay attention to just the fact that there is a silence, you can do it when you're alone in a room, you can do it in the middle of the night, you can do it out in nature, you can do it in a church, preferably when it's empty, or a temple, anywhere where there is some silence, you become aware of it. Don't overlook the silence and don't always look for the noise.

So, what happens inside you when you become aware of that absence of noise?

[Speaker 1] (3:28:10 - 3:28:28)
Thinking subsides and you become still inside. The moment you become aware of silence and pay attention to silence, you become still inside.

[Speaker 2] (3:28:29 - 3:28:39)
The ceaseless stream of thinking subsides and what's left is only that alert space.

[Speaker 1] (3:28:45 - 3:29:07)
You may not be able to sustain it for very long by yourself, it doesn't matter as long as it's there, only for a few seconds, good enough to start with, and here perhaps you're able to sustain it perhaps during the entire duration of our meditation.

[Speaker 2] (3:29:09 - 3:29:33)
In other words, let go of thinking without falling asleep and just be here present as a presence, conscious presence.

[Speaker 1] (3:29:44 - 3:30:01)
Now, the words I speak are so simple that you can't really think about them because there's nothing to figure out. So, to understand what I'm saying, you don't need to add some more thought to it.

[Speaker 2] (3:30:09 - 3:30:28)
So, the best way of being here with me is to embrace the state of thoughtless awareness. No need to think.

And you haven't disappeared. The essence of who you are is not only still here, the essence of who you are has emerged more fully now when you are still. Largely, most of humanity has been trapped in the egoic consciousness for thousands of years.

And it has produced what we now know as human history. If you doubt that the human, that the normal state of consciousness of humans has a strong element of insanity, if you doubt that, you really need to read a book about, don't even go into distant history, there's too much of it, just read a book about the first half of the 20th century, that wasn't that long ago. Read a book about the first half of the 20th century and what happened in Europe, in Russia, in China.

Just read that and your mouth will drop open if you read it and see that actually is insane. That is, cannot be other than insane. So much suffering created not by natural disasters but by humans creating so much suffering for other humans and so many people, millions upon millions killed not only in warfare between nations but killed by their own governments.

Germany, Russia, China, in smaller places, Cambodia, just dreadful, unbelievable things. So there is a strong element of insanity in what is called the normal human consciousness because all these atrocities, these millions upon millions of people killed, they were not killed by psychopaths but the people, the number of people killed by criminals and psychopaths is very, very small compared to the number of humans killed by normal humans. Normal.

And this is why I've been saying for years, normal equals insane. It's a slight exaggeration but there's a lot of truth in it. So it is vital that we and this is why we are now again at a situation where you can see the same unconsciousness arising again in the collective going in the same direction as before but what is different here is there's a certain segment of the population where a new consciousness in whom a new consciousness is arising.

So that could save us but I cannot guarantee that it will. In the long term it's all beautiful. I know that the evolution of consciousness will proceed.

The only question is are we going to experience a regressive period for a while? That could be but no gain in consciousness is ever lost so what is happening here will become part of the collective human consciousness and even if humanity has to go through a regression as it did for example after the collapse of antiquity, after the collapse of Greek and Roman civilization which was relatively advanced humans had to go through the so called dark ages for several hundred years some people say it was a thousand years but a thousand years is very little in the whole of history. So it's not important what is important is that there is an awakening that is spreading still a lot of it is underground it is not visible on mainstream television newscast you will very unlikely that you will find an account tonight in the situation room of CNN about our gathering here this is a situation room there was a meeting at the Beacon Theater today and these people claim that it is possible to lead a peaceful and sane existence. What do you think?

And now let's go into the really good news which is what is this transcendent dimension now as a concept it's just that just a concept but what is the reality of it is it possible to experience or to know or perhaps at least to have a glimpse of that transcendent dimension not at some point in the future but here and now here and now where so what am I talking about what is the transcendent dimension let's so what we need to do now obviously is take our attention to the present moment because that's the only place where you can find the transcendent dimension of consciousness because it is timeless there is no past and future to it it is only by taking your attention deeply into this moment that you can encounter the transcendent dimension in yourself and the transcendent dimension in yourself is also who you are beyond the personality beyond the so called person and then you realize that you exist both on the level of humanhood you are a human as I call it you are a human which is your existence on the level of form physical form mental psychological form of who you are that is your temporary existence of a person and you also exist in the transcendent and that is the being human being human is who you are on the level of form body and mental form now for most people that's all they ever know about themselves that they are trapped in that level and that is what produces human history that is what produces what you can watch on TV in the newscasts tonight politics that is that dimension of consciousness then the being dimension is who you are beyond the stream of thinking step out transcend your life situation and I use that term in the power of now instead of being immersed and carrying around your life situation a burden a continuous burden some sense of self instead of that be the life you are life you are not just a life situation you are life you are an expression of the one life that manifests as the universe underlying the universe there is the oneness of life you are that one life that was there before the big bang if there was a big bang you are the one life the one out of which the whole universe came and not only out of which the whole universe came out of which the whole universe continuously comes continuously brings forth life new forms and you are that and so isn't that a much more satisfying way of being in this world than a walking problematic life situation you are life so and here on this retreat it's the recognition that you are a manifestation of the universe of the consciousness that underlies the universe and you are that universe experiencing yourself or the universe experiencing itself and you go

it's all so wonderful so the true meaning of retreat is

the retreat from your usual self from your usual mental mentally constructed mentally emotionally constructed self and if everything else is really happens on the surface of life now what happens on the surface of life can be very helpful and this is why we're here it can be very helpful it helps you to begin to let go of your identification with your usual self and then realize and of course many of you have already started or are well into that process of disidentification which we could also call the awakening process most of you are already engaged in the the awakening process has become initiated in you and then you are here in order to deepen it and some of you may not yet even know, there may be a few who may not even know at this moment what I'm referring to when I say awakening but you will unless you run away tomorrow already just give yourself a chance so we are there is the surface self that is the usual self that everybody has and for many people who are not yet awakened that's all they have or all they think they have it's very it's like saying you have an enormous amount of wealth but you don't know it so it's as if you didn't have it so when I say they don't have it, it really means they don't know that there is a deeper dimension to who they are and that is the real meaning of that is really true deprivation of really not knowing who you are on the deeper level of your being so there is the usual self and there is the deeper self and we are here retreating the purpose is to retreat from the usual self and discover who you are underneath the usual self who or what you are and that discovery does not happen conceptually after this retreat on the last day you may not be able to say much more about your real self your true deeper self than you are now and yet you might have experienced it very deeply and been in touch with it very deeply but what can you say about it what can I say about my deeper self it's hard to say anything because it's not it does not live in the world of conceptualization and you first encounter it in a moment of stillness alert stillness like now where you don't need to know your name you don't need to remember what your name is right now in order to be here fully you don't need to remember your personal history right now in order to be here fully and be fully yourself you do not need to remember your personal history in order to get that sense of being fully present and being fully yourself and that's quite amazing so you can sense something there is a sense of aliveness or presence that has nothing to do with your personal history or your name or your background or whether in the eyes of the world you are a huge success or a huge failure nothing to do with that because there we move deeper and so it's intangible you can never say I have found it now I have found my deeper self no you can't, it doesn't work like that, it cannot become an object in your consciousness because when you say I have found something there must be something that arises in your field of consciousness as an object in consciousness, you see something you hear something, you think of something a sense perception arises as something in your field of consciousness, I'm looking at the table, I have found the table or an idea comes into your head, I have found the answer as an idea but the depth of who you are that we could also call the transcendent dimension can never be experienced in that way as an object to your perception or consciousness because it is the eternal subject it is the I so you cannot know yourself in a subject object relationship you know yourself as consciousness not conscious of something but conscious and that's the sense of the deepest sense of beingness or I that you can sense within yourself right now why not now, why wait until the last day of the retreat and say oh finally I've got it get it already it does not take time to be who you are quote from A Course in Miracles or if you want the complete quote it has taken time to misguide you so completely but it takes no time at all to be who you are and this is why I go to already in the introductory session to the very core of what this is about instead of saying just wait on day two I will get you closer and on day three you get just wait, you'll get there it's always it's always here now, you are always here now, let's go back to this strange thing of in order to sense your own presence which is not your own, we just call it your own temporarily nothing is your own in order to sense your own presence you don't need to remember your past in fact if you think about your past it takes you away from sensing the fullness of being of your own presence because you drift off into and you can see you're not here you're in dreamland a kind of hypnosis, hypnotized by your mind or in the middle of the night it goes, my problems me and my problems and many people define their identity primarily as a set of problems that need to be solved and one day they hope they will arrive at that point when their problematic self has become resolved but it never does you are not a set of problems that you need to resolve so let's go back to that beautiful very simple realization that you don't need to remember anything about what your mind tells you, who you are it doesn't mean that you now have lost all your memories, no they are still there if you need them they come back whatever analogy you want to use I used to say the filing system, when you need it you can pull it out but they don't use it anymore so it's a computer analogy you use now it's there somewhere in your computer it's all still there when you need it, of course it's still there but does it have to be there always when you don't need it that continuous problematic self talk does it need to be do you need to be burdened and walk around every day of your life burdened by the problem making well it's pretending to be problem solving but it's really problem making of your mind and to carry around with you the heavy entity, the me which goes and you're trying to get to a point at some future point you think I'm going to be liberated and free of all that and then I will start living and many people even if they don't verbalize it as I do right now the underlying mindset is when I can free myself from all these problems then I can start living and of course when you're 25 you can still believe that when you're 35 you say yeah it can still happen and you become 45 and 50 ok maybe I'll really start living when I retire and then you begin to live for the retirement ok only another 3 years now and finally the day comes and then on the first day of your retirement you sit at home and say

what now

who am I without my function my social function but nobody is telling me who I am anymore what am I going to do now and then you try golf and you drive around in the golf buggy and for a few weeks it feels good and you can drink and so and then that dissatisfaction returns the same mindset and it's still there despite your retirement in fact you become more aware of the dissatisfied mind now that you don't have that many external problems anymore and yet there's still the heaviness of the mind and the discontent so that's not the way to go so the wonderful news is there is a dimension in you that we could call the dimension of depth or the transcendent dimension where you as the person becomes something else where the person can only really often compare the person that you are to the ripple on the surface of the ocean that's the person but the ripple is one with the totality of the ocean if the ripple doesn't know that its existence is problematic fearful you fear every other ripple or you want to incorporate them into your life maybe if you come with me together we'll be a bigger ripple marry me laugh and you will make me happy and I will make you happy it has been tried many times laugh so to lead a satisfying existence as a ripple that only knows itself as the ripple and not as the ocean is very frustrating you can't it doesn't work so the ripple needs to realize that it is much deeper than just the ripple there's a depth to the ripple where it's no longer a ripple where it's connected with everything and with every other ripple where it's connected with the heart of the universe not just on a human level and that is true awakening and after that and when that is realized and the ripple can sense that it's a stillness in you a presence that has no particular content then the ripple becomes relatively happy it doesn't mean in the world on the surface of ripples things still can go wrong still things can disappear and break down and ripples never last for very long that continues and yet you feel you can actually enjoy your ripple identity and enjoy the surface of life also it's actually quite nice here look at all those little ripples and ripple means whatever you perceive in this analogy ripple means whatever life form is there in your perception including yourself and whatever whether it's humans or whatever you perceive in this existence it is the manifestation of life of the one life that has manifested as a multiplicity of life forms and each life form is inhabited by the one life manifestation of the one life or the one consciousness and when you realize that the beginning of that realization is to sense the I that has nothing to do with your past or your future or your name or anything your mind is saying your simple presence that means the ripple is becoming aware of something much bigger and suddenly we have a relatively happy ripple and you can enjoy every moment of its ripple existence in a sense of wonder because it's no longer demanding that things that are not permanent should be permanent and it's not demanding anymore that the surface existence of things should satisfy me, you're here to satisfy me, you're here to make me happy you're here to fulfill me the surface of the ripple can't do that the conditions in your life they can fulfill you for a while and then it's no longer fulfilling this happens to relationships this happens to jobs that you find, activities unless you go deeper nothing is fulfilling for very long thought going a little bit beyond it there's such a thing as a collective mind many humans live virtually with a mind that has taken possession of them pretends to be them and they're stuck with it many thoughts are not your thoughts really they arise in the collective mind they are energy fields or energetic entities if any question comes into your mind right now please realize that it is irrelevant and please realize that it is an attempt of your mind to obstruct your practice of presence occasionally I may say something just to point you back to it because there is always a possibility that you may drift off into thinking it's also quite helpful as you are aware of being conscious to be aware at the same time that you are breathing to feel the breath going in and out and at the same time be the consciousness the presence thoughts are not important right now even if they pretend to be don't be concerned if an occasional ripple of thought floats around the surface of your consciousness not a problem so when you go into a meditation like this it can become very deep so that there is consciousness left pure consciousness and then as you open your eyes again, listen, look around begin to perceive externals again it's still in the background

welcome to our

meditation if that's what it is I said if that's what it is because it's a word that can also be misleading and cause you to believe that there is a separate activity in your life a regular activity that's called meditation and that is the rest of your life what is conventionally called meditation is more than just a practice it's a state of consciousness or it's a question of semantics you could say that meditation is a practice towards a state of consciousness it already becomes problematic because you are now working towards something so what is conventionally called meditation is not an activity it's not a doing so you can't do a meditation the very idea that you are doing a meditation is already the obstacle to true meditation and true meditation is ultimately not trying to get somewhere but already realizing that you are already there it's the realization of being which is prior to all doing and it's always there it's usually for most humans it's not realized simply becoming aware aware that

you are right now

[Speaker 2] (4:21:00 - 4:21:13)
and it's not concepts not thoughts you are not a thought so any idea you have

[Speaker 3] (4:21:13 - 4:21:21)
in your mind about who you are is ultimately false

[Speaker 2] (4:21:34 - 4:21:54)
becoming aware that I am here and now and that's the arising

[Speaker 3] (4:21:54 - 4:22:03)
of spaciousness inner spaciousness

[Speaker 2] (4:22:15 - 4:22:51)
and the strange thing is that's always there but if you are not aware of it it is as if it were not there in an analogy one could say

[Speaker 3] (4:22:52 - 4:23:02)
you are a wealthy person who doesn't know it and you are then poor

[Speaker 2] (4:23:04 - 4:23:24)
I use the analogy of the somewhere in a book of now maybe a man sitting on a box a beggar sitting on a box for years has never looked inside the box and the box is full of gold it's his

but he didn't know it

or you could have another amusing analogy and say that you it's like the analogy when we use an analogy we use something from the physical world to point to something that is beyond the physical so we talk about gold because it's something precious in the physical world that's how analogies work so you could also say you are destitute and you don't know that you have a bank account in Switzerland with 100 million dollars or you've forgotten a number of your bank account, well nowadays

[Speaker 3] (4:24:39 - 4:24:48)
Swiss bank accounts are no more popular anymore but just using an analogy

[Speaker 2] (4:24:48 - 4:25:35)
it's overlooking something that's incredibly valuable you can't even mean to say anything, nothing in the physical world would even compare although in analogies we use those things Jesus used the pearl of great price and so on again things from the physical world point to something beyond just becoming aware of

yourself not as somebody

[Speaker 2] (4:25:44 - 4:26:07)
as a person but becoming aware of yourself as one could say nobody, so you are both, everybody knows they are somebody but not that many people yet except those who are awakening

[Speaker 3] (4:26:08 - 4:26:22)
know that at a deeper level they are nobody nobody would also

[Speaker 2] (4:26:23 - 4:26:37)
be called no form on one level you exist as form, physical form and psychological form as the personality and the body

[Speaker 3] (4:26:40 - 4:26:47)
on another deeper level you

are the consciousness that's prior to form but not separate from form so spiritual awakening is the becoming aware of yourself as just that spacious formless presence the light of consciousness and that realization is inseparable from the present moment and you could even say that what you are or who or what you are in your essence is the now, the present moment not what happens in it but the space of now the most dreadful fate is to be trapped in your personality not knowing there is anything beyond that no transcendent dimension complete unawareness of any transcendent dimension within yourself and then you carry the burden of a personality all your life the burden of yourself troublesome anxious angry, depressed

fearful

[Speaker 2] (4:30:49 - 4:32:28)
dissatisfied always a sense of something missing always looking to some other moment in the future for some kind of fulfillment and then reaching the end of your life and it wasn't very enjoyable and you never really found yourself every life is problematic occasionally briefly brief periods may arise in your life

when you feel everything is great and then very quickly

[Speaker 2] (4:32:40 - 4:33:43)
new challenges new problems arise it's more normal for life to be problematic than to be free of problems in fact externally life never ceases to be challenging almost as if some screen writer script writer or writer author in the sky infinitely creative would always come up with some new

obstacle to put in your path whatever form it may take

[Speaker 2] (4:34:13 - 4:37:06)
and if you solve one problem another one comes up somewhere else or the very solution the very way in which you solve the problem if it was done without wisdom creates two new ones that are both worse than the original problem and I just said in the absence of wisdom you try to solve a problem without this essential element that is not ultimately intelligence to not intelligence that is measured in IQ tests but something because that's a limited form of intelligence the IQ intelligence there is more to intelligence the real intelligence is wisdom and that can only arise if you know the transcendent dimension within yourself if you're aware of that that inner spaciousness that stillness in the background while you're talking while you're perceiving while you're walking or driving you can sense the beingness that you are the I am the spacious stillness in the background in the foreground you deal with things you think you do but you're connected to the transcendent dimension which is the essence of who you are if you're connected to the transcendent dimension you will still be faced with challenges but the way in which you meet those challenges is very different from the way in which you meet those challenges you are underway on that dimension the way in which you respond to those challenges is very different what those challenges do to you you're not aware there's a lack of awareness

then

[Speaker 2] (4:37:09 - 4:38:17)
usually when you try to tackle your problems deal with the challenges of life you do so in a way that is ultimately not intelligent but is reactive and creates further problems also when you're unaware of the transcendent dimension you tend to magnify problems by your reaction to them you overreact but you don't know that you think it's a very adequate reaction

no need to think right now there's nothing to add to this moment by thinking about it so all that thinking would do is obscure your awareness your awareness of the present moment which means obscure your awareness if you have problems waiting for you you can think about them when we finish

[Speaker 2] (4:39:31 - 4:39:33)
and even then

[Speaker 1] (4:39:33 - 4:39:59)
I would suggest and recommend that you set aside brief periods when you think about your so called problems if they are real in other words the real problem is a situation that you need to deal with either right now in the moment when it arises

[Speaker 2] (4:39:59 - 4:40:09)
in which case it's not a problem it's a challenge or something that tomorrow you may have to do or next week or next month

[Speaker 1] (4:40:09 - 4:40:17)
and you may have to think about what you're going to do to the extent to which it's possible to plan

[Speaker 2] (4:40:18 - 4:40:21)
and set aside a period of time when you do that

[Speaker 1] (4:40:25 - 4:40:49)
and then when that's done come back into present moment awareness so the worst fate is for your mind to be occupied

[Speaker 2] (4:40:49 - 4:41:16)
continuously with past and future and as you know past and future exist in the mind remove the mind

[Speaker 1] (4:41:20 - 4:41:39)
thought there is no past or future past or future exists for you as thought it's indispensable for dealing with

[Speaker 2] (4:41:39 - 4:41:45)
the practical aspects of life but it's a huge obstacle

[Speaker 1] (4:41:45 - 4:42:53)
for going deeper within yourself deeper into reality a huge obstacle to finding that state of connectedness with a deeper reality a huge obstacle to knowing who you are so right now all you need to do and there's no doing just use the word all you need to do is look at the image on the screen listen to the words

which are all pointers signposts and as you look at the image on the screen and listen to the words be aware also of yourself as the still space the still presence

[Speaker 1] (4:43:43 - 4:44:06)
without which you would not be able to look at the image on the screen or listen to the words it's only because there is that light of presence that receives the sense perception of seeing and hearing

[Speaker 2] (4:44:08 - 4:44:11)
that there can be seeing and hearing

[Speaker 1] (4:44:43 - 4:44:49)
the moment you start thinking about past and future the moment

[Speaker 2] (4:44:49 - 4:45:13)
you start thinking some of your consciousness incarnates into form the incarnation

[Speaker 1] (4:45:14 - 4:45:44)
I believe incarnation comes from flesh the word incarnation is to become form, to become physical form but it's not necessarily physical you become a psychological form, every thought is that so some of the consciousness incarnates into mental

[Speaker 2] (4:45:44 - 4:45:51)
formations and that's ok

[Speaker 1] (4:45:51 - 4:46:03)
there's nothing wrong with that it's a good thing that you're able to think it's not a good thing to lose yourself

[Speaker 2] (4:46:03 - 4:46:32)
in the thinking why is it not a good thing? because it makes your life miserable and if you make your life miserable

[Speaker 1] (4:46:32 - 4:46:59)
you make other people's lives miserable without even knowing what you're doing that's the essence of unconsciousness the really unconscious people which is still millions, billions on the planet

[Speaker 2] (4:47:00 - 4:47:07)
they don't know that they are making their lives miserable and other people's lives miserable

[Speaker 1] (4:47:26 - 5:52:56)
so whatever it is realize that the primary factor in any situation is your inner state so there are quite a few people who are joining us from other parts of the planet I don't know where they are, I think it's over there now all of you here luckily have escaped the polar vortex especially if you're from places like Chicago you'll be very grateful to be here, however if you are in Chicago or similar places be grateful that you're experiencing a one in a lifetime weather phenomenon but don't forget to dress up warm enough when you go out be grateful for whatever your experience of this moment is and if you cannot be grateful at least allow it to be because it already is you might as well now if you did this little thing it sounds very little and it is very little allowing your experience of this moment to be the way it is just this little thing would remove oh well it's hard to put it in percentage terms let's say 95% of the suffering from your life I don't know about the rest the 5% we'll get to that sometime that would already remove a gigantic chunk of unhappiness in whatever form unhappiness is the most generic term one could use, the Buddha called it suffering suffering and so for the next 6 months then that obviously is one of the practices not to internally resist your experience of this moment now of course many times possibly you forget that and that's fine the moment you realize that you forgot it it's there again and then you can accept the experience of this moment as the unhappiness that is arising in you because you forgot to accept your experience of this moment and so you feel this unhappiness arising in you and you say, where does that come from? Oh I forgot to accept my experience of this moment and then you accept the unhappiness and the weird thing with unhappiness is when you completely accept the unhappiness it cannot survive very long it doesn't like it cannot actually coexist with acceptance so the weird thing then arises that you say something like okay I'm unhappy it's okay, I don't mind being unhappy and then the unhappiness goes what's going on? that's not supposed to happen the unhappiness cannot survive for very long with the acceptance even the acceptance of unhappiness not indulging in unhappiness but the acceptance now the acceptance of unhappiness presupposes that there's an awareness there that knows that you're unhappy now that might sound like something very natural but it isn't because the most unhappy people and there are still millions and of course they have reasons for being unhappy and it's not necessarily the people who you'd think would have the most powerful reasons for being unhappy it's often those who you would think there are many millions who have it worse than they but these are more unhappy than those it's often the case so the unhappiness is something that when it's recognized as unhappiness and accepted something happens to it it begins to dissolve but the really unhappy people are so identified with the unhappiness which is a combination of certain recurring thoughts in your head, a certain narrative that is not pleasant whether it is about my life whether the narrative says my life dreadful thing, my life dreadful why did it all go so wrong so wrong, wrong and now it's nothing I can do or whether the narrative is about somebody else you know what he did what she said and did and what the narrative may be about something that hasn't happened yet and it goes on and on or something that happened in the distant past or not so distant past so there's a narrative and then there are emotions that are a reflection of the narrative, the narrative is thoughts certain types of thoughts certain thoughts that have a certain frequency and then that awakens the emotional frequency because the body thinks the narrative in your mind is reality, that is the reality that you're experiencing so the body reacts with an emotion simple example at night you can't sleep because you're extremely worried about what's going to happen to you or somebody close to you or even the world and it all sounds very critical there's a crisis in your head not outside your head, there's a pillow and there's a blanket or even something big and fluffy and soft down duvet and there's no unhappiness there and if you look around the bedroom also, where's the unhappiness?

the plant is okay it's not unhappy no, it's all happening in here and then the body says that is the critical reality that you inhabit, you are there is a crisis in your life the body doesn't know the difference between what's actually happening and what's happening in your head, what's happening in your head is taken to be the absolute reality and then you experience the emotion that goes with that kind of narrative and so there's no awareness and when you're trapped in that you don't even really know that you're unhappy because you are the unhappiness the unhappiness has become your identity so when you become the unhappiness you don't even know that you're or suffer, let's use the Buddhist term suffering when you are in this deep suffering you don't even know you're suffering because the suffering is a gigantic, huge chunk, part of your sense of self, you are a suffering entity and as all therapists know that once the patient or the client or whatever they call the people that come to them according to their school the they reach a point where there's a possibility of going beyond the deep seated patterns, unconscious patterns and there's a huge resistance very often because the person is afraid of losing a very important piece of their identity and sometimes it's the most important part of their identity, if they have lived with an unhappy sense of self for years and perhaps even decades they don't want to let go and again they don't know that consciously, they never say I do not want to let go if they could say that, that means there's already some awareness so lack of awareness, lack of presence, that is the unawakened state that still unfortunately millions of humans are trapped in that but the moment you know, you recognize your inner state that means there is an awareness, there is another dimension of consciousness that has emerged in you through you a deeper dimension of consciousness that is not the conditioned thinking so we can call it awareness, we can call it presence you can call it the unconditioned consciousness and then the beginning of freedom the possibility of freedom arises and it's from there that you recognize your inner states as they arise, from there that you recognize your unhappiness you can feel the unhappiness but the moment you become aware of suffering or unhappiness in you you're no longer feeding it with your thoughts as long as you're not aware, you're feeding it as a vicious circle, you're feeding it with your thoughts, with your narrative and you're trapped in the vicious circle, your narrative creates more unhappiness, the unhappiness creates more thought and you're trapped in that so for the next six months and hopefully beyond because it's a much more pleasant way to live you make it your practice to be aware of your inner states and meaning no matter what situation arises in your life, whether it's little things, big things difficult situations difficult people challenges, problems because the next six months are not going to be free of challenges and problems so whatever it is realize that the primary factor in any situation is your inner state because that determines how you respond so no matter what it is your primary responsibility is to be aware of what goes on inside you and that means whatever arises in your life is actually to be used in your practice so that you do not become dependent on what's going on externally in your life so your inner state gradually is no longer determined, perhaps still a little bit, yes but not completely determined by outer events, people situations and so on inner freedom arises that's awakening so there's a dis-identification from the movement of thought and the fluctuating emotions there's a stepping back, you're not repressing anything, you're allowing it, but you can only allow it because there's an awareness and that awareness is you, ultimately that is what I sometimes call the deep I as opposed to the surface I the surface I meaning not this I, but that I is interesting too, it's an analogy for consciousness, the I of awareness but now I'm talking about the pronoun I, first there's the surface I which is the conditioned person, the entity that you are for a while and there is the deep I which is the consciousness my usual analogy, which probably you've heard me say, mention quite a few times the ocean the surface of the ocean the wave or the ripple is the surface I and the ocean, the depth of the ocean is the deep I and an awakening human is a ripple on the surface of the ocean that until recently had been completely identified with its ripple existence on the horizontal dimension of the surface of the ocean looking at every other ripple as another other another other, another ripple not me, it's another and always you have to be very careful with the others and the ego actually likes the others to be as other as possible and then the little ripple begins to realize that it is the there's a depth the moment it stops thinking about its ripple existence yes and that there's a thinking subsides and something else remains, something else that is very deep has no form is just a a presence if we can even call it anything a presence well, I think an empty chair works just as well as me sitting in it because all meditation is about accessing the spiritual dimension within you which the Buddha called emptiness not the best translation perhaps of the original term I think spaciousness would have been better translation or would be a better translation than emptiness so finding that dimension within you, accessing that dimension and living your life with the awareness of that dimension which means living your life with awareness rather than just with the mind so usually people think that when somebody believes in God or angels or the afterlife that they are spiritual, it makes them spiritual but that's not necessarily the case and there are millions of people in this world who believe in God and have no access, have not found within themselves access to the spiritual dimension so we are here in the case of some of you who are perhaps new to this so to speak we are here for some of you to get perhaps a glimpse of it as you sit here and watch and listen and I will endeavor to put you in touch with that depth within you without which your life is frustrating and without which everything you undertake every endeavor and every activity ultimately becomes frustrating and for others we are here just to deepen it to provide a reminder on a conceptual level but to deepen the dimension that they already have access to within so that it can be sustained in everyday life one thing is accessing the spiritual dimension in a meditation setting like here and now that's already a good thing if you are able to do that when you sit still become still inside another thing is to carry that with you so to speak so that it is there when you lead your life when you do things talk to people interact even when you think to have that in the background so we have the two steps one could almost say first is you realize that within when you are not being disturbed like now, hopefully you are not being disturbed externally although you may be disturbed as you sit here by your mind that's quite possible who says what is he talking about because the mind doesn't understand it the conceptual mind alone is not sufficient to make this a satisfying experience for you this 30-40 minutes here so for this to be a satisfying experience you need to have at least a glimpse of what it is that I am pointing to and a glimpse also of that which underlies the words and that's ultimately not in me but ultimately you can only glimpse that in you there's a stillness behind the words as I speak within myself and there can be a stillness in you as you listen to the words and that would already be a glimpse of the spiritual dimension the realization that on the one hand on one level you have the auditory perception you are listening to the words you have the visual perception you are seeing this image and on another level you also notice that there's some stillness inside you now where the mind is not active you don't need to think right now to add something to this experience so you can just let it be as it is and so the dimension of stillness which is the spiritual dimension begins to arise in you or the way we can put it you become aware that it's there now it's always there that's the strange thing it's always there all pervasive and yet most people still don't know that of course that's very much like telling a fish that there's something that's called water and the fish says where?

I don't see anything called water where is it? can you point it out to me and say where? I can't see it so this is my task is to point out the water that you're swimming in and the water inside you and that's the end of that analogy as I pointed out at the beginning the Buddha called the spiritual dimension emptiness which would be better translated as spaciousness and Jesus called it the kingdom of heaven which translated into modern terminology if you change the word kingdom which is an old fashioned concept to dimension which is a more modern concept the dimension of heaven and you can even translate heaven into a more modern concept to make it work for you as a pointer so what is heaven? ah in some words heaven and sky are the same word in some languages what is the sky of heaven is spaciousness the dimension of spaciousness is the kingdom of heaven so the Buddha calls it that Jesus calls it that and time magazine calls it mumbo jumbo that's also true from the perspective of the conceptual conceptualizing mind because if you're totally trapped in concepts thoughts then it makes no sense and the only thing you can conceive of as spiritual is some belief system you say oh these people have belief systems these are spiritual people have all kinds of weird beliefs and of course it's not that at all so it's already there it's already present within you the strange thing is it's continuously overlooked because your attention is drawn into sensory perceptions experiencing with your senses reaching out with your senses listening, touching, smelling seeing everything demands your attention and then your attention is drawn to even more strongly the the interpretations of your mind in other words thought activity which actually can make you forget a large part of sensual perception in modern humans contemporary humans there's more thought activity in them than sensory perceptions so you're being drawn into yes sensory perception even more so into mind activity and then also drawn into emotions that accompany mind activity so your life consists one could say basically of the three levels sense perceptions thoughts and emotions and what's overlooked is the deeper dimension within which all these the three others exist that's the spaciousness within you it's always there it's just a question of redirecting your attention to it but that's not absolutely right to say that but unfortunately language works like that as you sit here let's just go through it again you're aware of sense perceptions especially visual and auditory, yes there may be some thoughts arising in your mind now whatever thoughts arise in your mind here and now obviously are quite irrelevant but that's another matter there may be thoughts arising in your mind from time to time so you're listening and you're thinking what's it driving at? when are we going to start our meditation? etc mumbo jumbo thoughts come and go and you may have emotions restlessness perhaps or a thought about tomorrow what's going to happen when I go there tomorrow and you have an emotion associated with that so as we sit here notice there are these levels operating in you and then you could ask yourself who or what is it that notices these things who or what is it in me that notices that there is sense perceptions what is it in me that is aware of sense perceptions aware that there are thoughts aware that there is an emotion and that's who you are at the level of the deeper level of the transcendent or the spiritual dimension the awareness of all this the still spacious consciousness in the background so to speak you could call it just to briefly use an analogy you're aware of the canvas on which your life is drawn painted an ancient question in spirituality is the question who am I and if you look closely you see that you're not your thoughts you're not your sense perceptions you're not your emotions they come and go what remains is consciousness awareness that's the water that the fish didn't know about as far as you're concerned and it's an amazing thing to realize that there is a greater depth in you than your surface life that consists of sense perceptions, thoughts and emotions they come together in different forms so every human has a somewhat different story of coming together of sense perceptions thoughts and emotions the coming together of sense perceptions thoughts and emotions form the human being the person and they come together in each person in a slightly or sometimes very different way so it's a it's a coming together of this that this creates the temporary form that we call the person but that can only exist in the light of consciousness without that there's no nothing there so your life is a little bit like this you're watching the screen let's say another analogy, cinema screen all kinds of things happen there of course the screen is inside you so okay let's imagine that there's a screen inside your mind and on that screen your life is being enacted with thoughts and emotions and things happening drama, this and that oh wow it's so interesting or it's so dreadful or I can't stand it anymore or I want more of it I haven't had enough yet and so on and suddenly you realize that there's a screen that's inside you and you are the projector you are the light of the projector and that changes of course fundamentally the way in which you relate to the events on the screen how does it do that?

well you can see for yourself if you see that you are the light of the projector it adds this dimension of awareness to what you are witnessing on the screen it gives you a certain detachment from what happens because you realize that there is something much more essential or fundamental in you than all the things that are going on in that screen and if you don't know that you are totally drawn into the events on the screen and for most people sooner or later the events on the screen turn into some kind of drama nothing lasts for very long, there's no real security in my life why do things always have to be so frustrating but then you always look for more on the screen, you look for some kind of solution on the screen it's never there, pseudo solutions come from time to time and happy moments and then again that's because you don't know who you are or what you are it doesn't matter whether we call it who or what, who or what you are essentially which is the light of consciousness, which is the projector which can be sensed within you at any moment like now as an aware presence now this pointer is very significant it points to the essence of who you are that is deeper or higher one could say than your form identity if somebody when I was in my twenties had told me I had a big ego more on the unhappy side the victim ego side but anyway big if somebody had told me like say I had gone to a psychic and the psychic said you will be one day a great spiritual teacher my ego would have gone wow yeah I'm going to be significant now if the psychic had been a good one he would have added but you have to die first and it's not going to give you any personal satisfaction what? that sucks what do you mean I have to die first well perhaps he would have explained your entire conceptual identity has to go so when you become a spiritual teacher you are not going to be proud of being a spiritual teacher so on that level it's not satisfying and so I probably would have said I don't know if I still want it laughter so the we have the my life and it's a conceptual identity in the head and it's a huge limitation to be trapped in it again you can honor your history it's coming back to accepting and honoring who you are that's part of who you are on the level of form it's fine you can remember your past you can look at the photos you remember stories what happened but there's no longer a sense of getting your sense of self from that so how do you not identify now we come to the core of it how do you not identify with your form identity your conceptual self well here we come to the ancient Greek dictum again know thyself know thyself at the deepest level now interesting fact is at the temple of Apollo in ancient Greece there was that inscription know thyself but of course most people didn't know what to do with that well they went to the oracle at Delphi and asked questions about am I going to meet the right person and then the oracle would say I lost this ring where did I leave it and then the oracle would say please tell me where I'm going to be in 20 years time these are all very superficial things that people were seeking and this is why there was this inscription know thyself but they had put a key there a secret key on this building in order to show people how to know themselves and that secret key for several hundred years nobody knew what it meant the secret key in ancient Greek it was the letter E in Greek and just one letter on the building what does that mean several hundred years later the philosopher Plutarch explained it in one of his writings it's the second person quite simply it's the second person singular and it means you are you are and that is the secret key to the saying know thyself what does that mean you are so when somebody reads that somebody reads that it says you are so how would you when you say to yourself of course you say oh I am yes you are I am I am what now the interesting thing is nothing was added to it it just said you are it doesn't say you are Greek you are a man or a woman or you are this or that or you are a democrat or republican it just said or you are rich or poor or old or young or whatever it said you are this is a pointer it's a pointer not an explanation or anything it's a pointer so when you read you are you translate it as I am I am what now this pointer is very significant it points to the essence of who you are that is deeper or higher one could say than your form identity and let's go through this now right now we are sitting here you are sitting here ultimately there is only one I and it's sitting there and here there is only one I you are sitting here you are aware of your sense perceptions that's part of the present moment you are aware of this room you are aware of the lights, the screen man sitting on a chair talking, you hear the voice you hear the background noise boom, boom, boom, boom I think it's they call it music boom, boom, boom, boom boom, boom, boom it's noise, it goes with the beer fest that's fine you perceive the totality of this room and yourself the body you are sitting on a chair and that's the present moment one would say but it's not the depth of the present moment, it's the surface of the present moment the surface of the present moment is sense perceptions hearing seeing if you are if one of your sense perceptions is missing either you don't hear or you don't see that's fine, you have the others and so you are aware of sense perceptions, you are aware of what you hear what you see, what perhaps even what you touch and is that all there is to this moment is that all there is well you would say yes, haven't you forgotten something? no just a second how is it possible for you to perceive these things how is it possible for you to have these sense perceptions you might also have a thought may come into your head what am I going to have for dinner later how much longer do I have to sit here I don't understand a word of what he is saying laughter laughter or what you had for breakfast this morning thoughts can come and go sense perceptions, thoughts I mean your entire life consists of a mixture of sense perceptions thoughts and emotions that's basically, you mix them in a particular way that becomes your life you mix them up in a pot sense perceptions thoughts, emotions, my life is there more have you forgotten something yes, of course you have forgotten something you have forgotten that if you were not conscious right now there would be no sense perceptions there would be no thoughts there would be no emotion if you were not conscious at this moment none of this would be and if there were nobody here no perceiving consciousness would there even be a room that's debatable or would there just be certain molecules and atoms floating around in space it only becomes a room when the perceiving consciousness makes it into a room so you are the consciousness without which there wouldn't even be a room here you are the consciousness without which there wouldn't be a man sitting on a chair you are that that is the essence of who you are is consciousness now here we come to the you are conscious right now this is one way of putting it but it would be more accurate to say you are consciousness that's the essence of who you are if I say you are conscious I have created a duality there's you and consciousness is something that is added to you but the essence of who you are is consciousness and when you are aware of yourself as consciousness then you become self-aware awareness arises awareness is when consciousness which is who or what you are in your essence when consciousness becomes conscious of itself that is the miracle of awakening and that's the arising of awareness and in that arising of awareness you have transcended thinking you can't come back to thinking and think much more effectively and creatively when you access a dimension but you have transcended thinking when you realize experientially like right here and now the silent realization that who or what you are is this conscious presence and underlies everything and that you sense as yourself that you sense as your own presence I call it your own but of course it's not your own it's the presence of the light of the world you sense your presence this underlies this underlies everything it's a little to give an analogy I could give two analogies let's say there's a painting the painting is painted on a canvas and let's say you are whatever is painted on the canvas that you as a person and when the thing that's painted on the canvas, the picture is totally identified with the form of the painting that is unconsciousness and ego but let's say what's painted on the surface becomes aware of the canvas on which it is painted strange analogy but it works for a moment, it might work if you are the painting you become aware of the canvas without which the painting could not be and that means you have become aware of the substratum in yourself the consciousness without which nothing else would be wow you are that now instead of canvas I prefer to use the expression space you are the space of consciousness the inner space but ultimately there is no division between inner and outer the inner space of consciousness consciousness pervades the entire universe but of course it becomes focalized for example through the human brain which is an instrument that consciousness uses to express itself through and to create this dimension that we inhabit this was already the philosopher one of the last philosophers of antiquity Epictetus already the main thing he perhaps his main teaching is you are not unhappy because of what is happening, you are unhappy because of what you are telling yourself about what is happening and once you realize that it is an enormous breakthrough first comes the realization then you have to verify it in your daily life because it is not enough to sit here and say wow isn't that amazing okay and then you carry on as if nothing had happened then you have to verify it in your daily life which includes the retreat situation and see whenever upset or unhappiness arises where does it come from is it the situation or is it my reaction which is a mental emotional thing to the situation and in most cases you will find it is your reaction and then at that moment freedom the possibility of freedom comes into your life the freedom to choose not to be in that reactive state towards what is happening in the present moment not to be antagonistic towards whatever is going on in the present moment for you but to come to a friendly way of being with the present moment after all there is nothing else so if you don't become friendly with the present moment in whatever form it takes that is a profoundly dysfunctional state it creates continuous unhappiness and many people are in a very minor way in opposition to the present moment there is always some complaining voice of something, this shouldn't be happening and that shouldn't be happening so as particularly let's use this retreat setting here or if you are at home you can do it in the next few days in your daily life and use this for self observation I am not saying eliminate mental commentaries why not just be aware of mental commentaries and how they are related to your well-being or how they interfere with your natural well-being and once you see that when something that has been or is very unconscious when it is recognized it tends to drop away so you don't have to use your willpower to eliminate negative thoughts from now on I will not think anything negative but just be alert be alert so that you know what's going on inside you so observe the ways in which your mind complains for example and this is one of the favorite ways of the egoic self to sustain and strengthen itself is complaining either internally or out loud if somebody will listen you will be very happy to complain to happy in your unhappiness to tell somebody why you are complaining in the hope that this will get reinforced by the other it works beautifully on the internet too so much so that a new species is arising through the internet which are the perpetually aggrieved they are just looking out for the next thing to be upset about and angry about the ego loves that offend it that's a big thing it's a very fashionable thing it seems these days to be offended even at universities students are practicing it they are getting very good at it every age has certain ways in which ways of being unconscious that are popular and this is one of them these days so here you observe your mind and once you realize how unhappiness arises more through the mind than through the situation you have a choice of okay you can ask what would this situation be like if I did not judge it and then you experience okay for a moment you are facing a situation without imposing the judgment on it mentally suddenly you experience a moment of opening a spaciousness where it's neither good nor bad you are not saying this is good because the positive thinking has its place but this is not about positive thinking let's say you are caught in the middle of the rain and get totally drenched this is so good unless you are really enjoying it which is possible you just refrain from labeling it, it is and when you do not judge a situation then it doesn't mean you no longer do anything about it you don't, okay I'm not judging getting drenched therefore I'm staying here and not removing myself from the rain I've become paralyzed because I'm not judging it so there is another way of taking action, responding to a situation that's not based on some kind of negative judgment and another thing that this guy Epictetus said the philosopher I don't know, I'm not good at quotes but something like true wisdom is learning to wish that all things should happen as they do I think I got that right true wisdom is learning to wish that all things should happen as they do that does not condemn you to inactivity that's a misconception and a misunderstanding of what that means it does also not mean that you, all the things that are happening when people inflict suffering on other humans that suddenly you say that's a good thing, no primarily it should be practiced with reference to your life, your daily your interaction with people and things and life situations, that's the primary practice and so not to it means no longer being in opposition to the present moment the unfolding of the present moment not to internally oppose it, that changes everything, that changes your entire the way you are, that changes you, that removes the ego, the entrenched illusion illusory identity that loves that opposition it sustains itself through boundaries, through condemning the other, it loves the otherness of others and emphasizes the otherness of others so that's a practice for us here especially on this retreat so that we observe our own mind and reach the place of freedom and if you're not part of our retreat, you're listening watching this from somewhere else you can practice it tomorrow when you're lining up at the supermarket or you're stuck in a traffic jam and you think it's bad or you're going somewhere at the airport and the flight is canceled or even worse they overbooked and you're booked but you can't get on they don't have a seat for you and then to notice that you actually can face these situations without the judgment and be totally free internally that gives you enormous power not egoic power the destiny of human consciousness is to pass through the thinking stage which we've been trapped in for several thousands of thousands of years to move through the thinking stage, not to abandon it completely but to transcend it so that we are no longer trapped in the thinking stage so that we no longer derive our sense of identity from the thinking stage, where thinking can become a beautiful tool without becoming the foundation for who we think we are so we rise above thinking and that is our destiny as each of us is an expression of universal consciousness and in particular an expression of human consciousness so we are rising above thinking so that we are and this is why we are here and this is what is really the essence of being here to discover in ourselves the ability not only to think you have that already but to rise above thinking where you don't need to think all the time where you discover there can be gaps in the stream of thinking there can be spaces in the stream of thinking where you are very awake nothing to do with a sleep state where you go you are alert you're bright you kind of light up and that is so you discover the ability to have these moments of no thought so if you discover within yourself that a lot of the time you are in a state of lack of insufficiency of not enough and you feel that the answer to the remedy is to be active in this world and achieve and do as much as possible then you'll probably find that ultimately that is not the answer to your state of lack in order to transcend to go beyond your state of lack of neediness of not enough spiritual practice and spiritual realization is necessary focus on the realization of being it's only there that you can go beyond that state of lack which is ego go within and discover who or what you are beyond the person

the essence

of this teaching is not doing but being there are certain teachings that emphasize and focus on developing your ability to do and there is a place for that but the essence of this teaching is to realize the depths of your being to go into the being dimension because there are these two dimensions every human being embodies the human level which involves doing and thinking and experiencing and acquiring and gaining and so on and every human being also embodies the deeper dimension of being and that's why you are a human being I emphasize the importance the primary importance of getting in touch with the being of you which is inseparable from the big being of the entire universe get in touch with the being realize the being and that is primary and that is the foundation for everything but there still remains the human dimension so on the human dimension you feel you still want to be active you want to achieve something as a human you have this most humans have a desire to contribute something to create something to do something to participate in the infinite creativeness of the universe to become a part of that so you have that and that is not to be denied it's just that in this teaching it focuses on the very foundation which is primary without the being no matter what you achieve on the human it will not satisfy you and ultimately it will create further difficulties for yourself and others in the absence of conscious being so conscious being is primary once you realize conscious being from there you can look on how to align your doing with being and then you can practice what is conventionally called manifestation techniques and you can create from the depth of your being so if you discover within yourself that a lot of the time you are in a state of lack of insufficiency of not enough and you feel that the answer to the remedy is to be active in this world and achieve and do as much as possible then you'll probably find that ultimately that is not the answer to your state of lack because your state of lack although you will experience temporary relief occasionally through doing and experiencing it will not go away through just doing in order to transcend to go beyond your state of lack of neediness of not enough spiritual practice and spiritual realization is necessary and that is not any doing as such that is focus on the realization of being it's only there that you can go beyond that state of lack which is ego you have to find your true identity who am I, who are you are you the historical person and are you that entity, that me with a past and a future and then comes the end, are you that or is there more to you than meets the eye is there more to you than your physical body and the thoughts that go through your head and the emotions that you feel is there more to you than that is there more to you than the story of you from your life, your past your life, is that your identity or is there a deeper dimension and it's only if you find the deeper dimension to who you are that is beyond ego that you can become free of that state of lack and neediness and it's only then when you've become free of that state of lack and neediness then your doing can be fruitful because it is no longer a self-serving doing until that realization happens, ultimately all you're doing is self-serving even if you even if you are even if it's altruistic and you're full of compassion for the world and you just want to help everybody and everybody ultimately if you look deeply it's this self-serving there, you want to be better in your eyes, you're not good enough yet in your own eyes and it may well be and it's not it is more than likely that a lot of your doing will have unwanted side effects that produce the opposite of the original intention so don't look for freedom from this sense of lack in the realm of doing and of activity go within and discover who or what you are beyond the person and that is spiritual dimension within you that's the being and that's what this work and this teaching is all about only there can you be free of the sense of lack and once you're free of that then you can engage in joyful creativity joyful creation, joyful manifestation, enjoy every moment of it and not feeling that unless you reach the desired outcome you continue to be incomplete and you're not really enjoying the journey because you're so focused on the desired outcome that you can't enjoy the journey because the destination has taken precedence over the journey so you're obsessed with where you want to get in when you get there you won't be satisfied for a moment you say yeah I made it but the mind pattern in you that devalues the present moment and cannot honor the presence, the aliveness of the present moment is still in you and no matter where you go and who you're with or what you achieve you carry with you this mind pattern that makes it impossible for you to be aligned with the present moment so you carry with you the sense of lack and you would still suffer from it when you become a billionaire and so the way then is to go within and engage in this spiritual practice and spiritual realization

there's no other way

[Speaker 1] (6:01:34 - 6:05:24)
some people are still coming in finding their seats hopefully hello to everybody half a kilometer away at the back a good spiritual practice while we're waiting for everybody to settle down why not start with a good spiritual practice especially for people in the back rows and it may sound a little bit funny but it's actually a very powerful spiritual practice and that is to become aligned with the present moment obviously this is I'm mister now so I'm talking about the present moment become aligned with the present moment and uh refrain from complaining for example that you are too far away mentally a very powerful spiritual practice so then you become okay with the isness of things and the isness of things happens always in the present moment you might have noticed nothing ever happens that's not now one could almost say the word happen must imply present moment and most people completely underestimate the incredible importance of the present moment and of living in a harmonious relationship with the present moment and you would be surprised how many people in this world live almost constantly in an antagonistic relationship with the present moment and that of course causes a lot of unnecessary suffering and unhappiness so one of the most important things in life to be aware of is your relationship

so

[Speaker 1] (6:05:26 - 6:05:33)
to speak with the present moment and this is now

[Speaker 2] (6:05:34 - 6:05:38)

of course is the present moment

welcomed or appreciated or at least accepted for the way it is because it already is the way it is that's the weird thing about the present moment it's already the way it is no matter how you argue in their mind with it the isness of things is already the case and that's all there ever is in your entire life your entire life this is not something to just understand intellectually but to grasp at a deeper level your entire life unfolds in the present moment that's all there ever is that's all there ever is is this moment and most people live as if some future moment whether it's a minute from now or tomorrow or next year they live as if some future moment were always more important than this moment that isn't implied they don't tell themselves oh the next moment is more important than this one no it's an assumption an underlying assumption it's a mindset and that mindset is a form of conditioning cultural conditioning that mindset by implication if not literally always says there's something more important coming and I'm on my way to it and that is a dysfunctional way to live because you're never fully alive you never feel at home you're always looking for your home in some future moment or when you get old enough and you realize there's little future left then you think about the past more than the next moment which is why many old people talk continuously about

the past so coming into alignment

with the present moment brings about a shift in consciousness and this is so simple and yet so profound now this shift in consciousness is what our evening here together is all about it is about a transformation of consciousness in you and the reason why you're here most of you is that this transformation of consciousness is already happening it's a process for most people it's already happening in you and you're here because you know that this or you hope that this is an opportunity for for deepening this shift in consciousness or accelerating the shift in consciousness there are other terms we could use we could say it is about an awakening of consciousness it is about a spiritual awakening and this is a term that in several spiritual traditions is used and has been used for a long time the term of awaken which implies that the ordinary the normal state of consciousness of most human beings is a kind of dreamlike state it is a kind of sleep but people, if you tell that to somebody what are you talking about dream? I'm completely awake this is just nonsense welcome to our live meditation and a special welcome to those of you who've joined us through Sounds True it's best not to have any expectations about the form of this meditation just allow this moment to be as it is and you'll notice that we've started already with our meditation meditation is really all about becoming still without going to sleep let me correct what I just said it's not so much becoming still but being still becoming would imply that you have to go somewhere or do something being is already here and now and in a sane life a conscious life a harmonious life there needs to be a balance between becoming and being becoming is doing things getting things done and so on in this world dealing with things creating things achieving things and being is about being aware of the present moment which after all is all you ever have whatever you achieve through becoming in the future eventually turns into the present moment so as I speak to you the meditation if we even want to call it that it's perhaps best to forget about the word as I speak be aware of the silence or the stillness between the words being aware means just notice that it's there it's very simple so you notice that in addition to the words there's another dimension that is easily overlooked and that's the dimension of stillness which we could also call space space or spaciousness so when you notice that there are two so to speak two dimensions here dimension of words words which you hear and which then become thoughts in your head and the dimension of no thing spaciousness so you just notice that's all that's required that there is that dimension also present so you notice it in between words and even behind the words so to speak now when you notice it what happens inside you what does it mean to notice the stillness be aware of the stillness it means you have become still inside it means you're conscious of the stillness but at that moment at this moment you're not thinking but you're alert present completely here but not thinking so that's the realization of the dimension of depth within you and without that realization your entire life is a surface phenomenon you run around on the surface of being never satisfied for long frustrated almost always feeling there's something important missing in your life and of course there is but you can't find it on the surface of your life the horizontal dimension looking here and there you have to not become still but realize that that dimension of stillness is already in you and another word to describe it is to say it's this alert presence that you can sense right now and you may find the mind wanting to come in from time to time and say something about it or even deny it or say I don't understand it or say what's the point I have other problems to worry about and I'll become still when I have solved all the other problems but why people experience, many people most people experience their life as a succession of problems and ultimately a frustrating experience is because they haven't discovered that dimension the most vital thing or no thing to discover within yourself that stillness is also power it's the source not only of yourself it is the source of life and nothing creative can ever come into your life if you are not connected with that whenever you feel joy for a moment perhaps in your daily life or a moment of loving interaction with another human being or an animal or when you suddenly see beauty somewhere and you go now without you necessarily being aware of it there has arisen a moment of stillness in you if only three seconds or perhaps a bit more and it's only there that the joy of life arises or the ability to really connect with another human being without it without the stillness you have only your conceptual mind thinking, thinking, thinking and you relate to the world through the conceptual mind judging, thinking, judging interpreting continuously the inner self talk, the monologue which may become a dialogue in your head you're no good says one voice, the other one says I'm trying, I'm trying whatever the voice in your head is doing and then you try to relate to another human being through that and before long concepts come in judgments come in so there's always a sense of insufficiency of lack of not enough there's always conflict arising when the dimension of stillness is not at all operating in your life or very briefly it's not enough yes, it's good if you can occasionally experience joy and a sense of aliveness and see beauty and a loving feeling towards another human being not the egoic love but a flowing, a goodwill flowing out towards another human being yes, it's wonderful, but if it's only brief moments, then yes at least that keeps you going but it could be much deeper, it could operate in your life continuously so that you never lose touch with it but the first step is realizing it's there, always it's already there it's already here I wrote in the little book called Stillness Speaks I said you are never more truly yourself than when you are still and you might think that's a strange statement most people when they talk about myself talk about their personal history and their personal problems and their life situation when they talk about myself, that's what they refer to they refer to my relationships my work situation my financial situation my home situation my health that's me and my life and of course all that, yes, that is the case but is that who you really are our purpose of course, just to remind you is not to become still then you create a problem but you discover that you're still already underneath the thinking your sense of identity your sense of who you are derives from the stillness underneath the thinking that's the essence of your sense of I am or your sense of being most people don't know that because that essence shines through the veil of thinking and emotions you could also call it the light that shines through the essence of who you are I am that sense of I am and most people don't know that it derives from that which is deeper than thinking in you and they think the thinking and the emotions are who they are so they confuse the I am with what happens in their minds and that's the state we call ignorance nothing to do with education how much or how little as I speak really every word every sentence is a pointer to that dimension but as we sit here together be aware of the gaps between the words that's more important than the words because that's what the words point to what is that gap it's stillness space the light of consciousness itself formless spirit nothing in it to understand nothing you can work out to get closer to it work out conceptually mentally by asking another question and waiting for another answer you have to give up trying to understand spirit God even understand yourself so as we sit here thinking is not important if it arises allow it to arise but be the presence behind the thinking be the deeper I am that you are already otherwise the I am gets lost in the thinking and then the thinking assumes the pseudo identity of I am dreadful condition normal

of course

so as we sit here we have the courage with a little bit of help we have the courage to embrace the state of not knowing there's no knowing no judgment it's a wonderful liberation when you no longer need to look to mind activity to tell you who you are and that's why we are here to access that state of connectedness with being the depth of being you are this formless light that shines through anything that arises in your life it's formless so there's always at any moment now there's always that which happens in your life here very little happens just the words that are being perceived peripheral sense perceptions where you are sitting perhaps the periphery you're aware of that a little bit maybe some thoughts come patiently so there's always that which happens and then there's always something more vital and that is we could say the light the light in which that which happens appears that is also the only thing that is, that cannot be doubted you can doubt the reality of whatever is happening around you and of course it has a dreamlike quality it comes and goes but you cannot doubt because it's immediately obvious that you are conscious or that there is consciousness that there even if it is a dream there is a light in which that dream appears that's the timeless consciousness and knowing that you can be awake in the dream because things continue to happen in your so-called life but you can be aware of the dimension of depth aware of formless consciousness itself like now and this is the meaning of what you read in the New Testament where Jesus says you are the light of the world and that is to know yourself as that not conceptually but directly to know yourself as the light that underlies everything to know yourself as consciousness is liberation from the world liberation from taking the apparent reality as something that is absolutely real it is not absolutely real it is borrowed from the light of consciousness it's like the light of the moon the moon has no light of its own it looks like that but it's the sunlight so the world has no life of its own you have no life of your own there is no such thing as my life you are an expression of the one life so I don't have a life I am life not my life just life the moment you say my you create a duality me and life and so they become truly effective the moment they become a field of awareness or presence rather than a person sitting with the other in case people don't need when he says I have been a frequency holder some of you may not know although I mentioned it somewhere in a book the human being the human being have different callings and different destinies whatever they do as a person frequency holder I call somebody who is not called upon by a desire or a destiny to do something big, to create a big enterprise, to have a big impact on the world, to set up some big structure, to manifest something big but somebody who is happy doing small things with great care, love and most importantly doing small things in a state of presence so a frequency holder could be somebody who is mainly does gardening or does a handicraft job and gives this person then embodies the presence in his or her work or might come into contact with people in a limited capacity and whoever this person comes into contact with comes into that field of presence so this person holds the frequency of presence and these people are very important too there are a number of you who perhaps could consider themselves to be frequency holders frequency holders have a hard time in this world because our civilization is not geared towards giving them an officially recognized place in medieval times middle ages of course a frequency holder would become a monk or a nun or a hermit and that was there were millions of them and so it was a very recognized calling but nowadays it's not many many monasteries are closing down so frequency holders have to kind of carve out a niche for themselves where they can hold the frequency of presence and a human being who is present affects not only those humans who come into contact with him or her but a human being who holds that frequency of presence even if what he or she does is no longer important the consciousness behind it is what matters and this human being affects far more people than is obvious on the surface of things because whatever happens to one affects the totality because all humans are connected at a deeper level there is such a thing as a collective human consciousness oh yes what was the question oh yes he's becoming now a life coach which is a step it's a little bit of a step beyond being a frequency holder and is a little anxious and nervous but at the same time also grateful and joyful the question often that arises am I ready for this am I ready to help these people come with problems to me and if you think you are ready you probably are not and if you think you are not ready you may be ready if you know how to step out out of the way out of your own way become an opening a pure awareness when you sit with someone I assume you sit when you sit with someone you become a pure you give total attention to that person you become pure awareness you might have learned certain approaches in your training becoming a counselor or a life coach you've probably had training and there are certain modalities they vary there are different modalities of psychotherapy and counseling so whatever modality you were taught of course you will attempt to apply this modality but if you only have that you are not going to be very effective you may have some limited success and the question am I ready if it refers to have I mastered the modality that they taught me then that's a justifiable question and you might say well I am ready because I know exactly how it works but the real thing in a situation like that it is not the modality that you have learned and you applied not necessarily saying that you should not use it at all you can use it but realizing at the same time what is much more important it was underlies the modality that you use and this applies even in highly structured and intellectual and mental modalities like psychoanalysis which is very psychoanalysis you analyze you take this and this and this and it goes on for years but even there it happens that certain psychoanalysts who start off by practicing their modality and then the years go past and then gradually the good ones gradually without knowing it they develop the capacity of just sitting there and giving complete attention to the others they gradually step out of being totally identified with the modality and sometimes they might not even use it anymore and so they become truly effective the moment they become a field of awareness or presence rather than a person sitting with the other so that needs to shine through the modality that you use and you may find that after a while you use relatively little of what you have learned and you realize that you don't have to do it if you are fully present the right words will come up you will ask questions just like Socrates asked he always started with asking questions, not because he already knew the answer, it was a beginning of an attempt a joint attempt to find the answer through accessing the dimension of presence or awareness so if you can be there as a pure awareness while you sit with this some people call it client, some call it patient some call it anything so you sit and then you listen and then you ask a question and then you listen and then it can happen, if it works that the other person can join you, even without you actually explicitly stating this, there is no need for that the other person, without knowing it joins you in the state of presence and then you you share this field of presence while you sit there and out of that healings and the answers, if answers are needed, realizations healings arise out of that and this is why I said if you think you are ready you probably are not, because then you think it's now I know enough and I can do it that sounds great that you have this self confidence but no matter how much you know no matter how much you know this does not make you into a great counselor or therapist, knowledge alone does not do that it can be helpful but the true transformation and the true healing happens through embodying presence and yes it can be helpful to know a few approaches there are certain modalities that actually make presence or they may not call it that the main part of the modality those are very spiritual approaches to psychotherapy it's been many years since I read these books but I believe for example the modality created by Carl Rogers is one of them where you the main work with the patient is to give attention and unconditional acceptance unconditional means you don't judge you don't put labels on the person or their condition it's all based on attention now I have met a few people who have gone through Rogerian I think it might be called therapy and some of them said it was very boring because the therapist never really said anything so that seems to show that even though they can even you can't really teach it as I believe there are some Rogerian therapists who do embody it and others learn it as you have to have conditional they still are not able to enter the state of presence while they are with someone and then of course there is a modality you just listen and you don't judge okay time is over when is our next session this is also of course in any capacity and quite a few of you are already spiritual teachers in your own field maybe not formally or in your own field but you are already spiritual teacher and many others probably will become spiritual teachers in one form or another and so it's it's important that the no matter through what kind of form you do your spiritual teaching whether the entry point is body work or the entry point is counseling or something else or nutritional advice even there that can quickly become a spiritual teaching always realizing what the foundation for it all you need to access the power of consciousness while you are with someone and you don't need to be fully awakened or enlightened in order to be effective, it helps but you can be effective I've met quite a few people who are effective in the situation in the helping situation they are totally present when they go back into their normal private life less so and sometimes the people who work with them when they happen to observe these people or accidentally overhear something on the telephone talking to their bank manager or something and getting really upset and then there's this great person who I thought was so enlightened and is giving me all this advice gets so upset when he talks to the bank manager just only a tiny example he gets upset in many other situations even more and yet in the teaching situation you can be very effective so there are people, many in that area they can enter presence and then in their daily life sometimes they can and sometimes they can't the ego reasserts itself there are spiritual teachers also who do spiritual teaching sometimes even on a large scale can be very effective but if you saw them in their private life you would say oh my god why is the bird so alert? because he needs to be alert because otherwise a thing could suddenly pop up and eat it so the bird goes this is a wonderful beginning of freedom inner freedom when you separate the interpretation from the actual thing it could be a person, it could be an event or just a simple sense perception and suddenly you experience the very same thing that before was an unpleasant experience as actually not bad at all let's go back to the simple you're standing in a line up in a supermarket and it's just not moving and you get very irritated seeing all the things that you should be doing and you shouldn't have come at this time and why are these people so inefficient and suddenly you're just standing there and you're breathing and you're looking around, is that so bad? No it's no longer bad because your mind isn't telling you that it is bad it is as it is now you might say that's very little but what happens if something really bad happens?

What happens if you come home and suddenly see the house that you live in has gone up in flames what happens if you suddenly lose your home and you sit on a park bench what then? it still applies the same still applies are you adding a narrative to it or are you taking this one, oh there's the house it burnt down, now this of course is an advanced more advanced lesson but you have to master the simpler lessons first then you get to the more advanced lessons because you will experience, everybody does, big loss at some point in your life of whatever kind whether it's loss of a relationship loss of a loved one financial loss loss of your job loss of reputation who knows it's easy for the internet these days to lose your reputation, one wrong tweet can destroy your whole life so you could experience all that and you will, all these things will happen, as you remember life is not meant to make the world is not meant to make you happy it's meant to make you conscious, by challenging you, and by challenging you at first the challenges become unhappiness then you begin to realize most of the unhappiness is derived from unconscious thought processes and then suddenly, gradually you awaken and then the mind, the world continues to challenge you but now challenges actually help you and they intensify the awakening they no longer bring unhappiness, occasionally you might still fall back into unhappy reactions but you're no longer drawn into continuous unhappy reactivity the world is here not to make you happy and that's, oh my god that's so good to know because if I hadn't told you that maybe you would have gone through the next 40 years thinking the world would be here to make you happy and it didn't happen very frustrating the world is here to, the world challenges every life form continuously its life is precarious and challenging even for a blade of grass that grows it's challenging for a tree, it's challenging for an animal, it's challenging for the cat for the deer, for every life form is continuously being challenged so it needs, but what that does for example to a bird it brings about an alertness in that life form, the challenge brings about an alertness have you observed how alert a bird is? A bird goes, there's an incredible alertness there, why is a bird so alert? Because it needs to be alert because otherwise a thing could suddenly pop up and eat it so the bird goes enormous enormous alertness and this is how gradually consciousness grows through being challenged and the more you suffer 90% coming from your mind then gradually you are being forced into awakening because you can't stand yourself anymore you can't stand living with this unhappy self anymore and then you realize what the Buddha was talking about when the Buddha said the self is the illusion the self is the ultimately is an illusory entity and the Buddha said there is no self, it's just an illusion and as long as you live as long as this self what in Buddhism is called self which is the conceptual self, the mind made self, as long as you derive your identity from that life to again called the Buddha life is suffering all life is suffering so the basic teaching for example of the Buddha is life is suffering but the second part of the teaching of the Buddha is the possibility of the end of suffering that's the whole of Buddhism is there in that so the Buddha said I teach suffering and the end of suffering which means I show you how suffering arises and I show

you how suffering can end without presence

to keep a life interesting you need to look for something extraordinary so that's why you're always somewhere else because usually in the present moment if you're not present it's not that interesting so for today I have chosen a book again to talk about and this book I've had for many years it's been on the shelf occasionally picked up somehow it's one of those books that didn't get lost during my many travels in the past 30 years and I've always loved this little book when you take a book that you've had for a long time you take it off the shelf and you notice that the edges are turning yellow it means you're getting old so I looked and I said have I had this for such a long time wow it's turning yellow so so this book is by a spiritual teacher Krishnamurti whom some of you will be quite familiar with and some of you may never have heard of him and despite the name he has nothing to do with Hare Krishna or anything like that in fact Krishnamurti was not aligned with any religion or school whatsoever he was Indian but he didn't teach Hindu philosophy or anything like that so quite neutral teaching he was born in 1895 and passed away in 1986 he has an interesting life history which I won't talk about now that would take too long but he traveled around the world for 60 years talking, giving spiritual talks he was brought up mostly in England for early years he was in India where he was born and then in England for many years and later on his home base was Ojai in California there are many books by Krishnamurti most of the books were not written by him they are skillfully edited transcripts of his talks there are only about two books that were written by him and one of those books is the book we are just going to look at today it's called Krishnamurti's Notebook and in 1961-62 the impulse came to him to get a notebook and write every day a few small short entries into his notebook every day and he did that for a year and a half or so and then suddenly stopped and that was it and the entries I'm going to read a few to you today and comment on each one they are all about the way in which he perceives nature so many descriptions of nature nature perceived through his state of consciousness of stillness so to read that to read those brief passages can also take you into stillness and as we read them here some passages together that's an invitation for us to enter the same state of consciousness through which he perceived what he describes and then he also speaks about his own state of consciousness and he would often go into very deep states of stillness or presence although he doesn't use the word presence so he would talk about his state of consciousness at that moment and basically those are the two types of entries in the notebooks observations of nature against the background of intense presence and direct observations and descriptions to the extent to which it's possible of his own state of consciousness Krishnamurti was not an ordinary human being he went through strange transformations and processes for many years he had intense pain in his spine and in his head which he attributed to a process some consciousness was doing something to him, transforming him, he never sought any medical help for it so as we look at some of these passages, oh by the way there's another book called Krishnamurti's Journal which again he did a little bit late, a few years after that, he also did this again, they're both good but I think the notebook is deeper and probably better if you want to read one of them and this is definitely not a book for continuous reading, this is a book you can open anywhere and read a page or even half a page and that's enough he is in different he traveled continuously so he was always in each place for a month or six weeks and sometimes less so some of the places he describes, he never says exactly where he is but from the way in which he describes what he perceives you can gather whether he's in Switzerland or in India or in Ojai or in England, wherever he happened to be or Paris, I think those are the places that are described here so I don't know where we'll start, I went through last night and marked a few passages let's start with something very simple well it's all simple but here he is in Paris staying somewhere in Paris where he gave a couple of talks and he suddenly looks on a piece of grass, a lawn and a rose bush somewhere in the middle of the city, a little park a lawn, but he was brought up in England where traditionally it's the old fashion, they say that a lawn needs to be tended and cared for for a long, long time that's the traditional British belief and it's only after 100 years or so that the lawn really becomes perfect so you have to cut it and roll it and look after it and so this kind of, what he also talks about so here he is somewhere in the middle of Paris and suddenly he looks at this little piece of lawn and a rose bush there was a beautifully kept lawn not too large and it was incredibly green it was behind an iron grill well watered carefully looked after, rolled and splendidly alive sparkling in its beauty it must have been many hundred years old not even a chair was on it isolated and guarded by a high and narrow railing at the end of the lawn was a single rose bush with a single red rose in full bloom it was a miracle the soft lawn and the single rose they were there apart from the whole world of noise, chaos and misery though man had put them there they were the most beautiful things far beyond the museums towers and the graceful line of bridges they were splendid in their splendid aloofness they were what they they were what they were grass and flower and nothing else there was great beauty and quietness about them and the dignity of purity it was a hot afternoon with no breeze and the smell of exhaust of so many cars within the air but there the grass had a smell of its own and one could almost smell the perfume of the solitary rose so something that is ordinary one would completely overlook because if you are in Paris there are many more interesting things to look at than a little piece of lawn and a rose bush but instead of focusing and writing about the spectacular things that you would usually focus on and look at in Paris, he never describes anything spectacular of that kind he looked at this little seemingly insignificant lawn and the rose bush and perceived it against his inner stillness and saw that intense aliveness which he's attempting to put into words and it's as presence arises you don't necessarily look for the spectacular you see the extraordinary in the ordinary through presence without presence to keep your life interesting you need to look for something extraordinary so that's why you're always somewhere else because usually in the present moment if you're not present it's not that interesting unless you're having some drama so you're looking for something bigger, something greater some big thing to come into your life, continuously missing all the little things of which your life really consists it's all little things but if you continuously ignore the little things then you ignore something very vital, the miracle of life all around you

what's the most important thing in your life it's to discover

[Speaker 1] (7:24:49 - 7:25:13)
the unconditioned dimension of consciousness the unconditioned dimension to who you are

[Speaker 2] (7:25:14 - 7:25:18)
you, the unconditioned you, the unconditioned I

[Speaker 1] (7:25:25 - 7:25:34)
which has nothing to do with your past or your physical body

[Speaker 2] (7:25:43 - 7:25:44)
or your

[Speaker 1] (7:25:45 - 7:28:53)
personal personality and the unconditioned dimension is not something that you achieve because it's already here it's something you just discover here and now achievement, if you think in terms of achievement and associated achievement with spiritual awakening enlightenment, realization or achieving the unconditioned consciousness if you use the word achievement or if that's the underlying assumption that it is an achievement there's an implication that it's in the past because you need to achieve it, sorry there's an implication that it's in the future because you need to achieve it, there's something to achieve you're pushing it away out of the present and so you miss it again because you're trying to achieve it and continuously as long as you're trying to achieve that spiritual realization or whatever you want to call it then it's always one step away from you or a hundred steps or a hundred miles or a million miles, it doesn't matter whether it's one step or a million miles it's not here that's the underlying assumption and so you cannot discover it because you think it's something to achieve the thought that there's something to achieve in the future prevents you from discovering what's in the present, on other levels of your life, achievement is fine, it's good to achieve certain things, to learn something new, to bring something into manifestation, to create something, even to have goals, but when it's about finding out the deepest reality of who you are the very foundation for your life your existence then

[Speaker 1] (7:29:05 - 7:29:38)
the idea of achievement is a hindrance so the unconditioned dimension of consciousness

[Speaker 2] (7:29:41 - 7:29:51)
is to be discovered, it is

one could almost say, hiding or concealed covered up, behind and in between your thoughts behind and even within all sense perceptions and so to discover it you need to find that space in your consciousness

in consciousness

[Speaker 1] (7:30:52 - 7:31:46)
where you are not thinking, so to stop thinking may not be the best way of pointing towards it, although I might have used that expression a few times to stop thinking again implies that there's some active doing involved it might also make you believe that thinking needs to be forcefully pushed out of your consciousness which is not

[Speaker 2] (7:31:49 - 7:31:50)
how it works

[Speaker 1] (7:31:59 - 7:33:04)
it's to discover that that space of not thinking is already there between when one thought subsides before the next thought comes there's a space of pure awareness without mind activity you can do it here because this is a live meditation whenever I'm not speaking which is part of the time here be aware that I'm not speaking so we have the gaps between one sentence and another sentence between one word and another word the moment you become aware of the gap like now

[Speaker 2] (7:33:09 - 7:33:20)
you're not thinking it's very subtle and very simple

[Speaker 1] (7:33:35 - 7:34:04)
and yet that's the most important thing in your life to become familiar with that dimension conscious without thought, spacious still but alert not the stillness of moving towards sleep but alert

[Speaker 2] (7:34:04 - 7:34:05)
stillness

[Speaker 1] (7:34:25 - 7:34:34)
so in daily life become aware of that space that inner space of alert stillness

[Speaker 2] (7:34:36 - 7:34:38)
as much as you can

my name is Eckhart Tolle and I'd like to invite you to my first Google Plus Hangout which takes place on the 21st of July which is a Saturday and I'll be particularly happy to answer questions concerning spiritual awakening consciousness disidentifying from your mind dealing with the pain body and similar topics to find me use the hashtag Ask Eckhart on Google Plus whatever hashtag is I hope you know and I look forward to speaking to you on the 21st bye for now I find myself fluctuating between the path to spirituality and wanting more material wealth are these paths mutually exclusive your feedback is much appreciated fluctuating between the path to spirituality and wanting more material wealth are these paths mutually exclusive if material wealth becomes your primary aim then one could say they are mutually exclusive but if you engage in some activity that you truly first of all truly enjoy enjoy the doing and secondly if that activity that you engage in and enjoy doing makes some contribution some positive contribution to this world to the planet to other human beings adds something valuable to life increases perhaps consciousness on the planet then if those two things come together then you may find that as a byproduct of that activity some material wealth also comes to you and there is no reason why you cannot enjoy certain forms material forms whatever it is that come to you and you enjoy that you may give away some of that and that's enjoyable too and you mean if beautiful things come or bigger things come the enjoyment of a beautiful thing or a house or even a car is not necessarily non-spiritual the attachment or the excessive preoccupation with it with the attainment of it that is not compatible that takes you away from reality the truth of who you are from awakening but you can be quite present and in touch with that which is beyond form and nevertheless enjoy forms that come to you not in an obsessive way of wanting to accumulate as much as possible of this or that but enjoy what comes without identification with the forms that come the house, the car, whatever the material thing may be so in that sense they are not incompatible renunciation which traditionally is recommended as a path to awakening is not, the true renunciation is not really renouncing material things it's renouncing attachment or identification with because many people traditionally in many cultures and religions who have renounced material things didn't realise that they had not renounced desire in their mind so they suppress they try to suppress desire and by having no possessions and refraining another part of renunciation would be celibacy for example, refraining from sexual activity as part of renunciation without realising that they have they spend large part of the day thinking about sex so that outer renunciation is not really the main thing the true renunciation is attachment to which operates on an inner level so you can have a very poor person being attached to their few possessions very strongly and seeking identification through that you could have a very wealthy person not being attached to anything of course the other way round can also be the case so it's the inner that matters and whether or not you are attached to some material thing you can usually often you may not be able to really tell it until you lose it or it breaks so it's always a little test when something leaves you or is stolen or breaks or destroyed if then upset arises anger or whatever then, oh, I was attached, I thought I was not but when you can let go when things come and then things go, perhaps things come to you and perhaps after a while you give it to somebody else to enjoy that's appreciating beautiful things that you the sense of ownership also begins to disappear so you look after something for a while and then

it's handed on to somebody else

[Speaker 6] (7:43:38 - 7:43:44)
is the ego the source of our thoughts or are our thoughts generated elsewhere

[Speaker 1] (7:43:44 - 7:44:51)
and pass through the ego oh thank you there is no ego apart from thoughts the thoughts identification with thoughts is ego but the thoughts that go through your mind of course thoughts are linked to the collective mind of the culture you live in humanity as a whole so they are not your thoughts as such but you pick them up from the collective most of them and so you identify with thinking and the identification with thinking becomes ego which means simply that you believe in every thought that arises and you derive your sense of who you are from what your mind is telling you who you are opinions, viewpoints that's me some people talk to themselves oh you are so good

laughter

[Speaker 1] (7:44:53 - 7:47:10)
why doesn't the world recognize you or the mind says you are no good same thing you are no good at all you fail at everything don't you again and then you believe in it and then you suddenly have a low view of yourself why do you have a low view?

because you believed in your thoughts and why are you thinking those thoughts?

probably you picked them up somewhere maybe in childhood maybe your mum was so stressed out that you said you are no good and so you pick up certain thoughts and they get stuck in your head thoughts that you hear in childhood they are little energy forms like entities and they get stuck in your head and don't refuse to go and the more you believe in it the more deeply lodged they become in your mind and so some people are stuck with very hostile entities I'm saying entity not in some spooky way but every thought is an energy form and as such we could call it an entity and there are many people in this world who are stuck with hostile life denying continuously critical and attacking entities that they carry in their head and they believe that is who they are and they are continuously attacking themselves and if they are not attacking themselves they attack others around them let me tell you who you are of course what they are really saying is let me tell you who I am so they project the famous you know the famous saying we don't see things as they are we see them as we are which means you look at reality through the screen of your thinking and your judgement which is conditioned by the past a dreadful prison to live in it's like blinkers, worse than blinkers it's like looking at reality through heavy veils ooh looks so dark here

laughter

is that a human being or laughter so and so the identification with thinking believing in your thoughts having no space outside of the movement of thought again here we come to the vital thing lack of space inside that is the unconscious condition, spiritually completely unconscious and then you are burdened with a heavy ego you are the ego which is not an entity apart from thought it is thoughts that you have identified with and the first moment of freedom comes when you realize that certain thoughts have been going through your head for years perhaps and that they are only thoughts and that you are not the thought you are the awareness in my case I became aware that I had a thought for example it started in childhood one of many negative thoughts I had bad things always happen to me bad things always happen to me and that was when I saw people around me ok they have got all these nice things and always there would be bad things happening and of course your perception then becomes selective when you have a thought like that you notice much more because in everybody's life in daily life things go wrong you miss a bus you get stuck in a traffic jam or you lose some money this is normal but if you have a thought bad things always happen to me you are extremely aware of those things and they confirm to you that the thought is correct this is the selective perception of reality through the screen of thinking so the reality will confirm to you not only that that thought or any thought of that kind actually attracts bad things negative things or if you believe people are basically bad and that's a deep seeded belief and you don't realize it's only a thought in your head or a belief not only do you would you single out where you observe unethical or bad behaviour in others you would ah there it is not only that you actually are much more likely to encounter people who manifest that kind of behaviour because you attract it and so that's just incredible how people create their their world through that so freedom comes from stepping out, encountering first of all a little bit of space inside your presence and then from there you realize certain thoughts as repetitive and just a thought bad things always happen to me, oh there it goes again I thought that before so that's the to become free of ego means becoming free of thought identification with thought that's the end of the ego it may reassert itself from time to time but at least that's the awakening what about your thoughts habitual thoughts do you

probably that I have to get everything right figure it out and get it right it rules me

[Speaker 1] (7:51:31 - 7:51:32)
and if it's not right

[Speaker 6] (7:51:34 - 7:51:42)
I escape I just won't do it I pretty much predict it ahead of time so I won't try a lot of times

[Speaker 1] (7:51:43 - 7:53:23)
yes some people are afraid of not succeeding in whatever they do because they have a self their self image which is derived from thinking would suffer if I fail at something then my self image will be injured and therefore I'm not even going to try and again that's to do with deriving your identity from thinking and even the thought I have failed is a lie I am a failure is an even greater lie you have not failed you can simply reinterpret and say I have learned something here this is not for me for example so but why believe the lies that your mind produces so as you know many people live with a very hostile mind but those people the motivation their motivation would probably be very great I would hope to get out of their minds but first they need to realize that their problems are self generated mind generated not world generated thank you

because you won't really enjoy the fruit of your labors

[Speaker 1] (7:53:56 - 7:54:20)
if habitually you cannot be present in the moment no matter what you achieve the enjoyment will be short lived because of the habitual pattern of dissatisfaction in the background it's always there some obscure sense of lack and often it comes into the foreground as real unhappiness

[Speaker 2] (7:54:20 - 7:54:30)
frustration and then if you realize that there's always

this waiting for the next thing which is thought when you're waiting for the next thing you're trapped in thought because that's where future happens now the realization that this is happening to you is very important first step is the beginning of something else arising and in all of you that has already arisen or that occasionally it still gets obscured perhaps probably I assume something else has arisen that's not thought that is beyond thought the ability to recognize thought the ability to recognize certain patterns that habitually arise in your mind your mental emotional field the ability to witness that which arises in your mental emotional field that's an enormous leap in consciousness another dimension one could say

has arisen we could call it presence we could call it awareness it's not thought but it's intelligence so intelligence is not confined to thought there is a dimension in you

[Speaker 1] (7:55:44 - 7:55:48)

[Speaker 2] (7:55:49 - 7:55:54)
that is far greater far more

[Speaker 3] (7:55:54 - 7:56:05)
intelligent than any intelligent thought it's the place from where all

[Speaker 2] (7:56:06 - 7:56:18)
intelligence arises a place of where all creativity arises so there's the ability to suddenly

[Speaker 1] (7:56:18 - 7:57:04)
be aware of your inner states to be aware of what your mind is saying the narrative the habitual narrative that you're telling yourself you're having a monologue or many people have a dialogue with themselves where they split themselves in two and then this one argues with the other why aren't you good enough why did you do this why do you never get anything right he shouldn't have said that yes but on the other so you can have a dialogue in your narrative where you can have a monologue says I am such a miserable creature because a lot of the time the narratives the unconscious thought processes tend to be more negative than positive for

[Speaker 2] (7:57:04 - 7:57:13)
many many people so to be aware that this is happening

[Speaker 1] (7:57:13 - 7:58:04)
that's an enormous gain in consciousness it's the beginning of awakening spiritually speaking something arises that is not part of the conditioned mind patterns so there's the ability to observe your inner states and that's a wonderful little pointer to ask yourself frequently what's my inner state at this moment and then look at it direct your attention to it the narratives what have I been telling myself and the emotion that accompanies the narrative what am I feeling what's the emotion so in addition to being a story in your head and an emotion there's a knowing

behind it there's a space behind it sometimes I call it inner space there's an inner space

from where you can be aware of what's happening on the level of the person the personality because that inner space, the awareness is not part of the personality but it's the being the knowing that is inherent in the being so the mental projection towards future creates the stresses between I'm here but I want to be there and for many humans that is their predominant state so you need to realize most humans have this inbuilt dysfunction they cannot acknowledge the present moment unconsciously they regard the next moment whether it's a minute from now or an hour from now or two years from now always regard it as more important whenever you are impatient trying to get somewhere waiting for something impatiently what's the next thing I have to do and I have to do that and you're pulled in all kinds of directions what's now, oh now I have to do that and that and that and there's always a pull towards the next thing that is, I call that sometimes you lose yourself in doing doing is necessary obviously you need to do but to lose yourself in continuous doing is a serious dysfunction but it's so normal that nobody realizes it so what, if you lose yourself in the doing, there's always another this is how stress arises stress is the gap in the gap between now and later the projected then now and then in that gap arises the stress arises so the mental projection towards future creates the stresses between I'm here but I want to be there and for many humans that is their predominant state they are always they are here but they really want to be there either there in space or time it's amazing and even you, awakening beings may still sometimes or often find yourself in that state where you suddenly realize that the whole day you've been stressed about this, that and that this is what makes so many demands upon you you need to deal with this and this amplified by the gadgets that we now use which is an amplification of the dysfunction through this and you lose yourself in the doing you become completely un-centered and basically lost there are many it happens even to children already at an early age these days and many children are suffering from attention deficit disorder and so on, which means their mind is being pulled away from the present moment lost in doing lost in doing really comes back to lost in thinking thinking underlies doing so you are lost in your thoughts about the world and then you engage in all kinds of activities propelled by thought that now I need to do this now I need to do that so the basic condition still for most humans on the planet so fundamentally yes, they are lost in doing they lose themselves in doing but basically it means they are lost in their mind in the movement of thought now you identify then, they identify with every thought that arises many thoughts are about future or the past not that many thoughts are about the present moment and if they are about the present moment, then it is an interpretation of the present moment that is completely determined and colored by your past conditioning so very interesting to observe in oneself this tendency to deny devalue disregard reduce the present moment to a means to an end it's always a means to an end but it's never recognized for what it is in itself and often it is more than a means to an end for many humans this is a very dysfunctional way of being for many humans the present moment is actually regarded unconsciously as an obstacle that they need to get beyond there is a continuous underlying unease and what's the next thing that's going to go wrong I know it's going to happen lost in the mind lost in thought there was an Indian teacher who described the essential human condition as lost in thought and of course that's how it is this is then this movement of thought gives you your sense of identity the unease the uneasy narrative the problematic narrative of me and my life I have to think about this when I wake up in the middle of the night and I carry this heavy burden of my problematic life for many humans their identity is unconsciously regarded as a problem to be solved I am a problem that I'm looking for a solution to this problem that I am and of course then you go to a therapist now if the therapist is good he might be able to take you beyond that depends if he or she is not good then you get more deeply entrenched and 15 years later you are still undergoing psychoanalysis and find ever deeper layers of complexity in your past and there's no end to it so the present moment is devalued not recognized regarded either as a means to an end or an obstacle that is for many humans that is their predominant state of mental emotional state and as I said their identity is derived from that so it's the the error lies in identification with thought now the question arises who or what is it that identifies with thought if I am not the story that I tell myself about who I am if I am not ultimately that then who or what am I and what is it in me that identifies with the story what is it that creates this sense of identity that is mostly exists mostly in a state of unease or very often discontent because it cannot acknowledge the present moment that is the ego by the way that's what we call it the egoic sense of self there is a very simple spiritual practice to get you to the realization of who or what it is that identifies I suggest at this moment that observe yourself internally right now to see if there is any lingering emotion in you perhaps from earlier today or an hour ago or yesterday or the past two years or the past ten years can you feel for example is there an irritation somewhere is there some kind of anxiety is there kind of heaviness a certain heavy mood a despondent mood perhaps is it lingering there is there anger big thing some residue of anger from what happened earlier is that in you and then normally humans would say I am angry or they would say I am anxious, I am fearful I am in a bad mood now there is already a delusion when the moment you say I am angry or I am anxious that indicates already that you have identified with the emotion of anger or the emotion of sadness or the emotion of fear you have identified, you equate I with what arises in your field of consciousness so you say I am angry it would be more correct to say I am angry there is anger in me right now now it may sound a trivial difference between saying I am angry and there is anger in me but there is a significant difference which goes beyond mere syntax how you put words together because when you say I am you equate I with whatever condition is there in you this applies to emotion and it also applies to thought when because anger is often not just the anger as emotion, the anger also exists as angry thoughts and then they reinforce each other, it is a vicious circle when you are trapped in irritation or anger the emotion feeds the thought and the thought feeds more energy to the emotion it's a vicious circle and you don't want to get out of it you might notice when you observe an angry person or a despondent person or an anxious person they don't really want to be free of the anger they don't want their if you suggest it to an angry person you can be free you will not get a pleasant answer and you've seen angry people they are in the grip of anger or irritation they cannot help it then they shout at you and then they leave the room and a minute later the door opens they come back because they thought of something else to insult you with they are in the grip of it there is complete identification with thought and emotion they are lost in thought they are lost in emotion but who or what is it that is lost if I am not the thoughts and the emotion, who or what am I?

I just ask you to just have a look inside yourself and see what it is if there is anything there that's jarring and doesn't feel good but it's there and I'm not saying try to get rid of it no acknowledge the present moment, the present moment is what is externally or internally that's what is but there is a huge difference now you've already, by recognizing that there is, let's say, irritation anger or anxiety in you an additional element or dimension has come in and that dimension we could call awareness or we could call it presence and the moment awareness comes in you are no longer completely identified with it, one could say I sometimes describe it as let's say, there is the anger and as awareness of the anger comes in there is a little bit of space around it that's the awareness, the awareness knows that there is anger the anger may still be there, it may not immediately disappear but the awareness knows it's there or whatever else it may be the arising of awareness is spiritual awakening the disidentification that happens when awareness arises that is the spiritual awakening or the arising of the transcendent dimension of consciousness, transcendent because it transcends who or what you are as a person some people don't know that there is even the possibility of taking responsibility, that's why you are so important anybody who realizes it you are the beginning of the transformed world the hardest word that I'm having trouble with right now is responsibility and I have a hunch that most of the things I consider responsibility

are just my ego telling me things I have to do but I also, when I think about the future of the earth and human evolution and stuff like that

sometimes I have big emotions of responsibility I'm just curious about the right relationship to the word responsibility ok thank you it's a strange word, it has been pointed out that if you look at the word it seems to be talking about the ability to respond so to take responsibility for what is it that you can take responsibility for primarily it's taking responsibility for your state of consciousness which determines what kind of world you create you, because you are humanity humanity is an abstract concept it doesn't exist, humanity is the human being you are humanity so for humanity to take responsibility you need to take primarily responsibility for your state of consciousness because only a diseased or dysfunctional state of consciousness produces a diseased and dysfunctional world out there by world I mean the human made world that has been imposed on what's already there the planet, which is potentially of course a paradise the planet pristine unbelievable jewel the being of great intelligence we are not separate from it but the being is going through a transitional process and every transitional process is critical it may or may not work in which case the being will go some other way but the your state of consciousness determines what kind of world you create what kind of action you take and what consequences your actions have so here this is why my main work is to address the cause of dysfunction which lies in the human mind the dysfunction of the human mind or as it is sometimes called in Zen the sickness of the human mind so as I see it and I don't think anybody who reads history can doubt it there is a deep seated dysfunction in humans has been there for thousands of years and if we if there is no shift in that then the dysfunction will destroy us it probably won't destroy the planet because the planet has enormous resources but it will take a while it will take a while for the planet to recover all you have to do then is primarily take responsibility for your state of consciousness now now and this is what the entire teaching really is about what is my state of consciousness at this moment am I generating disturbance am I generating negativity am I generating conflict and suffering for myself and others am I generating inner pollution am I polluting my beautiful the beautiful being that I am with continuous absurd movements of thought producing negative emotions producing an entire entity that is illusory that I call the me so to take responsibility it needs to be just of course an awakening where you can say ok I will take responsibility now some people don't know that there is even the possibility of taking responsibility that's why you are so important anybody who realizes it you are the beginning of the transformed world I don't know who first coined the famous phrase you hear it quite often these days you need to be the change the change that you want to see out there you need to embody that and that's not primarily what you do there is something more primary than what you do it's who you are who you are is your state of consciousness whatever you do flows out of that so that's the primary is that the change is the transformed state of consciousness now that is your responsibility once you have seen that that's your responsibility now you know it people who are not yet at that level don't realize it and that's fine you can't expect the whole world already to be at that state it's enough for you to take responsibility knowing there are still a few millions others who don't know that they can take responsibility because they live in such unconsciousness that they see the entire evil in others what they see as evil it's all in them and they make half the world into their enemy it's all out there they're still that's fine only those are required to take responsibility who are up to it but even those who are totally unconscious still on the one hand they don't know what they're doing obviously they as Jesus said on the cross they know not what they do in other words they are in the grip of unconscious forces or unconscious mental emotional streams they don't know what they do they cannot be held responsible and people say well they should be held responsible, no they can't they don't know what they do, however the fact that they are not responsible because they can't be responsible does not mean that they do not suffer the consequences of their unconsciousness so they generate suffering and eventually suffering is the fire in which the ego gets burned up the collective ego and the personal ego that's the long way the slow way the painful way and then there is a shortcut which is any spiritual teaching it cuts through that the painful way the long way of waking up more and more suffering the planet might not endure such a long learning process for humanity so if the learning process of humanity does not become shortened it is doubtful that the planet can allow humanity to learn through further suffering for another 500 years or even 200 years or even 100 years so that's you are responsible for all that most of the time there is a voice in your head that comments and has opinions and viewpoints and interpretations about what's going on in your life, I call that the voice in the head for most humans that is completely involuntary they don't even know that they have a voice in the head that never stops talking most of the time silently in your head and at other times it may even shout something out, so it wants to be heard and so if you walk in the street you will find most people look fairly sane, they are not talking to themselves it seems, because they are not talking out aloud, but if you listened into everybody's head you would be amazed of how noisy the inside of every human is, it's like you know these radio stations where the people talk in an excited voice, they go on and on, if you go to a foreign country and you don't know what they are talking about, you might think this must be extremely important but if you can understand what they are saying, you realize it's completely meaningless, it's just noise so a significant part of what happens in your mind the larger part is actually just superfluous noise thinking is a wonderful ability a wonderful tool if used rightly it is an instrument that causes dysfunction and misery for millions on the planet unhappiness for millions on the planet if thinking is not used but if you are used by thought so when humans say I think in most cases that's actually not true because they have no control over their thinking it's compulsive and involuntary and they are so identified with the thought processes, they don't even know that they are in the grip of their thought processes because they are so identified, they become their thought processes so whatever comes into your head you completely believe in it and then you, yeah that's how it is Leon just mentioned I don't know if we were talking this morning or yesterday about when I was struggling to survive on a physical plane I often ate baked beans on toast, I was living in England this is there's a little bit of relevance here too and that could have been a very unhappy period in my life not being able what to live on the next day or day after and again now I'm able to have good meals occasionally and I haven't had baked beans on toast in a long time now but Leon gave me a can yesterday now when I was reduced to eating baked beans on toast and again that's a wrong way of putting it, it could have been very unhappy, I was already in my thirties and so my mind my mental commentary, the involuntary thought processes would normally have said this is your complete failure you can't afford the rent you don't know, you have no income you've made a mess out of your life this is what I'm reduced to baked beans on toast, look at your contemporaries that are driving around in their BMWs they've got all that and so this is what life has done to me or what I have done to mess up my life I could have had many kinds of narratives accompanying what was happening in the present moment that would have created unhappiness and I wouldn't even have known it and this happens just a small example of how a narrative that you have that accompanies something that you are doing causes unhappiness and you can do the same thing without the narrative and you're free of unhappiness you're eating baked beans on toast and actually doesn't taste that bad at all and it is nourishing and you don't even have to say that, you can simply enjoy the sensory perceptions associated with that without building a sense of self around it the sense of self that you build around it arises through involuntary and compulsive thinking me and the Buddha was already talking about that so and this, I'm saying this now in case you need to leave early or want to go across the street if you only take this away from this evening but hopefully there will be much more, if you only take this away, if you look at whenever you feel unhappiness this is a generic term unhappiness in whatever form, unhappiness can arise as irritation can arise as anger, can arise as even boredom is a form of unhappiness sadness all kinds of states, they don't feel pleasant, unhappiness and usually they are attributed to a life situation something that's going on in your life so for example waiting at the airline counter and of course how often things don't go well there let's hope they don't drag you out of the plane but that could happen too whenever you feel irritation arising anger arising, upset in whatever form, ask yourself is this caused by the situation or is it caused by what my mind is telling me about the situation and in 95% of cases you will find that the mental commentary that argues and complains about something that's going on but should not be going on but it is, but shouldn't be and the gap between what is and what the mind says should be or should not be that gap is the arising of unhappiness and misery or as the Buddha called suffering it arises in the gap between the isness of things in this moment and the arguing with the isness of things in this moment imposing a narrative on it that says no this should not be I'm not talking about situations where you can take action to change it there are certain situations where action is possible and necessary of time, but even if action is possible and necessary at this very moment it still is as it is then you can take action but this moment is as it is so when you allow this moment to be as it is because you recognize the inevitability of is this seems so obvious but it's not obvious to most humans the inevitability of what is already the case now, and if you can internally align yourself with this inevitable now the next moment is a different thing but when the next moment comes it's now of course there is no next moment except as a thought in the head where is the future? you've never experienced it, you can't impossible and yet humans think about it more than the present moment they want to get to the future because they don't want what is they believe some kind of liberation or fulfillment will come next always missing the isness of things so if unhappiness arises examine does it come, is it caused by the situation I'm in or is it caused by how my mind is interpreting the situation and you sense it very strongly

in other words you sense yourself also as this vast presence not just the person you are the wave on the surface of the ocean or let's better the ripple on the surface of the ocean and the ripple if it only knows itself as the ripple it leads a very limited life if it knows itself as the ocean then it leads a more fulfilled life even though on the surface of course things come and go and have their imperfections but you are then in touch with something that transcends the imperfections of your surface life and to some extent also changes your surface life makes it a more pleasant experience without saying that it will be of course there will be imperfections there will be gain and loss this is all part of your surface life in the physical dimension you can't live without gain and loss you lose something, you gain something hot and cold up and down a good thing, a good experience and a bad experience but you are no longer totally trapped in the outer form of the experience and even if it's a so called bad experience and particularly when a so called bad experience comes you can sense your connectedness with something that transcends that particular experience something that is deeper and this is how people have awakened spiritually, you've been in prison or in dreadful situations or close to death or are told that they only have a few more months to live and or have experienced great loss, people around them suddenly died in an accident or they lost everything they had and suddenly an emptiness appears in their life and that emptiness is at first perceived as a dreadful thing and sometimes the point comes when that hole in your life suddenly which was so painful suddenly you don't resist it anymore and you just go, well that's what it is you become completely present and suddenly that spaciousness that was always there in the background of your life, in between your thoughts, behind your thoughts, the ocean you're going to call it or the space is there and you sense it very strongly in other words you sense yourself also as this vast presence not just the person the person has come out of that vast presence in the same way that a little ripple seems to come out of the ocean it looks around and it looks in the mirror that's me takes a selfie me and tries everything to strengthen its identity as the me and there's nothing wrong with, let's say whatever way, there are many ways in which the little ripples try to strengthen their ripple identity and whatever the ripple whatever is closest the most salient factor in your ripple identity is what probably the ripple will focus on most if it's a physically strong ripple it will identify with physical strength if the ripple looks particularly beautiful it will identify with its appearance and try to enhance that even more and for a while that works but only for a while or if the ripple is particularly clever it can work things out with its ripple mind which is only a pale reflection of the one mind of the ocean but it can work out things with its ripple mind and then it gets a very clever ripple so much more clever than all the other ripples or the ripple has had a hard time and since it was born as a ripple and feels it's been a very disadvantaged ripple and it starts to complain a lot about what other ripples did to it and in that way it can also build up a very strong ripple identity as the victim of other ripples and can think and talk about it for a lifetime and it gives them a very satisfying ripple identity and so it will say things like you have suffered let me tell you about my suffering so it can build up that so even ripples that fail can have very strong ripple identities, it's not just the big ripples who have the big egos I'm actually talking about ego here it's not just the egos sometimes people think big egos are those who they drive big cars and they go around displaying either their wealth or their strength or their knowledge or whatever it is they identify with or they talk in a very loud voice and are always mainly concerned about themselves yes that could be part of it there are people like that, quite a few and who think they are better than most and then there are others who have the reverse of that they think they are they've been treated unfairly by life they have not had a chance or they love also making some people wrong it could be your parents it's all their fault I'm not saying there are no unconscious parents, some parents are dreadfully unconscious and some of you might have had a taste of that but it could be their parents, it could be a group of people that they identify as those that cause my suffering and then they go on the internet and start putting things in about that group of people who are doing it to us or to me so whatever, you can create an enemy there and then that strengthens your identity and if you have more enemies your sense, your rebel identity gets even stronger because now I really know who I am because I'm not that could talk for a long time about that but it's ordinary existence for all rebels that haven't recognized who they are in their essence so it's vital to know that other dimension in you and that always starts, it's always there it doesn't start it's always there in the present moment which is now now the question is whether at this moment you can know or sense within yourself that underlying presence that is deeper than the person and it's very hard, it's very intangible it's very elusive you can't say it's here or it's there it's all pervasive it's your own presence and if you're thinking very much you can't sense it not while you're engaged in thinking about it, okay where is the presence I'm trying to find it but I can't I wonder if I'm doing something wrong well the only thing you're doing wrong is you're trying to find it through thinking so if thinking subsides for a moment what remains seems like nothing at first a spacious just a space but in that space which at first seems like nothing and certainly doesn't seem interesting that space if you don't immediately run away from it and then gradually you begin to sense that there is a depth there and a peace and there is more to it than one could ever put into words to that emptiness and if that connects you with something that transcends the thinking mind but without which there would be no thinking that is the ripple becoming aware of its own depths where it is more than the ripple and then the ripple continues to be a ripple for a little while but the way in which it experiences the world the surface world actually is different because it senses a deep connectedness with something that cannot be named really something deep and vast and it can sense that as the foundation for its life at the very essence of its life and then it can actually enjoy the short-lived play of ripples and it actually can also enjoy the way it looks as a ripple its identity no longer comes from its external form and then it can enjoy oh, this ripple looks in the mirror and says oh, this looks I look good why not? You honor the form and then says I'm going to wear something nice then I look even better and I'll enjoy that why not?

If that's not where you get your sense of self from, in which case it becomes obsessive and you lose yourself in that you can honor the world of form or you can realize that you have a great, a very good mind and you can which may be better than other people's minds and you can work things out then why not enjoy and cultivate it if it doesn't take you completely out of the deeper connectedness and then if there's a deeper connectedness and you have a good mind, then it becomes really a creative mind There are ripples that have a good mind without the connectedness and they can do limited things in the realm of analysis and compiling bits of knowledge and so on, that's fine they are not creative but if the ripple has a mind a good mind and has a connectedness with a depth, which means in between using your mind and even sometimes while you use your mind or while the ripple uses it because you are the ripple you can sense an underlying stillness an underlying presence so then you the ripple learns to think you thinking, applying thought to something hmm and then there's a train of thought, then you come to an end, doesn't go any further and then the ripple withdraws into alert stillness hmm hmm well you don't try anything, you don't go into alert stillness as a means to an end, it's enjoyable, you go into alert stillness, spaciousness opens up there is no thought now and that feels good how long that takes or lasts, we don't know could be 10 seconds it could be 5 minutes it could be 20 minutes depends so you go out into thought and you go back into stillness and then thought becomes inspiring, inspired more than a question I'm seeking a little guidance I have a deep intention to transcend and to dissolve the illusion of separation and I wonder how that is a tricky way that the ego is a tricky way that the identification itself is keeping me as not thinking that this moment is enough by seeking that, does that make sense

[Speaker 1] (8:48:01 - 8:48:11)
yes, can you say what is it you're seeking, transcendence yes, I'm seeking to experience

[Speaker 6] (8:48:11 - 8:48:18)
a greater disidentification with the form and it seems that somehow in the seeking

[Speaker 1] (8:48:19 - 9:01:31)
I'm not fully resting ah, thank you, it's good good question, yes it's true that the great obstacle for especially the spiritual seeker is the fact that they're seeking for something now, of course everybody is seeking in this world they're seeking some kind of relief greater aliveness even the egoically dominated people they want to feel more fully alive more fully who they are they want to be themselves more fully and so they seek it through this, that or the other, identification with this with that or the other ultimately always with some kind of thought they seek it there's a seeking and the seeking pattern, even when people become disenchanted with the usual things that people seek their happiness through in this world you realize it can't be found there, it's not in the it's not in what you possess, it's not in what you achieve ultimately you can't find true and lasting peace, aliveness you don't find yourself ultimately there, in things in thought it can't give you that the deep sense of rootedness in being of being at home within yourself and then you become a spiritual person the spiritual person already knows the spiritual person is no longer looking for a job on Wall Street perhaps I'm not saying that somebody cannot suddenly turn spiritual that's fine but the people are seeking it's a mind structure and when you see that you can't find it there, you think okay, now what I really need is spiritual realization or whatever you call it awakening, I don't need, I know that the car is not going to do it the big house is not going to do it the great job is not going to do it the bonus at the end of the year is not going to do it because you might have tried it already or you have the maturity that tells you it doesn't work or you've seen others who are unhappy who have all these things and are completely unhappy and then you say okay what will work because you read spiritual books, you listen to spiritual teachers, you see there is such a thing as enlightenment or awakening and that's going to work this is where I find myself finally, which of course is true but you carry with you the mind structure of seeking now the mind structure of seeking you then take it from the worldly things into the spiritual and so you become a spiritual seeker seeking implies of course that there is something there that you seek which implies future because you're not seeking it, you know that you're not going to find realisation by seeking in space you're not going to come look around this room and say I'm seeking awakening in this room so it's not the seeking that looks in space well some people think if I go to India I might find it they can try that you won't find it in any particular place so the seeking isn't a seeking in space it's a seeking in time it's a seeking in future in other words seeking implies you need the future to be who you truly are that's the belief the spiritual seeker needs future he might try India but then finds well I didn't find myself there either so you really it's not a place but it's the seeking implies future the next moment let's call it the next moment maybe I'll get it in the next moment but you can't because realisation is present moment realisation it has nothing to do with time or future and who you are does not require time everything else requires time learning to play an instrument requires time, learning a language requires time building a house requires time acquiring knowledge requires time making a cup of coffee requires time crossing the street requires time but knowing, being yourself knowing who you are does not time stops you from realising it future stops you from realising it so it's going into the present moment and finding a new attitude towards the present moment which is one of openness rather than of using it as a stepping stone to the next moment that's the fallacy that's also the spiritual seeker's fallacy, is to use this moment as a stepping stone to the next one so you devalue this moment because you're thinking you're going to get there in the next one but the next moment what is that, what existence does it have? It's a thought in your head because there's no otherwise it has no existence it never comes the next moment always remains as a thought in your head it's never actuality it can't be because actuality and the present moment are indivisible they're one so you're still relying on thought when you look to when this moment is made reduced to, devalued reduced to a stepping stone to the next which is going to promise fulfilment then you miss it continuously because the next moment is a thought no more it doesn't exist in conventional terms it does but in absolute terms it doesn't exist if it did somebody would have seen it or touched it I've never encountered the future it's never the moment it comes it's the present there's only this so don't be a seeker or let's say if you have to seek then seek to be open to this moment be say yes to whatever arises whatever form it takes any form that arises in your life at this moment say that's what is you don't impose judgements on it it is what is already it already is then you have arrived you are and then you realise that you are the space for it you are not what happens you are the space for it you are not the thought you are the space for the thought you are not the emotion you are the formless space of consciousness itself which is no time has no time to it and so that's the end of seeking. You don't don't seek an experience.

Some people have spiritual experiences but the experience comes and goes. Some people have great spiritual experience like fireworks and it lasts and it lasts for a while and then because it's a form and then it dissolves or I had such a great experience three years ago, five years ago. I wish I could have that again.

I'm trying to have it again but it's not working. It's not an experience. It's the, you know, become aware of the the background to all experience, the space for all experience, the stillness behind all experience which is always there.

It's only covered up by mental noise, thoughts. Become aware that that's who you are and then that's it. You then you embody that.

You become an opening for that and that's all. That's your, the fulfillment of your life here is to be an opening for that and then perhaps your realization deepens of that. It's not an experience but it's the the sense of spaciousness deepens and more and more the balance changes between perhaps at first you are a person 90% of the time and the little 10% of space.

So you're not a person who is totally identified anymore. So you see some space and that's fine. It's already is a big improvement in your life and then as gradually there's more space that comes in between the thoughts, in between the emotions.

And then you're 70% a person, 30% space and perhaps eventually 50% person, 50% space and you're already a beautiful spiritual teacher. And that's fine if 50% form, 50% formless. I'm quantifying something it cannot be quantified.

It's a little silly but balance the dance between form and formlessness in your life. And as you grow old perhaps when you reach the age of 80 there's more and more formlessness. Or there may already be 90% formlessness and you sit and you might then decide to travel to India because only there will they fully appreciate it.

And you can sit under a tree and only occasionally you say a few words. That's the 10% of the person still there but basically you are an opening for consciousness to come through as was the sage such as Ramana Maharshi in India. Just sit there.

And in India as you sit there for long enough in that state people will come and live next to you. One, two, three, four, ten, twenty, thirty. And then before you know it you sit in the middle of an ashram.

I must admit I feel tempted sometimes to do that. But there's still a lot to do in the West. Every thought is an energy formation like you could say a little entity and attracts associated thoughts and becomes a bundle of thoughts.

They may arise from your personal but very commonly they arise from the collective.

In this world you have to be careful with what kind of thoughts you absorb from the collective because there's so much unhappiness in the collective energy field of humanity. So it's very easy to get drawn into that if you're not careful and participate in the suffering of the collective fear, anxiety, anger that's everywhere. It's also very easy to be affected by certain thoughts that can take over your mind that come from the collective thoughts and thought patterns.

Anybody who is not sufficiently present, sufficiently aware is susceptible to being infected by certain thoughts.

[Speaker 2] (9:03:23 - 9:03:46)
The mind, certain thoughts become lodged in your mind that every thought is an energy formation like you could say a little entity. Thought gets lodged in your mind and attracts associated thoughts and becomes a bundle of thoughts.

[Speaker 3] (9:03:47 - 9:04:01)
And without awareness you identify with the thoughts and then you're being possessed by certain thoughts.

[Speaker 1] (9:04:01 - 9:04:28)
They may arise from your personal but very commonly they arise from the collective. In your personal life you could develop some kind of thought that of an obsessive nature that occupies your mind and you can't get rid of it.

[Speaker 3] (9:04:31 - 9:05:06)
It could be the thought of one directed to one particular person, very negative thoughts. Even at the simplest level some people have you can have a melody that you can't get rid of in your mind.

[Speaker 1] (9:05:06 - 9:05:13)
You can have a whole day or two days and you can't get rid of some this thing that's in your mind it repeats itself again and again.

[Speaker 3] (9:05:16 - 9:06:00)
You can have certain assumptions about this world like they may be totally absurd and irrational or there may be some truth to it but only there may be an aspect of the truth. You might think that the most absurd thoughts could be there. You might think that the the extraterrestrials are already here.

[Speaker 1] (9:06:00 - 9:12:24)
Well they may be but and every other human is actually an alien and you just have to look at them carefully to figure out whether they are aliens or humans and that could I'm not excluding the possibility that some aliens may be here but I'm talking about obsessive thoughts that are probably not correct. And then it covers your subsequent perception of reality gets totally colored by the obsessive thoughts and it can explain everything in those terms. All the evils of the world have suddenly one explanation.

Another one that's also in the collective you can have a thought that the entire world is divided into oppressor and oppressed. Any human being either belongs to the oppressors or to the oppressed. That was an idea in communism in economic terms in terms of social power.

They divided humanity into oppressors and oppressed and then they look at you can look at any human being and to me he's oppressed he's an oppressor. Now the thing is of course oppressors and oppressed have existed and to some extent and some areas still exist. But to take one fragment of truth because the totality of human life is much vaster than that this is one aspect but if you take one aspect that then occupies your mind because of lack of awareness you are possessed by a thought and this thought that's the entire world this is just one example could give many examples.

The entire world is either the essential identity of any human being is either they are oppressed or they are the oppressor. Now of course if that is the thoughts that dominate your mind then obviously you would probably regard the oppressed as the good ones and the oppressors as the bad ones so that then that simplifies life enormously. You immediately can decide who is good and who is bad and you are probably good presumably.

Even if you if you are an oppressor traditionally you're you're you now recognize your sins and you will atone for your sins of being an oppressor and you side with the oppressed and therefore you become one of the good people. Okay so we had the same phenomenon in very extreme form we all know about Soviet communism we know about Chinese Mao Zedong cultural revolution quite a crazy time period we know national socialism in Germany all these the evils perpetrated by all these collective delusional systems that divided people into good and bad entire groups gave them an identity. I was in Cambodia a few years ago and visited the the death camps of where Cambodians are it's a small country so not many people are familiar with the recent history of Cambodia but they had a an extreme communist regime under a mad dictator called Pol Pot and in that risk extreme communist regime and Cambodia experienced dreadful suffering one third of the population was killed by their own government because they were the oppressors. An oppressor was anybody who could read and write because obviously they were exploiting the peasants.

Anybody who wore glasses he could would immediately like that's right oppressor they would be sent from the cities into the countryside to work on the fields where they didn't have enough food and most of them starved. A total lack of humanity total lack because of the entire country was dominated by one absurd and obsessive thought that that made them made it impossible for them to relate to any human being as a human being. They relate them through the conceptualization that they that thought had created for them.

They couldn't sense the humanity the being of the other human anymore the moments that imposed the conceptual identity on them. This is an extreme example of what can happen to you when you're taken over by certain thoughts in your mind. This is not to mean that of course oppressor and oppressive existed and exists but it's not not the entire explanation.

There are many other facts in this life but I'm saying all this because you need to be very alert so that your mind is not taken over by certain thoughts that are not that invade your mind and color your view of reality and there are there are certain irrational thoughts that are floating around in the collective at the present time so it's very easy to for you to absorb some of them and being possessed by certain thoughts and maybe it's so irrational that it's unbelievable but I'm not giving any examples but you have to find it out for yourself with awareness you can and

[Speaker 1] (9:12:34 - 9:15:08)
be be very careful with observing your mind be there as the witness of your mind so that you don't get taken over by certain thoughts that your mind does not get taken over by certain thoughts and then you cannot perceive reality anymore as it is everything is colored by the veil of irrational thinking so when you nowadays these things can spread very quickly and easily these irrational things in the past they were confined to either one country or one area in a particular country but nowadays certainly rational thoughts can go through the entire world through the technology we have and can quickly affect millions of humans all over the world so in the past you had it as I said limited let's say the the the hunt for witches in the past totally absurd and irrational it's a mental disease that affect certain countries or areas in certain countries and this mental disease then so there were some places in in Europe there were villages and towns in Europe in the middle ages during that time of collective insanity there there were almost no women left in in some villages in towns at that time because they're all being burned or drowned because they were called it as witches absolute in great absolute insanity so don't underestimate how insane humans can become and the only antidote that you have against that is awareness so that your mind does not get affected by mental virus the awareness the awareness is aware of what your mind is doing so that your mind does not get occupied by one particular way of thinking which is probably irrational anything that's one-sided that does not see the totality of a situation like oppressor and oppressed if you don't see that the many factors that

make up a human being's identity so very be very careful with what you consume in the media

[Speaker 1] (9:15:23 - 9:49:59)
the media that brings the news to you be very careful with what you consume so that you take do not take on without knowing it unquestioningly certain ways of looking at the world realize that you're being how manipulative most of the mainstream media has become you need to watch that if you watch it knowing how you're being manipulated and they're they the people themselves are being manipulated too so it's they are in the grip of unconsciousness and they want to draw others into unconsciousness so they're not they're not the evil ones they just don't know any better as you know stillness is the essential ingredient in our life meditation the important thing is to become aware of it notice it it seems strange at first to become aware of stillness almost impossible because what is there to be aware of you can be aware of noise that's easy but still there seems to be nothing there so at first some people may find it hard or not even know what it means to be aware of stillness now stillness of course is just a pointer and usually in normal usage what stillness means is the absence of noise another word is silence stillness but when we use the word stillness here as a pointer it's not just the absence of noise but the also the presence of something and that's of course the wrong word already because it's not something let's use it anyway knowing how limited words are it's also the presence of something no not really the presence of something but the presence of presence now don't try to figure out conceptually what that means but use this opportunity to experience it firsthand to realize for yourself the meaning of this presence of presence you become aware in other words of let's put it like this for a moment you become aware of your own presence not the presence of the person you as the person but the presence of something deeper whatever almost as if the person that consists of whatever you experience externally and whatever you experience in the mind or whatever you experience in the emotional field those things coming together is usually becomes the what one experiences as the person and for most people that's their what's that's their life consists of that but that really is a surface phenomenon like ripples on the surface of the ocean maybe even waves on the surface of the ocean but no matter how huge or little the waves are on the surface of the ocean they're nothing compared to the depths of the ocean so to become aware of the presence of presence or to put it slightly differently to become aware of yourself as the presence is like the ocean becoming aware of its own depth and to become aware of yourself as presence or the presence of presence it's helpful if the mind activity of the activity of thinking subsides for a moment and you realize you're still there the essence of who you are which you cannot define in any way what is that that's left when i'm not thinking about who i am when i'm not thinking at all perhaps now this great opportunity to experience the state of thoughtless awareness when i'm not thinking at all who am i presence so there is something left that is vital and essential the most vital part of you is to do something that usually humans are unaware of because they're only aware of the surface of their lives and when you're only aware of the surface of your life the tendency is for life to become quite frustrating and never really satisfying, because it's in the nature of surface phenomena not to be satisfying, except for brief moments. So, in conventional terms, we have heard the word superficial as applied to humans, and in conventional usage, a superficial human would be somebody who is only concerned with external appearance, or what other people think of me, how I look to others and myself. That's conventional usage.

But in a deeper sense, anybody's superficial is anybody who is unaware of that which underlies all their experiences, all their experiencing, sense perceptions, thoughts, emotions. And they are so drawn into every sense perception, and especially thought and emotion, and those get mixed up in a bowl, the bowl of your experience. So you can't even distinguish anymore between your mental interpretation of an experience that you're having, and the actual external facts of that experience.

So you bring your conditioning into the way in which you perceive the world. Situations, events, people, are always then immediately interpreted as the perception of them happens. The perception is colored and distorted by the conditioning of your mind.

And you don't know that. So that's all the unconscious state. And in a wider sense, you are superficial then, when that depth or spaciousness in you that is presence is lacking.

So that is the wider meaning of superficial. It's not just being concerned with the external appearance. Really, superficial means there is no spaciousness in you.

In other words, you are trapped in the person or the personality, the conditioning of all that, with nothing else. Or maybe occasionally little glimpses of spaciousness that come, and then they're gone again. But those glimpses that come occasionally in many people's lives, are enough to keep them going and prevent them from falling into complete despair.

Because occasionally they have little awakenings. And they don't even really know it. They just think, oh, this life is good right now.

It feels good to be alive. Because suddenly there's a moment stillness has opened up, a sense of aliveness, of just presence. For some people it happens when they're engaged in strenuous physical activity that can bring about, temporarily, that opening into spaciousness.

Unless the ego becomes involved in it, you want to win. That's a different matter again. Some people have to fall ill, and when they are ill they become a little bit spacious.

They haven't got enough energy to keep the egoic conditioning going, the continuous thinking, the continuous compulsive mind activity. And so, for some people, illness is an opportunity to experience a little bit of that spaciousness. Usually it doesn't last, or you're getting close to death, or you think you might die soon, and that can bring about that opening.

But why wait for some illness, or for you to climb a mountain, for your mind to stop, or approaching death? This is the opportunity for realizing that there is a dimension in you that is the essence of it all. And that really is the secret of what traditionally, in many spiritual traditions, is called detachment.

That really means there is a spaciousness, and that spaciousness in you enables you to be not totally drawn into every thought that comes into your head. That's not detachment, that's attachment. Really, attachment is when your attention, or your consciousness, is continuously absorbed, not just by things that happen, but for many people, primarily as their mind activity, every thought that comes in, sometimes fueled by emotions that go with thoughts, totally overpowered by the continuous stream of thinking, and in many cases, emotional thinking.

It's a complete dream world compared to being present. You are immersed in your own dream world. And that's how drama arises in people's lives.

That's attachment. So attachment really means to be completely identified with every emotion and every thought that comes. And detachment means there is a spaciousness around the thoughts, or the emotions, or any experience that you have.

There is a space around it, one could say. That space, of course, is in you. You're aware, in other words, not only of what's happening externally and internally, but more fundamentally, you're aware of yourself as the space in which whatever is happening is happening.

And when you live your life like that, there's always a sense of peace or spaciousness in the background, even while you're thinking. You're not totally drawn into every thought. Thought happens, and yet you're still aware of the consciousness that gives rise to every thought.

Ultimately, the thought is not separate from the consciousness in the same way that the wave is not separate from the ocean. It just looks for a moment as if the wave had a separate existence. And especially if you give it a name, if you say, oh, there comes wave, that's wave John, and that's wave Mary.

This wave is called Mary, was born 10 seconds ago. Wonder how long Mary is going to live. And then Mary comes rolling in.

And before you know it, it's gone. Oh, now Mary's dead. So ultimately, the mind activity is not separate from the consciousness, the presence.

It's just consciousness has assumed this temporary form. And you could say that even all sense perceptions are ultimately temporary forms, that consciousness appears as the tree, the chair, the dog, that human, that noise, sky, whatever appears in your consciousness, because the entire world becomes a world in you, in the consciousness that you are. I need my story.

All the things that I've been telling myself in my mind about myself and other people and my parents and my relatives and my co-workers and my ex-wife and my ex-husband, and what people did to me and what I did and shouldn't have done, failed to do. Who am I without that? I can't let go of that.

I need to think about this more. So it becomes a habitual place, the habitual place of the mental noise, where you feel, that's me. And so every therapist knows that you always reach a point with your clients, patients, whatever, depending on the school of therapy, depends whatever you call your clients, your patients, whatever.

There comes a point when you hit that resistance, they don't want to be free of their problems. And that the big challenge is, is this person going to overcome that barrier? Because that barrier is not just becoming free of my problems, but also becoming free of a very limited and ultimately fictitious sense of identity, the me.

So that is what I've described is the next step, one could say, in the evolution of human consciousness, is stepping out of self-talk, which is the conditioned mind, and realizing there is much more to who I am than this conditioned content of my mind. And that is the beginning of awakening. It's not those words, not that you need to believe that there is much more to who I am than the self-talk in my head, because that is still self-talk in the head.

I believe there's more to who I am. And you better believe it too. It seems almost redundant, or pity, having to add words to our beautiful stillness.

When we were just doing the meditation, I became aware of the air conditioning sound that keeps us cool here, sometimes too cool. But right now it seems perfect. And of course, one might think, if you start thinking, wouldn't it be nice if we didn't have to listen to that sound, because then we would have this beautiful, complete stillness, and maybe even with some natural sounds, if we could open the windows and then we could hear some birds or the air, leaves.

Yes, it's helpful to have that total stillness when you can find it. But ultimately, stillness is not ultimately an auditory phenomenon, or there can be the beginning of it. Stillness, when you become aware of it, when you pay attention to it, makes you still.

So when you pay attention to outer silence, it's only through your inner stillness that you can pay attention to outer silence. So the moment you notice it's still here, you are still. There needs to be something in you that corresponds to that, and stillness is absence of sound.

When you listen to stillness, there might be a few sounds here and there, but mainly there's no sound. So you're listening to nothing. And that's the key, that's why it's so helpful, because you suddenly become aware of nothing.

And when you become aware of nothing, what's left? Just the awareness, which also is nothing, formless in other words. So whenever you encounter stillness, maybe where you live, or when you go for a walk in nature, or at night when most people have gone to bed and the noisy collective mind isn't surrounding you anymore, then use it, notice it, and then notice that in the moment of noticing, you become still.

But here, of course, there's not complete external silence, but that doesn't matter. Anything that arises can be helpful. So this sound that's continuous in the background, you can ask yourself, who is hearing this?

How is it possible for me to perceive that sound, to hear that sound? And then you notice your own awareness. I call it your own, it's not really.

You notice the awareness. And that's the stillness. So you don't need the external silence, although it can be very helpful.

But when you don't have it, you could be in the middle of a noisy city, can stand there or sit or walk and be aware of yourself as the awareness that perceives all the noise and all the movement. And then when you perceive all the movement around you, and you become aware of yourself as the perceiving awareness, then you have the stillness in the context of movement and noise, external noise. So there's no need to demand that external conditions should be perfect so that you can become still.

In fact, it's sometimes the case that it's precisely when external conditions are seemingly unhelpful, that can sometimes be a greater opportunity to find that true stillness. And especially that is the case when external circumstances have the appearance of actually being a hindrance, something disturbing, something happening that upsets the status quo in your life. And those are great opportunities because then your motivation for going deeper as you suffer, when things happen in your external life that, quote, unquote, not be happening, then you begin to suffer.

And as you suffer, the motivation eventually arises of going deeper, of finding the place where there is no suffering. And you could still suffer a little bit on the external level of your life. So sooner or later, we find in our life that life does things to us, seemingly putting obstacles in our path, seemingly having bad intentions towards us.

We experience diminishment in some form. Of course, the ego says, or the egoic self says, that's terrible. I don't want any diminishment.

Diminishment meaning loss of something that had become part of your sense of self. It could be loss of possessions, could be loss of a relationship, loss of a loved one, loss of a healthy body, diminishment of physical health, loss of your persona, of what other people think of you.[Speaker 1] (0:00 - 9:22)
One day they tell you that you're the greatest and the next day they tell you, you're awful. Diminishment of whatever kind is abhorrent to the ego itself. There's a beautiful saying, I believe it comes originally, I'm not sure, but it doesn't matter where it comes, it comes out of consciousness, so it doesn't really matter.

But I believe it comes originally out of Sufism. And that is, when the ego weeps for what it has lost, the spirit rejoices for what it has found. And those people who, there's no human, by the way, who does not experience this in life several times, sooner or later, the next one comes.

Some people experience it even very early in life. Some children have experienced loss of a parent, of both parents. So diminishment comes sooner or later.

How do you meet it? Recognize it when it comes, not as a monster or the work of some malevolent deity or demon that wants to sabotage your life, but as an opportunity also. Now, you may not be able to be grateful for it in the moment of it happening.

That would be perhaps too much to ask. But you will find that later, a year may pass, two years, depending on what it is, suddenly realize that it has taken you deeper into the essence of who you are because something was removed from you that you thought you were, but it was a fiction ultimately. You had identified with something that ultimately is not who you are, it's a temporary thing.

Possessions, not status, great physically strong body, good looks, relationship. And then retrospectively, very often you are able to be grateful for the loss, for the diminishment because it drove you deeper. It brought out the essence of who you are beyond any form.

Now, it does not do that to all humans. It's for everybody. Diminishment is only a potential deepening.

The possibility is there. And many, many humans are not able to use it because nobody has told them. The knowledge, this kind of spiritual knowledge is still very limited.

It is not part of mainstream culture. People are dying every day without having any true assistance. People who are approaching death, who are getting old, our mainstream culture still knows nothing.

It's just, let's prolong life as long as possible, even if it's totally pointless and it creates a lot of suffering. Let's just, because we don't know what to do with death. That's one of the reasons why the foundation will hopefully be able to reach people to use the opportunity of this greatest diminishment, which is death, the greatest, when as you approach death, an enormous opportunity for spiritual awakening, realization.

But many humans, of course, miss the opportunity of that diminishment and with the result that the ego becomes even more hardened through it, or in the words of Brother David, shriveled, shriveled up to an even harder, lifeless thing. Then either you carry continuous anger or resentment or despondency for years, which becomes part of your egoic identity. And the ego loves any kind of identity.

If it's a miserable one, doesn't matter, I'll have it. Just give me a strong identity. I take miserable any time over being nobody.

So the opportunity of diminishment is missed. Often you see when people, they're wealthy people and suddenly something happens, they lose their money and then they jump out of the window because the entire sense of self was associated with their possessions. There are people who lose their reputation.

You remember, of course, the case of Mr. Madoff. He is a few years ago who had this scheme, fraudulent scheme and people lost millions or billions of people who was investing with him on Wall Street. They lost, it was a pyramid.

It was a Ponzi scheme, I think is the word. So he was deceiving all these people and they lost all their money and he had accumulated billions and then finally it all collapsed. Now he's in prison and his sons couldn't take it.

One of his sons, apparently the sons didn't know what was going on, I don't know if that's true, but they were also working in his firm, in his company. I think, believe one died of cancer soon after and the other committed suicide. Would have been a great opportunity if only somebody had told them, you've lost your money, you've lost your reputation.

This is a great opportunity. And find yourself, the opening is there. But it's just lack of information, nobody told them.

I hadn't actually thought of this until this moment because we want to bring the teaching to places where it otherwise would not be, go or would not reach. And I just thought of Wall Street. Yes.

Yes. Yes. Yes.

Yes. We will donate books and CDs to Wall Street. Yes.

Yes. So we'll have to call Goldman Sachs tomorrow. See if they agree.

Now, they won't be very interested perhaps at the moment, but they may become interested in the future. Just wait. And then it has often happened.

And I personally know of people who had genuine abilities and then they couldn't produce them all the time. They only, the ability came when it wanted to come, healing for example.

[Speaker 3] (9:27 - 10:18)
I love your teachings and I have a small practice I do every day, I meditate. I feel it's helped me tremendously in my life. I feel that all of the questions basically come back to the same thing, obviously being present.

But in my spiritual journey, I've come across certain ideas that I don't quite understand and I'm wondering if you could comment on them. And those would be things like a manipulation of reality and I don't just mean the power of intention, which I feel that I have employed in my life consciously, but things more like lucid dreaming or functioning at a higher frequency, that phrase, or octaves of the multiverse or seeing auras.

Well, all these things are different levels functioning at a higher frequency is the one expression that I can relate to most because this is another way of putting what this is all about, so we are learning to function at a higher frequency. There are many other, there are other expressions that have come to people. Some of them who have gone very deeply, perhaps the person who came up with function as a higher frequency, maybe went deeply and then this is the words that came to somebody else who goes to the same deep place.

Different words may come because what words you use to describe an inner reality, a deeper reality depends on the conditioning of your mind. So you will use different words, but also what people consider important also is a reflection of their state of consciousness. Seeing auras is a wonderful thing.

It's not the ultimate thing that will transform your consciousness. It can come as a by-product of a certain development of consciousness. Sometimes it does, sometimes it doesn't.

It is not something to be sought as the ultimate thing to achieve because even if you see auras, you're still in the same state of consciousness, which may be egoic. In fact, you may become so identified with your ability to see auras that your ego gets even bigger. Then there are, as consciousness evolves, it sometimes happens that certain abilities arise that are considered some almost miraculous.

To some people, they come, and to some people they come and then they go again. In India, those abilities that arise spontaneously as a by-product of spiritual awakening are called siddhis. So siddhis are, for example, to be able to telepathy or to know what somebody's thinking or to move things, to create telekinesis or whatever, any of these things spontaneously, very often, are things that happen.

And all the real teachers in India, they do not teach you to develop siddhis. They all point to the fact that siddhis, you should not give them too much importance when they do come because then you lose track of what really matters, which is your state of consciousness. So all the great teachers have said, okay, siddhis are fine.

They tend to come and go. And even if they stay, it's not the main thing. If you get drawn into that, you get lost and you're no longer, the evolution is no longer proceeding.

And in most cases, if you get drawn into some extraordinary ability, ego usually comes in because it's something you identify with as an enhanced sense of self in your mind. And then it has often happened, and I personally know of people who had genuine abilities, and then they couldn't produce them all the time. The ability came when it wanted to come.

Healing, for example, healing through oils, like I knew one or two people personally when they went into the healing state, suddenly there was oil that manifested, fragrant oil in their hands, and they would put their hands on people, and often there would be a healing. And then they started to practice more. And then they began to realize, although they never said that, that they couldn't, the oils didn't come all the time.

Then they tried, there's no oil, and I've got a room full of people wanting to be healed. They're coming at eight o'clock. And some because they had an ego investment, it became their livelihood.

And so what one of them did, I'm not mentioning the name, of course, what one of them did, as was told to me by his personal assistant, he put like a rubber thing filled with oil under his armpits, and then there was a tube going down. He had short sleeves, but the tube just went up to the edge. And then whenever he, when he went like this, the oil would, putting pressure on his armpit, the oil would be squeezed out and would flow into his hands.

And nobody would know it because it ran down. There was a tube ended here, the sleeve ended there, and the oil would run down into his hands. And so he, because he had an ego involvement in it, he became, he was both genuine and a fraud at the same time.

It's not uncommon for people who attach great importance to these powers to become. They have both a genuine power, and when it leaves them, they are a fraud. So, but of course that's their spiritual path.

And at some point there is, well, who could say that this person cannot evolve beyond it? If they, if he realizes what he's doing, at some point awareness may come in, and then he may well give up doing his healing. So all these things, what these various terminologies, expressions, they come on the one hand, they come from people whose state of consciousness values that particular thing.

And then often they create that expression, say this is the ultimate thing. And of course the ultimate thing is the one that I can do. And there are teachers who can perform so-called miracles, and in by relatively unevolved humans that can be mistaken for great enlightenment.

But sometimes these abilities, like yogic abilities, there are people in India who can stop breathing for an hour or two or three. They can, they bury them in a box, a sealed box, and they emerge days later. And does it mean that they have gone beyond ego?

Not necessarily. In fact, their ego may be very big while they're in the box, and especially when they come out of it and everybody goes. So, but if these things come as a by-product of awakening, it's fine, but not giving them excessive importance.

That's really the main thing.

[Speaker 3] (17:43 - 17:45)
Could you say a word about octaves?

[Speaker 1] (17:46 - 17:48)
No. No. No idea.

[Speaker 3] (17:49 - 17:50)
Thank you.

[Speaker 1] (17:50 - 17:51)
I look it up on the internet.

[Speaker 3] (17:52 - 17:53)
Me too.

[Speaker 1] (18:19 - 55:03)
So how do you get out of the self-talk in the head? One, you need to know that that's self-talk in the head. If you don't know it's self-talk in the head, you become the self-talk in your head.

You become the voice in your head. You don't know it, you are it. So you have to, the vital step, and I cannot tell you how to do that.

That minimum of awareness needs to be there where you know that there's self-talk happening in my head and it's telling you some kind of story. It could be the briefest of stories, like I shouldn't have come here, or I don't fit in here, all these people are too spiritual for me, or I'm so spiritual, these people are not spiritual at all. It's all little stories in the head.

Even every fragment of self-talk is a little story in the head that goes around. And then you look at reality through the lens of the little story. It's not just one story, of course.

There comes another one, and another, and some stories are not little, they may be big stories about yourself and your life and what's gone wrong with it, or what's gone right with it. Even that's a story. More pleasant than if it's gone wrong.

So you need to know when the self-talk happens in the head, hmm, the knowing is not part of the self-talk. The knowing is just an awareness that there is self-talk. The moment there is an awareness that there is self-talk, the possibility of freedom from the self-talk opens up.

If that awareness is not there, there's nothing you can do. You have to wait until life knocks you over the head so that finally some awareness comes in, and you go, huh. So you might have to sleep on a banana skin or something because you have self-talk, and suddenly you go, huh.

Oh, life told you to wake up. Awakening, which is a term that's been used for thousands of years in the spiritual context, not in the conventional context, to awaken means to come out of sleep, in conventional language, terminology. But in spiritual terminology, to awaken means to awaken, one could say, basically, to awaken out of the self-talk in the head because the self-talk in the head is a form of hypnosis, self-hypnosis.

You are hypnotized, you have been hypnotized by society, your surroundings, the surrounding culture, even the language that you were taught to use that becomes a large part of the self-talk, although some of the self-talk is also accompanied by images, but a lot of it is language. And all that, you've been conditioned, and you are possessed by that, which is an energy formation, and humans are possessed by that and mistake that conditioned entity, which consists of thoughts, they're so trapped in it, they're so identified with it, they believe in every thought that comes into your head. It's absurd, but normal.

Well, another word, rather than absurd, I could say it's mad, but it's normal. It creates incredible amount of suffering, unnecessary suffering that humans create for themselves and for others. You can't create suffering for yourself without making others suffer who are close to you and whoever comes into contact with you.

An enormous amount of suffering is created by not realizing that large percentage of your problems consist of self-talk in the head. That's amazing. And once you see that, you say, okay.

And then you can have a little bit of awareness and say, who am I? Am I that story, or am I the one who sees that, who recognizes that there's self-talk? And in order to recognize that there's self-talk going on in you, that's not a thought, there's just an aware presence that, hmm.

And then the compulsive nature of self-talk lessens somewhat because some awareness has come in, the light of awareness has come in. Shh. And then you realize you are that light of awareness, you are the awareness.

And there's a shift, the head may not immediately stop, it'll want to carry on, the self-talk wants to carry on, there's a momentum to it. You can observe that momentum if you can't do it in yourself, you can observe it in others. Once they have a story and they're telling you their story, they can't stop, they want to go on and on.

And they don't want an end, if they're talking about their problems, they don't want an end to their problems, they want a continuation of the story, which is the problem. Ha, ha. Ha, ha.

Ha, ha. Ha, ha. Ha, ha.

Ha, ha. They don't know that, that's why we call it unconscious. They don't know that their primary thing is they want the continuation of the story, because that's the continuation of the fictitious person that cannot live without its story, its storyline.

And so those people, do they want an end to their problems? Of course, they will probably tell you, yeah, I'd love. No, they don't.

They don't want an end to their problems because that would be an end to their story, which is their identity. Ha, ha, ha, ha, ha. They don't want an end to their sense of identity.

I need my story. All the things that I've been telling myself in my mind about myself and other people and my parents and my relatives and my coworkers and my ex-wife and my ex-husband and what people did to me or what I did and shouldn't have done, failed to do. Who am I without, I can't let go of that.

I need to think about this more. So it becomes a habitual place, the habitual place of the mental noise where you feel that's me. And so every therapist knows that you always reach a point with your clients, patients, whatever, depending on the school of therapy, depends whatever you call your clients, your patients, whatever, there comes a point when you hit that resistance, they don't want to be free of their problems.

Ha, ha, ha, ha, ha. And that the big challenge is, there is this person going to overcome that barrier because that barrier is not just becoming free of my problems, but also becoming free of a very limited and ultimately fictitious sense of identity, the me. This mind-made sense of self is also much more focused on the negative than the positive.

To be free, you awaken to who you are beyond your history and your life situation. Who you are as a person is of little or no importance. Who I am as a person is of no importance, at least while we're here.

And then hopefully that will have some effect on the rest of your life when you go about your business so that the me, the person, loses its overriding importance in your life. It's still there, but it's no longer what dominates your life, so it's really transcending the person. And being here together can give you an intensified experience of the shift from being primarily a person to being primarily a presence.

I don't speak to you as a person. My mind is used as a tool through which presence speaks. That's why I have a little book called Stillness Speaks.

Seems almost paradoxical. This entire teaching, if you even want to call it that, is not, does not come from a person. It only happens because the person got out of the way, became transparent, subsided, and so something deeper was able to come through into this dimension.

And that's your destiny and purpose also. So to be the presence consciously, to experience yourself as that underlying presence is liberating. It frees you from the density of being only that person, knowing yourself only as that personal self, being a self in the Buddhist sense, which is ultimately a delusion, deluded.

What emerges is, in Buddhist terms, or you might say the no self, which is not something, it's not an object, it has no form. Or in Hindu terms, the transcendent self emerges, the formless self, not the me anymore. And it's timeless, there's no past and future to it.

And so this is recognizing yourself as essentially timeless, timeless awareness, timeless consciousness. So when you look at me, you're not looking at a person, but you're connecting with yourself. So the depths of who you are is reflected back to you, that's all.

When you go back into your daily life, there may be times when the person reasserts itself completely, so you lose yourself again in the person. And then you wake up again, and some presence comes back. There may also be times when you are primarily the presence.

That's wonderful as that happens more and more in your life. With that comes an openness, a non-judgment, the judgmental mind subsides. And a real sense of connectedness or rather oneness with other beings, human beings, other life forms.

And so that means the way in which you experience your so-called life, the way in which you experience the world, people, situations, events, that changes the reactive person. The reactive me is no longer running the show. And where before there was a reactive, judgmental person, there's now a deep benevolent presence.

When the ego weeps for what it has lost, the spirit rejoices for what it has found. So there's no need to demand that external conditions should be perfect so that you can become still. In fact, it's sometimes the case that it's precisely when external conditions are seemingly unhelpful, that can sometimes be a great opportunity to find that true stillness.

And especially that is the case when external circumstances have the appearance of actually being a hindrance, something disturbing, something happening that upsets the status quo in your life. And those are great opportunities because then your motivation for going deeper as you suffer when things happen in your external life that quote, unquote, should not be happening, then you begin to suffer. And as you suffer, the motivation eventually arises of going deeper, of finding the place where there is no suffering.

And you could still suffer a little bit on the external level of your life. So sooner or later, we find in our life that life does things to us, seemingly putting obstacles in our path, seemingly having bad intentions towards us. We experience diminishment in some form.

Of course, the ego says, or the egoic self says, that's terrible, I don't want any diminishment. Diminishment meaning loss of something that had become part of your sense of self. It could be loss of possessions, could be loss of a relationship, loss of a loved one.

Loss of a healthy body, diminishment of physical health, loss of your persona of what other people think of you. One day they tell you that you're the greatest, and the next day they tell you you're awful. So diminishment of whatever kind is abhorrent to the egoic self.

There's a beautiful saying, I believe it comes originally, I'm not sure, but it doesn't matter where it comes, it comes out of consciousness, so it doesn't really matter. But I believe it comes originally out of Sufism. And that is, when the ego weeps for what it has lost, the spirit rejoices for what it has found.

And those people who, there's no human, by the way, who does not experience this in life several times, sooner or later. The next one comes. Some people experience it even very early in life.

Some children have experienced loss of a parent, of both parents. So diminishment comes sooner or later. How do you meet it?

Recognize it when it comes, not as a monster or the work of some malevolent deity or demon that wants to sabotage your life, but as an opportunity also. Now, you may not be able to be grateful for it in the moment of it happening. That would be perhaps too much to ask.

But you will find that later, a year may pass, two years, depending on what it is, suddenly realize that it has taken you deeper into the essence of who you are because something was removed from you that you thought you were, but it was a fiction ultimately. You had identified with something that ultimately is not who you are, it's a temporary thing. Possessions, not status, great physically strong body, good looks, relationship.

And then retrospectively, very often you are able to be grateful for the loss, for the diminishment because it drove you deeper. It brought out the essence of who you are beyond any form. Now, it does not do that to all humans.

It's for everybody, diminishment is only a potential deepening. The possibility is there. And many, many humans are not able to use it because nobody has told them.

The knowledge, this kind of spiritual knowledge is still very limited. It is not part of mainstream culture. People are dying every day without having any true assistance.

People who are approaching death, who are getting old, our mainstream culture still knows nothing. It's just, let's prolong life as long as possible, even if it's totally pointless and it creates a lot of suffering. Let's just, because we don't know what to do with death.

That's one of the reasons why the foundation will hopefully be able to reach people to use the opportunity of this greatest diminishment, which is death, the greatest, when as you approach death, an enormous opportunity for spiritual awakening, realization. But many humans, of course, miss the opportunity of that diminishment and with the result that the ego becomes even more hardened through it, or in the words of Brother David, shriveled, shriveled up to an even harder lifeless thing. Then either you carry continuous anger or resentment or despondency for years, which becomes part of your egoic identity.

And the ego loves any kind of identity. If it's a miserable one, doesn't matter, I'll have it. Just give me a strong identity.

I'll take miserable any time over being nobody. So the opportunity of diminishment is missed. Often you see when people, they're wealthy people and suddenly something happens, they lose their money and then they jump out of the window because the entire sense of self was associated with their possessions.

There are people who lose their reputation. You remember, of course, the case of Mr. Madoff. He is a few years ago who had this scheme, fraudulent scheme and people lost millions or billions of people who was investing with him on Wall Street.

They lost, it was a pyramid. It was a Ponzi scheme, I think is the word. So he was just deceiving all these people and they lost all their money and he had accumulated billions and then finally it all collapsed.

Now he's in prison and his sons couldn't take it. One of his sons, apparently the sons didn't know what was going on. I don't know if that's true, but they were also working in his firm, in his company.

I think, believe one died of cancer soon after and the other committed suicide. Would have been a great opportunity if only somebody had told them, you've lost your money, you've lost your reputation. This is a great opportunity.

And find yourself, the opening is there, but it's just lack of information. Nobody told them. I hadn't actually thought of this until this moment because we want to bring the teaching to places where it otherwise would not be, go or would not reach.

And I just thought of Wall Street. And we will donate books and CDs to Wall Street. So we'll have to call Goldman Sachs tomorrow.

See if they agree. Now they won't be very interested perhaps at the moment, but they may become interested in the future. Just wait.

So you have already, I believe everybody here has already experienced some forms of diminishment to use that word through the physical form, the psychological me entity. And for many, the reason why you're here is because you've gone through that and it has deepened you. Even the collapse of a relationship, you don't have to be married, but you have a relationship, doesn't go well.

It ends, it's a little death, it can be painful. It leaves a little hole in you and takes, it seemingly rips something out of you. And for quite a while you feel it.

It's not pleasant, but that too is an opportunity. So when the ego weeps for what it has lost, oh dear, it's all terrible. I'll tell you what happened.

And I'll tell myself what happened. Even if nobody's listening, it'll go off in your head. Oh my God, I can't take any more of this.

I just can't take it, it's just too much. What's the point of it all? Just completely.

It's good to act out the ego sometimes because then you can actually see it. It's like a reflection in the mirror because it's funny because you remember everybody knows, familiar with that in some way. And that's why it becomes funny.

I'm learning from Marianne yesterday because she has other ways of acting out the ego. It's a little bit more feminine, but I can try that too. Woo.

It may look a little weird when I do it though. But there's a lot in it that doesn't really need to be explained in words. Just this simple gesture, implies a self-image to look at yourself through a self-image.

Look at me.

[Speaker 3] (55:31 - 55:59)
In this third and final part of our series on conscious manifestation 2020, Eckhart looks at what's possible once we come into presence, the fullness, the freedom, the natural abundance of life. Here's Eckhart Tolle.

[Speaker 1] (56:02 - 4:34:16)
The collective suffering that humans are experiencing at the present time is also an opportunity that's opening up for millions of humans, not that they're all going to recognize that and be able to use it, but some will, perhaps many an opportunity for the beginning of an awakening, or perhaps even more than just the beginning of an awakening, the opportunity for an awakening of consciousness. Because if you don't, then you stay stuck in suffering. And you cannot create, manifest a better life for yourself or a better world from the place of suffering.

You need to have gone beyond suffering in order to be able to manifest a better world. So the foundational step then is what I just described. And then you, as the transmutational process continues in you, then you are able occasionally to perhaps have certain thoughts that are no longer in conflict with the emotional reality in you because there has been a transmutation of the fear.

And when you can feel that intense presence, this is a good time, if you even want to do it, you can have a visualization or an affirmation of the goodness of life or the abundance of life, that life is abundant and it's no longer a lie. Because when you sense that presence in you, before it was fear, perhaps, and then it's become presence. There is a feeling of intense aliveness.

There is a heightened aliveness in that presence that would not have been there if life had not challenged you and first made you suffer and then caused you to become more conscious in order to transcend the suffering. That's how evolution happens. And so there is an aliveness in that conscious presence that is inseparable from what we may call abundance.

That brings me to one of my favorite sayings of Jesus. He said, he said, I want you to have the abundant life. That's in one translation.

In another translation, it says, he says, I want you to have the fullness of life. So some Bibles translate it as abundant life. Some Bibles translate it as the fullness of life.

I want you to have the fullness, the fullness of life. He's talking, yes, abundant life. What does that mean?

Abundance in conventional terms, when you think of abundance, we think of many things. You can have lots of things when you have abundance, but true abundance is something, it's not lots of things, although maybe lots of things may come to you, but you don't need lots of things in order to experience abundance. You experience abundance through experiencing the presence within you is the abundance.

It is the fullness of life, the fullness of life that is within you now. Oh, and then we come to another saying of Jesus since I'm talking about Jesus, let's use another very important. The most important thing anybody's ever said about manifesting things is in one sentence that Jesus said that you don't need all the books written about manifesting.

Once you understand that one sentence, you don't need to read any of them. And that sentence is when you pray for something, believe that you have received it and it will be yours. Believe that, not, now the key, of course, is not believe that you will receive it.

The key is believe that you have received it and then it will be yours. The will be refers to the thing, whatever it is that you pray for. But what does that mean?

How can you believe that you have received it when obviously you haven't received it? Now, this can only be understood together with his statement about the fullness of life. It is when you realize the fullness of life, that is the power of your own consciousness.

It's not your own, but let's just call it your own. It's universal consciousness. And this awareness, this presence is universal consciousness.

It is, let's temporarily call it your consciousness. It's not yours because if you say your consciousness, you have a separation between you and consciousness, but there is no duality here. There's only the consciousness that you are.

So when you realize that this, the power of your consciousness, the power of consciousness is the fullness of life. And you can then, nothing that you could add to yourself could be any greater than that. So when you realize the fullness of life, which you can only realize in the present moment, when emotions, the emotion of fear or other negative emotion has become transmuted into intense presence, then this intense presence is the fullness of life.

Anything else that you could obtain in life and that you as a person may want or may enjoy or may need on a personal level is the icing on the cake. Now to this important realization that all manifestation, you can only be a really successful manifestation practitioner if you realize that whatever you manifest is the icing on the cake, because you already have the cake. You are the cake.

If you don't realize that, then life is frustrating because even whatever you do manifest, if you think that's the cake, it's not going to satisfy you for long. It might even make you sick if you eat too much cake. It may make you sick.

So the cake is the essence of who you are, is the presence. If you bring an image of what you want to obtain or achieve into that feeling of presence or aliveness, then that can become a very powerful manifestation. You want to have a better place to live perhaps, whatever it is.

But you don't need it to experience the fullness of life. You can only be successful at manifesting if you don't need whatever it is that you want to manifest in order to give you the experience of the fullness of life, which we could use other words to describe it, the experience of being fully yourself, the experience of having made it, the experience of a fuller sense of identity, whatever it may be, because people don't, they don't want the thing that they think they want.

They want the feeling that that thing will give them. You don't want the car just for the sake of the car. You want the feeling that is associated with a car and the mental image that's associated with I am the owner of this car, it's my car.

That's what they want. The car itself would be meaningless. So they want, whatever they want is always a secondary thing.

They want this fullness of life through something else. So I'm really describing how manifestation does not work. And even if it did work in that way, and sometimes it does in a limited way, it's not the answer and it doesn't make you happy.

And it won't ultimately solve anything. So the powerful manifesto, if that's a word, is the one who was already in touch with the fullness of life and manifest from the fullness of life. And again, Jesus said, so many beautiful things there.

Find only the kingdom of heaven that is within you, which is again, the fullness of life, which is the presence, the unconditioned consciousness, and all the things that you need or think you need will be added onto you. That's an amazing thing. So it's even when you do not specifically attempt or practice manifesting specific things in your life, which some people do and some don't, it's an interesting practice.

Even if you did want to manifest specific things, your life will change as a result of being in touch with that dimension within you, the fullness of life, because from there, manifestation happens. It even happens when you're no longer even want to manifest because you're fine, but you represent then a different level of consciousness in this world. And the way in which you experience this world changes.

And the way in which you affect the world changes. So you cannot help but manifest when you undergo this shift in consciousness. And even if you don't undergo it fully, you still begin to manifest a different world.

First of all, a different world for yourself, because the way in which you experience the world depends on your state of consciousness. One person may react to the same circumstances very differently from another person, depending on their level of consciousness. So one person gets encounter a particular form of adversity, a very unconscious person, and react in their way.

So they experience a very different world from a person who meets the same adversity from a different, from an awakened state of consciousness, experience it a different world. And not only that, the way in which the, let's say, whatever event you're experiencing in the present moment, the way in which you meet this event, the state of consciousness from which you meet this event determines the subsequent development of that event. This is a somewhat esoteric thing, but you, the so-called world and your state of consciousness are a single phenomenon.

There is not really a world if nobody experiences it. So the consciousness that you are and the world are a single thing. When your consciousness changes, the world changes.

First of all, the way in which you experience the world changes, it basically means the world changes for you. And if the world changes for a sufficient number of people, then even the so-called outside world changes. So for the world to change, there needs to be a shift in consciousness.

But you begin to experience this in your own life first, and then you begin to inhabit a different world. So you always, you manifest, of course, always, most people manifest, as I'm sure you know, most people manifest unconsciously because they're conditioning, the way in which your mind is conditioned determines how they experience events in their life. And that becomes their world.

So they manifest every moment. So how do you manifest your experience of this moment? That's another way of looking at manifestation.

How do you manifest this moment? It depends on your level of state of consciousness. And so there is your freedom.

You are not dependent ultimately on external conditions. And that's when you realize that, that you are not at the mercy of what's happening or not happening around you. So you develop, this is a wonderful realization, a wonderful freedom, that your consciousness is not dependent on this or that happening or not happening.

That's an incredible realization, and it's a sense of liberation. Meditation is really all about becoming still without going to sleep. Or let me correct what I just said.

It's not so much becoming still, but being still. Becoming would imply that you have to go somewhere or do something. Being is already here and now.

And in a sane life, a conscious life, a harmonious life, there needs to be a balance between becoming and being. Becoming is doing things, getting things done, and so on. In this world, dealing with things, creating things, achieving things.

And being is about being aware of the present moment, which, after all, is all you ever have. Whatever you achieve through becoming in the future eventually turns into the present moment. So as I speak to you, the meditation, if we even want to call it that, it's perhaps best to forget about the word.

And as I speak, be aware of the silence or the stillness between the words. Being aware means just notice that it's there. It's very simple.

So you notice that in addition to the words, there's another dimension that is easily overlooked. And that's the dimension of stillness, which we could also call space or spaciousness. So when you notice that there are two, so to speak, two dimensions here, the dimension of words, which you hear and which then become thoughts, in your head, and the dimension of no thing, spaciousness.

So you just notice, that's all that's required, that there is that dimension also present. So you notice it in between words and even behind the words, so to speak. Now when you notice it, what happens inside you?

What does it mean to notice the stillness? Be aware of the stillness. It means you have become still inside.

It means you're conscious, but at that moment, at this moment, you're not thinking, but you're alert. Present, completely here, but not thinking. So that's the realization of the dimension of depths within you, and without that realization, your entire life is a surface phenomenon.

You run around on the surface of being, never satisfied for long, frustrated, almost always feeling there's something important missing in your life, and of course there is. But you can't find it on the surface of your life, the horizontal dimension, looking here and there. You have to not become still, but realize that that dimension of stillness is already in you.

And another word to describe it is to say it's this alert presence that you can sense right now. And you may find the mind wanting to come in from time to time and say something about it, or even deny it, or say, I don't understand it, or say, what's the point? I have other problems to worry about.

I'll become still when I have solved all the other problems. But why people experience, many people, most people experience their life as a succession of problems, and ultimately a frustrating experience is because they haven't discovered that dimension, the most vital thing or no thing to discover within yourself. That stillness is also power.

It's the source, not only of yourself, it is the source of life. And nothing creative can ever come into your life if you're not connected with that. Whenever you feel joy, for a moment perhaps, in your daily life, or a moment of loving interaction with another human being, or an animal, or when you suddenly see beauty somewhere and you go, oh.

Now, without you necessarily being aware of it, there has arisen a moment of stillness in you, if only three seconds, or perhaps a bit more. And it's only there that the joy of life arises. Or the ability to really connect with another human being.

Without it, without the stillness, you have only your conceptual mind thinking, thinking, thinking, and you relate to the world through the conceptual mind, judging, thinking, judging, interpreting continuously. The inner self-talk, the monologue, which may become a dialogue in your head. You're no good, says one voice.

The other one says, I'm trying, I'm trying. Whatever the voice in your head is doing. And then you try to relate to another human being through that.

And before long, concepts come in, judgments come in. So there's always a sense of insufficiency, of lack, of not enough. There's always conflict arising when the dimension of stillness is not at all operating in your life.

Or very briefly, it's not enough. Yes, it's good if you can occasionally experience joy and a sense of aliveness, and see beauty, and a loving feeling towards another human being. Not the egoic love, but a goodwill flowing out towards another human being.

Yes, it's wonderful, but if it's only brief moments, then yes, at least that keeps you going. But it could be much deeper. It could operate in your life continuously so that you never lose touch with it.

But the first step is realizing it's there always. It's already there. It's already here.

I wrote in the little book called Stillness Speaks, I said, you're never more truly yourself than when you're still. And you might think that's a strange statement. Most people, when they talk about myself, talk about their personal history.

And their personal problems. And their life situation. When they talk about myself, that's what they refer to.

They refer to my relationships, my work situation, my financial situation, my home situation, my health, me and my life. And of course, all that, yes, that is the case. But is that who you really are?

Even if you have failed at everything in your life, most people's life is a mixture of successes and failures. But let's say every decision you ever made was a disaster or resulted in disaster. And everything went wrong and you failed at everything.

But suddenly, you encounter that dimension of consciousness within you. And you would go, wow. It liberates you from the limited person.

And suddenly, there's a deeper identity in you that's not the narrative of the person. A deeper presence in you that frees you, it liberates you from the person. So even if the person has done a lot of unskillful things, to use a Buddhist term, Buddhists like to use the term unskillful, which means really bad.

You've done something unskillful, one unskillful thing after another, resulting in a disastrous life experience. And yet, at this moment, you can awaken to presence. Then, retrospectively, you are grateful for all your wrong decisions.

Because they've brought you to this point. That's just an extreme example. You're more likely to become drawn towards the dimension of consciousness if you experience the unsatisfactoriness of normal existence.

At some point, unless you're extremely deluded, which is also not uncommon, at some point, you experience that there's a strong element of unsatisfactoriness in normal existence, normal life. There's always something going wrong, even if you practice positive thinking, which is a great thing to do, and yet you are still defiant. Why doesn't life leave me alone?

Why do I need to always get silent? If it's not one thing, it's another. You sort out one thing here, your job, professional situation, the relationship problem comes up, or the other way around.

Or there's a living situation. If you move from here to there, it looked great at first, and then it turned out to be not great at all. Experience that you never arrive at a lasting sense of satisfaction, that you can finally say, oh, I have arrived.

Feels good to be here now. That only comes when you discover the deeper dimension of yourself through presence. So it is a dimension of consciousness, and then at first you begin to shift back and forth.

Sometimes you're present, sometimes you lose presence completely, and you're just totally in the ego, conditioned ego entity reacting to things in its conditioned way, at the mercy of fear and desire torn by this and that, this way and that way, at the mercy of your mind completely identified with every thought that arises, very unpleasant state. And then suddenly, presence is back. And it may only require you to remember that there is such a thing as presence.

And where to find it? Stepping out of the stream of thinking for a moment, becoming present this moment, becoming aware of this moment. This is present at this moment.

But what is this moment? Well, there are levels to it. This moment is, of course, first, whatever you're experiencing at this moment, which implies sense perceptions.

Whatever you experience in this moment is this moment. So it's already helpful if you become more alert to your sense perceptions, no matter where you are. Give attention to your sense perceptions in this moment.

That implies there's less thinking and instead awareness is arising. And you're really looking, you're really listening or touching, whatever it may be, or tasting. It's just a complete shift.

A moment ago you were stuck in your mind and then suddenly you wake up. And that's why the term awakening is often used in many spiritual traditions. It's to step out of this stream of thinking that when you're identified with it, it drags you along, never stops.

Identified means you derive your sense of self from it. It's you, but it's not you. You think it's you.

And then you step out of that and it's like awakening from a dream. The dream of you, the person. The script that otherwise you act out, like an act on stage.

So you wake up, just as you awaken from a sleep-like state in the morning, dream state, you awaken into the present moment. And then something may be happening in the present moment. Maybe you have to take some action, maybe you have to say something, or maybe not.

We don't know. But if there's a situation in the present moment that requires some kind of response, you need to do something or say something, and if you become present, then your response comes from a deeper level. Whether they're words that you speak to a difficult person, or whether some action you take in a difficult, challenging situation, the action or the words, then if you're present, there's an alertness there.

And out of that alertness, there's a flow of a greater intelligence than the egoic mind intelligence. A greater, deeper, higher intelligence can use your mind, and then you're not acting out the script of your old habitual reactions. You can respond to a situation in a fresh and new and more intelligent way.

And you break the karmic wheel which goes on and on, repetition, same thing, action, reaction, action, reaction. So you may find as presence comes more into your life, this alertness, you feel the way in which you deal with people and situations changes, becomes more intelligent. But that is a deeper intelligence, which we could call is more closely related to what we could call wisdom.

Because intelligence, the way we interpret it in our civilization is a fairly narrow thing. There are many intelligent people in this world, and there have been always, and they've created havoc. They've got their university degrees, whatever.

Maybe they're actually also very good at doing IQ tests, and yet they produce politicians, many other areas of life. You can see, well, they're supposed to be intelligent, but their actions seem to show that it's not enough to have this limited type of intelligence. There's a complete lack of something deeper, wisdom, and wisdom arises out of presence.

Wisdom is the intelligence that comes through presence. The realization of yourself as essence identity can be continuous, and that is, you could call that a spiritual practice, but it's not really the right term. It's simply continuously directing attention in your daily life, in addition to paying attention to whatever you need to pay attention to, directing attention to what?

Directing attention to attention. Becoming aware, like, for example, now, becoming aware that you are conscious right now. That's a strange thing.

There's no content to that. There's simply a presence. And for that to happen, and I'm finally getting to it, that is, there needs to be the cessation of thought.

And so this is my invitation to you. You do not need to think continuously in your daily life. If your mind tells you that if you do not think and do not worry, then your life is going to collapse, that is not true.

It's a lie. But your mind might either explicitly or implicitly say that you need to, I need to really think about my life. Thinking has its place.

It's a wonderful tool. It can be used for manifesting. It can be used for creating.

It's a tool. But if it takes you over, if you're identified with a tool, then it comes to possess you, and that's a terrible limitation. So the new state of consciousness is a mixture of thought and spaciousness, so that you can go about your daily life, walking from point A to point B, in that state of simple, aware presence.

Let's do it now. I'm calling it do, but it's not doing involved. Simply become aware of yourself, as you sit here, just as I am aware of myself as a conscious presence.

This is a very strange thing. It's not, you can't say, you cannot become an object to yourself in this. Everything else is an object that arises in your consciousness, an object of consciousness.

But knowing yourself, you cannot be an object in your own consciousness. So you cannot know yourself in a subject-object relationship at the deepest level. You can only know yourself as the eternal subject.

In fact, there is a space of stillness in that moment, of knowing yourself as the essence identity. There is an alive sense of stillness and presence. Let's separate.

Let's just say, my two hands, this is thought, you're thinking, and then you go, and here's a space of no thought, just awareness. You can't define what that is. You can't think about it.

You can only be it. Stillness is one word we could use to point to it. Stillness.

It has nothing to do whether there's noise outside or not. Inner stillness is the cessation of thinking without loss of consciousness. And that is realizing yourself as the unconditioned consciousness, because everything else is conditioned by the past.

But that is the unconditioned in you. That is your essence identity. You cannot, by exercising willpower, that is not the way to go to stop yourself from thinking.

I'm not even saying stop thinking as an active practice, but simply become so alert that thinking stops by itself. One way you can do it is by becoming aware of sense perceptions. Acutely aware of sense perceptions.

I give the example in The Power of Now of a cat watching the mouse hole. And the cat watching the mouse hole is in that state of absolute attention. And the cat goes, no, you don't have to stare like that.

But that is the state of that is this state of awareness, consciousness, that's the only thing in your life that you cannot question. That the only thing that is absolutely and undoubtedly real. Everything else you can question, for example, whether our gathering here is a dream or not, you don't really know.

It could be that you are dreaming, that you're sitting here and there's a man talking on a chair suggesting to you that you might be dreaming. You cannot, as many philosophers have pointed out, you cannot know for sure that this life that you're experiencing is not a kind of dream. And from one certain one perspective, it is a kind of dream.

Look at, I like to sometimes look at old photographs, made, taken in 1900, early days of photography, 1920, whenever, of street scenes or gatherings. And you look, you can go to second-hand shops and they sell sometimes old photographs. You can buy one for a penny or two.

You have no idea who these people are, nor has anybody else an idea who these people are. But they're running around the city street, excited about this or that. And then there's another gathering, people sitting around a table, eating and laughing in this old photo.

And where is that now? It has evaporated like a dream. Nobody even remembers who they are.

And that is the same with anything that you experience here. It quickly evaporates. So there is a dream-like quality to human existence, any existence.

So you could say, OK, maybe it's all a dream, that may well be. But one thing you cannot doubt, that is that you are conscious. Because if you're not conscious, there couldn't be a dream.

A dream can only arise in the light of consciousness. So, the one thing, whether or not this is a dream or not, it becomes irrelevant. The only thing that matters, if it is a dream, is whether you can realize what the essence of the dream is.

Consciousness. And you can only realize that directly, here and now, as this. Oh, Descartes, of course, the French philosopher, said, I think, therefore I am.

If he had waited a little bit longer, before saying anything, he could have come to the point of cessation of thinking, and then he could have made the more profound statement, I am conscious, therefore I am. Thinking is only an expression of consciousness, a surface expression of consciousness. This mind made sense of self is also much more focused on the negative than the positive.

To be free, you awaken to who you are, beyond your history and your life situation. I will ring this bell and I'll ask you to follow the sound with your attention. So after ringing the bell, the sound will go on for quite a while.

Just follow the sound until you can't hear anything anymore, and then now ring it again. You may notice, in order to still perceive the sound as it gradually subsides, you need to become more alert. The fainter the sound is, the more alert you need to be to still be aware of it.

So the alertness, as the sound gradually subsides, the alertness increases. So you go, at first it's easy, the sound is there, and then it subsides, and you need to be more attentive, listen more acutely. And now I will ring it again.

Follow the sound with your attention, and when you can no longer hear the sound, see what is left when the object of your conscious attention, which was the sound, disappears, and what is left is the pure attention itself. Let's do this. So as the sound subsides, silence remains.

The silence that was there before the sound started, and you become aware of the silence. But the silence is the absence of sound, so you're really becoming aware of nothing. Silence is the absence of sound, so you're becoming aware of nothing.

It seemed almost impossible, but it is possible, because really, what remains is awareness itself. The awareness that was there that enabled you to listen, you are the awareness that was listening to the sound, and when the object that arose in the awareness disappears, what remains is the awareness itself. So to follow the sound with your attention to its death, because the sound dies in the end, the form that was there, the form, which is a in this case, one could say a sound is a form, too, auditory formation.

The form dies. What remains when the form dies? Just you can't really name it, because it's not an object, only objects can be named.

But we name it anyway. Consciousness remains. Your attention remains, whatever you want to call it.

Pure awareness remains. And you know that pure awareness remains, because you are it. You become aware of awareness.

One more time. One child says to the other child, look, I can do this, you can't do what I can do. I can do this, but you can't.

Or the child says, my dad has a bigger car than yours. You can't say to that child, don't do that. You are emphasizing your form identity.

But you know that's what's happening. It's a natural tendency in humans to emphasize. It could be a possession.

I have more than you. It could be my body looks better than yours, or is stronger than yours, or bigger than yours, or taller than yours. Or it could be I have an ability that you don't have.

Children, start with that. I can play the piano. What can you play?

I play the ping pong machine. So to emphasize form identity is a natural thing. There is a point where this should come to a natural conclusion.

I would say in a more evolved humanity, the emphasis of form identity as a person reaches adulthood, a little bit after, is replaced at the moment, this is not what's happening, but can be replaced by something more genuine and deeper. And that is finding your essence identity that's underneath your form identity. And that is spiritual dimension, finding the spiritual dimension in yourself so that who you think you are is no longer, you still have a form identity.

Yes, that level is still there, undoubtedly. You have certain abilities. You're good at this, you're not good at that.

You're better than the other person in this thing, but not as good as in the other thing. That remains, but it no longer gives you your sense of who you are. Sitting down mindfully.

Laughter Contrary to popular belief, you don't have to be slow to be mindful, or it probably helps, but you can be in a rush and still be mindful. That's actually a lovely experience of high energy, which means you're still present with every movement and not excessively focused on some future point, and then you just go. It's wonderful.

That's contained in the ancient Zen saying, hurry slowly. Seems to be a contradiction. Of course, what it means is on the outside you hurry, but on the inside you rest in being.

Doing, being. You don't get lost in doing, nor do you get lost in being. Om Om But if I had to be lost somewhere, I'd rather be lost in being, of course.

It varies from person to person to what degree you're more drawn to what's doing, to what degree you're more drawn to what's being. Almost nobody's right in the middle. I'm more drawn to what's being, as you might have noticed.

But I'm able to do. Talking is doing. Traveling, writing, speaking, is doing.

But the strange thing is, in my case, all the doing that I do, well, not all, but all the significant doing that I do is concerned with pointing the way to being. The speaking, the writing, traveling. But you may have a business, or you may have some function in this world, and everybody has to find some balance between doing and being, which doesn't mean...

The important thing is that initially, perhaps, it happens to many people, you have a compartment in your life when you become still and present. Sometimes it's associated with meditation, meditation practice. Or it's when you go out in nature, or when you're sitting alone in your room, and then you are able to become still, and that's already a huge gain in consciousness.

You're able to become still and present, and feel the being dimension of you. And then you go back into the world, and you start doing again, and for a while, you easily lose yourself again in the doing, and you're just as lost as everybody else in the doing, until you come back to your meditation practice, or to your room, or into nature, and then you go back into being. But eventually, and gradually, the two merge.

So when you're doing, you're not totally lost in it, you're not totally dragged along by your mind and by external things that demand, continuously demand your attention. You're able to deal with things, but not... Don't become crazy.

And when you're in being, the danger with being, we know what the danger with doing is. The primordial doing is in your mind, thinking is doing, so that's the place where you really get lost, and then it gets externalized, you get lost in stuff. But, the...

In being, when you go into being, when you're present, you're above, as I put it, you're above thought. Here's thought, this is where the human dimension, and then there's being. Being is not just above, it also, it envelops it all, but let's for a moment, let's look at it like this, it's helpful.

So, you rise above thought, and your dog is here, below thought. Doesn't mean the dog is not conscious, but the dog does not do thinking the way you do. The dog does not have an opinion about you, or about him or herself.

So, the dog exists below thought, and when you become present, you rise above thought. And below the dog, there's the tree, and the plants, they are very deeply still connected with being. The tree is, there's a consciousness in the tree, but it's impossible for us to conceive of it.

You can be sure that it's very slow, and it's a, it's a, nobody knows how it, how it is aware. It has no self-awareness, of course, but the tree is even more peaceful than the dog. So the tree vibration, this is why a tree is, now this has been recognized in ancient, many ancient cultures, and certain trees were considered sacred, so people had a special relationship with trees.

Because before they became so mind-dominated, they had a little bit more sensitivity towards energy fields, and they could sense something in the tree that they called sacred. They could sense the deep stillness within which the tree exists. Whereas modern humans, those who are completely identified with mind, do not have that deep relationship with the tree, except when you become present.

Because you look at the tree through your mental concepts, and that's, even the moment you name it, the veil has already come up between you and it, and that veil is the concept that the label that you give it. And then the illusion arises that you, once you have named something, then the illusion arises that you know what it is. So you've attached a label to something, and you think, now I know what it is, it's a tree.

It's an oak tree, what else do you want to know? Or you can go more deeply and attach other labels, so you can cut it into little pieces, and put a piece under a microscope, add more labels. That's the conceptual knowing that we've been talking about.

It covers up the other dimension, the deeper knowing. When you can be with a tree and join with the tree in that become aware of that space of stillness in which the tree exists. To enter that meditative state of consciousness, because that's what it is all about.

Meditation is about a shift in consciousness away from concern with doing and thinking and becoming aware really directly aware of the present moment. And that's perhaps the easiest and most accessible starting point for most people to enter the state of presence which is the aim of meditation, is to get you into that state of absolute presence in this moment. And that's being.

Becoming aware of being. Most people are always engaged in doing. That includes thinking continuously.

And a lot of the thinking that people do is not very uplifting. A lot of the thinking that happens compulsively creates negative feelings. And a lot of thinking is actually harmful and dysfunctional.

It doesn't serve any useful purpose, but you just can't stop it. Or you think you can't, but you can. And that's of course what meditation is about.

To realize there is in you a deeper dimension of consciousness. Deeper or higher, you could call it. Depending from where you look at it.

Deeper or higher than thinking. And that is the state of presence in the now. So it's an amazing realization for most people that they can actually easily access that state of presence by bringing their attention into the present moment like now.

So I would kind of or I'm talking my aim is to talk you, so to speak, into that state of meditation. And it helps if while I talk you can become conscious or aware of the small gaps between words as I talk. So you're just aware not only of the words of course you hear the words you take them in but you're also aware that there are little spaces between the words.

You just acknowledge that. These are little meditative gaps, so to speak. And in order to be really aware of the meditative gaps you can't be thinking.

You're just aware aware of that space. There is what does it mean aware? There is a presence in that awareness.

You know in that awareness like now you know that you are here as a conscious presence without any thought telling you that. In other words you become aware of yourself not as a person because to be a person you need to be thinking about you and your life and your problems and so on. But there is a deeper dimension in you, deeper than the person.

And this is what we are here to access So you become aware that really on the surface of your life there is the person with a past and a future and all the thinking and the emotions that keep the person going, of course. And so you're happy one day, unhappy the next. Happy one day unhappy the fluctuations of the person it's quite normal.

And the person is always concerned with doing and thinking and the next thing or the past the future. The past is never really present. When you become present like now you realize that there is a deeper part in you there is a deeper dimension to who you are where you are more than a person where you are a presence, a conscious presence.

The question is can you sense feel or be aware of yourself at this moment as a conscious presence without which there couldn't even be a person so it's almost like saying the person is the surface of the ocean or the ripples or the waves on the surface of the ocean but you are not just the ripples or waves on the surface of the ocean you are the ocean so there is a deeper presence in you and to access that and to sense that in yourself to sense yourself as the presence a presence that is what liberates you from being completely trapped and limited in an exclusively personal identity in other words there is more to you than meets the eye you are deeper than you ever knew by thinking about yourself and it's not difficult to access that dimension in yourself can one describe it well one can give a few pointers let's see if that makes sense the pointers I'm giving you now let's see if they make sense in your own experience at this moment sensing yourself as a presence there is a peacefulness there that is really the essence of what is sometimes called inner peace the person the surface of the ocean the waves and the ripples of the ocean cannot be at peace for long it fluctuates occasionally if things happen to go well yeah I'm happy it never lasts for very long and then the storm comes and big waves come or little little irritated waves whatever then you are unhappy but there is a deeper if let's say you are a ripple on the surface of the ocean with a name and a date of birth and a past and a future and problems and suddenly the ripple realizes there is more to me and realizes oh I'm actually much deeper and vaster I'm the ocean manifesting as the ripple and so you are the universe or the consciousness that underlies the sense perceived universe manifesting temporarily as a person you are the universe becoming conscious of itself at this moment in your life as a person you are not separate from the totality of the universe you are the universe the universe has or the consciousness that underlies the universe has given form to who you are temporarily in order to experience itself as a person it's an amazing thing and the universe here is in the process of becoming more conscious that's what the entire evolution of the universe is about, it's consciousness so you your life is part of the evolutionary impulse towards greater consciousness and if your life is not primarily about greater consciousness, which actually you can build into whatever you do, it doesn't mean you stop doing and just say all I'm interested in is consciousness no, it needs to flow into what you do if that if your life purpose is not aligned with the conscious evolving consciousness of the universe then what is the point of it all and then sooner or later you get very frustrated and things become pointless so you are here to become more conscious because that's what the universe has put you here for instead of universe you can use other terms you are more comfortable with them the universal intelligence God so, right now in addition to being a person which right now is not important it becomes important again when we finish our meditation I'm sure but right now something else is more important that's realizing yourself as the presence coming into the present moment and feeling just being aware right now that you are conscious if you were not conscious you wouldn't be able to hear hear, see, perceive anything the fact that you can perceive things the fact that you can think the fact that you can have emotions all implies that you are conscious because the meditative state is becoming aware directly of that consciousness sometimes the word that is used also is stillness right now you become still you become aware of just being of being that presence and that feels energizing you don't go to sleep you are actually alert and still at the same time and now you access an intelligence that is deeper than the thinking mind by entering that state of alert presence and then when you think again you are connected with a with the source of all intelligence with creativity you are you become empowered your thinking and your doing and your actions are then aligned with a deeper purpose of the universe not just little egoic desires so all this is so terribly important aligning your life with that presence so you need to during your normal day I'll give you a few hints how to invite that presence into your life by invite I mean direct your attention to it because it's always there that really is what supports you in life and if you can be aware of that fear anxiety happen less and less in your life because you can feel supported by that vast presence which is not just your own presence, it is the universal presence of consciousness you connect with that you are that so on a day normal day you go to work or whatever you do as much as you can become aware of just brief moments of yourself as the presence in addition to being a person so one of the things I recommend is it sounds almost too simple but from time to time look at the sky for a few seconds you look up it doesn't matter whether it's blue or cloudy today here is the early afternoon, happens to be a sunny day look at the sky for a moment you are looking but not thinking you could do that with anything but sky is easier because there is this vast expanse that has some correlation with the presence of stillness within you so you look and for a moment there is just the sky and you can sense yourself as the presence that is perceiving and you are not thinking so there is a brief moment of not thinking but not going to sleep alertness without thinking that's the key to bring that into your life more often and don't believe when your mind tells you that you need to think and think and think all the time bring in gaps of just alert presence, that's the being the rest is the doing the two need to be a balance in your life between being and doing, otherwise you go mad a civilization that completely loses touch with the being dimension is going to self-destruct at this moment you are aware of where you are you are aware of the room you are aware that you are breathing in addition to that sense perceptions perhaps some feelings a few thoughts floating through your head or maybe no thought maybe just a clear sky inside you with just little puffy clouds here and there little thoughts and then disappear again so perhaps you are the clear sky and the clear sky is the awareness so the essence of our meditation is to be aware right now whether or not your eyes are closed or open, doesn't matter whether you are aware that you are aware whether you are conscious that you are conscious can you sense your own consciousness it's kind of subject and object merging within you because usually when you are aware of something the subject is aware of the object but when you are aware of awareness the subject is no longer aware of an object because it is just awareness you are aware that you are aware object and subject merge into one self-awareness presence that's the sky, the clear sky occasional thoughts may come not a problem and you can be aware with every cell of the body an alertness that pervades the entire body it's not the body anymore it's just the space you are that presence there's nothing to know about it beyond that you can't know it you can only be it and as you no longer identify with the mind, the thoughts the presence can shine through the mind can even use your mind and inspire your mind another word we can use is stillness that's the stillness within you vibrantly alive stillness and of course you don't necessarily need to sit still to be in stillness you can move as you know and be in stillness that's the beauty of it you can do things and be in stillness can interact with another human being can even speak to them and be in stillness as I'm speaking to you now but I'm in stillness the words are just floating around the stillness and you can bring stillness to nature and nature will love you for it and you can share stillness with a tree see if you can be as still as the tree that's something or if the sky is clear at night you look at the sky there are stars but there's the vastness of space which is also stillness there's not a single sound in space only in science fiction movies but there is no sound in outer space the deepest stillness but even a flower is surrounded by stillness the flower exists in that still field so if you need a little bit of help to find the inner stillness go to a tree look at the sky the night sky or the sky at sunset as it gradually darkens very still and spacious or you can touch the earth it's also very still so many things can teach you stillness and help you and the quickest way to stillness in any situation no matter where you are whether on top of a mountain or Times Square or Piccadilly Circus in the midst of traffic is to welcome the present moment just that little thing no matter what form it takes whatever arises in the present moment you welcome it or at least you allow it to be non-resistance immediately you can sense in the background of your being that field of stillness or peace so that simple thing allowing this moment to be as it is connects you with the transcendent in you couldn't be any easier than that all you have to do is remember that this is possible and then do it meditation is about accessing stillness within you which is a dimension of consciousness above thinking awareness aware stillness there is also a stillness below thinking people become still when they get tired the most important thing in a person's life is to find that dimension perhaps first it comes in glimpses sometimes arises naturally perhaps when you are out in nature or relating to an animal or it can be there as the part of your meditation practice while you meditate or right here and now by paying attention to the silent spaces between words paying attention meaning noticing the silent spaces between the words that's the meditation not noticing just for one second and then go off into thinking but noticing the silent spaces while they are there for example between now and now and of course you can't notice the silent spaces and think at the same time to notice the silent space you become still inside because only the stillness in you can become aware of it so noticing those spaces between words for here is an important part of or the most important part of our life meditation and as you notice you become still inside and there is the dimension that transcends the person so first you access it here and as I said perhaps it arises naturally and if you access it here or as part of your meditation practice it's more likely to arise also naturally in other situations in daily life and when it does arise you notice it again a moment of alert attention when you look at the sky and you go without having any interpretation or words arising in your mind about the sky you just go there is an alertness in which an alert space in which the sense perception happens of the sky and what is the sky? nothing really it's not an object you can never touch it there is even no such thing as the sky it's only a perception from a particular location there is the background of space and there is the sunlight that creates the temporary illusion we could say that there is a sky but because it has no actual form it's a helpful thing to look at the sky it's a vast spaciousness today the sky here is totally clear and that's you can look at that spaciousness with inner spaciousness and if there are clouds you see that there are clouds and the clear sky also there and sometimes there is just clouds but still there is still a spaciousness there and the light is filtering through the clouds and that could be used as an analogy for your inner state of consciousness which can be totally overcast which means in this analogy clouds are thoughts for many people their state of consciousness is continuously overcast which means one thought leads into another into another and all their consciousness is absorbed by thinking so that's how most people still live on the planet and then comes a time when you realize oh there is an opening a bit of spaciousness there is some blue sky coming through in between the clouds so that means noticing the gap between two thoughts in yourself and then occasionally you may find there is mostly clear sky and just a few puffy clouds floating past which are little thoughts you don't have to give them too much attention and gradually gradually you begin to be able to have that stillness that spaciousness not just occasionally or when you are practicing meditation but have it always if not in the foreground of your life that's not always possible there are many things that happen in the foreground that you need to give attention to but in the background so when you are looking at something you don't immediately label it interpret it you don't immediately form some fixed opinion or viewpoint but there is a moment of non-conceptualization and there is a stillness in the background against which the sense perception happens and then whatever you look at, you look at there is a dimension of depth to whatever you are looking at which cannot be there if you immediately label everything and sometimes that you don't even need an interpretation you can just be there with a stillness against which the sense perception happens or if you need to have an interpretation then after a moment of stillness a thought arises concerning that particular situation event or thing or person that is being perceived allowing the flux of experience to be there to unfold one thing after another and instead of demanding that there should not be impermanence just enjoy the flow the comings and goings gain and loss hot and cold so these are all forms that arise in your experience and you experience yourself as a form you experience yourself as a physical form and as a person the larger part of who you are is of course not visible only the physical body is visible and as you know there is more to you than meets the eye all your inner space thoughts, feelings emotions and even the way in which you experience your body is an inner phenomenon but even that inner self is still form on that level consisting of mental activity thoughts emotions feelings and perceptions and that also is subject to of course impermanence the physical body changes with some people it's very noticeable some people you might have noticed it if you look at a photo of yourself when they were 20 years old and then you look at a photo when they were 40 or you look at a photo when they were 30 and then a photo when they were 50 or 60 sometimes they are hardly recognizable the entire shape of their face has changed not to mention the rest of the body so all is subject to fleetingness of things form whether they are inner forms or outer forms thought forms sense perceptions physical objects which can only be experienced as sense perceptions so all external phenomena are really inner phenomena so yourself your person the person who you are for a little while subject to change and eventually, sooner or later it disappears one day you're here the next day you're gone is there anything beyond that?

that's the question that has been asked by spiritual seekers for thousands of years and of course there is but just believing that there is a transcendent realm that is not subject to time and decay well believing in that as an article of faith might serve as a little crutch on your life it can give you a comforting thought similar to the thought of there is a God it's a comforting thought but it does not really help you experience the reality of it it's still just a belief of course as a belief you might be wrong in the power of now probably I wrote I used the term form identity and essence identity referring to the human being so you know a lot about your form identity which changes and is not going to last, even if it lasts if an aspect of your form identity lasts beyond your physical existence that will also be subject to change as form because no forms are permanent so if you if there is life after death you are not going to be Mr. so and so or Mrs. so and so for the rest of eternity your personal identity of course all forms are subject to metamorphosis and change and transformation so who you experience to be on your form level of your form identity is temporary even if it continues for a while beyond the physical form that is also temporary and then it shifts and changes dissolves, but as physicists tell us, energy itself remains it changes form there is an essence to life that is formless and that can be known not as an object in your experience but as the very subject of all experience and that is who you are in your essence and who you are in your essence is identical with what the universe is in its essence and that is the realization of your essence identity that frees you from unhealthy let's put it like that attachment constant compulsive obsessive attachment to your form identity and all the things that make up the forms in your life the objects around you and so on and so there is a clinging, if you don't know who you are on the essence level then there is a clinging to the world of form that is unhealthy and by that I mean it creates suffering because if you cling to something that by its very nature is fleeting and deep down you know that there is suffering even while you still have it not only when it finally dissolves or decays or leaves you even while you still have whatever you are clinging to, there is already that anxiety and that nervousness in the background form identity essence identity essence identity is not something that arises in your experience because it is the foundation of all experience and it is I sometimes call it inner space it is known, not in a subject-object relationship but it knows let's put it like that, you know it as yourself when the mind subsides for a moment, thought activity ceases like now and all that's left is a sense of presence it has no content from the point of view of form or form identity it is nothing and yet undoubtedly undoubtedly there is a presence there a knowingness let's put it like that, a knowing a knowingness an awareness not of something just awareness without the of to use an analogy light let's say you are a ray of light and usually you know what the light shines on things and it shines on something and you know it because the light shines on something if the light doesn't shine on something you can't see it in order to see light there needs to be a reflection so let's say you are the light and suddenly you realize your essential nature as light and not what you thought before you took yourself to be whatever the light reflects so it's a shift in the direction of your attention one could say, instead of going continuously either outward to sensory experience or to thought experience involved in one thought after another and your attention is drawn into that and it has a hypnotic quality, most people are completely hypnotized by their thoughts in the grip of their thoughts and they follow wherever they go, they follow them, their attention and then you suddenly there's a reversal of attention like now, this is why we're here and you become aware of yourself but not as a form as the very consciousness without which there would be no experience of any form and it has no features that's why the Buddha called it emptiness, sometimes he called it emptiness in other Buddhist traditions, I don't know whether the Buddha also used that term or it came later Buddha nature is another term you have not only the and that of course is essence identity that is your Buddha nature or if you want, Christ consciousness, whatever you want to call it so the greatest realization, the greatest thing to happen to you in this lifetime is the realization that there is the transcendent dimension in the background of your life and to have it there at first as glimpses then sometimes it stays for a while that realization which I sometimes describe as a stillness in the background while your life unfolds in the foreground and you become aware of more spaces arising in between thoughts more stillness arising, more presence more peace and then you realize that essentially who you are is not what happens in your mind or what happens externally that does not define who you are in your essence losing your job or getting the great job or the house or whatever it is, you get it or you lose it this is the constantly shifting forms if you look to that for your real sense of identity then you're going to find a lot of trouble in your life, you will be troubled continuously continuously but if you realize yourself as that alive stillness spaciousness then you can enjoy the world of form and if you can't enjoy it sometimes perhaps you can't you can at least tolerate it with a sense of peacefulness in the background, knowing that it's not going to last you can accept whatever is right now or if you can't enjoy it at least you can accept that this is what is right now it may change the next moment or in a year's time or 10 years time but in the meantime this is what is or you can take action to change it but even then in the meantime it is you take action, I'm going to do that, that, that and then you do it also in the present moment at some point the situation changes either the change may be brought about by your action or it just comes it's in the nature of things but in the meantime you lived in alignment with the is-ness of the present moment which in itself that acceptance of what is as I have often said that acceptance of what is if you realize you make that into your spiritual practice become one with the is-ness of this moment then the transcendent dimension your essence identity reveals itself as a piece in the background so the acceptance of form that whatever form arises in the present moment, forms change so there is a succession of forms arising and it's all in the now and you let go of dysfunctional mind patterns like this shouldn't be happening welcome to our live meditation for those of you who are joining us for the first time all that's happening here is we become comfortable with nothing happening so that we can shift our consciousness from doing to being doing is not just physical doing which obviously we are not engaged in right now well the mouth is moving but that's all or you may be twitching a bit but basically we are sitting or lying, that's physical doing so we stop doing on the external and more importantly the mind so we are here to experience get a taste of or perhaps even more than that go deeply into the state of being which in itself has no content it's a bit like having lived in a room full of furniture stuff for many years, always being worried about polishing it or getting more stuff or getting rid of this stuff and talking about the stuff in your room and for the first time you become aware also of the space of the room, which is the essence without which there wouldn't be a room and you realize the furniture in the room is secondary to the space in the room but space you cannot grasp, you can't say ah, there it is you can't even point to it where? you become, you sense it, you become aware of it you sense, one could almost say the presence of the space wherever you are now you can do it you can sense the presence of the space and to do that you might notice you can't be thinking thinking is to do with the furniture in the room but thinking is never to do with the space in the room a different faculty is required that inner faculty is required to sense or to become aware of the space wherever you are that is not thinking and most humans still don't know that they potentially have that ability or that faculty in other words it's not awakened in most humans yet and of course we are here for some of you to awaken that and for many others who are already awake to it to deepen it so let's go back to the room when you become aware of the space in the room you might notice it's a very peaceful thing to be aware of the space it suddenly becomes this and suddenly an added dimension to where you are because before you were concerned with the furniture and whatever filled the room stuff and that every bit of stuff has a history you talk about its history by the way may I point out that right now what we are doing I'm using the room as an analogy for of course your mind but I'm also talking about the room so we are on two levels here so you can take it literally and you can take it as an analogy for your mind or both so you may notice that suddenly the room which is the old room that you've lived in for many years suddenly becomes peaceful in the moment that you can sense the space of the room rather than always focusing on the different bits and pieces in the room the stuff suddenly you take in the totality which transcends what's in it the spaciousness of it and it becomes oh it's there's a sense of peace and some almost a peaceful presence which of course essentially is you could say yes it's in the room but of course it's in you in our analogy the furniture in the room the bits and pieces the stuff corresponds of course to the content of your mind the thoughts most of which are old and repetitive the furniture whatever is occupying your mind is the stuff, the furniture every item wants your attention you keep the old stuff alive by continuously giving it your attention and if you become aware of the space in the room you withdraw attention from what is in the room and you become aware of that which could be described as the essence of the room without which there would be no room without any room there's no room there's space, space and within you the same if you don't find the space within you the spaciousness which is the presence the presence that you can sense as if it were an external presence in filling the room is also in you now this is very deeply peaceful and in many traditions that's called the presence of God that all the mystics whether Christian or Buddhist or Hindu or Sufis they all point to that that's not the ideological God not the person but that which underlies all manifestation the eternal so the eternal is both within and without the moment you notice that presence outside of you you can be out in nature or you can be in a room you're no longer focusing on individual things you're focusing on the space between things one could say and you sense that as a silent presence, you can't say much about it if you're a poet perhaps you could, some poets have written about it quite beautifully sometimes words worth the English poet went out into nature and wrote beautiful things all pointing to that but the moment you notice it outside of you it's also within you so I call that usually presence you can call it the presence of God you can call it divine presence or you can forget about those terms the terms don't really matter so your entry point then can be you start with the external become aware of the essence of whatever wherever you are of that particular place whether it's in a building or outside the essence of that place which goes beyond whatever is filling that place, whatever is there as a form you become aware that there is also the formless dimension to that place spirit, another word and the more you are able to sense that in your life the more spiritual you are so how spiritual you are doesn't really have anything to do with your thought processes so thinking about God for 12 hours a day or more or talking about God doesn't make you spiritual, it's a concept and the test of course is always whether you are able to retain that awareness of the presence really awareness and presence are the same thing, the moment you use language you separate things into subject, objects and bits and pieces the question is are you able to retain that aware presence continuing to sense that presence that is of course inseparable from the essence of who you are whether you can retain, sustain that when all this stuff in your life whatever is happening shouts at you so to speak and every bit of stuff in your life says I matter absolutely I demand your complete attention if you don't give me attention your life will collapse I need you to worry about me says the stuff if you don't you are irresponsible of course that's not true your most fundamental responsibility is to find that which is beyond the stuff to access that dimension in you that's why you are here that's what the universe wants through you to awaken to that dimension to be it consciously first it seems that it's something outside of you it's the space in the room or here in nature and then you realize oh it's within me too and it's more essentially me than anything else it's where the whole feeling of who you are actually originates in that deep sense of being of presence and then it gets mixed up with things, with stuff and then you sense the beingness through the stuff still a little bit and then a possession can give you a little bit of aliveness you can sense your car if you just got it after a while it wears off if you just got it that's a little bit of sense of deeper sense of identity so it but where it really any identity sense of essential self comes from is from the formless dimension of presence and for most people it can only a little bit filter through all the things in their lives and it's never very satisfying because it's to a large extent obscured and it's mistaken for the thing it's like having a lampshade and you're mistaking the light that comes through the lampshade you're mistaking the lampshade for the light and then you attach yourself to the lampshade and not realizing what you love about the lampshade is the light that shines through it and then you worry about the lampshade if you think that we are doing something here, doing a meditation that can become a big obstacle to actually entering the state of meditation the notion that you're doing something one minute you're doing you're answering the emails and then you're putting the dishes away and then you're doing a meditation and every doing has a certain aim you're doing in order to get it done get it over with achieve the goal so in doing involves time can't do anything without time and the ordinary state of consciousness is always involved in time inseparable from time there's a deeper dimension within you that could be called timeless but as long as you're doing something to get there that becomes a paradox you can't use time to get to the timeless because you don't need to get to the timeless it's already there in you you just need to notice that it's there so that removes all sense of doing or you need to do so to speak it's not a doing it's a notice right now that there's a deeper dimension in you deeper than the physical that which you perceive through your senses deeper than thinking deeper than emotions emotional layers where is it? I still can't feel it somebody thinks become aware that you are become aware of the beingness of yourself aware of your own presence thinking doesn't help you here it actually prevents you from dropping down into the core of your being so you can allow yourself to let go of thinking or trying to figure something out become aware that right now you are conscious right now you are aware and in the gap between two thoughts there's a space or a spaciousness and in that spaciousness in that space you are aware you are conscious without any particular content you are conscious of consciousness that which is prior to all content but not separate from deeper than all content but not separate from all the content of your mind whatever you are aware of sense perceptions thinking emotions all these things you are aware of in many cases not just aware of identified with you derive your sense of self from those things situations which you are aware of through your sense perceptions plus mental interpretations plus emotional reflections that makes up the content of your consciousness that makes up what you call your life that's my life and you try to figure out your life by thinking about your life there is a place for that too, yes if that's all there is to your life however then you are to use one of my favorite analogies you are like a wave or ripple on the surface of the ocean who does not realize that it is not only a wave or ripple on the surface of the ocean being surrounded by other waves or ripples but this wave or ripple does not realize that it is also and more fundamentally the entire ocean and that this wave or ripple is only temporarily a manifestation of the entire ocean somebody once said I believe it was Alan Watts said something like you are something that the universe is doing in the same way that the wave is something that the ocean is doing so you are something that the universe is doing or being and if you can realize that rather than just thinking oh that's an interesting idea let me think about that I am something that the universe is doing in the same way that the wave is something that the ocean is doing you can start thinking about it that's one way, you might come up with a few more related ideas or the mind might say well this may be true or may not be true or the mind might say that doesn't make sense to me or I have no idea what he is talking about now like with all statements that point to spiritual dimensions they are just pointers and they are to be used as pointers signposts so if you can get even just a little taste or a glimpse experientially of what this means and perhaps you can do it by visualizing just yourself as a wave or ripple on the surface of the universe the surface of the ocean to keep the analogy and allow yourself to drop into the core of your being in the space between two thoughts and realize your essential beings I am no particular content as such but you feel connected to something limitless timeless vast, deep you are not only connected with it you are an extension of it an expression of it inseparable from it you have to have the courage in order to experience that to realize that the courage to enter the realm of not knowing anything and of not being anybody in particular that's the most beautiful experience if you want to call it that it's deeper than experience the most beautiful realization the most liberating realization that you are not just this little person which is just like a brief momentary spark that appears and disappears oh that was you that was me so every human being a brief momentary spark of light is born and dies so to speak oh that was it yes and all over the planet new sparks are born consciousness beings right now at this very moment new sparks are rising right now and right now other sparks are extinguished and each little spark has a name attached to it that gives the impression that there's something permanent there well that spark originates in the central fire, the central consciousness each spark is a manifestation of that and returns there so the most liberating thing is for you to become aware that there's more to you than the person, that you are connected with that depths within yourself and that is the universe not just the sense perceived universe and galaxies and so on but more essentially something deeper that underlies the sense perceived universe but as I said you need to have the courage to step into the unknown become comfortable with not knowing anything don't worry, all the things that you know when you need them you can still use but to know who you are essentially you need to become comfortable with not knowing anything become comfortable with not knowing who you are conceptually become comfortable with being ignorant so to speak and then something that cannot be known emerges you can't know it because it's the source of all knowledge where all knowing and all knowledge originates as you cannot know it but it knows itself through you so the you know how a humming sound that something is like a refrigerator or some noise in the room is going on and on you no longer know it's there in the background but when it stops then you suddenly know oh oh it feels so good there was this constant humming sound in the background I didn't even know it anymore I didn't know it and so for some people the first awakening is to become aware of the humming so to speak their mind, the constant chatter, the constant dialogues and monologues that make life so hard and so you become aware suddenly oh for many humans that's a moment of awakening what is my mind doing and then you begin to be able to differentiate between what is in this moment out there what is and your mental interpretation of what is if you're very unconscious the way in which you interpret the phenomena that surround you and that constantly change people, events, situations, places when you're very unconscious the way in which you mentally interpret and mentally react and mentally emotionally react to other people places, situations and so on are perceived as a single phenomenon you cannot differentiate between what is out there and how you see what is how you interpret it, what you call it the narrative that you spin around what is they are a single thing you experience as a single thing and so the way then in which a very unconscious person interprets the phenomena that happen around you continuously is determined by the conditioning of their mind the mental emotional conditioning so they don't experience almost anything as it is they experience it through the veil of their mental conditioning and a lot of that mental conditioning is verbal it is in many cases an important part of it is a narrative in your mind and so if you become aware of the narrative in your mind that's a great step forward, it's a great awakening and when you see that what you are, the way in which you are talking to yourself about something that's happening here and now and the mind says this shouldn't be happening, they should know better why can't they do better why do I always encounter situations like, why are people always so obnoxious, I just can't stand people anymore why is this person look how he pretends, he's pretending to be spiritual and just you can see he's completely unconscious what's this why did I even come here I'm stuck here in this room and is it even clean I could be in a much more comfortable, if I hadn't left home I could be in a much more comfortable place at home why did I do that, why do you always do things, it's completely pointless coming here, I mean what is this man even talking about and so it goes on and on and you don't, you cannot differentiate between what is and how your mind interprets what is it's crazy so the moment you can separate, you see here's the is-ness of things this is what is here I am and there's that person talking about whatever politics and you may find in yourself an urge to say something but it could happen here even here because it's unlikely that you left your mind outside the boundary of omega it came with you but that's a good thing because then you can become aware of it and so life suddenly becomes much more simple and you begin to practice here where you differentiate between the is-ness of things and your interpretation of it, this includes people too, every person behaves as they do according to their level of consciousness at this particular moment in many people their consciousness varies, sometimes they are really unconscious and at other times they are fairly present you might have noticed that could happen to you sometimes still, sometimes you're very present and then something is triggered, I got triggered, he triggered me, he always triggers me so you got triggered and then so what happens when you get triggered, something takes you over it's like you become somebody else for a while and you might even say things that you later regret when you're a bit more conscious again, you say oh I said something terrible it's too late, you said it of course then forgiveness has to come in oh there's another problem you have to forgive yourself, no you don't have to forgive yourself, that's too complicated you just have to see that you neither you nor anybody else can manifest behavior or speech that is beyond their level of consciousness at that particular moment that's obvious so if you get annoyed with people or of course some things on a practical level can you can have changes on a practical level, you can say don't do this I don't, this behavior is not acceptable and that's a clear statement, it doesn't have to be reactive being comfortable with just being but remaining alert become aware that there are moments when you're not thinking and then thought happens again and then there's another moment of just spacious presence which could arise spontaneously or you could invite it into your life consciously bring more spacious presence into your life in daily life with a simple thing like for example occasionally looking up in the sky well I don't see the sky yet because there are trees out there but mostly usually there's some sky somewhere look up at the sky and for a moment be aware of whatever is there whether it's clouds or clear sky or completely overcast just be aware of the totality of the sky which is a vast spaciousness without calling it anything in your mind just looking at the sky during the day it's amazing that people go throughout many people go throughout the day without ever really being aware of the sky because they're so concerned with what's happening down here below so they're never aware of that spaciousness that surrounds them so just looking at the sky brings about a moment of spaciousness and an interruption in the flow or the stream of thinking identification with which constitutes the person the personal selfhood sense of self so sometimes that arises spontaneously in your daily life a moment of space a gap between thoughts and when you don't know you're not really aware of it, then you only sense it as a moment that feels good a moment where you feel some joy or a heightened sense of aliveness or some inner peace or even just a contentment with what is and usually that means a gap has arisen in the stream of thinking you may not know that and may only interpret it as, as I said peace, joy aliveness happiness a generic term that covers all of those and when you become conscious of it when it arises spontaneously then it can deepen and you can be in it for longer you can be in the timeless dimension for longer slight paradox I'm talking about it from the dimension of form where there's time looking at the times and then the paradoxical statement arises you can be in the timeless for longer I've told the story before some of you may know it when I lived in London and travelled on the underground or the tube or the subway every day there were a couple of stations where there was a more than usual more than usually wide gap between the train and the platform so when the train arrived at the platform the doors opened and the recorded announcement would say, mind the gap and repeat again and again mind the gap mind the gap well and of course some tourists who didn't know English well enough gap?

what's gap? where's the gap? they would fall into the gap but that could be a spiritual pointer be aware of the gap, the inner gap be aware of what is a gap?

a gap is a space between two things I don't think that's a dictionary definition of it but I would define it as the space between two things there's one thing there and there's one thing there in the middle there's nothing there's the gap no thing nothing so finding the gap inside you between two thoughts either being aware of it as it arises spontaneously in your life when you're looking at beauty or something new and unusual before you interpret it there's a moment of just spacious perception and there's the gap look at the sky so let's say you're working on your computer and then the phone rings you answer text messages come in and then you become aware okay the moment of spaciousness and then you look at the sky completely different state of consciousness immediately arises and give yourself half a minute or one minute to look at the sky half a minute is fine but it's not that long it brings about a gap when the stream of thinking subsides and this the most important thing you can do if you even want to call it doing because it frees you from being here only as the person and you become aware that there is another dimension to who you are which is the traditionally called the spiritual dimension spiritual dimension is not elsewhere it's a dimension within you where who you are as a person is transcended and if you don't find that transcendence in your daily life then there is no spiritual dimension in your daily life even if you talk about and quote spiritual books there is still no spiritual dimension in your daily life unless there is the gap and it becomes as familiar to be the space as it is to be the person in fact more familiar more satisfying you really feel it there you are yourself in that space of course there are other ways in which you can invite that gap that space into your life apart from looking at the sky anything natural you look at can be helpful and bring about the gap the tree but you have to look innocently with innocent perception not judging it not comparing it or referring to your knowledge or memory about it or associations mental associations none of that just looking like a child who hasn't learnt the names yet so you can either look at one thing and sense the spaciousness behind the perception the peace or you can look at the totality of whatever surrounds you whether it's in a room or you look out of a window or if you are outside just take in the totality of your surroundings no matter where you are you could be in a mansion or in a prison cell it works in the same way and then you become aware of yes there's all these perceptions but there's also a sense of spaciousness behind them peace and when you access that dimension whether you live in a mansion or a prison cell still it of course makes a difference in your life but it's no longer of absolute importance that's how I put it it is of relative importance before you have access to that dimension whatever happens in your life is of absolute importance it absorbs you completely it determines your happiness or unhappiness would I rather be in a mansion than in a prison cell yes of course I would it doesn't have to be a mansion it could be a lovely cabin in the woods but if I had to be in a prison cell I could still be in the space for it and look around and surrender to whatever is there so just looking around you is another way of if you don't name it of being the space rather than being the person then after a while the person comes back and you start thinking again about your past and your future and your problems and what you have to deal with and people around you but imagine living all your life with nothing but that thinking about things you have to deal with the people around you, the situation and liking it and disliking it and reacting to it and your inner state depending on whatever happens to be happening around you whether that person close to you is nice or not nice terrible so at the mercy of whatever happens a little thing falls and you go you are upset and never really happy anywhere there is always something missing and then figuring out in your mind how you can become happy never getting there because you haven't found who you are beyond the person having moments of insight while you meditate informal meditation where suddenly perhaps you have a glimpse of just being the presence being the space that's wonderful but it needs to translate into everyday life otherwise you can only be free when you sit cross-legged on the floor and have your eyes closed and your hands in a particular position and then you open your eyes again and it's time to get up and immediately you are flooded with mental stuff stringing with me so you just meditated what you have to do now it has to so therefore I say it is more important if you have formal meditation it can be a wonderful help even more important it is to have spacious moments throughout the day so that you become liberated from your attachment to the person your complete identification with the person and then the depth within you is there and suddenly feel, sense that you are deeper than you thought and ever could think because in that spacious presence where you are the unconditioned consciousness that is not confined to this body that is where you are connected with the one universal consciousness and it merges with the one universal consciousness so when you look at a statue of the Buddha this is not a this is not the statue of a person that once lived nobody knows what the Buddha looked like a statue of the Buddha represents a state of consciousness and it is a state of consciousness of being the presence transcending the person and that's why the good statues of the Buddha have a hint of a smile so because that is where true peace is found alive peace and so the Buddha goes like freedom from the person

welcome to our live meditation which today apparently is not live due to technical difficulties one minute before we were due to start everything crashed nobody knows why but I do know that sometimes it's happened quite a few times before the energy of presence does affect electrical systems so it's still the present moment so I'm inviting you to become aware of the present moment which you may know has two levels to it the external level or dimension of the present moment so it's quite easy your attention moves into sense perceptions visual, auditory so this is what you're doing here looking at the screen being peripherally aware of your surroundings

and the deeper dimension of awareness of the present moment is to be aware of yourself as the presence

[Speaker 2] (4:37:31 - 4:37:42)
that's really the present moment consciousness to sense your own presence

[Speaker 1] (4:37:42 - 4:37:59)
when I talk about it there's a duality because language creates the duality I say sense your presence as if that which is sensing the presence and the presence were two things but it's not

[Speaker 2] (4:38:01 - 4:40:59)
it's a single thing or rather no thing it's the arising of self awareness maybe a better way of putting it and as that happens you feel rooted in something very deep and vast and then whatever happens externally by saying external I include even your thought processes and emotions they're still on the periphery and of course whatever happens outside of them is perceived as peripheral when you're really rooted in being there is a calmness and a depth there is at the center words are not quite right but from there whatever happens around you and even whatever happens in your mind or your emotional field is the surface phenomenon and you can enjoy it and participate in it yet at the same time be rooted in something that isn't touched by the whatever is happening on the surface one could say on the surface of being because you are in touch with or to put more accurately you know yourself as the being itself or being itself and that is what all ancient and true spiritual teaching is only about that, there is nothing else that's what every teaching

points to, that's the pearl of great prize that Jesus talks about, that's the end of suffering that Buddha talks about because unless you know yourself as the presence

[Speaker 2] (4:41:16 - 4:41:24)
you are at the mercy of all surface phenomena whatever happens

[Speaker 1] (4:41:26 - 4:42:30)
has enormous power over you your thoughts, you are controlled by your thoughts you are at the mercy of your emotions you are at the mercy of events something good happens, you go wow and a few hours later, a day later and you are continuously in fear because you know you are at the mercy of very unstable fluctuations continuously and that's why ancient spiritual teaching talk about that you need Christian teaching, you need to be saved saved from what? You need to be liberated some teachings call it liberated you need to come to the end of delusion so what are you saved from, liberated from? Liberated from all surface phenomena

including your thoughts and emotions so that's what becoming aware of the now really is yes, you become aware of what's going on on the surface of being but primarily you are aware of being itself as the underlying presence the I I am you become aware of your I am-ness the essence of your sense of identity which gets mixed up

[Speaker 1] (4:43:44 - 4:43:55)
with mental, emotional stuff and you think you are your memories no, you are that which enables the memory to be

[Speaker 2] (4:44:00 - 4:44:18)
consciousness awareness there's the story of

[Speaker 1] (4:44:23 - 4:45:46)
it's a Zen story so all Zen stories are a little strange they are meant to be strange because they always point to something that you need to can only understand by experiencing it so the story goes there are two young monks in a Zen monastery and they're walking outside and there's a little hill just near the monastery and they see on the hill the master of the monastery is standing there and one monk says to the other I wonder what he's doing on that hill and the other monk says I think he's looking for a place to plant another tree because he likes planting trees I think that's what he's doing and his friend says no, I think he's looking to see he's probably expecting somebody and he's wanting to see if they are approaching in the distance and then they say let's go and ask him and see what he's doing there so they walk up the hill come up to the master and say Master, what are you doing here? and the master says

[Speaker 2] (4:45:48 - 4:46:06)
I'm standing here on the hill end of story meaning

[Speaker 1] (4:46:11 - 4:46:33)
in the usual state of consciousness or unconsciousness the present moment is always in the service of something else it's used as a stepping stone towards the next moment you want to get to always reaching out to the next moment because all you know is surface phenomena

[Speaker 2] (4:46:37 - 4:46:39)
oh by the way, I'm just told

[Speaker 1] (4:46:39 - 4:47:33)
that we are now live so that's fine let's carry on the all you know is surface phenomena in the usual state of consciousness or unconsciousness and so you always look to the next thing to arise, the next thought the next emotion, the next event and the now is continuously in the service of some imagined next moment so when the monks go up to the master on the hill and say what are you doing here? they expect the master to say I'm here in order to do this, that or that but he's not, when the master says I'm standing here on the hill what that points to is that the master

is rooted in being primarily

[Speaker 1] (4:47:39 - 4:47:54)
that is his state of consciousness the present moment is not reduced to a means to an end, he is in the depth of being, which is the now the present moment his consciousness is rooted in that, his consciousness

[Speaker 2] (4:47:54 - 4:47:56)
is that

and so when the master says I'm standing on this hill period, so the monks are amazed, they don't probably still didn't get it because the implied question is, aren't you always here for something else?

well, it does not exclude the possibility that the master may also be on that hill in order to look for a place to plant a tree or in order to look for, see if someone is arriving as the monks have suggested but the master is primarily rooted in being whatever else he may be doing is secondary and peripheral and that's why the master didn't say I'm here to look for a place to plant a tree or to see who's going to arrive no primarily, I'm here now, standing on this hill, or in your case

or in my case I am here now sitting where I am and I am aware of myself as the presence therefore I'm rooted in being therefore I'm not reducing this moment to a means to an end I'm fully in this moment then I can still take action without losing myself in whatever I'm doing and then I go

you can see how you go completely out of yourself and then you go, what's the next thing that's going to upset me or what's the next thing that's going to satisfy me and of course what's the next thought that's going to come into my head and going to take possession of me to such an extent that I become the thought, to such an extent that creates an emotion

reflecting thought so you emanate a completely different energy when you're rooted in being there's a calmness, a peace also a power that comes and emanates through you and all your doings will be will become more intelligent because you're in touch with the source of all intelligence all intelligence itself without being rooted in yourself being rooted in being most of your doing creates more problems more karma, more suffering and none of it is satisfying not for long

we could also say that when you're rooted in being then there's a stillness in you even while you're thinking thinking happens or there may be periods when you're not thinking which is wonderful, the space opens up and you're just present but there are times when you need to think

and even when you're thinking there's a a sense of presence behind your thinking in the same way that now that you are listening

[Speaker 1] (4:53:45 - 4:54:00)
but there's a sense of presence behind the listening without which there could be no listening and I am speaking which means the mind is active

but there is a stillness continuously behind it, so to speak and that stillness or that presence moves into the mind and then the mind is at the service of that which is beyond the mind rather than the mind serving itself self serving mind which is what the ego is, the false sense of self that distorts everything where you interpret the world other people distorted by a misperception a fundamental error underlying all your mind activity and that fundamental error also creating dysfunctional action action that creates more suffering for yourself and others even if the intention is good and may sound reasonable and then the old saying implies the road to hell is paved with good intentions

Now in a very strange and mysterious way how a situation develops is connected to the state of consciousness with which you meet the situation this is very mysterious hard to understand but you can experience it when you begin to practice or maybe already doing it you're faced with a situation are you facing it in presence not the reactive person which means you are you can sense this deeper presence that is within you as you look at this situation and you are there not just as a person but you are there more importantly as the light of consciousness and the light of consciousness is the awareness that looks at the situation and then if action is necessary you will know right action will happen which will rise out of this aware presence it might use your mind sometimes actually involves saying something but the saying will not be egoic egoically reactive it arises from the deeper level and you will say the right thing that is helpful in that situation you will not say something that it will inflame the situation create more suffering for yourself and others and therefore produce in eastern terms would say produce more karma you produce more and more karma and so how a situation evolves in your how your reality evolves and even what happens in a difficult situation is connected to the state of consciousness with which you meet that situation a very unconscious state will amplify the tribulation the trouble the problem create more chaos create more suffering for yourself and others and will be completely devoid of wisdom really active because why because you are possessed by energy formations sometimes they are collective thought forms that have taken possession of you and in this easy especially these days when people are online a lot on the internet

it's very easy to become very quickly contaminated with not the physical virus but a mental virus that you can you take in and suddenly a certain collective thought form has taken possession of your mind and there it is and you don't know it you identify with it comes part of your ego and you think that's you and then you start fighting and you think it's a good cause but you're beginning to fight and you get very angry and very upset and get it gets it's awful and you don't know that the enemy lives between your two ears ultimately not out there and you don't know that there's not enough awareness not enough light of consciousness to be aware of that and that's that is ultimately that is the greatest challenge for us humans now the greatest challenge is not external the external is actually helpful because it's there as an awakener it awakens you it's here every challenge is meant to we come back to what we talked about earlier you're not here to be comfortable when you are it's fine but it's the ultimate aim of your life is not to have a wonderful comfortable existence to be comfortable to live in your comfort zone yes there is a comfort zone but it's not not external deep within when you are aware when you are present you have access the transcendent dimension of consciousness which is the transcendent dimension not only not of your consciousness but the transcendent dimension even of the universe you have access that within yourself and there you have in that transcendent dimension one could say you are in a comfort zone but that is one that is beyond the polarities of good and bad and you can in other words you can be at peace even when the external situation is turbulent and very challenging and when you realize that that is just incredible awakening when you realize you can be internally at peace even in the face of challenges and not only even in the face of challenges the challenges forced you to go deeper because somehow you know that if you don't go deeper it's going to be very you're going to be really unhappy if you don't go deeper you're going to suffer more and more and nothing external will ever free you from that and so challenges are here in order to bring more consciousness because it's only the light that needs to grow that comes into this world the light of consciousness and that's the evolutionary process of the planet and the universe as a whole is that the light of consciousness comes more fully into this dimension it's the emanation from source and it emanates into this so the universe is engaged in a process of awakening or becoming more conscious and every life form is gradually becoming more conscious you can see how life evolved on the planet here at first they were just the simplest life forms and then gradually over hundreds of thousands and millions of years the growth of complexity to more complex life forms complex means a bit more consciousness more consciousness manifesting as more complex life forms and then there were several devastating disasters if they're called extinctions extinction events on the planet five I believe four, five devastating geologists have found that to examine that for devastating in some cases 80% of all life got exterminated in mass extinction for various reasons they assume planet was hit by a huge comet and other things happened to cause mass extinctions and then after millions of years new life forms even more complex developed after the mass extinction and then another one came millions and millions of years later there is something that is operative in the unseen what we see is only the surface reality there is a vast intelligence operating underneath the world of phenomena this vast intelligence is consciousness about the universal consciousness and that's the ultimate reality and this universal consciousness is the universe is in the process of manifesting more and more consciousness so it's being still being created it's not finished God is still creating this world and you are an essential part of this creative process you are not separate from the awakening you are an expression of the awakening universe so God is bringing more consciousness emanating this consciousness into this dimension in our case it's through you other life forms too but it's the human here is very important there's been conscious evolution for millions and millions of years sorry there's been evolution of consciousness for millions and millions of years but now for the first time here on our planet well maybe for the first time we don't know that much about human history only a few thousand years on this planet there's not just the evolution of consciousness there is also conscious evolution of consciousness and that happens through the human and our talking here being here together is an expression of that conscious evolution of the universe suddenly the evolution is not just the evolution of consciousness that's been going on for millions of years we've reached a stage where suddenly the evolution of consciousness becomes conscious evolution of consciousness so we are the universe through you through me the universe is realizing its own journey its own purpose its own essence ultimately the universe is becoming more this this is a transitional stage that we are at right now this is why it's so difficult because any transitional stage is difficult from one mode of being to another mode of being and the other this new mode of being is conscious participation in the creative process of the universe through the human form conscious participation in creation and that happens when you face a situation an external situation and bring conscious presence to it rather than reactivity you bring conscious presence you are no longer at the mercy of externals the external has the purpose of driving you to that deeper place of presence that presence because if you don't go there you suffer a lot and things get worse and then you meet a situation consciously and then it's no longer the same situation the way what happens after that the external world and your consciousness are a single phenomenon so what happens in the external world depends on your state of what happens let's say the next thing that's going to happen to a large extent depends on your state of consciousness at this moment and how a situation evolves that might be perceived as a difficult situation how it evolves from now on depends on the state of consciousness with which you meet or face that situation and deal with that situation and then you will find suddenly it changes and this is a very mysterious thing but the important thing is to realize you are not at the mercy of externals and it is of vital importance so that you become a participant in this conscious participant in the creative process of the universe is you begin to change external reality sometimes yes by taking action but primarily by being present so that your action arises out of presence which then becomes wise action and empowered action I never tell people specifically what to do because that's not my job how do I what do I do to change all the bad things that I see in the world well I'm not a my job is to address the causal realm my job is to address what I perceive as the realm of cause the world is the realm of effect when you address the realm of course then you can deal with the realm of effect the realm of effect will change as the causal which is consciousness is consciousness changes the world changes so what we need is more people awakening to who they are the light of the world and then we will find that reality changes as a reflection of the collective consciousness and I won't make any predictions except right now it seems fairly certain that we are moving into a time period of turbulence on the collective level and that's a good thing it's meant to happen it's here to awaken us although it could also make us more unconscious and it's quite possible that it will awake a certain segment of the population it will make another segment of the population unconscious that is not an impossible scenario and this other segment of the population just needs more time that's fine they just need more time this is quite possible I don't want to go too far into this or speculate any further but it will be much easier for those who awaken whatever the external circumstances may be it will be much easier to be to deal with that to some extent even be protected up to a point although ultimately what happens to the body doesn't really matter that much death will come sooner or later anyway we don't need to speculate as to the totality of humanity and so on yes I can see right now certainly we are moving into turbulence certainly some people are becoming more conscious and some are becoming more unconscious this is what I have observed in the world and my job and your job is to help humans become more conscious so that they can take right action and you if action is necessary or possible and you it's your primary responsibility is to yourself first and then you will affect others around you directly and indirectly even on others you may never be in contact with and I don't mean necessarily through technology by sending out messages but all humans are connected underneath the surface of things there is one human consciousness so any change in your consciousness is a change in human consciousness and so that's our purpose so we do not need to fear what's happening but just to realize that it actually is as it should be if seen from a larger higher perspective of human evolution the present moment is as it is and it could not be otherwise and this situation is what humans need for their further evolution they don't need their comfort zone right now unless it's the inner, the deeper transcendent dimension that I pointed out earlier so this is the message one could go on talking about this but the essence of it is this realization that

welcome whatever life brings to you

[Speaker 1] (5:16:15 - 5:17:08)
in the moment even if it is difficult don't complain because the moment you complain about what is you are in an antagonistic relationship with life and if you are in an antagonistic relationship with life you will experience life as antagonistic life reflects back to you ultimately your state of consciousness that is not an easy lesson to learn for some people and some people are even angry when they hear that but that's fine eventually everybody will realize that so that's our message I wish you well in your journey

towards

further awakening of consciousness and the realizing it's a journey without distance and it's ultimately a journey into yourself and the realization that who you are in your essence is consciousness

[Speaker 2] (5:17:37 - 5:17:39)
is the light of the

world just checking if everybody is present yes especially important as you begin to move around again leaving here many of you one little thing if you remember to live this little thing that would already significantly change your state of consciousness and that little thing to remember not as a memory as a concept that you remember but to remember to apply every moment is or concerns the value that you attribute to the present moment whatever may be happening in the present moment and the usual mistake or dysfunctional way of living unconscious way is as I've mentioned before is devaluing the present moment and overvaluing the next moment that's so unconscious that most people have no idea that that's how they live because everybody lives like that and everybody has been conditioned to live like that but that is a significant factor in unskillful living unconscious living and it strengthens the ego enormously ego lives always with reference to past and future for example I come here I emerge from behind the curtain and then I walk to the chair walking to the chair has as much value as arriving at the chair so by giving your complete attention to every step you actually honor this moment fully instead of unconsciously devaluing it because you believe you need to arrive somewhere else which is promises some measure of fulfillment no matter how small or sometimes some big fulfillment but no matter how small so if I walked in here in that dysfunctional and unconscious way the steps that I'm taking towards this chair would be devalued in my mind as being less significant than arriving at this chair or starting to speak and the arriving is always very short you arrive and then it's over so if you begin to travel again from here to home or from here to somewhere else if you can remember that the present moment is all you ever have and carrying your suitcase from here, well people don't carry they've got wheels these days so wheeling your suitcase from here to there or wherever it is to the bus, to the car to the airport to the train station is not those all those moments are not inferior to any next moment because then what and then you arrive at the train and then you look for something else now I need to get mentally I'm always somewhere else instead of giving fullest attention to this because this is the most valuable moment why? because it's the only one, the present moment so to live as if the next moment were more significant more important is a very unconscious way to live and the strange thing is you never really ultimately arrive anywhere because the arriving is never enough the arriving is immediately replaced by some new mental projection some next moment even on a big scale often people experience that, some huge success that they've been striving for for years and finally it comes and then they sit there in their big house often it goes with success but or whatever, their private jet and it feels good for a while especially if you invite other people who don't have private jets then it feels even better because it enhances your fictitious sense of self but after a while even that wears off so you have arrived you've made it, that's the English expression, I made it made what? well in case you don't know that English expression it means I have succeeded in my endeavors I made it idiomatic expression strange one so the world is full of people who want to make it and when they make it there's a brief moment of satisfaction, that's the arriving then they go okay, now what?

the same dissatisfaction arises again and then you have to the making it is not enough, you have to make more so small scale and large scale just this little thing give your fullest attention to this moment because it's not true that the next moment is more significant because it never comes so it's a way of living absorbed in thought, if you always live for the future you're absorbed in thought because future is a thought it's never experienced as an actuality so essential part of being lost in your mind is to be lost in the future because to be lost in the future always looking to the next thing is to be lost in your mind because that's where the future is, not here and now this does not mean you will no longer make any plans it doesn't mean that on a practical level you can plan and say okay at such and such a time I need to be there whatever you use for your planning, probably a device and then if you're old generation like me you go like I need to be there and you tap in where you need to be in your diary or if you are with younger generation your fingers move in a different way they go like that or the old ones they go and still get it wrong every third one is wrong so there is a way of being totally present in the planning for the future so this is actually you're very focused in planning the next your next destination what time do I arrive there what do I need to do, when do I need to be ready and you can write it down and you're fully present in that and once you've done that your attention is again here and now, it was even here and now when you were planning it because you were not mentally devaluing this moment of planning and the strange thing is you begin to enjoy now all the small things in life that before you had overlooked or neglected because the mind projects the bigger thing and even on a small scale it's the bigger thing like I need to pack my suitcase and I need to get the bus that is on a very small scale, the next big thing that I need to get to in the meantime you devalue the moment between now and getting the bus or the train so that's and then once you're on the bus you think okay now I need to be then you get off the bus and then you know where do I need to go, do I need to go now and then you arrive there but of course that's only a very temporary relief because now you need to go

somewhere else

[Speaker 1] (5:29:21 - 5:29:30)
and when you're sitting on the plane or wherever or in the car you mentally project yourself to tomorrow morning

and

there's always a more important moment and it's in the future now what you neglect then and what you continuously overlook is all the small things that actually make up the vast percentage of your life is all the little things that before are relegated to the periphery of your life what are those little things well whatever, for example things that you handle in your life things that you pick up and put there and objects around you the world around you, walking breathing, looking at the sky looking at a tree seeing, breathing in the air, looking at another human being sensing their deeper aliveness all the little things that constitute life even if you are a so called VIP in the eyes of the world which is pretty meaningless, it's just a narrative and you go from one significant thing to another but all the steps that you take even if you get picked up in a limo as I sometimes do when I go for a talk, the organiser sends a limo well a big car with plenty of room in the back, that's a limo and you can stretch your legs so then it's just very little things you walk to the car and you breathe and then you get in and you sit okay well it's just you're sitting somewhere and breathing and looking you're looking out of the window and then you arrive at a venue and you take a few steps into a car and you sit again and then you walk onto the stage it's all little things and even if you're the Pope or the president of a huge corporation or the president of a country it's still the same life consists of small things all the things that look at just your relationship with objects, this is usually overlooked because every object is treated as a means to an end but if you live in a way that is more present then the objects may still be a means to an end but they are also giving just short attention just picking up a glass there is pleasure in enjoyment in even just looking at a glass and the water and drinking and to realize that, most people realize that for the first time, if ever when they take certain types of drug like acid because it amplifies your sense perception and it shuts off your thinking mind and then for the first time you pick up a glass of water and you go oh wow so amazing so amazing I can't believe it and it is and then you drink and the taste is so incredible it is water, it is amazing it is liquid, alive it is alive, it is liquid no I haven't taken acid before coming here and it is just giving it your fullest attention without interference of thinking just awareness and all this the background then to that state of inner peace or contentment is all the aliveness of everything around you when you you pick up something put it in your suitcase pick up something else unfold it it is a nice thing to do taking a fruit maybe peeling it or biting into it the present moment in its richness that is usually overlooked because you are looking for something more significant but even the most significant thing, let's say you got the Nobel Prize can come to Oslo I think there is one Nobel Prize that people come to Norway for that is peace and then you stand on the balcony of that hotel that overlooks the square where the parliament is I think apparently that is where they go and there you are I have made it you are just standing on a balcony looking and breathing laughing unless you live through and for a narrative in your mind that you completely believe in and that becomes a conceptual sense of identity I am such and such a person who has achieved this and that and this is all the story and that is me a big narrative that gives you your sense of identity thought movement and then you feel bigger while you stand on this balcony and then you feel deflated when you step off the balcony or let's say you are a pop star what is the word that you a rock star that millions of people say wow wouldn't it be great especially youngsters wouldn't it be great to be a rock star you can do anything for a million people and of course they experience this in a magnified way they are on stage and energy moves through them and then they walk off stage and they are regarded as gods by the audience let me only touch you I hope nobody does that to me

laughing

[Speaker 1] (5:37:46 - 5:38:46)
may I just touch you they say to the rock star the rock star then having in most cases not that much awareness they feel they are more and more like a god because they believe in the narrative that all these unconscious people have mentally manufactured for them and then they begin to believe in it and then there comes a huge conflict or discrepancy when they go off the stage and they sit in the green room or somewhere where am I now and then they have to take drugs because what happens there is a sense of a lack returns much more strongly than ever before a sense of lack and insufficiency so I need another fix a drug or I mean to smash up my hotel suite

laughing

that's what they do rock stars apparently laughing and that enhances their sense of self a little bit more so people live for many people live for something that's going to happen in the future and of course you may succeed in your endeavors this is a nice thing but it's not going to give you long lasting and ultimate fulfillment or tell you who you actually are it's not it's fine to achieve things especially if they are beneficial but for humanity and the totality of the planet it's lovely to have that but even that doesn't break up your identity when the Buddha was teaching 2500 years ago he told people to seek out a quiet place in the forest and meditate there that was an essential part of his teaching so nature was an essential part of his teaching I just like to share with you how I experience nature and the state of consciousness that's behind it and we start right now with something that I don't know whether the microphones can pick it up we listen to the stillness that is here now whether a microphone can pick up stillness I don't know we will see for me the stillness is not 100% because at the moment I have a little bit of a ringing in my right ear but the stillness is still picked up with my left ear and it's very deep and in order to listen to the stillness in nature a certain alertness is required so your senses have to go in acute listening and you can combine that with looking around so you are listening and you are watching what's around you the secret of being fully in nature and experiencing the sacredness of nature is to refrain as much as possible from thinking while you are in nature and just be the awareness behind all the sense perceptions the alert presence because that's the western mind especially tells you you can do something to remedy the situation you must be able to do something there comes a point when further doing is not possible and sometimes it inflicts more pain because it wants to do something because it doesn't know anything else another question I used to be very angry and resentful towards my parents, awareness of their unconsciousness removed these feelings yet in their presence I turn to a bitter person am I in denial this question beautifully illustrates the two dimensions one could say to acceptance or perhaps the two steps to acceptance the first step is an understanding you understand that your parents do what they do did what they did because of their unconsciousness so you can understand how unconsciousness controls people's thinking and behavior so you've understood that and that's good and because you understood that you no longer feel angry and resentful towards your parents it removed those feelings except when you visit them and that brings us to step two it's very good to understand and then become to some extent free but that's not complete freedom yet there also needs to be the presence in you and it's only that that provides the deeper dimension of acceptance so and when you're not with them it's enough to understand them but the moment you stay with them all the past comes back people with whom you share a lot of past very easy to be drawn back into past reactions and it's only by being absolutely alert and present that you can then become free even while you're with them so understanding often operates when you're not immediately challenged by this whatever situation it was that caused you the upset first you understand that it's unconsciousness in them but when you're actually confronted with them or any other situation then it's vital you realize understanding is helpful but not quite enough yet there also needs to be the presence the alert presence while you're with them and especially there you need to be that's the challenge and that's your spiritual practice to become especially alert in that situation

[Speaker 4] (5:47:45 - 5:47:56)
my second question is from my husband who's not here tonight and he was recently diagnosed with Parkinson's disease and his question to you is how can he heal this

well let's start with the second one there's something more important whether or not it can be healed I don't know there is something more important than the healing of that physical condition or any physical condition and that which is more important than the healing which I'm going to just briefly talk about now is also that which in some cases brings about the healing but that's not the main thing that which is more important than the healing is to use the condition in this case it's a deterioration of the physical form which comes slowly over years as far as I understand to use that to push you into intense presence practice that's all you can do so allow it to push you into that which changes the entire vibrational frequency of the physical body when you truly live in presence which affects every cell of the body the entire frequency of the physical form changes if you do intense body awareness you can feel that for yourself it's an enormously enlivening energy field and that also that practice also burns up the ego so the opportunity there is you have an enormous motivation to embrace the state of consciousness that we call presence that's the most vital thing and that may bring about healing or if it does not bring about healing it may delay considerably the onset or the process of deterioration that comes with that disease I mentioned in the New Earth that when I was a graduate student every day in the cafeteria I would observe the physicist Stephen Hawkins who was eating lunch there every day while being fed lunch he had a similar condition it wasn't called Parkinson's in England they call it a motor neuron disease or do they call it that here but anyway that's his condition at that time he wasn't world famous he was just well known in the university and everybody said and it was common knowledge that he had been given I think it was 3 or 4 years maximum 5 years to live and that was when 30 years ago or more so he had this deterioration, all the doctors said just a few more years that's all you have 30 years later he's still alive yes he's incapacitated but his mind is not and he has come as I mentioned in the New Earth he may not be I don't believe he is spiritually awake but he has entered a state of considerable surrender to his condition there's nothing in him that has created negativity as a reaction to his physical condition that's very rare

my sister

[Speaker 1] (5:51:50 - 5:51:52)
your sister?

[Speaker 4] (5:51:53 - 5:52:13)
yes she had cancer breast cancer a really bad kind and she got complications and infections and with the chemo and she was wonderful and happy and not showing and I saw her suffering so much

[Speaker 1] (5:52:14 - 5:52:15)
yes

and sometimes she couldn't talk it was so painful what she was going through and what they were doing to her trying to save her life a couple of times yes I wanted to run away I wouldn't because I hadn't been there for her but I was reading your books and trying to be present I know that I couldn't change the situation I could be there for her that's the only way I could help her but I couldn't take the pain away and the fright, she was frightened I couldn't take her fear away and I wanted to I wanted to run or think about the future so I did not want to stay present it was hard to stay present yes

sometimes acceptance means acceptance of the unacceptable and this is an example where what is happening seems to be impossible to accept but it is happening and of course there are millions in the world who go through similar pain doesn't make it any easier but it is a fact and many others go through other kinds of extreme suffering people who go through it and people who are around them who want to help like yourself, you want to take away their suffering you don't want them to suffer and you can't help so the important the only way is really to find a place within you where you touch something that is deeper than anything that has formed the very life within you if you can close your eyes and find that not necessarily now but in a painful situation to sense to go deep enough so that you sense the life that you are because the life that you are beyond form the very consciousness that you are that pervades the entire body and goes far beyond is also the life that she is so if you sit the same applies to a dying person it's another thing that sometimes can be very painful especially if death seems to come too soon even if it's an old person who is dying it can be painful but if it's a younger person who one would say is not meant to die but you sit with a dying person this can take for the dying person of course it's a different experience the dying person if there's been any even the slightest understanding of acceptance, surrender, stillness when they were in their lifetime the slightest and they will then be able to access that and go very deep sometimes it's more difficult for the person around them than for the person who is dying or who is very ill you need to take your attention deeper let's say you sit with your sister or with any dying person or very sick person and you sit there the mind says I should say something, I should help but of course there's nothing you can do but you can be you can go deeper into being and so really it's a becoming still let's say you just sit next to her bed or hold her hand let go of the idea of doing when my mother was falling ill and her body was failing as she was getting older she kept asking me what do I do and right now there's nothing to do that was the old conditioning in her mind because that's the western mind especially tells you you can do something to change the situation you can do something to remedy the situation they must be able to do something and of course all the the whole in hospitals it's all to do with doing but there comes a point when further doing is not possible but the western mind doesn't understand that, it continues wants to do and sometimes it inflicts more pain because it wants to do something why does it want to do something when whatever you do can only be causing more pain because it doesn't know anything else the western mind is not confined to the west but I call it the western mind even the east is now adopting the western mind be is not recognized in the west as anything that even exists or is valuable but you have to go into being and if you have done it before before the situation became so difficult that will be a help if you've never heard of it even then it might be possible so but anybody who's here and of course we will all face either being with someone close to us who is dying and we will all face of course sooner or later the moment our approaching death and if by then by the time you sit with someone close to you it dies or death comes approaching if by then you haven't gone into being haven't even touched it it may be hard to go that deeply within then but if you've even touched it during your life as you all have and many of you more than touched it then that will be any kind of extreme suffering of that kind either happening close to you or to you will bring about an enormous deepening it forces you to go deeper you have to become deep in a situation like that if you are not deep you suffer enormously but even if you are deep you still suffer you suffer on the surface you cry you feel sadness and pain but underneath the suffering you can suddenly sense a stillness a vastness in yourself so to speak

as the now becomes more and more my experience

[Speaker 1] (5:59:38 - 6:27:24)
I started to question why be in a relationship with another and I guess I want to know a little bit more about how things shift in what we're seeking in a relationship and again through observing yourself in relationships you can actually find the answers to your question or the answer to your question nevertheless I will continue to speak it's to ask to find try to find some mental conclusion about the function of relationships when you are present or awakened actually isn't that helpful although many people actually wanted to know the answer to your question that's why you're here but you can observe yourself how relationships operate in your life or how new relationships if they come into your life how they differ from the old relationships when you were not present you may notice that when you're not present you seek something from the other person it may be a very subtle thing or it may be not so subtle but when you're not yet connected to the source within yourself which is the transcendent dimension which is the stillness which is consciousness when you don't know yourself as the light of consciousness as a living realization which is not difficult it's right here but when that gets obscured you seek because that's the only source of true satisfaction and peace and aliveness and then but if that is blocked you're unaware of it then you seek it through something else and often it's through another human being so you seek something that the other human being cannot really give you nor any other situation can give you because you may seek it through some imagined situation I have to work out the right structure for my life good income so that I don't have to worry anymore nice place to live lovely relationship on top of it and be able to travel wouldn't that be great and even that would not be would not provide permanent satisfaction, it would provide short-lived satisfaction always followed by dissatisfaction so you would be seeking something in the other human some kind of completion make me complete make me at home in the now help me find myself through you we'll have a deal I make you feel complete and you make me feel complete it sounds good when you say it like that but when you actually begin to live it it doesn't work not for long so you see in the old way of seeking relationships there's the seeking something through the relationship it could be just physical pleasure that is often the case and then of course comes the psychological pleasure through the relationship some kind of psychological completion through the other and as long as there's the seeking for completion through the other the relationship is doomed ultimately and as presence arises the mind may still ask well would I still need a relationship or want a relationship you don't need to find some kind of answer, abstract answer or arrive at some kind of conclusion about relationships and then live the rest of your life on the basis of that mentally arrived at conclusion about relationships the mind loves that it says I need to sort out in my mind what relationship is all about and whether it's still needed when I'm present and once I have the answer to that I can use that for the rest of my life and build my life on that of course you would be back in mind activity and that kind of conclusion is just a limitation you would impose on yourself and then even more challenging meeting humans with whom you share a lot of past the more past you share with them the more the old behavior patterns will want to come back in you know that with meeting your parents your wife your husband after many years of marriage patterns get very established of who you think he is, who he thinks you are and the way in which you interact or more difficult meeting your ex-husband or your ex-wife and be present then and there and be in the body so you're meeting human beings without past not that you cannot remember certain things they did but not to bring the past as an active operating principle into the interaction meeting everyone without past just in this moment through the power of this moment which is the power of presence which is who you are and not meeting the other person as a walking personal history and that is an enormously liberating thing to do when you can meet even your mother and father with whom quite a few people some people have a wonderful relationship with their mother and father which is beautiful some grew up in a relatively conscious family and many in this world did not grow up in a conscious, their father and mother were manifesting varying degrees of unconsciousness and resentment built up over the years between adult children and parents often this grievances, resentments complaints he doesn't understand me I get criticized all the time he doesn't even want to understand me my father, my mother and the same reactions happen every time you visit them and then you have a fight and then you leave and next time it happens again and then one day you meet them you arrive at the doorstep and you look at them and feel the inner body at the same time and then you come in and you sit down and you still, you look at them still feeling the inner body because now it's vital that you're anchored now it's vital that you're anchored in the now and then you get the old thing your father says, are you still involved in that spiritual airy fairy nonsense still haven't got a job have you I told you years ago you should be doing this and that then you have to be very present and just sit there and simply say well yes I'm still doing that yes but then he if it's your father or she if it's your mother after a while will feel a slight disorientation because you are not feeding the old patterns anymore you're not reacting and his or her ego will feel there's something missing here and so it will be hard for them to keep up that playing out that script if the other one isn't playing anymore isn't reacting anymore simply stating this is how it is and you don't even expect anything anymore because expectations that he or she should behave in a particular way to make me happy is to do with being identified with certain thoughts that's how things should be he should understand me so that I can be happy the whole thing is an illusionary edifice you won't be happy even when he understands he won't make any real difference to you now he understands me so now what what has changed nothing he doesn't understand me so the same nothing so you become free of that which you thought you needed when you were identified with thought in presence you don't really need anything psychologically speaking you don't need psychological this or that and there you are and then you can see the patterns in your mother or father crumbling and for the first time perhaps he or she will ask you a genuine question what are you really into what is that this has happened people have told me these miracles happen and if they don't that's fine too it doesn't really matter so there comes with presence comes an acceptance a compassionate acceptance of what is which very often means what is is the human being in front of you a compassionate giving them space to be because presence is you have found your inner space or spaciousness formless consciousness peace so in English we don't have a word that applies to both men and women I don't know if in Swedish in German you have the word mensch which means could mean it's man and woman but the English language doesn't have that so you have to say human being human being and that's great, I like that because I realize that that points to the two dimensions that constitute your reality you are a human undoubtedly which means you have a past you have mental emotional conditioning that makes up the person the ego, the personality you have a life situation you are a human and you have your desires as a human you have your goals and so on all the things that you experience as a human right, okay but what about being the being dimension is overlooked by most humans they are lost in their human nature they are completely unaware of that transcendent dimension of consciousness that actually is the essential reality to who or what they are I sometimes call it your essence identity, the essence your essence identity is the being of you and the being is timeless the being is consciousness itself and then there's the human and the two are together and if you can awaken to the beingness of you then of course you continue to be a human until you are no longer until the body dissolves in the meantime your task your mission your purpose is to as a human to also embody the being then you have both dimensions in your life the limited dimension of here that is temporal inseparable from time and you have the transcendent dimension to who you are in the timeless realm of consciousness itself and that is a continuous realization at first it may only come to you as glimpses in brief moments and you feel suddenly a sense of lightness very peaceful but very intensely alive and you go ah and you may realize you're not thinking in those moments thinking has subsided but you haven't fallen asleep you're awake and then you may remember those moments this was so wonderful sometimes it happens when you go into nature if you can really be there nature can help you in your awakening if you can really be there with all the senses and be aware of the awareness itself when you're out there in nature and sometimes it can happen to some humans almost accidentally they're out climbing a mountain or they're swimming somewhere in nature and suddenly the person subsides and just an awareness arises and they go wow and they think it's been caused by the beauty that they see but it's not really that it's been caused by the cessation of thinking and you can have that in the middle of a city and that's a this is your continuous practice is are you able to as much as possible let go of habitual especially habitual, useless self-serving thinking thinking that only feeds the fictitious self, the ego the entity that loves, actually loves its problems says no I don't love my problems yes you do because you talk and think about them continuously in fact you create them through unconscious thinking you create them, no no I don't yes you do and that this entity then becomes as first you have glimpses, sometimes accidental they may only be a few seconds and then perhaps a little bit longer and then the two are gradually the being and the human kind of merge the being seeps into the human and so the human the conditioned entity, the human becomes less and less obnoxious and less and less dysfunctional and less and less creating completely unnecessary and absurd suffering for yourself and others completely unnecessary and absurd suffering created unconsciously by the ego this entity in its attempt to strengthen itself, it loves its problems and its enemies oh I feel much bigger anger is great and you can talk about it all the time this is completely asleep completely asleep and so as the awakening happens presence begins to sometimes completely replace the person and at other times it kind of shines through the person in the same way that a light shines through the lampshade the light shines through the lampshade and the person still, yes the person still has its conditioning to some extent and can never be totally free of the conditioning there's always certain ways in which you behave that's part to do with how you were brought up your environment, all the conditioning the country, even the language that you speak is a form of mental conditioning, all those things they are still there but the most dysfunctional and unhappiness creating patterns they subside more and more certain patterns remain as long as you are a person, a human certain patterns remain but not the heavy deeply unhappy and obnoxious patterns they gradually dissolve and all is left with certain idiosyncrasies in your personality and so on that's okay so that the person remains but it undergoes a substantial transformation it no longer creates suffering even in the face of challenges because they continue to happen even as you awaken the universe will continue to present you with challenges, new ones no matter what situation you go into at first you oh this is great, I'm in a new situation and before you know it oh it comes up from behind another challenge it won't, the universe won't leave you alone but the wonderful thing is if you're not undergoing the awakening process every challenge that arises will make you more unconscious it will strengthen the self the self that is reacting is reactive and complaining all the time and reacting so the challenge will make you more unconscious if you're not awakening yet you can verify that perhaps in your own experience when things go wrong there is a reactive entity there that works itself up either you become angry or despondent or whatever the reactivity is people like in professions such as lawyers often encounter people in their most unconscious states because they tend to go to lawyers when things go wrong, they're being sued or the divorce is happening divorce lawyers to be a divorce lawyer potentially could be a very enlightening job because you encounter deep human unconsciousness which most people in a conflict situation like that become more unconscious than they are normally deeply unconscious and so that's when you're being challenged by life the challenge will create a reaction and you become completely identified with the reaction and you become even more unconscious than your normal state which is unconscious enough but now it's more unconscious can't stop thinking about it now as you're awakening challenge comes again and then you suddenly see the possibility of actually being more intensely present when a challenge comes and you go it's like you know what a dimmer switch is on an electrical switch you can turn up the light dimmer switch so when a challenge comes something goes wrong so to speak a difficult person arises a difficult situation arises some kind of loss arises whatever kind of loss it may be and instead of reacting and becoming more unconscious you suddenly sense you're becoming more present in the face of a challenge and that is when the challenges of the world are becoming helpful to you rather than make you unconscious they can intensify the awakening process when the Buddha was teaching 2500 years ago he told people to seek out a quiet place in the forest

and meditate there that was an essential part of his teaching so nature was an essential part of his teaching the story goes that the Buddha sat under a tree when, as the story goes he awakened spiritually or became enlightened so his enlightenment is associated with that tree

[Speaker 5] (6:30:11 - 6:30:12)
...

[Speaker 1] (6:30:37 - 6:30:49)
so here I am in the forest in northern California there are some amazing trees here, the redwood

[Speaker 2] (6:30:49 - 6:30:54)
trees I'm taking a little break

[Speaker 1] (6:30:54 - 6:31:27)
I have a little bit of a cold so that slowed me down quite a bit usually when I take a walk in nature the first part of my walk is fairly fast I don't have the energy for that today, and then when I return I walk more slowly and in a very contemplative way so I'm getting a little bit hot so I'll take the scarf off if I can get it off

[Speaker 2] (6:31:32 - 6:32:03)
oh, it's very long okay so I just like to share with you how I experience nature and the state of consciousness that's behind it and we start

[Speaker 1] (6:32:03 - 6:32:35)
right now with something that I don't know whether the microphones can pick it up we listen to the stillness that is here now whether a microphone can pick up stillness, I don't know we will see for me the stillness is not 100% because at the moment I have a little bit of a ringing in my right ear but the stillness is still picked up with my left ear

and it's very deep and in order to listen to the stillness in nature a certain alertness is required so your senses have to go in acute listening and you can combine that with looking around so you are listening and you are watching what's around you the secret of being fully in nature and experiencing the sacredness of nature is to refrain as much as possible from thinking while you are in nature and just be the awareness behind all the sense perceptions the alert presence and then you will notice that there is a depth to nature that transcends anything you could say about it or conceptualize it there are also arising within the stillness

occasionally very subtle sounds so it's actually quite helpful and can help you stay alert if you listen to the sounds so you are aware of both the stillness and the sounds of the leaves here occasionally we may get some distant car passing by, that's fine too so just be alert

and listen to both the stillness and the sounds very subtle sounds nothing spectacular and then it seems almost as if the forest were whispering and you can sense that it is a live energy field pervaded by the one consciousness out of which it has come so this contemplation of nature frees you from temporarily from yourself and preoccupations about yourself nature can help you transcend that trap of only paying attention to that limited self and so as you walk or sit in nature the person the personality that you are recedes if you are alert enough it recedes, you don't remember your past you don't need to right now or what's going on in your life all that is replaced with alert awareness and so the most wonderful thing

most wonderful most conducive place for meditation is to be in nature and have your senses attuned to the sense perceptions of nature and that includes also

breathing the air everything slows you down meditation helps you to become still and so you begin to resonate internally with the stillness that's all around you occasionally of course

[Speaker 1] (6:38:10 - 6:38:46)
thoughts may come into your head you might look at something and occasionally the mind may say something, for example here the tallest and oldest trees here, and I believe the oldest trees here are close to a thousand years old those trees many of them are scarred so they have survived many forest fires, these gigantic trees survive

[Speaker 2] (6:38:46 - 6:38:54)
forest fires in fact I'm told that they actually

[Speaker 1] (6:38:54 - 6:39:12)
need the forest fires and some of those trees will not drop their seeds until the forest fire has cleared the space around them, it's burnt down all the smaller trees and then the seeds will fall and then a new tree will come into being

[Speaker 2] (6:39:14 - 6:41:34)
so this may arise as you walk you have that thought and you see it's amazing how these trees have lasted for so long and then let that thought go so don't follow it so that you return your attention to stillness and thinking again is replaced with awareness if I use poetic language I would say that being in nature nourishes the soul so there is something here that is very healing but you need to be there if you are engaged in continuous thinking then you are not really where you are if you sit somewhere in nature, you may occasionally want to close your eyes for a few minutes and then just listen to the stillness and be aware of any sounds that may be there and of course be aware of yourself, the presence the underlying presence that you are and somehow the presence that you are aligns itself with that still presence the energy field that surrounds you

you kind of merge with the energy field of the forest the boundary between inner and outer which is created by excessive conceptualization

[Speaker 2] (6:41:49 - 6:42:24)
subsides and so then you participate and not only participate in the stillness you are one with it and you are when you then look at the trees you feel no longer a sense of separation and it's almost

[Speaker 1] (6:42:25 - 6:42:33)
there comes goes a little plane which is fine too you allow it to be there

[Speaker 2] (6:42:38 - 6:42:41)
it's almost as if

[Speaker 1] (6:42:43 - 6:42:59)
when you perceive nature in that way as if in this case it's a forest it became conscious of itself through you

[Speaker 2] (6:43:00 - 6:45:01)
because there is no longer a separation between you and it there is a continuity a continuum and I would suggest and I strongly sense that nature loves to be to become aware of itself through you so we have a continuum of consciousness and when you look at a tree or touch the tree or become aware of how still these trees are just deeply rooted in the earth and deeply rooted in being when you become aware of that we could say that the tree becomes aware of itself through you so what you provide you bring to nature is the aware dimension and a kind of completion so we could say that nature needs you and wants you to be aware of it and loves you for it oh

when the Buddha was teaching 2500 years ago he told people to seek out a quiet place in the forest and meditate there that was an essential part of his teaching

[Speaker 2] (6:45:35 - 6:45:48)
so nature was an essential part of his teaching and of course as you know probably the story goes that the Buddha sat

[Speaker 1] (6:45:48 - 6:45:59)
under a tree when as the story goes he awakened spiritually or became enlightened so his enlightenment

[Speaker 2] (6:45:59 - 6:47:21)
is associated associated with the tree a tree don't believe what science tells you there is more to the tree than that and you can know that and sense that if you become still enough and give it your attention looking almost sensing its stillness so but it is a reciprocal movement it goes both ways yes nature becomes conscious of itself through you but nature also helps you to realign yourself with stillness

if possible make sure that you are not disturbed while we are here and just give this time to yourself because really meditation in a wider sense just means being with yourself and everybody should take time out every day even if it is only 10 minutes to be with themselves now you may ask am I not always with myself throughout the day and you might even say I'd rather get away from myself in my usual preoccupations worries, anxieties fears so what does it mean when I say being with yourself I don't refer to your usual sense of self which I call the surface self that's to do with all the thinking that goes through your mind throughout the day the emotions you experience all the things that happen in your life your memories of who you are in every human being there is a deeper dimension to who they are and getting in touch with that deeper dimension within themselves that's really what meditation is and if you've never accessed that deeper dimension in yourself you'll always feel that something really vital is missing in your life even though you may have achieved many things on what I call the surface reality the surface level of your life maybe you can you have recognition maybe you have wealth you can buy whatever you like and yet you'll notice there's something that seems is still missing a certain underlying dissatisfaction or discontent it may not be there all the time but it always resurfaces and many people I've met quite a few people who have achieved fame and fortune and they all told me that after a while after the initial elation of being suddenly wealthy or famous recognized as important by the world and soon the old discontent came back a sense of insufficiency also to do with fear so no matter what you achieve on the surface level of life if you haven't found that deeper dimension to who you are your life is not really fulfilled and there's so much frustration the frustration that people continuously experience in life is not really to do with the imperfection on the outer level of their life because on the outer level things can never be perfect or never perfect for very long things come and go you lose here you gain something there you lose something here so the dissatisfaction is not realizing that there is something deeper within you that is more truly who you are than whatever happens on the surface of your life that really is the spiritual dimension and the deeper self also connects you with the underlying deeper dimension of the universe because just like you what we see in this world the universe, the world whatever you call it it's all the surface of reality under that the great teachers and philosophers since ancient times have said that realized it there is an unseen dimension underneath that there is a universal intelligence underneath all the phenomena that we experience through the senses and you are one with that universal intelligence and the way to connect with that universal intelligence that underlies all the manifestations of life that continuously unfold around you is miraculous underlying all that there is an intelligence we can call it, there are other names we can use to talk about it but it's only in you that you can find it, you can't find it out there but once you find it in yourself you recognize it out there you can sense that intelligence or that consciousness is in everything so how how do you connect with the deeper level within yourself it's deeper than thinking so you can't get there through thinking about it it's deeper than the emotions and yet it's always there it's always there and it's not that it's totally hidden from you it's that the thinking, the thoughts the emotions and the sense perceptions draw all your attention to themselves so people are kind of hypnotized by those things, especially thoughts so they no longer can sense the dimension of depth because every thought really demands your attention and you go, you follow it with your attention and then it leads to another thought and another thought and every thought is a voice in the head and it thinks, thinks and you go and you think that's your life, all the thoughts that come and talk to you about who you are and what other people who they are and continuously your attention is being drawn into that mind activity and emotions go with it and that's the usual surface sense of self and it's frustrating if there's nothing else everybody has it has that surface sense of self of course but if there's nothing else in your life except that then your life is shallow and the spiritual dimension is missing so here we are because we want to

[Speaker 1] (6:58:25 - 6:59:03)
find the dimension of depth within ourselves and it's already here we just need to become aware of it how? well that's what traditionally what meditation methods are for but here I'd like to suggest you to just investigate without actually using any technique as such just investigate with your attention

[Speaker 2] (6:59:04 - 6:59:14)
what it means to be yourself on the most essential level

[Speaker 1] (6:59:21 - 7:01:19)
what does it feel like to be yourself what is that sense of self can you get a taste or a glimpse of that sense of self without thinking about yourself how is it possible that you can even think about yourself and about your life and all the things that make up your life what makes that thinking possible what is the prerequisite for being able to think you need to be conscious if you're not conscious you can't think but usually this consciousness is completely absorbed by thinking and that is what keeps you on the surface level of reality and yourself so you only know yourself as defined by your mind you then have an image of who you are and really that is what ego means in the way we use it you then have a mental image you have a self talk and you think that's who you are me but there is a more fundamental sense of self underneath all that and that is your simple sense of presence so I'm inviting you now

to sense

[Speaker 1] (7:01:25 - 7:01:34)
that there is more to you than all your thinking what does it feel like without

[Speaker 2] (7:01:35 - 7:01:42)
the thinking to be yourself what is left

[Speaker 1] (7:01:45 - 7:02:13)
when you're not thinking but you're not falling asleep let's see if we can create a little gap in the stream of thinking to some extent me talking to you already does that so if there is a little gap in the stream of thinking like now you go and there is

[Speaker 2] (7:02:17 - 7:02:19)
a moment of no thought

[Speaker 1] (7:02:23 - 7:02:53)
but something is there a sense of presence or aliveness whatever you call it so can you sense now at this moment that inherent deeper sense of alive presence that has nothing to do with your personal history it has nothing to do with the past

[Speaker 2] (7:02:55 - 7:03:03)

[Speaker 1] (7:03:04 - 7:03:19)
it has nothing to do with the future it has nothing to do with your situation in life or your name or your background

[Speaker 2] (7:03:22 - 7:03:24)
it's beyond all that

[Speaker 1] (7:03:32 - 7:04:44)
so another way of putting it can you sense that presence you can't define it it has no content it's just space spacious presence and then you know in that you know that you are alive without having to tell yourself that you are alive because the fact that you are alive is self evident because you are conscious and to say you are conscious is even that is not absolutely correct because in essence it's not that you are conscious but that you are consciousness that strange thing or no thing that's the essence of who you are

[Speaker 1] (7:04:49 - 7:05:47)
and sensing yourself as that consciousness consciousness also frees you liberates you from being completely trapped in your personal sense of self of course that's still there on the surface but now you can sense that you are actually deeper than that now you may notice that as I speak

[Speaker 2] (7:05:47 - 7:05:52)
to you there are little gaps

[Speaker 1] (7:05:54 - 7:07:01)
between words or sentences now these gaps are not there to hypnotize you because we are here to de-hypnotize you from being totally trapped in your thoughts and deriving your sense of who you are from your thinking it's to bring you to that presence pure presence that's so refreshing so revitalizing to sense yourself as that pure presence and so these little gaps in between words or sentences as I speak are very important

[Speaker 2] (7:07:04 - 7:07:33)
because you may notice that in those gaps you are not thinking in those gaps for example now you are just present and that's wonderfully

liberating to sense yourself as that presence now you may find occasionally your mind may come in and say something it might even feel threatened by this and there may even be one or two or three of you who couldn't stand it any longer and they are no longer with us here but if you're still here and you can sense that what I'm saying points to something very important and you can sense the reality of what I'm talking about you may have noticed the spiritual dimension does not require belief because it's to do with experiencing knowing directly not believing in something I would like to welcome you to our live meditation and a special welcome to the participants of the Wisdom 2.0 conference in San Francisco 300 miles up the road so to speak from where I am right now so welcome to the Wisdom 2.0 conference people who are with us now this is not a conventional meditation I may be speaking most of the time but there are also gaps in between the words which of course are always more important than the words and if you're aware of the gaps as much as you're aware of the words then you're already entering the state of meditation without having to go through any preliminary technique not that there's anything wrong with techniques so it's actually quite lovely to be aware not only of the words but also the stillness that's there the space one could say between the words even underneath the words and the miraculous thing is when you're aware of that for a brief moment whenever you're aware of the space you're not thinking so the more you're aware of the space or the spaces the less absorbed you are in the stream of thinking and not being absorbed in the stream of thinking not identifying with the stream of thinking is meditation and of course the aim of meditation is that eventually it becomes your normal state of consciousness in which case you may still want to practice so called formal meditation because you like it or you may not now usually in your daily life things constantly arise in your field of awareness demanding attention situations people things that need to be done and sometimes things are pulling at you from various directions demanding your attention at the same time and when you no longer know where to put your attention you're beginning to experience so called stress because stress means one thing is pulling this way another thing is pulling that way and so you get stress and as long as you're unaware unconscious spiritually speaking the world around you determines where your attention goes people situation, events your electronic devices that go ping the next text message comes in or whatever sound it is or go pong when the next email arrives and immediately your attention goes there and then somebody else somebody else so I call that losing oneself in the world and then of course there's your thinking every thought that arises seems to say give me more of your attention follow me to where I want you to go and so when you're unaware then whatever thought comes into your head has this enormous pulling power and so you identify with the thought and you're completely in it and it takes you this way and that way and leads to a whole succession of thoughts and so on the most primordial level it's thinking really that absorbs your attention your mind because even external things have to be transformed into mind stuff before you can experience it so that you can experience it all external objects before you can be aware of them have to be taken in through sensory perception then transformed into love of impulses and then reassembled somewhere to make up this picture of external reality but it's ultimately all you ever experience is your mind so that's really what we need to look at so most people are continuously aware of something and they are at the mercy of whatever arises in their mind that has this power to pull in their attention one thing you learn in meditation is you can you have a choice, you can direct your attention to one thing and then you can see if you can keep your attention on one particular mind object which could be becoming aware of your breathing or it could be a mantra that you repeat in your mind one mind object or an external object the candle flame so you begin to realize that you can actually direct attention, you don't have to be at the mercy of whatever comes into your mind so as we sit here for example you can direct your attention your attention is of course in auditory perception and visual perception but in addition you can also have some of your attention on your breathing for example you're aware even as you listen and as you watch if your eyes are open you can be aware also that at the same time you're breathing you're choosing to have some attention there too that's a very calming thing and you become aware that your body is alive on the inside you can become aware that there's a sense of aliveness inside your hands another ancient meditation method to do it more methodically you become aware that your feet are alive on the inside, your legs your entire body there's a field of aliveness, you become aware of that you can then choose to put your attention on that rather than on something else where it would habitually go so gradually you become aware of your own power you're not at the mercy of events and things your thoughts ultimately there's a deeper dimension in you deeper than thinking and getting in touch with that accessing that realizing that that is the essence of who you are that's why we're here the purpose of this is to get in touch with that deeper dimension within yourself deeper than thinking and what is that we could describe it as the feeling or the sense of being you at the most fundamental level what does it feel like to be you now usually when you speak in terms of I let's use the first person what does it feel like, what's it like to be me, what is that sense of identity, the sense of self usually you refer then to certain things in your mind your history your conditioned mind the history of me, the story of me me and my problems me and my situation me and this and this and this so there's always on that level your feeling of being yourself is really to be identified with certain things that arise in your mind but here we are attempting to go deeper to a more foundational a more real sense of what is it that underlies all that what is it that makes the story of you that most people tend to be who they are what is it that makes the story of you possible what is the space, the light in which it appears there's something deeper without which there could be no story and yet it's not separate from it and that's always the same, there's a deep sense of beingness or presence in you that is prior and deeper than anything that happens in your life or in your mind so I'd like you to get in touch with that sense of being you at the deepest level what does that feel like and it's a very strange question, so I'm usually then your attention is directed to certain things objects in your mind what we're attempting to do here is to ultimately becoming aware of that attention itself which is awareness so when I ask you what's it like to be you I'm really asking you to become aware of your own awareness and that is not an object you can't say ah, there it is, I've got it now you cannot have it because you are it it's the essence of who you are, you cannot describe it because it has no form you cannot talk about it in terms of past or future because there's no time to it it is a timeless dimension and this bare sense of beingness that if that becomes the foundation for your life so to speak if you could not lose touch with that, in other words, not lose touch with the most essential dimension within you then the way in which you experience this world would change because you would be continuously aware of that which is deeper than whatever arises in this world or in your mind and to feel that within yourself brings about a sense of trust in life it is as if something were carrying you something vaster than the little me and you are connected with a vastness there that goes far beyond you as the person with the history and to sense that within yourself you can feel there is a power there that is the power of life itself when you don't know that all that is available to you is a trickle of that power but as you become aware of it, which really means become aware of awareness become conscious of consciousness which again when we speak, when we use words it's never quite right because the moment we construct a sentence we create duality subject and object and you say I am aware of consciousness that you have a subject and an object which isn't quite right because there is no I apart from consciousness so you would have to qualify it and say I am aware of consciousness as myself then you undo the original error that is semantic that brings about a sense of rootedness in being and brings about a trust in life in other words what is trust which in other spiritual traditions have other words for it faith it's the absence of fear that's really what trust is so when you are in touch with that within yourself the world is no longer perceived as a fearful place I just want to remind you that we are not here to do anything we are here to one could say experience something rather than do something and what we are here to experience and even that's not quite right I'll come to that in a minute what we're here to experience is very subtle but very powerful whatever name we give that reduces it it's not that it's very vast for the time being let's just call it stillness now when I said we're here to experience something that's not absolutely right but whenever we use language we are bound to falsify that which goes far beyond concepts it's not so much that we're here to experience something as to find that which lies which underlies all experience a dimension that is deeper than any experience becoming aware of that within yourself so some of you may have written down or have in your mind goals you want to achieve in life and that's good it's unlikely that achieving stillness will figure prominently as one of your goals or even number one and yet it's the most important thing in your life but it's a good thing that it's not on your list of goals to be achieved because if you make it into a goal to be achieved it implies that you need the future to achieve stillness which is of course true for all other goals but not for that which we call stillness temporarily we just call it for the time being stillness if you make it into a goal to be achieved you place it into the future and you'll never find it because it's inseparable from the present moment the now that usually people are not aware of as an actual presence and here we have another pointer we could use instead of stillness and that is presence and as the word implies presence is inseparable from the present the now now for most people yet the now is not a living realization they are only aware of what happens in the now and even that's not quite right they're not really aware of it they are reactive towards it and they are identified with it they are identified with their thoughts that arise they are reactive to what happens outside so I'm here just talking a little bit giving you pointers with every sentence every word is really a pointer towards that and I trust that as we sit here together giving up the idea that we are here to do something as we sit here together a realization arises within you that is the living presence within the thinking mind stops for a moment and there's just spacious awareness stillness you haven't gone to sleep you've become still without falling into dreamless sleep without falling into dreams just something has arisen that usually you would have overlooked and our meditation here, if we want to call it that is to become aware of the space within, another pointer the stillness, this space becoming totally at ease with the present moment a very rare state for most humans usually they're only at ease when some desire has just been fulfilled and then they're at ease for a little while, a few minutes perhaps or they're at ease because they're so tired they're moving towards sleep so I'm here to lead you into that realization of inner stillness of that dimension within lead you through words which are only pointers and through the demonstration of presence which you can sense if you pay attention to the underlying stillness that is here as I speak behind the words between the words tune into that nothing personal in that nothing to do with this person and as you tune into that the same dimension arises within you which again has nothing to do with that person that you think you are so there is a dimension that transcends the person it's in this person and it's in that person the dimension that transcends the personal and the person and everything to do with the person the personal history the personal problems the life situation the ups and downs of the life situation there will always be there the ups and downs of the life situation but the miracle is finding the transcendent dimension within you without which life cannot be a pleasant experience not for long it cannot be satisfying not for long, never for long so without the realization of the transcendent dimension the formless spacious stillness nothing will satisfy you it's frustrating, life is very frustrating without that dimension if you haven't found it, but of course the dimension is there in everyone it's not something that you need to achieve you can't achieve it let alone achieve it in the future you can discover it here and now within, it's lurking there underneath all the doing underneath all the thinking it's always there but completely ignored by most people if you're comfortable with theistic terms you could say God is always present but completely ignored by most people because if God has any meaning it is the transcendent dimension of life it transcends means it is beyond whatever arises in life beyond thought, beyond physical forms, beyond form it transcends form it is beyond past and future, it transcends time it has nothing to do with time it is presence, eternal presence and presence, eternal presence or eternity is not some weird abstract philosophical concept it can be and it points to a living realization so the most precious thing to find in life is that there is stillness inside you always you just have to pay attention to it but then the strange thing is that when you become aware of stillness you realize that the awareness and the stillness are not two but one so it's only when we use language we say I'm now I'm aware of stillness you put it into language so when you're aware of stillness there is a knowing where concepts are not needed words are not needed and there is no duality really it's only when you translate it into words there's a duality and you say I'm aware of stillness but what really happens is that awareness and stillness are a single realization there is no subject and object in this realization when we talk about it, it sometimes seems that there is a subject I am aware of stillness I can feel the stillness inside me when you put it into words that's how there's subject and object but when you look more deeply beyond words you see that there's not me as an entity who is aware of stillness as something in me it's only when we use language and that duality appears when I'm aware of stillness when I'm aware of stillness the awareness and the stillness are one the whole evolutionary impulse of the universe is towards that somehow and I cannot explain it in words it's beyond we don't even attempt to fully to really understand what is behind that, it's far beyond understanding but just to say that the evolutionary impulse of the universe is behind that consciousness wants to flower through the form the human it will flower through any form it doesn't say you are more worthy than this, I will choose this form because you are more worthy it flowers where there is a transparency where the form the rigid mind structures give way they die first identification with that me mind made self goes that and this is why we're here because as you sit here you are finding death before death finds you and these the mind structures that you are identified with as me the thought forms die so the flowering is happening here before death finds you you embrace death already but it doesn't matter when it happens and consciousness will move through, it could be a criminal killed several people inflicted suffering on others and of course on himself and in that midst of hell in itself waiting for execution suddenly inside the entire structure of the self mental emotional structures dissolves because the suffering is unbearable and suddenly something shines through and now he doesn't care anymore whether he the execution happens or not and there have been cases like that when this happens sometimes when people speak about it and tell others about what happened to them they may use certain words that correspond to their language or culture but when you look beyond the words you will see that they all point to the same and there are some of those to whom it happens who can't even speak about it they just look at you and you look at them they may be uneducated they may not have much to say and yet you look and you see there's something that shines through that is deeper than a person and any person could be the personal dimension and the person has given way to that and so it is always sacred when that happens but so far it's been relatively few human beings to whom this has happened no longer the case now it is the destiny of all humans to go through that transformation it is certainly your destiny otherwise you wouldn't be here the purpose of your life is to enable that to come through you and it's happening already so we embrace the death that is here when you surrender to what is that's the greatest death the resisting me entity gives way you can surrender through suffering or you can surrender through voluntarily through the yes to what is which as we saw yesterday takes you beyond the form you are no longer reactive to a form so the yes that simple thing takes you beyond form and I pointed out yesterday often that which you say yes to is some form of limitation because it's form and that in other cases that which you say yes to may be some form of death some form of loss and that is particularly powerful any kind of loss or death leaves an emptiness behind when a form is no longer there and you don't run away from that empty space and it's an opening into the formless one could say every form obscures God and the death of the form enables God which is the formless one life to shine through therefore death has been long been recognized as sacred in ancient cultures who had not denied death whereas the modern culture modern western civilization denies death it's not they don't know it's sacred they don't even want to talk about it they don't want to see a dead body you can't it's not allowed it's illegal to see a dead body they would send you to a psychiatrist if you asked to see a dead body there must be something wrong with you so death is hidden because the western culture is totally identified with form, with mind so the worst possible thing for it is death and even in hospitals they don't know anything about death where death happens continuously, old people's homes every old people's home potentially would be a spiritual center, the greatest ashrams would be old people's homes because that is the potential of old age but it's not recognized yet so they would be the most sacred places so these ancient cultures have recognized the sacredness of death not knowing perhaps why intuitively they knew it to be sacred but now you can see why it is sacred because the formless shines through where there was the form and that can happen when there is physical death but it can also happen when you die psychologically to the me and that is the spiritual transformation and that can happen through intense suffering or through the power of a spiritual teaching or in many cases a combination of both and I suspect that in many of you it's a combination of both you've had the suffering, otherwise you wouldn't have come and now there is the power of spiritual teaching which tells you you don't need to suffer anymore and you don't need anymore time before you can enter the surrendered state why would you need time to enter the surrendered state? Do you need more knowledge before you can enter the surrendered? Yes, but before I enter the surrendered state I need to understand the universe completely laughter you've had many pointers already everybody here has read scriptures beautiful pointers no, I have not yet fully understood the nature of the universe I need a few more years says the mind and the amazing thing is a deep understanding happens not in the way that the mind imagines it a deep understanding of the universe happens as you enter the surrendered state this mind made sense of self is also much more focused on the negative than the positive to be free you awaken to who you are beyond your history and your life situation

when was the last time

you saw somebody just sit there and look around? because you have to get out your phone it clutters your mind even more so when I ask who are you?

if I ask that question don't go, let's do this for a moment don't go into the past can you feel or sense who you are without reference to the past in you you don't even need to remember your name right now what for? you don't remember your email address or your phone number or what happened to you 10 years ago don't need to remember that can you still get a sense without reference to your personal history can you get a sense of beingness or presence there's no past in that at all but what is that? you can't really describe it all you know is that you are I am you can sense the underlying beingness or presence of you but to really sense it what needs to happen is that for a moment the stream of thinking needs to subside and it may be happening for many of you at this very moment the stream of thinking that is normal for most people that never stops except when they fall asleep the stream of thinking for a moment subsides and when I asked you whether you can be sense yourself without reference to your personal history, what I was really talking about what I was really asking was can you get a sense of your presence without thought ah and there's enormous revelation here this question who am I does not have a real truthful answer on a conceptual level it's not in thoughts or words the true answer to who am I has no thought in it, it is a sense of presence of beingness and you can only sense that if it's only a moment, so the stream of thinking subsides and what happens is you are completely present without your mind saying anything you can perceive everything you can see, you can hear you're fully there and your mind is still still does not mean that you've gone to sleep it's the opposite, you're actually more alert in that stillness than you would be if you were identified with this continuous stream of thinking that's the stillness, the inherent stillness that actually every human has that you don't need to work hard to attain stillness or think that if I follow the right course of action, it might take me 10 years and then I'll be able to have a still mind no it's already there and if you're not totally miserable and unhappy every moment of your life that means without perhaps you knowing it anybody who is not extremely miserable all the time has a little bit of access without even knowing it to that stillness within they don't know it, all they know is from time to time they feel a little bit good they feel ah they don't know for 3 seconds they stop thinking ah they might have some other explanation of why in that moment they felt good maybe they were looking at a dog in that moment because the dog wasn't thinking anything about them because the dog doesn't think the dog is conscious but not conceptual thinking, the dog does not have an opinion about you and so when you were petting the dog perhaps you suddenly felt good about petting the dog, why?

because for a moment the dog freed you of the judgmental conceptual mind that otherwise would be very active if you were petting a human it would say something of course you can't do that because people would think you are insane you can't go up to a human may I pet you that would be nice if they did that to each other but but the humans have judgments about you so whenever you go to a human you know that he has certain thoughts about you so the other human cannot free you from your thoughts but the dog or the cat can for a short moment free you from your thoughts and in that moment it feels good that's why people love their pets so deeply there is a reason a deeper reason why they love because the pet frees them a little bit from their minds and there are moments when you interact with your animal you can experience brief moments of thoughtless awareness two seconds three seconds but it's enough to keep you going it's enough so that your life doesn't become totally miserable and then you might have other moments you might have moments when you engage in some physical activity, you swim or you climb a mountain and then there are moments that your total presence is required by the activity so that there's not enough left for thinking and again you feel intensely alive oh that was so good why was it so good? I love it, it's just so good, I don't know why it's good well it's good because it freed you for a moment from the incessant stream of thinking and there was some degree of awareness of presence arising but you didn't even know that so it's always that dimension of consciousness is in every human now I must admit there are still millions of humans where it's so deeply hidden in them that they have no access to it but there are others who can actually who are beginning to awaken to this dimension within themselves so now you don't have to wait for certain things to happen to briefly free you from your mind you don't have to wait for the next encounter with a lovely dog in the street or you don't have to wait for some beautiful moment in nature when you just go you take in the totality of a forest or the vastness of the sky and you go ah or at night you look up into this clear sky, the vastness of space the countless stars, which are suns most of them, and the vast distances and the stillness of it all and you go it can still your mind too that was my first meditation when I was a teenager, I didn't even know what meditation I didn't at that time nobody talked about meditation in the west I looked up at the sky at night when I was a teenager we were living in Spain so the sky was often, in the summer especially totally clear and I would sit on the roof of the house and go wow what I realized many years later that while I was doing that there was no thought in my mind the space the outer space created in me that inner space or inner spaciousness so that's another word for it, another pointer the inner spaciousness if you don't find that and I say find or discover I'm not saying achieve or attain it's not an achievement or attainment because it's already there as the essence of who you are but you have to discover it, that it is already there, if you don't find it you are condemned condemned for the rest of your life to live a very frustrated existence because life will be just one damn thing after another one damn thing and it never leaves me alone but what really doesn't leave you alone is your mind which reacts to every little thing that happens and amplifies every little thing that happens it's not so much what people call karma it's not so much what what happens to them it's how they respond or react to what happens and when you are unconscious you amplify every little challenge in your life becomes a big thing in your mind oh my god oh and you it was only a little thing but it gets it gets amplified personal conflicts arise all the time inner finding your life, your so called life you might have an opinion the narrative in your mind that you call your life might tell you that your life was a failure it might tell you your life was a great success but in this case you probably didn't come here because if you were totally satisfied for your life why would you ever look for anything beyond the material things and the mental things but nobody can be satisfied for very long so you have all tasted failure, so called and some of you might think the whole thing didn't work out I had such great plans when I was 18 I had great plans for my life and then it didn't work out nothing worked out my marriage didn't work out and then the second one didn't work out either and then I got a job but then I lost it and then I made some money but then it made me unhappy because I bore it so much and became so stressed out that I had to seek psychiatric help and that didn't help oh dear in other words your mind is cluttered by stuff your mind is cluttered and you can't get out of the clutter it's like a room full of clutter and these days it's even more cluttered because all the devices that people use clutter your mind even more every text message is more cluttered because 99 out of 100 text messages are not important they just clutter Facebook again, there might be occasionally important things but it can continuously bombard it but you need to take it all in and very rarely these days for people who are not awakening it's actually getting worse for people who are not awakening you can see there's not a moment when they are in the past occasionally when you were somewhere waiting for something there was nothing to do and you just had to sit there and maybe look around but nobody does that anymore when was the last time you saw somebody just sit there and look around no, because you have to get out your phone and of course what does that phone do? it clutters your mind even more if you didn't have your phone there would be a chance of having some spaciousness, you could perhaps look at the sky and go ah and appreciate the beauty of it and the depth of it and the spaciousness of it but no there's a text message coming in and what does it say?

it says, what's up? and then of course you have to reply of course so and that when that goes the naturally occurring spaciousness I'm not even talking about consciously embracing spaciousness, just the naturally occurring spaciousness in a normal person's life that rarely happens these days and that's a great dysfunction and I don't know what effect that will have on the civilization within two or three generations now there is, fortunately there is a segment of the population that is awakening spiritually perhaps to compensate for the dysfunction that many humans are forced to enact re-enact every day so clutter declutter your mind is not a process that takes a long time, to declutter your mind you don't have to go ok, now I'm taking out this thought now what's the next thought that I'm going to take out like if you declutter your room you have to say, what is it that I don't need but you don't, to declutter your mind is an instant thing, it's an instant thing of withdrawing from thinking and becoming present and you can do it as I just mentioned one example, looking at the sky because there you have spaciousness the sky is spacious and that is why Jesus used the analogy of the kingdom of heaven heaven means sky in most languages heaven and sky are the same word in French, in Spanish, in German heaven and sky are the same word so he's talking about the kingdom of the sky and he said that's the most important thing, just find the kingdom of heaven and everything else will work out in your life, that's what basically his teaching was I offer a new translation instead of kingdom of heaven I've already said sky, but there's an even better translation that I found and that is spaciousness, because the essence of the sky is vast spaciousness kingdom, my translation for kingdom is dimension so the kingdom of heaven is the dimension of spaciousness it is a dimension of consciousness in you so the kingdom of heaven again, when they asked him where is the kingdom of heaven because they hadn't understood what he was talking about where is it, when is it going to come?

and he said, and this is I believe one of the things that is more or less literally true of what he said, many other things are not literally true that were passed on and written down, but he said the kingdom of heaven does not come with signs to be perceived you cannot say, ah it's over here, or look it's over there but truly I tell you the kingdom of heaven is within you, in modern translation it says in the midst of you both are true the kingdom of heaven is within you, it is the dimension of spaciousness in you, and if you find that that solves not every single problem of your life, no but it gives you access to a dimension in you from where all the problems of your life and the challenges of your life can be seen in their true perspective and are no longer no longer have the ability to draw you in completely and make your life miserable, your ability to deal with the challenges of life, which are inevitable, life is not easy for anybody it's not even meant to be easy, it's not easy for any life form every life form is presented with life challenges from insects to plants to every little, every life form life is challenging and human life is particularly challenging the more evolved, the more problematic things get the more you can start thinking the more problematic life gets, so it does not mean when you find the kingdom of heaven within as the dimension of spaciousness that you are no longer challenged by life, no but the way in which you respond to the challenges changes you no longer amplify challenges, they are just there and you either take action or you accept what is for the time being in other words the challenges of life the problems of life no longer make you unhappy and that's a huge evolutionary leap forward so sometimes spiritual people who are spiritual seekers have a misconception that when they awaken spiritually become enlightened, whatever word you want to use that then they will no longer experience challenges or problems that's not true life continues every situation that you go into has a new set of challenges you could become famous and live in Hollywood or whatever and you would quickly find that before you thought when I attain this I'll really be okay I'll be wonderfully happy for the rest of my life please God just make me famous and I'll be happy for the rest of my life I just need just need 10 million, 20 million dollars to make it 20 I just need that and then I need to be recognized that I'm great by other people I really need that also but then I'll be really happy it's not going to happen even if you get what you wanted unhappiness will quickly resurface this was confirmed to me I've met a few people who got what they wanted and they told me how unhappy they became after a while after the elation of first having it I'm the greatest and then something happened to deeply challenge them so the challenges of life remain and that is a good thing because by being challenged when you are awakening spiritually the problems, the challenges of life no longer pull you into unhappiness and unconsciousness and reactivity and complaining and seeing yourself as a victim but they force you to be more intensely present, they bring out more spaciousness when you get challenged by life you go oh, there it is another challenge and you look at it wow welcome to our saturday meditation the focus of our meditation is stillness inner stillness what happens outside doesn't really matter so much stillness is just a word a pointer to most people it means silence absence absence of noise and in that sense stillness could be called a negative pointer it points to the absence of something but it doesn't really refer to the absence of noise even the absence of inner noise although it is true that when the inner noise stops there is stillness but every pointer we use is not really it it's not quite right ever, it reduces that to which it points to something we think we can understand so it's much more than the absence of something although as a pointer that works another word for stillness is presence and that's a positive pointer by implication presence points to the presence of something the presence of what all you can say here is the presence of presence so there are two levels one could say to who you are on the one hand on one level you are the presence of certain things the existence of certain things you are the existence of the body the existence of sense perceptions the existence of emotions the existence of thoughts so we can call that the presence of something that's you as a person and here we are not concerned with that we are concerned with who you are beyond the person, that deeper level and we are here together a few thousand people perhaps in different parts of the planet going beyond the individual persons personalities to a deeper level of being and that's our meditation and I am speaking the words point to it, the words of course are not it the silence the stillness the presence which cannot be perceived with the senses is what matters here so there is nothing for you to do except be who you are beyond the personality and realize there is a stillness in you that has nothing to do with the personality and its problems because a large part of your personality consists of your problems as you access the deeper level of stillness or where you just sense as I sometimes put it your own presence it's not your own but let's just put it this way where you sense your own presence or rather where you sense the presence that you are you are that presence before you become this or that person there is a presence an aliveness there is the light of consciousness in which the person arises but the light of consciousness itself is not the person it transcends the person it is not separate from it the light assumes a certain form and becomes a person in the same way that when you watch a movie there is the light the projector light and the ways in which the light is obstructed by the film and those obstructions of the light, not never total obstructions because then you wouldn't see anything partial obstructions of the light and that becomes the movie the characters, the events and so on that's a little analogy and normal life isn't really that much different so if you only know the obstructions to the light of consciousness the light of God then you are trapped on the level of problems and drama and difficulties anxieties, regrets past, future me, me but here we become aware of the presence not the presence of something in us that would make it into some formal thing again but more simply the presence of presence so the presence underlies the words that I speak it underlies the words that you hear and so I am inviting you to be aware of that in you that underlies the sense perceptions and the thoughts that's we could call that the essence of who you are that transcends the person that's the most important realization in your life but it seems to be still a secret because nobody, very few seem to know about it so and many are not interested yet until existence as the person only becomes increasingly frustrating both for the individual and for the collective on the planet society, civilizations where the transcendent dimension is missing completely nothing no individual or civilization can remain sane for long without it there is an increasing madness if that is all you know and the presence the realization of presence frees you from bondage to the person the personality with all its little concerns that keep it busy all day long and on a larger scale the collective realize that the concerns of the collective that you hear through the media and so on may be relatively important but ultimately they are not just as your problems which sometimes are related to the problems of the collective for example now in times of a recession and so on your problems too are ultimately not that important they certainly won't be important in 50, 60 years time to anybody and not to you because you as the person probably won't be there anymore that's quite soon I suggest you visit a graveyard from time to time and look at the gravestones with the names on them all these people thought that their problems were incredibly important this person asks after many years of meditation and all the twists and turns of life I'm now in the grip of intense fear and anxiety it seems it was always there only more intense now sitting with it, letting it be there seems to make it grow well fear, anxiety which is a form of fear very common some people have it, many have it in the background continuously and I would say there's some degree of fear even if you're not conscious of it if you're totally identified with the egoic mind you will have fear if only in the background and it may come out in other forms it can come, express itself as anger if you look at anger closely you usually find hidden underneath the anger is a state of fear so if there's fear one important thing is to of course you need to direct your attention to it you acknowledge that there's fear the important question that arises is are there any thought processes connected with the fear, in other words what are the thoughts that your mind is producing while you're feeling the fear is it possible that certain thoughts that you think frequently or habitually produce the fear, is it possible you project yourself into the next moment, into the future moment excessively trying to control something that you have no control over, what's going to happen to me or creating an imaginary scenario of loss that you might suffer it's not happening now but it might happen and many things that the thought activity excessive thought activity often creates scenarios of things going wrong that are not happening now, may never happen, often probably will never happen and even if they did happen the actual situation would actually be easier to face than the imaginary situation in your mind because there's nothing you can do there's no action you can take to remedy an imaginary situation except to stop thinking it but if an actual situation arises you face it and you give it your attention and then you take the action that you need to take but an imaginary situation you're totally at the mercy of it so it only exists in your mind so you need to see whether your mind is creating the fear by thinking fearful thoughts by projecting itself into the future and if that is the case then you can see oh so I'm creating those because my body cannot tell the difference between an actual event that's happening outside and what my mind is producing so when I'm thinking thought my life situation is critical if this is basically what your thoughts are telling you then your body believes that this is the actual truth that you are being threatened at this very moment.

The body doesn't know the difference that the tiger isn't in the room the threatening presence is your thoughts the body reacts in the same way whether there's a threat an actual threat in the room or your thoughts can create the same even palpitations shortness of breath because you're thinking fearful thoughts at night I had that for years an awful state it's insane it's a disease nothing is happening absolutely nothing there's a quiet room, nothing it's all happening in the mind so if that's the case then you need to tackle the thoughts because they will cause the fear and how do you tackle thoughts is by realizing the futility and the destructive nature of these thoughts and choosing to step out and what do you do to step out first you don't believe your mind that tells you no you can't step out you have to continue thinking no you step out and take a conscious breath or put your attention into the inner energy field of the body a conscious choice to remove attention from thinking and you may have to be really alert to do it if you're immersed in a mind stream it could even be that it's so powerful that you just cannot get out it has such gravitational pull it pulls you but at least you know that this is what's happening there's a state where you cannot help yourself yet but at least there is the beginning of a dis-identification from it when you know that this is what is happening so at least there's a part of you that knows this is not totally real the fear is being produced by my mind or in those early stages you may not yet be able to step out of it, it may be so strong that you're still totally in the grip of it but at least you know that you're in the grip of it the worst thing is to be in the grip of it and not even knowing it because you're so identified with it it is absolutely real to you so even to know that this is happening is already a step forward and then perhaps after a while the energy exhausts itself a little bit of this and then you can begin to say you will step out of those fearful thoughts because they are creating suffering and you take a conscious breath and another and another and then begin to feel the energy field of the body ah wow it's like this huge burden is suddenly dropped away and then you look around and this is a form of awakening out of complete identification with thinking it really is an awakening and you can observe it in yourself and you go ah so nice it's like a nightmare maybe everybody has experienced awakening from a nightmare and feeling such relief that you're in bed and it's safe you go ah and the same thing when you step out of fearful thought and become present ah and then see thought will then try to pull your attention back in it can go come this way laughter and then you might one little thought comes, do you follow it or don't you follow it, if you follow it laughter oh laughter laughter

now it's also possible some people that the fear arises and you cannot detect any thought that created it it just comes wherever you are at some moment suddenly intense fear comes, that is possible too and that of course is what I call pain body which is accumulation of old emotions that lives in you and there are many people who for whom the pain body manifests predominantly as anxiety or fear and it can come up suddenly but usually then it flows into your mind also and produces fearful thoughts so fear can be in some cases if you still suffer from that affliction some of you may be able to see how your thoughts are generating the fear habitually or you may find that in you the fear arises spontaneously and then usually produces further fearful thought and that is the pain body wanting to feed on further experience of the same what makes up its life is the energetic frequency of fear which is a particular, you can feel what fear feels like, it has a we call that a frequency it feels sometimes the body actually expresses it through shaking I'm doing this because I want to give you I don't want I don't want frequency to be just a concept in your mind I want to give you a taste of what frequency means that's frequency and then you have a different frequency of presence nothing has changed outside, it's the same room you're a totally different reality in the same place a totally different world in the same place as you shift from one frequency to a different frequency Salvation is undoing Salvation can be seen as nothing more than the escape from concepts so you can see that why in some other spiritual traditions you had liberation because the escape from concepts is also the liberation from the prison of conceptual thinking when you're identified with it when conceptual thinking supplies you with your sense of self then you are trapped in a conceptual prison and that is ego, that is unconsciousness and people don't even know it that they are trapped in it so the spiritual realization is through letting go of the prison of concepts so that you no longer inhabit the conceptual reality which is what most people do where everything is every perception that you have is filtered through your conceptualization when you look on something you immediately have an interpretation for it you have a label for it you have a self-reference towards it I like it I don't like it so there's already you cannot see without concepts so inhabiting a conceptual reality you have a prison that you have for other human beings because you conceptualize them and for yourself because your self image is an edifice made of concepts and salvation is the escape from concepts and this little part ends with these three lines those who would let illusions be lifted from their minds are this world's saviors again it links in to the word salvation when you let go of the prison of concepts when you awaken in the terminology of the course in miracles you become a savior of the world because by embodying that state of consciousness you help others become free also even just by being not necessarily by formal teaching although you might do some teaching too and when you embody that state of consciousness in the terminology of the course in miracles you become a as it calls you become a teacher of god that's the term frequently used in the course even though you might not necessarily teach as such but by embodying this the awakened state of consciousness you cannot not teach it might not even be through words it could be through your non-reactivity through the way in which you relate to other human beings and so on then everything you do is a teaching the way in which you behave even your very emanation because every human being every life form emanates also a certain energy frequency so even by the emanation your emanation you would become a teacher and then some of you also of course will use words to teach so you will perhaps even in a formal sense you might teach groups give talks write books who knows but anybody who awakens even if you're not fully awakened even if you're awakening to who you are beyond concepts, you're already a teacher of god according to the course these are the interesting lines here about defensiveness when you feel the need arise to be defensive about anything know that you have identified yourself with an illusion it is not danger that comes when defenses are laid down it is safety it is peace it is joy and it is god so when you feel the need arise to be defensive about anything know that you have identified yourself with an illusion when you become defensive about something then it will be something that is conceptual you as a concept or some concept you hold that you need to defend because you have identified with it so you are defending your sense of self your fictitious sense of self that means you are defending an illusion when you don't defend because the truth of who you are does not mean to be defended so to let go of defenses can be a way of accessing the deeper dimension of who you are and of course takes you beyond ego because the defensiveness is ego ego is conceptual identity and then there is one short line here in my defenselessness my safety lies you are safe already so you don't need to defend anything that brings me to at the very beginning of the course in miracles before even page one there are a few lines that are supposed to summarize the entire course and they go like this nothing real can be threatened nothing unreal exists herein lies the peace of God that's the summary of the entire course and the course is about as long as the whole Bible, it's huge but it can summarize in these few words if you understand what that means you don't need to do the course you might still enjoy reading it but you don't need it nothing real can be threatened nothing unreal exists herein lies the peace of God herein meaning knowing this lies the peace of God I'll just let it be at that, I'm not going to interpret those lines, I believe it's their most powerful if you just let them sink in judgment judgment again the choice to judge rather than to know is the cause of the loss of peace the choice to judge rather than to know so judgment is applying concepts and then you have another dimension that Course in Miracles calls to know and it would Course in Miracles would say that the judgment is not real knowing it's the illusion of knowing and you want to go back to this dangerous activity again and again because this dangerous activity frees you while you're engaged in it from yourself but then of course the moment you come back to your ordinary activities the self re-emerges undoubtedly you are here as a person with a history, a historical person, and hopefully with a future how much future depends to some extent on your age, but who knows you never know, even a young person can suddenly disappear like a soap bubble so you undoubtedly your history that has made you into who you are but if for a moment you forget your history and pretend that there is no past you can do it now I say pretend the reality is there is no past but I don't want to say something that you find too hard to accept so I say pretend let's pretend that there is no past, why do I say there is no past? because you've never experienced the past, it was always the present moment whatever you remember from the past was the present moment when it happened otherwise it could not have happened and you can only remember it now, in this moment in the light of consciousness you remember something that you call the past let's pretend a moment you don't have it you don't have a past and the most dreadful thing let's pretend that also you don't have a future you don't have a past?

ok, I'm ok with that but don't take away my future because that's a dreadful thing if you went into a doctor's office and he says I'm afraid you have little future left so but let's pretend there is no past and no future, there is only this moment and you don't need to remember conceptually who you are why? no need to remember the self concept the image of who you are no past no future who are you? how do you perceive yourself?

how do you what does it feel like to be you in this moment without past and future, is there anything left of you in this moment without past and future which means without concepts which means without thoughts but not without consciousness is there anything left of you in this moment if you have no past and you have no future, who are you without past and future and you cannot answer that question because any answer would be a concept concept is from the past who are you? so the answer to who are you without past and future cannot be conceptual words, no the answer of who or what you are without past and future can only be a realization a moment of ah so who am I without past and future what does it feel like to be me without memory, without memorizing who I am and that's now you're getting there there is something that is we have to use words of course which distort it but there is a strange sense of presence of beingness, you know that you are but without adding you know who I am but you don't know what or who because that's conceptual the bare sense of beingness or presence is left when there is no past or future that's just a pure sense of beingness or presence at first it seems to be nothing and you cannot analyze it and it's very hard to talk about but you know there is there's something or you could even say there's just a spaciousness a space, perhaps that's what the Buddha meant when he talked about emptiness there is a spaciousness and that's and then if you if you're aware of that it tends to deepen sometimes for brief moments you can get it accidentally in certain situations in life brief moments of liberation from the self and you go perhaps you see something very beautiful and for a moment you're transported out of yourself there's just a pure perception against the background of awareness ah for a moment you are liberated from yourself or a dangerous activity that requires your absolute presence you can't be thinking about your problems or your life situation, you have to be absolutely totally there and you feel so much more alive and you want to go back to this dangerous activity again and again because this dangerous activity frees you while you're engaged in it from yourself but then of course the moment you you come back to your ordinary activities the self re-emerges oh I have to climb another mountain now and that's good and then going beyond the self and as you know I've often spoken about there's a huge desire in every human to become free of themselves they don't know, they cannot verbalize it, they wouldn't say it in this way but there's a huge desire, there's even a lot, there's an obscure fascination that humans have it's most fear but also a pull about the end of the world everybody is fascinated by stories of the end of the world is coming oh there's fear but there's also a kind of longing because the end of the world is also freedom from myself and there are no taxes anymore to pay and no exams and no worries about careers the end of the world especially if the world is making you unhappy the end of the world would be a great thing of course the world is largely in your mind so you don't need the end of the world to be free of yourself it'll happen soon enough but of course you can lower your level of consciousness so that you fall below thinking by drugs, taking drugs or alcohol in large amounts and they have the effect of pulling you below thinking which but they liberate you temporarily from yourself also not always but often they liberate you from yourself and you feel, that's why people feel happy when they drink not everybody some people get even more aggressive when they drink, that's another story we might go into another day many feel happy because they don't remember their problems and this is a this is also there are some humans who exist below the level of thinking which is the level of egoic the egoic mind and in the past they used to be called fools or idiots these words you must not use anymore nowadays people who live below thinking and these people don't have a problematic sense of self because they haven't arrived at that yet, it's like the dog the dog doesn't have a problematic sense of self what problems does the dog have?

self esteem self esteem do you have a problem with self esteem? do you have a weight problem? are you anxious about the future?

yes, my next meal I'm looking for but that's all once the meal is there, it's fine the fool is a mythical figure too in mythology and literature the fool can do things that highly developed humans cannot do more recent manifestations of that in fiction, for example the hobbit he's not highly intelligent most other people the hobbit interacts with are more intelligent than the hobbit, it's a simple creature and yet only he can do certain tasks because he's still more deeply connected with being with the source, has not developed a conceptual sense of self and does not inhabit a conceptual reality Forrest Gump the movie another character like that who does great things and is supported by life but doesn't claim credit because he has no ego yet hasn't arrived at it yet so you're not here to go that way we are not attempting to regress from the thinking mind and fall below thinking this is why this may be a good moment to mention it I discourage certainly excessive consumption of intoxicating beverages while you're here even any consumption of intoxicating or if English is not your native language I'm talking about alcohol if you cannot enjoy a meal without a glass of wine that's fine but two or three or four can greatly interfere with the arising of awareness or presence unless you're deeply rooted in it then it doesn't matter anymore but then you wouldn't want to drink a lot so that's something to be aware of here because it will pull you below thought and then you might think you're present and you might even convince somebody sitting next to you at dinner that you're enlightened so that's one thing that can pull you below thought and we don't want to be pulled below thought naturally you will go below thought every night when you become tired and you go to sleep you will feel yourself moving below thought and for that brief moment you're free of yourself also it's delicious to be tired at night and you're in bed the pull is very strong and there's a moment when there's a delicious feeling but you can't have it for very long and then you disappear and then another reality emerges, the dream world and then you're back in some other form and the problems continue another way of becoming addicted to a substance is and again this is important here cell phones and other similar devices it's a huge challenge humans have not realized yet how huge this challenge is of addiction to those devices so my recommendation is here if you want to take real advantage of this situation engage as little as possible with these devices perhaps briefly for 5-10 minutes a day if you have to and for the rest of the time don't even leave it in your room or your safe and if you carry it around the temptation may be too great you might not be able to resist and you know it's in your pocket and some of your attention will move there, wonder what's going on there and it might even still be beeping a message a Facebook post I wonder what they're saying, how many people liked my last post so you may find a certain withdrawal symptoms if you don't engage but that's okay just observe it and you can say oh isn't that interesting I can feel this wanting to get there but saying okay I can feel it but I'm not going there and then it'll dissipate how can we break the addiction to negative thinking and is there a way we can present this to our youth well negative thinking is a many egos love negative thinking because it strengthens the ego the pain body also is often involved in it because the pain body can either feed on other people's reactions towards you which the ego the pain body tries to provoke when it needs to replenish itself then it feeds on the drama or it can feed if there's nobody around on your thoughts negative every negative thought it gets in my life is so fucked up it's so god it's so dreadful can it get any worse or what these people they're so dreadful I just hate these people why is it always this stuff always happens to me doesn't it it's just bound to happen to me why can I never get things right why can they never get things right what he did to me I just can't forget that let me tell you about it what I did was so horrible so horrible I did that 20 years ago I did that I did that terrible thing god what's going to happen tomorrow what am I going to say if he says that what am I going to say then what if I lose that job I think I might get the sack soon I have a feeling that I'll be out in the street I can walk back to my mortgage what can I do what time is it 3am oh god oh and then there's that other thing god I don't think I can take anymore of this ok on one level there is an addiction to that there is something in you that does not want to let go of that type of thinking so in order to do anything about it if I say now mention what you can do about it it presupposes a at least a small degree of awareness while these thoughts happen there must be a small degree of awareness from which you are able to witness whatever is happening and notice that you are engaged in a stream of negative thinking and actually liking it not wanting to get out you can especially with anger which is another form of negative mental emotional state you can see how people if you are trying to say to an angry person would you like me to help you let go of this anger see what response you get in other words the person does not want to let go of the anger it loves that anger while the person is in its grasp it loves it's the ego the ego loves that anger because in an angry state the ego gets inflated and even an insignificant person in the eyes of the world who has no power in the world can suddenly start shouting and suddenly the ego grows and everybody goes like you see I'm all powerful sometimes you see people in the street they are going around shouting at everybody that's their ego trip because they have nothing else but for the ego even that works don't approach that person and say would you like to be in a peaceful state I can give you some advice so if I say that what you do about it, it presupposes that you know what's happening to you at that moment during that time so there needs to be some awareness and it's likely that it is there if you ask that question you are here so that means there is enough awareness in you while it happens to first of all notice that a part of you at least likes it not the awareness but if you are aware you realize there is something in me that does not want to get out of it if it's been going on for years even your sense of identity or an important part of your sense of identity is in that negative mental emotional state some people have it in the background almost all the time but they are unaware of it, it becomes part of their identity and these are people if you are very sensitive and sometimes you don't even need to be that sensitive when you meet a person like that you can sense in the background there is something waiting for the next thing to be angry about or as somebody once said a grievance looking for a cause now the internet is full of people like that they love going on there so the internet has given the ego a new way of expansion and anybody can go in there and express find a cause and then express their grievance so identity can be associated with that if there is awareness then you can notice while it happens that there is an enjoyment of that negative state then you can also be aware that the mind activity that is happening in you is futile and fulfills no useful purpose whatsoever and then you go hmm these thoughts, isn't that interesting, what is the purpose of these thoughts, does it change the world, do they change the world change anything or do they just drag me drag me into this hole more deeply there is a unconscious belief in the mind also if I complain enough about something even if it's only mentally but especially out loud if I complain enough it's going to change eventually that somehow it works if I just show how unhappy I am then God or the universe or somebody is going to do something about it so many adults believe what little children sometimes find when they become really unhappy and start screaming then they get attention by their parents what's wrong, before they didn't get any attention but when they go I want this and the mother father comes what's wrong, I want this no you can't have it I want this no ok here it is and now they've learned a very important lesson, their mind and that lesson is unhappiness works and if that is repeated many times in childhood, the adult still has that unconscious belief in their mind and so they enter periodically enter states of unhappiness in the unconscious belief that things are going to change if I'm really unhappy now it might work while you're a little child because your parents can't stand the screaming anymore so they give you what you want the adult some adults never figure out that unhappy states do not work when they're adults and they continue to practice what they learned as little children for the rest of their lives never realizing that it doesn't work laughter so the recognition that negative thinking and unhappy states actually do nothing to change anything, if anything they make it worse laughter so if there's enough awareness and you can suddenly look at that and then you can ask yourself from the point of, from the deeper perspective of awareness do I want to continue to think these thoughts is that helpful or good, do I really want that is it what is it doing what would it be how would I experience this situation without it so you can, as awareness comes in, choice comes in and then there are moments when you may be able to step out and just be present and the negative stream negative mental emotional stream subsides but it's not gone yet because you don't get rid of it that easily a few moments later another thought comes into your head and immediately a new train of negative thinking starts and you can feel the pull of it there it can be very very strong especially if it's been in your life for a long time you feel the pull of negative thinking come this way, this is so familiar this is where you belong this is who you are and then you need awareness so you can't fight the negative states because that's another negative state but you can be aware and see its futility and ultimately see also how that you are addicted to it but when you see it you're not completely addicted anymore you're only completely addicted when you don't see it when you see it you are the awareness when there's no awareness you are it and you are the ego and you are the addicted the ego that's addicted to unhappiness so it's important by the way as I just mentioned little children if you have a small child to give attention to the child not wait for the child to go into a screaming state or some other negative tantrum and then give the child attention but give the child attention at normal times and don't give excessive attention when there's the screaming and especially don't give the child something after you've said no you can't have that and if he or she just cries enough then finally you give it that's not a good lesson to teach, either you give it immediately or you don't give it and if you think it's bad for the child then of course it's better not to give but of course the parent gives it because he or she wants the crying to stop so you're ok oh dear you're teaching a very wrong lesson by recognizing that there is let's say irritation, anger or anxiety in you you are no longer completely identified with it whenever you are impatient trying to get somewhere waiting for something impatiently what's the next thing I have to do and I have to do that and you're pulled in all kinds of directions what's now, oh now I have to do that and there's always the pull towards the next thing that is I call that sometimes you lose yourself in doing doing is necessary obviously you need to do but to lose yourself in continuous doing is a serious dysfunction but it's so normal that nobody realizes it so if you lose yourself in the doing there's always another and this is how stress arises stress is the gap in the gap between now and later, the projected then, now and then in that gap arises the stress arises, so the mental projection towards future creates the stresses between I'm here but I want to be there and for many humans that is their predominant state, they are always they are here but they really want to be there either there in space or time it's amazing and even you awakening beings may still sometimes or often find yourself in that state where you suddenly realize that the whole day you've been stressed about this, that and that this is what makes so many demands upon you, you need to deal with this and this and this, amplified by the gadgets that we now use, which is an amplification of the dysfunction through this and you lose yourself in the doing you become completely uncentered and basically lost there are many it happens even to children already at an early age these days and many children are suffering from attention deficit disorder and so on, which means their mind is being pulled away from the present moment so lost in doing lost in doing really comes back to lost in thinking thinking underlies doing so you are lost in your thoughts about the world and then you engage in all kinds of activities propelled by thoughts that now I need to do this, now I need to do that so the basic condition still for most humans on the planet so fundamentally yes, they are lost in doing they lose themselves in doing but basically it means they are lost in their mind, in the movement of thought now, you identify then, they identify with every thought that arises many thoughts are about future or the past not that many thoughts are about the present moment and if they are about the present moment then it is an interpretation of the present moment that is completely determined and colored by your past conditioning so, very interesting to observe in oneself this tendency to deny devalue disregard reduce the present moment to a means to an end it's always a means to an end but it's never recognized for what it is in itself and often it is not it is more than a means to an end for many humans this is a very dysfunctional way of being for many humans the present moment is actually regarded unconsciously as an obstacle that they need to get beyond there is a continuous underlying unease and what's the next thing that's going to go wrong I know it's going to happen lost in the mind lost in thought there was an Indian teacher who described the essential human condition as lost in thought and of course that's how it is this is then this movement of thought gives you your sense of identity the unease the uneasy narrative the problematic narrative of me and my life I have to think about this when I wake up in the middle of the night and I carry this heavy burden of my problematic life for many humans their identity is unconsciously regarded as a problem to be solved I am a problem that I'm looking for a solution to this problem that I am and of course then you go to a therapist now if the therapist is good he might be able to take you beyond that depends if he or she is not good then you get more deeply entrenched and 15 years later you are still undergoing psychoanalysis and find ever deeper layers of complexity in your past and there's no end to it so the present moment is devalued not recognized regarded either as a means to an end or an obstacle that is for many humans that is their predominant state of mental emotional state and as I said their identity is derived from that so it's the error lies in identification with thought now the question arises who or what is it that identifies with thought if I am not the story that I tell myself about who I am if I am not ultimately that then who or what am I and what is it in me that identifies with the story what is it that creates this sense of identity that is mostly exists mostly in a state of unease or very often discontent because it cannot acknowledge the present moment that is the ego by the way that's what we call it the egoic sense of self there is a very simple spiritual practice to get you to the realization of who or what it is that identifies I suggest at this moment that observe yourself internally right now to see if there is any lingering emotion in you perhaps from earlier today or an hour ago or yesterday or the past two years or the past ten years can you feel for example is there an irritation somewhere is there some kind of anxiety is there kind of heaviness a certain heavy mood a despondent mood perhaps is it lingering there is there anger big thing some residue of anger from what happened earlier is that in you and then normally humans would say I am angry or they would say I am anxious, I am fearful I am in a bad mood now there is already a delusion when the moment you say I am angry or I am anxious that indicates already that you have identified with the emotion of anger or the emotion of sadness or the emotion of fear you have identified, you equate I with what arises in your field of consciousness so you say I am angry it would be more correct to say I am angry there is anger in me right now now it may sound a trivial difference between saying I am angry and there is anger in me but there is a significant difference which goes beyond mere syntax how you put words together because when you say I am you equate I with whatever condition is there in you this applies to emotion and it also applies to thought when because anger is often not just the anger as emotion, the anger also exists as angry thoughts and then they reinforce each other as a vicious circle when you are trapped in irritation or anger the emotion feeds the thought and the thought feeds more energy to the emotion it's a vicious circle and you don't want to get out of it you might notice when you observe an angry person or a despondent person or an anxious person they don't really want to be free of the anger they don't want their if you suggested to an angry person you can be free you will not get a pleasant answer and you've seen angry people they are in the grip of anger or irritation they cannot help it then they shout at you and then they leave the room and a minute later the door opens they come back because they thought of something else to insult you with they are in the grip of it there is complete identification with thought and emotion

they are lost[Speaker 1] (0:00 - 5:44)
In thought, they are lost in emotion, but who or what is it that is lost? If I am not the thoughts and the emotion, who or what am I? Okay, I just asked you to just have a look inside yourself and see what it is, if there's anything there that's jarring and doesn't feel good, but it's there.

And I'm not saying try to get rid of it, no. Acknowledge the present moment. The present moment is what is, externally or internally.

That's what is. But there's a huge difference now. You've already, by recognizing that there is, let's say, irritation, anger, or anxiety in you, an additional element or dimension has come in.

And that dimension, we could call awareness, or we could call it presence. And the moment awareness comes in, you are no longer completely identified with it. One could say, I sometimes describe it as, let's say, there's the anger, and as your awareness of the anger comes in, there's a little bit of space around it.

That's the awareness. The awareness knows that there's anger. The anger may still be there.

It may not immediately disappear, but the awareness knows it's there. Or whatever else it may be. The arising of awareness is spiritual awakening.

The disidentification that happens when awareness arises, that is the spiritual awakening, or the arising of the transcendent dimension of consciousness. Transcendent because it transcends who or what you are as a person. Yes, you are still a person.

You have your personality. You have your memories that hasn't changed. You still have a narrative in your mind, but you call it your life.

But it's no longer, there begins to be a shift. A shift from identifying with that which arises either on the level of thinking or on the level of the emotion, to identifying with or being the observing conscious presence. That is the awakening out of identification with form.

Thought forms, emotional forms. So this is where when you realize thought, thoughts that go through your mind in the unconscious state, the thought has you in its grip. The thought, you don't think in the unconscious state.

Thinking happens to you and you can't help it. The thinking mind does what it wants to do and you don't even know that there's anything other than the movement of thought in you because you're so in the grip of it that there's nothing beyond that. So every thought that arises becomes the truth for you.

It has you in its grasp. One way of putting it is you believe in every thought that comes into your head, no matter how crazy. That's something, that's how it is.

And then you, if you look on the internet where people communicate with each other on social media and so on, you can easily see how a person's opinion becomes their identity. Now, an opinion is no more than a form of thought, a movement of thought, a certain mental position. Opinion turns into identity and then, because opinion has turned into identity, anybody who has a different opinion becomes threatening to you because it's your identity, your sense of self.

It's a fiction, but this person becomes your enemy. Ha, ha. Ha, ha.

Ha, ha. Ha, ha. Ha, ha.

So when thought becomes identity, then anybody who questions the thought that you had identified with is the enemy. And that's a deeply unconscious thing for human beings to be trapped in, a very unconscious state, and it wreaks havoc on the planet because it also happens collectively. Identities, there's a collective identity too in groups of people, nations, tribes, religions, or movements within religions and so on.

So to free yourself from that, that is spiritual awakening.

[Speaker 13] (5:46 - 6:13)
And then you can contemplate with detachment what time is doing to your body, okay?

[Speaker 1] (6:15 - 19:23)

Because your sense of identity is no longer derived from body, who you are, obviously. That's sometimes a difficult step to take, to go deeper beyond. There are some people who have a particularly, body that is more beautiful or more well-developed than normal bodies.

Normal bodies are kind of, well, I'm not sure. And then there are other bodies that are definitely not great. You can't, but people to still identify, it makes them unhappy.

For many years, I had body identification too, but not in a proud way. It made me unhappy because it was less, much less good looking than other, most other bodies, actually. And so if you have body identification, it can either, it can create pride and enhance your ego.

Well, any identification enhances your ego, even a negative one. So I had body, negative body identification made me unhappy for quite a few years. And that's also ego.

The ego, the negative profile of ego. The egos are not always happy egos. Many egos are miserable egos, just as strong as the happy ones that say, I am the greatest.

And then the other ego, I'm the most miserable, just as strong as the other. So ego is not just, hey, look at me. What's the egos?

Oh no. Why is all these horrible things always happening to me? I feel so miserable.

I'm not, it's all still egos and narratives. So anyway, I had ego identification, but I could see perhaps a little bit easier for if you have a negative identification with the body, it's perhaps easier to let go because you're more motivated to let go of that. But if you have a positive body identification, very good looking, whether man or woman or strengths.

If you look like Arnold in his younger years, how can you not identify with your body if your body looks just like, just coming, just like some ancient Greek god or something. Like, and so, or you're very beautiful. And every time you look in the mirror, you see how beautiful you are.

And you continuously, these days you continuously post images of yourself into the world. Look at me, look at me, look at me. And you have thousands of people who love you.

They send love signs. Me, me. And so many people have this, their strongest identification is with body and the rest, the psychological entities come secondary.

That's also ego, of course, but psychological entity, whatever they are on the level of their personality, it becomes secondary or whatever, what they have achieved becomes even secondary. But the body figures so prominently in their sense of identity. That goes on for years.

When I was in my 20s, and if somebody had asked me, if some god had come down and asked and said to me, I offer you a deal. I take away, I'll give you a great body like Arnold, or well, not, it doesn't have to be that extreme, but just a good looking body. Well, some would say Arnold is a bit, going over the top a bit, that's a bit, but just a beautiful.

I would have that, but we have to give up 20 years of your life. You are 20 years younger, but I'll give you a great body that you can enjoy for a few decades. For three decades, you can enjoy this.

I would have said, it's a deal. And I would be dead now. I wouldn't be here.

I would have enjoyed perhaps ego satisfaction during those years and sensory satisfaction through countless physical encounters with women. And would have exhausted myself. And would have died young as predicted by the god who came.

We were walking, or I was walking on a waterfront, I believe in Sydney, Australia. It was a lovely day. I believe it was perhaps a Sunday morning and not excessively hot, just a very pleasant temperature.

Everybody was enjoying themselves. And then I saw one man walking without a shirt on, just bare. And he had a fantastic body and everybody's kind of looking at him.

And I thought it's strange that he was the only person who felt too hot, he had to take off his shirt. Strange. And then comes a time, the time that eventually becomes your enemy, when you'd say you have, for years you identified with your good looks and then after a while you realize the same thing is happening to you.

It just takes decades. That's happening if you put a fresh apple on your windowsill and wait a few weeks and see what happens to the apple that you leave there. It kind of shrinks and becomes, it develops.

It goes. Before it looked. After a few weeks, the apple shrinks and it's old, an old apple.

It happens to all life forms and that can become a source of great suffering. There is still time for you when this suffering sets in, you realize you're no longer beautiful because old age is eroding your beauty. And then when you compare yourself to younger humans, you begin to feel inferior and to get resentful.

Look how he's young. And you feel diminished and that's painful. So many humans who are identified with bodies, as they get older, they move into a period of unhappiness, increasing unhappiness, unless they can break through that and go to a deeper level.

Some can, some cannot. It's, I would advise to go to that deeper level before the time starts to erode you as soon as possible. But there's always a chance to go there.

So at the latest, shortly before you die, I would hope. But for many people when they reach old age, the patterns are so deep seated that are associated with the ego identity. They're so, they have become so rigid and so deep seated that they get trapped in them.

There's nothing you can do. We've all met old people like that. Instead, old age is meant to be a flowering of consciousness.

When the body begins to dissolve, something else emerges and it can be a beautiful thing. In many other cases, this does not happen. And we've all met old people who are cranky and angry.

Your grandfather, perhaps. You're still in all that spiritual nonsense. Are you still doing that?

It's all rubbish, obviously. I know it all. I've seen it all.

And I have an opinion about everything. I know everything. And it's all dreadful.

They're all idiots, all of them. And then it dies. My God.

So no matter where you are at in the movement of time, this moment is the best moment to step out of the movement of time and take your attention into the timeless so that you learn to be connected with that consciously for the rest of your life in this form. What is this thing that you cannot doubt? You say, I cannot doubt that I'm conscious because if I were not conscious, I wouldn't experience anything, whether it's a dream or not, it's secondary.

Even to dream something, there needs to be a consciousness that is experiencing the dream. So there's a consciousness that's experiencing this world, I am that.

[Speaker 3] (19:24 - 19:30)
Now, this is a very subtle and simple thing.

[Speaker 1] (19:31 - 19:32)
Very subtle, very simple.

[Speaker 3] (19:34 - 19:54)
Can you be conscious right now of the fact that you are conscious? And you cannot do that by thinking about it.

[Speaker 1] (19:56 - 20:47)
That is an obstacle to that realization. You can only become conscious, that you're conscious by letting go of thought. You don't, just for a moment, let go of thought.

And what is it that remains of you when you let go of thought, but you haven't fallen asleep at all, but you've let go of thought? What is it that remains of you when you're not thinking? You're not thinking about the world and you're not thinking about yourself.

You're not thinking. Just a gap between two thoughts. The gap opens up.

[Speaker 3] (20:53 - 20:59)
And in that gap, you know that you are.

[Speaker 1] (21:01 - 26:14)
You don't know how you know it, but you know that there is a presence and you are that conscious presence. You know that. I'm already putting it into words, but the knowing is beyond words.

You know that you are this presence. Now, you know that you are this presence, so you know, but you don't know anything else about this presence. There's nothing to know about this presence.

And you don't know it in the same way that you know a table or a dog or another human. That's not how you know this presence. You know the presence in you knows itself.

You can sense your own consciousness. The consciousness knows itself. It's not an object, it's a subject.

So another way of putting it is you realize that you are. And the realize that you are, I wouldn't say that you exist. That's a different term.

Some philosopher and some spiritual teachers might use that term, but I would prefer not to say exist because to exist is to stand out, to be some particular thing. You exist as a person, you exist. Ex means out.

Ex is from Latin to stand, to stand out. Something that exists is manifested. That's why it exists.

It stands out. But this is prior to existence. The person that you are temporarily exists.

But prior to this person, there is a timeless dimension of pure being or consciousness where all you can say about yourself is, I am, if you want to say anything. And you wouldn't add anything to the I am. It's the realization of being between two thoughts.

You can sense it. It's nothing to do with intellect or thinking. You don't need a high IQ.

It doesn't matter whether your IQ is high or low, whether you're educated or uneducated. You can sense this beyond what your personal history is, whether you're an abject failure in the eyes of the world or you're the greatest thing that ever happened, the greatest VIP that ever happened in the world makes no difference to this realization. This is the essence realization and it's very, very simple.

That's the kingdom of heaven that Jesus was talking about, that you cannot say, oh, it's over here or it's over there. You cannot, it's not an object. It's the subject, the eternal subject.

So for a moment, and you don't need to say, okay, I'm going to meditate on it. You don't even need to meditate. Meditation is wonderful for those who practice it.

But this realization can be there at any moment. Like now, when you become conscious that you are conscious and beyond that, you don't know much, you don't know anything, but you have gone deeper into yourself and you have touched a deeper dimension out of which all those things that can transform your life into something benevolent and fruitful emerge. They emerge from that deeper dimension of being itself or consciousness itself.

Now, what are those things that make your life into something benevolent, your contribution to life into something benevolent and fruitful and even joyful? Those things are creativity, creative insights. They come from the deeper place of the unconditioned consciousness.

So in other words, in order to be creative, you have to have some access to that dimension that is beyond thinking. Then perhaps the creative impulse comes. This is the evolution, the evolutionary process, your evolution and the evolution of this planet and life on this planet and the evolution of the universe, a single phenomenon.

Your evolution is part of the evolution of the universe, the evolution of consciousness. And that comes, these are vast subjects.

[Speaker 3] (26:15 - 26:19)
Each segment of this one could talk about for many hours.

[Speaker 1] (26:21 - 28:50)
When you, in order to have access to any kind of creative spark in your life, you have to have some access to that essence dimension, the light of consciousness, even if it's only brief. For a moment, the writers, the artists, or even the scientists or the business persons, for a moment, their mind stops, but they remain acutely alert and present. And then the mind starts again, and then their ability to bring some creative solution to whatever situation they encounter has suddenly increased dramatically.

Another way of putting that is you could, another thing that emanates from there and is inseparable from what I just called creativity is a term that's rarely used these days, but it's of extraordinary importance. If we don't, the world, if more humans do not find that in this world, then the evolutionary process is going to get much more difficult, but eventually it'll be fine. Wisdom, wisdom.

If you cannot find, if humans cannot find that dimension, then where does it emanate? That same place, wisdom emanates from that deeper place of presence, awareness, the light of consciousness. It comes from there.

The modern world doesn't even know what to do with wisdom, but I don't know. It's unlikely that you'll ever hear wisdom anywhere on CNN or Fox News or New York Times. Probably they don't talk about wisdom.

What is that wisdom? It's not intelligence, it's how to use the mind. The mind is, you can have very developed mind, but no wisdom.

[Speaker 3] (28:51 - 28:53)
That's very dangerous.

[Speaker 1] (28:54 - 33:04)
The more developed your mind becomes, which means your mind is separated. You can see, it sees isolated problems and tries to tackle isolated problems here and there. This is the problem, and this is what we need to do to solve this problem.

And at first it looks great, but because there's lack of wisdom, they have not looked at the problem in its totality. And so you have completely ignored the repercussions of what you're going to do to solve this problem because you focused only on this problem. But what are the repercussions of the action that you took to solve this problem?

You have not looked at the totality. And why have you not looked at the totality? Because you are trapped in your mind.

The mind can only focus on the particular. It cannot see the whole. Wisdom can see the whole, but in order to see the whole of a situation, for a moment, you need to come to a cessation of thinking and so that you have an awareness.

And then you look at the awareness, the awareness looks at the problem. And then you suddenly see things, first non-conceptually, you see how everything is interrelated. And then you see, if I do this, the repercussions will be that.

This is many times the world, the action taken to solve a problem, and this is important because the number of problems that we are facing collectively is increasing. We need wisdom to solve. If without wisdom, every action we take to solve a particular problem will actually make it worse.

Even if it solves that problem, it will have created two or three or four other even bigger problems. So wisdom is of extraordinary importance and wisdom emanates from that place of the realization of yourself as that spacious space, that space of awareness, of presence. Thought subsides.

So it's not only creativity and wisdom that emanate from that place. All the things that make, as I said before, all the things that make life fruitful and make you into a benevolent human being, what also emanates from there is empathy, empathy with other humans, empathy with other life forms, the ability to have compassion emanates. Because you're no longer trapped in your exclusive personal sense of identity, you cannot have empathy and compassion.

When you are trapped in this personally, exclusively personal sense of self, then all you need to do is protect this ultimately fictitious identity. And anybody who is engaged in protecting or enhancing and attempting to enhance this ultimately fictitious identity, this person cannot have empathy, cannot have compassion. It's not impossible no matter what, no matter how many religious books they read, they can't.

So it's empathy, compassion, and ultimately love. Love, which is, of course, these are all connected. They are, one could almost say, they are aspects of the realization of being, of your essence identity.

[Speaker 3] (33:04 - 33:18)
So they are enhanced creativity, wisdom, empathy, compassion, and ultimately love.

[Speaker 1] (33:19 - 45:19)
Now, love not in the conventional sense, which is egoic, which says, I want you and I need you. Don't you dare leave me. And don't you dare disappoint me or betray me.

And I'll get really angry. Not that kind of love, but a love that comes from the realization of being. When you realize yourself as the light of consciousness, you can sense that same light in every other being, even beyond their personality.

The personality may be, even if the personality is obnoxious, as many personalities are, even if the person is very difficult and many people, you might have experienced that many people are difficult. In fact, for many humans, their main problems in life come from other people. So people are very difficult and many personalities are obnoxious.

And yet there, even there, yes, you don't, you see the personality and the conditioned entity, but beyond the personality and the conditioned entity, you can sense the same beingness that you sense in yourself. There's a light of consciousness in every human, even if it might be veiled, heavily veiled, concealed by condition, heavy conditioning. And in some people, I must admit, the light is very deeply hidden, very deeply in some, in others, less deeply hidden.

And in many, the light shines, even periodically, sometimes it shines through more and then it's obscured again. There are other humans where it's so hidden that it might be even hard to sense it, but you can, if you sense it deeply within yourself, you can even, you can, and I have experienced occasionally in my life, meeting very difficult people, including, okay, on various occasions, mentally disturbed people, meeting them and for a moment sensing their consciousness by sensing my consciousness, it's the same consciousness, sensing that, and for a moment I've experienced, I'm not going into detail here, a deeply disturbed person for a few minutes, suddenly becoming extremely present and conscious, totally freed of their paranoid, in this case, paranoid delusions, completely free suddenly, less if the heavy clouds had suddenly parted. So there's a healing effect that you can have on other people, never in the sense that you have some kind of egoic identity that says, I'm going to heal the world, that's not how it works. Or then you meet somebody and immediately you tell everybody what's wrong with them and says, but I can heal you, that's all ego, so don't need to go there.

You're not doing anything. As the Course in Miracles says, a healer does not heal, he lets healing be. He lets healing be.

And so, and be is kind of the key word here because that's how it happens to the realization of being, the realization of consciousness. And so then, that the essence then is this realization, then the way in which you meet or face the problems of this world, the difficulties of this world, whether they be of a personal or collective nature, changes, which means your entire reality changes because your reality is not what happens to you ultimately. That's not your reality.

Your reality is how you react or how you face the state of consciousness with which you face what's happening around you. So far, my iPhone has not become conscious. Every day I look at it and say, no, not yet.

Last question. Many scientists believe we will soon create machines which can think far more powerfully than humans. Is it possible that such machines could become self-aware and develop consciousness?

And if so, could a spiritual machine arise or can such properties exist only through a biological substrate that takes us into science fiction? A very fundamental question that mainstream science has an answer for that, but I believe a change will come. The origin of consciousness.

Is consciousness an epiphenomenon? If you don't like that word, let's use by-product. Is consciousness a by-product of the physical brain or in other words, is consciousness created by the material brain or is consciousness ultimately independent of the brain and only manifests in a particular way, through the biological brain in the same way that a radio receiver does not produce the radio program, but it receives it and then it gives it a particular form and so we can receive it through it. It's a medium for transmitting consciousness, but the consciousness does not originate in the radio receiver.

And as I've already dwelt for two minutes on this particular image of radio receiver, you see what I believe to be the case that the consciousness is not produced by the brain, but it uses the brain, but that's up to you. It's not ultimately decisive what you believe here. Is it possible that machine achieve such complexity that they can become vehicles for consciousness?

If the brain does not produce consciousness, which I believe we are going to realize soon, even in the mainstream, if the brain does not produce consciousness, but is a conduit for consciousness, is it possible that machines, they would have to become incredibly complex because even our most complex computers are very primitive compared to the brain. If they ever achieve such complexity that they become capable of transmitting consciousness, it is conceivable, or there could be a symbiosis, but being biological and non-biological, as we've seen in some movies, biological and non-biological and become a semi-biological computer. And so, yes, of course, there can be all kinds of things.

The universe is infinite in its capacity for creating new forms. And it's well possible that it could create, through humans, another life form that is capable, not of producing consciousness, but of receiving consciousness. So, so far, my iPhone has not become conscious.

Every day I look at it and say, no, not yet. All right. Although sometimes it looks as if it had a mind of its own, as the expression goes.

This one could talk about for much longer, but it would also be interesting to write spiritual science fiction. Some of it exists already. Some episodes of Star Trek, The Next Generation, have a strong spiritual, as you can see, I'm a fan, have a strong element of spirituality to them.

I even played with the idea of showing an episode of Star Trek, Next Generation here, but we may not do it this time. Just present, just a space of presence.

There's nobody in particular here, not a person, just points of presence.

All expressions of the one consciousness manifesting as little points of light, which sometimes mistake themselves as persons. They flicker for a moment and then they die down and another one arises. That's you, the light of consciousness.

You are that, and then it withdraws and then the body goes, gone. And then it comes again. Wonderful.

My question is around the issue of psychiatric medications and awakening. We have talked about this issue on ETT Forum. It is an issue in my life situation and the life situation of many others on the Forum.

Some believe they need to go off their medications to awaken and others say without the medication they would not have enough clarity to even begin to bring presence in their lives. My question is, can a person take psychiatric medication and still awaken? Will psychiatric medication hold a person back or slow down the awakening process?

Thank you. Thank you.

[Speaker 1] (46:52 - 46:58)
May I ask a personal question? Are you on medication?

[Speaker 11] (46:59 - 46:59)
Yes.

[Speaker 1] (47:00 - 58:34)
But you're also here. That is already part of the answer because for you to be here, there must be some inner recognition of awareness. And so despite whatever the medication is or whatever the condition, your condition is, there is an arising of awareness.

So it's easier for me to answer this question because you are standing there than an abstract question. You are living proof. I'm not saying necessarily you don't experience periods when you are taken over by whatever patterns there are in the mind, but there is an opening into awareness, which is not the case with many people who are not on medication or who are considered normal.

They are not standing here. Many of them are not and wouldn't be. In them, there is no opening.

So one cannot say categorically under this or that condition, awareness cannot arise, awakening cannot happen. As a general rule, before anybody seeks help of that kind, I would advise to explore other possibilities. If you wish to gradually become free of medication, which in many cases can obscure the awareness that wants to arise, you would need to do it with a physician who is relatively conscious.

There are some. There may be a twofold question. One question is, with medication, is awareness able to come through?

And of course, that depends what kind of medication or what period of time and other factors. But in some cases, I believe it is. In other cases, it's not, but it can obscure the awareness.

The other question is a certain mental, what is diagnosed as mental illness, can awareness arise there? And again, that depends on the nature of the illness. Sometimes in the West, shifts in consciousness are misinterpreted.

If they happen suddenly, they can be misinterpreted and misdiagnosed by a physician. And Western physicians, because they're conditioned by the Western system, have no idea of shifts in consciousness. It's not part of the medical model.

There are no shifts in consciousness in psychiatry. So you can either, you're normal, but normal, of course, is insane, but they don't know that. Or you're ill, you're diseased, the mind is ill.

And there are people who are put on medication, unfortunately, children sometimes in increasing numbers, in whom there may simply be a change in consciousness happening. There are children who, for the most absurd reasons, are put on medication just to keep them quiet. And people like who in India, Ramana Maharshi, the Indian sage who, when he was 17, 16 or 17, suddenly did something that in the West would have been regarded as a sign of severe mental illness.

He left his home, he went to, took a train, and he sat down by a temple and stopped doing anything, didn't even put food in his mouth, just sat. And of course, in the West, they would have put him away. And in India, they respected it and allowed him to sit there and fed him as people came.

And after a few years, he started to speak again. And it turned out that he was awakened, he had awakened. But the shift was so sudden that he became dysfunctional for a while, from a normal viewpoint, became dysfunctional, couldn't operate anymore in the world.

So this can happen to people sometimes, and it's totally misinterpreted. So often, what is called medical psychiatric illness, not always, can be a misdiagnosed shift in consciousness. At other times, there is actually a condition there with which it would be very difficult to live.

Many types of so-called schizophrenia. Schizophrenia is a huge term which can be applied if you don't know what exactly is wrong, you call it schizophrenia, it's almost like that. The same way in a physical body, it's a viral infection.

They don't really know, but this is a term that covers a lot of things. It's a viral infection. Oh, now I know what it is.

And then schizophrenia, now I know what it is. In many cases, it is true that in mental illness, the very cause of the illness can be total identification with certain mental movements. Lack of awareness.

I've had limited success when I worked with people one-on-one some years ago. I had some people who had forms of schizophrenia who came to see me who were on medication. And by sitting with them and pointing to the possibility of awareness, they were able to become free and eventually also become free of the medication.

For example, I remember one case, a woman came to see me who had severe auditory hallucinations, so-called voices. And again, we don't even know whether the entities actually are talking to her. That's possible, but it really comes to the same thing, whether it's thoughts in her head that take the form of a voice that she hears.

The voice tells her to do something. It's very insistent, or several voices sometimes, very insistent, telling her to do this, do that. And enormous energy behind that voice.

And the way I approached it was to point out the possibility of not giving, not paying attention to the content of what the voice says, but simply to be aware that there is a voice speaking and that it is a voice in the head. It is a thought. I called it a thought.

Maybe it's something else, but it comes to the same thing. It's a thought. It's a voice.

Whatever it says, there's a voice. Be the awareness for the voice. Don't fight it.

Be the awareness so that the voice, you don't do what the voice says because you disregard the content. So if the voice says, you are God, say thank you, there's a voice again. If the voice says, you are the devil, thank you, there's the voice again.

You are the awareness for the voice. Disregard the content. Then gradually, the voice lost its power because she disregarded the content of the voice.

Awareness grew. So ultimately, the healing in any case is awareness. So awareness can arise in the strangest circumstances.

And to people, you would never have predicted could arise to, and that includes even people who have a so-called psychiatric disorder or who are on medication. It can happen. Nobody can categorically say that it cannot happen.

In some cases, those people are closer than normal people. As you know, there was a movement in psychiatry in the 60s and 70s where they, some, it was called anti-psychiatry, where it was recognized that often psychiatric conditions are really something else. So it's really, it is simple in your case, that obviously, despite the medication, you are here and something, a shift is happening inside you.

Nothing can stand against the power of awareness ultimately because the power of awareness is the power of the evolution of the universe itself. So nothing really that it will, it seeks the slightest opening and it can come through that. So I would say that trust, that as it's happening, it will continue to happen for you.

And there may be a point when with help, the medication won't be needed anymore as awareness grows, but you need somebody who is conscious to help you with that, a physician who is conscious to help you with that. It's wonderful to see that it is working.

It's helped that I've disidentified from it.

[Speaker 1] (58:42 - 58:42)
Yes.

[Speaker 11] (58:43 - 58:44)
And I'm able to be the witness.

[Speaker 1] (58:45 - 58:47)
Yes, that's the power.

[Speaker 11] (58:47 - 58:51)
It's been, my symptoms, less power over me.

[Speaker 1] (58:51 - 58:52)
Yes.

[Speaker 11] (58:52 - 58:54)

And knowing that I'm not that.

[Speaker 1] (58:56 - 1:29:48)
That's right. So that's the key, to be the witness, to be the awareness for whatever it is. It's wonderful.

So I'm very grateful. I'm glad you asked the question and I'm sure there'll be many people who are in a similar position, have the same question. So yes, it is possible.

It is possible. Thanks. Thank you.

Thanks. So to completely rest within yourself, completely come to, the doing needs to come to a stop, but you cannot make that stopping into a doing because then, okay, I need to stop my doing mode. That's more doing.

Can you speak about how to be in this world with this constant push for connectivity on the internet without feeling that being present is another thing to do? You can make a list of things to do, answer emails, check Facebook, make these four or five phone calls, write the report. Call your stockbroker, therapist, whatever.

And number seven, be present. Yes, it's a good question. The being present isn't something, although sometimes when we talk about it, it sounds as if it were something that you do in the same way that when people meditate, many of you probably have a meditation practice and there's that sense that, okay, now I have to do my meditation.

It might even be on your list of things to do. But the very idea that you are now doing a meditation can be an obstacle to doing an actually effective meditation because you're still doing something. And so even while you sit and you, whatever the technique is, it could be that there's still that sense of doing.

And even there could even be a remnants of stress there because you're doing, but you also know that there are many other things that you still have to do, but now you really have to do this meditation. I'm doing it. Don't disturb me, I'm doing it.

I'm trying to do a meditation, I'm trying, but I have so much on my plate too. So the very sense that you're doing something can be the obstacle because we could say that meditation or being present is the realization of being that's always already there, but just not realized. So it's not doing at all.

It's the other dimension in which there's no doing, but there's being, and that is the fundamental dimension. Ultimately, there can be no doing without being. Being is the unconditioned consciousness.

So to completely rest within yourself, completely come to, the doing needs to come to a stop, but you cannot make that stopping into a doing because then, okay, I need to stop my doing mode. That's more doing. But if your approach is just be with what is, completely, nothing to do, nothing to achieve, nowhere to go, just being here, aware, aware of whatever appears in that space of awareness, and if possible, and it is possible, aware that you are aware.

That's it. So there's no doing. So you've gone into being, realized being.

It was always there and is always there. It's just overlooked continuously because of a certain state of consciousness in which the thinking mode has become so overwhelming that you have lost touch with the deeper dimension within yourself.

Now, when I say lost touch, does that imply that once you, when I say you, I mean humanity or you, does it mean that once you were in touch with that dimension, perhaps you were in touch with that as a baby until you started to think?

But you went, if that is the case, you were in touch with it unconsciously, didn't know it, it was a natural state. But it seems that if you go back into prehistory, humanity, they, many, many, in many, many traditions and ancient civilizations, there is a myth of the golden age. Once we had that.

In the Old Testament, it's written of as paradise or the garden of Eden. And there are other myths from different parts of the world, including India and so on, of the myth of a very distant past when the suffering wasn't there. The unhappiness wasn't there.

It was the golden age. It's just, is that just a story, a wishful thing? Or is it something, some very distant memory of a different state of consciousness?

And I would suggest that it is a very distant memory of something that we kind of lost, that's not absolutely correct word. But it does not mean that those ancient humans in prehistory necessarily, well, we know very little about anything that goes beyond 3000 years ago, but, and that's little. But it seems that humans lived in connectedness with a source because the mind had not yet, either not yet started up, started to produce thoughts or only very rudimentary thoughts.

And they were still able to rest in the being. In the same way that a cat or a dog, I'm using those two because many of you have observed them because you have lived with them. Many of you have lived with them.

When they rest, they rest completely. And you can become, if you contemplate a cat at rest, it can help you to actually become still. Or a dog, let's say, go completely, even if they're not asleep yet, they're just...

Some years ago, I saw a movie, I think it was called 1,000,000 Years B.C. It's just a ridiculous, ridiculous title, as if 2000 years made a difference in 1,000,000 years. But it was called 1,000,000 Years B.C. And you saw these transitional beings between animal and human. They were already walking and they had certain, already producing certain sounds, but not yet words, or just very rudimentary sounds that were beginning to represent things.

And then they got into a fight between two tribes, still making partly animal-like sounds. And then the fight comes to an end, a few get killed. And in the evening, they sit around the fire, and it's done very well.

I don't know if the rest of the movie is any good, but I just remember that particular scene. They sit around the fire. They have already discovered how to make fire.

That's an amazing thing. And they sit around the fire, and instead of talking, because they haven't got language about what just happened an hour ago, they just sit and they're completely just at rest. They sit around the fire and they all go, hmm, hmm, hmm, hmm, hmm, hmm, hmm, hmm, hmm.

No nervous excitement left, because it's not being kept alive by the mind and the memory. They're rooted, again, they're returned, they're rooted in being. And that's the, so every animal is more deeply connected.

It's still a deeper connection with being, but it's an unconscious connection. It doesn't know anything else. It's a natural state.

And it's quite likely that humans once had that in their evolutionary journey. And then they started to think, which wasn't a bad thing. It was an amazing thing that they began to think that was just associated with the creation of language, of course, also.

And that's an amazing thing. When they discovered they could produce certain sounds to represent things, amazing. And then they could produce sounds to represent activities.

And then they began to realize they were having these sounds in their head, too, that not, they were beginning to hear thoughts in their head. And some anthropologists believe that, not everybody agrees, they believe that at that time, humans mistook the arising thoughts as gods talking to them. So they heard their own thoughts and said, oh, what do you want me to do?

Kill that neighboring tribe. Okay, we must kill them. And then perhaps the first time, a few humans experienced sleepless nights.

And that was just the beginning. But an amazing, it was an amazing evolutionary step forward. In all this entire civilization, many civilizations arose out of that amazing thing.

But there was a huge price to pay. There's always a price to pay in this world of opposites. There was a huge price to pay for that.

And we all know what that is. It's loss of connectedness with the source. You are alienated from the source, unhappy.

People spend years trying to figure out what Zen is all about in monasteries and still can't figure it out. And this Zen master says, doing one thing at a time. Is that it?

Yes. Well, that stops your mind. Another question here about daily life.

Those are very useful questions to everybody. They're basically everybody's question. How do you balance just being on a moment-to-moment basis all the time with having to make a living and paying bills?

That has been the only difficult part for me. How do you balance just being on a moment-to-moment basis all the time? All the time.

With having to make a living and paying bills, that has been the only difficult part for me. Yes. In other words, how do you balance or bring together being and doing?

Otherwise, you can only experience presence and being when you're sitting absolutely still or you're not being disturbed by anything. That's fine too. At least you have it then.

But it's not enough. So yes, you rightly say, the question is a good one. How do you balance that with paying bills and so on?

In other words, activity in daily life. How can you have that awareness in your daily activities rather than lose yourself in the doing? Well, as a practice, any practice that we now talk about presupposes that there is a minimum of presence in you, because without that, you can't practice.

If there's a minimum of presence in you in any situation, then there's something that you can do. And a minimum of presence or awareness means you're not totally lost, but you can be aware at the beginning of an activity so that you don't get drawn into it totally that you lose yourself in it. And usually it means the future becomes more important than the present moment.

That means you're becoming lost in doing. That's a good indicator. The future moment becomes more important than this moment.

And you need to deal with that. So as a conscious practice, you can do, what do I need to do now? Okay, well, you mentioned paying bills and having to make a living, whatever it is that you do.

The present moment, is it a means to an end for you, or are you honoring the doing in this moment so that it is not primarily a means to an end? Are you trying to get to the future moment more than you want to be in the present moment? That's usually the case with unconscious living.

And usually people are stressed because of that continuous movement of the pull of future, which is no more than the pull of a thought of future, because there is no future out there. I've never seen it. So the future is the thought of future.

So you can, the balance between being and doing is done by being present in the doing, by giving your fullest attention to the doing, rather than believing that you need to get to the end of the doing. Give your fullest attention to whatever your activity is, in your daily activities. Don't make it a means to an end that includes any human interaction.

Low quality human interaction, we've all experienced that. Low quality human interaction is when you meet a human being who is treating you as a means to an end. And so you become reduced to, if you see somebody in a restaurant, you become reduced to a customer.

And so he's not a human being. If you see a doctor, you become reduced to a patient. He doesn't see you, unless he's aware, or she doesn't see you.

You become a patient. You become reduced and only wants to get it over and done with. The person who's trying to sell you something, to this person, you are a means to an end.

He wants to, he or she wants to get to the future moment where the sale is completed. If you refuse to go along with it, and you're not going to buy what he's offering, he's going to be in a negative state. And the negative state in him is already present, even while he's talking to you and still wanting you to sell something, because there's a strong desire for you to finally come to the end of it already.

He's using you as a means to an end, so that he can get to the future moment where he thinks he needs to be. And you can feel that, this is not a high-quality human interaction. And a lot of interaction between humans in our society is of that kind, because they are all just wanting to use the other in their desire, compulsion, compulsive desire, to arrive at the future point where they need to be.

So life gets reduced to something unpleasant, superficial. Nobody is really, nobody is here. They're not, they're not there.

So instead of demanding that these people should change, of course it needs to start with you. Don't make this moment into a means to an end, because it's precious. It's all you ever have.

And whatever appears in this moment is precious. It's the form that this moment takes. So if you're with another human being, it's a precious moment.

It's the form that this moment takes. Don't make it into a means to an end. Honor the form of this moment.

Honor this moment. So if you're dealing with another human being, let's say in business, you're honoring this moment. You're honoring this human being.

You give, in other words, you give this moment your fullest attention. You give the other human being who happens to be there at this moment your fullest attention. Your attention isn't 50, 60, 70 percent in the future where you want to be.

No, it's here completely. And then you, if you are a waiter, you will see that your tips increase a hundredfold if you give every guest your fullest attention and not treat them as a means to an end. If you're a salesman, you'll be extremely successful because the people will love you because everybody loves to be given fullest attention.

So you realize the second, it's second, the situation that every life situation is secondary. Whatever it consists of is secondary. Primary is your practice of presence, of attention, of awareness.

So you use whatever life gives you to do, bring that element of attention to it, of aware presence, and do it with infused, the doing becomes infused with presence. And it shifts. If you think, if you thought your job was boring, well, there was most likely not, not enough presence in the doing.

Even menial jobs, you can become transformed through presence. I have occasionally witnessed, not very often, people at a toll booth where cars stop every few seconds, a car stops and they say, two dollars please. Now, one would think that's not an interesting job where you can be present, but very rarely, once or twice in my life, I have seen somebody there who emanated awareness or presence and everybody was, everybody who stopped there, every driver, was given fullest attention in that moment.

The words didn't matter, thank you, two dollars, thank you, have a nice day. But the energy behind it, again, what we said earlier, situations are secondary, whatever happens. They're all, so treat your whole life as an excuse, whatever situation arises, it's an opportunity for bringing the dimension of presence or awareness in.

Don't believe that the situation is what absolutely matters. What absolutely matters is your state of consciousness, secondary is what you do. In other words, who you are or what you are, the state of consciousness is primary.

The doing flows out of the being. It's a practice, daily life is spiritual practice. One way of talking about what is Zen, one Zen master simply defined Zen as doing one thing at a time.

That's Zen. You can't get a more simpler definition than that of people spend years trying to figure out what Zen is all about in monasteries and still can't figure it out. And this Zen master says, doing one thing at a time.

Is that it? Yes. Well, that stops your mind.

And then what's left, what's left for you to do is doing one thing at a time. Not be over there, but be here, be present in the doing. And already you are practicing presence, one thing at a time.

It's fullest attention to this one thing. There's only this moment. And this moment then becomes different.

It changes. Its quality changes from low quality to high quality. The doing changes.

The relationship changes to high, high quality. High quality, what I call high quality implies there is the awareness becomes part of the situation. You bring in a new dimension.

So the secret of life is to move in the world of object consciousness, where things continuously happen and have to be dealt with. Okay. Phone rings.

Demands. I want this. You should come and do this.

Are you going to lose yourself in these continuous, the demand of the world of objects, of things that gives, give me your attention. And I'm only speaking right now of the external world, which says, I need you. I need your attention.

This and everything that arises says this matters. Absolutely. And it's serious.

So this situation is very serious. We have to do something now. Okay.

And you can see how you're completely lost in form. You can see. What now?

Okay. And what decisions are you going to take on the basis of that state of consciousness? Oh, we have to do, we have to let these people go.

50 people. We have to let them go. We can't afford to keep them any longer.

Okay. Sack them. Sack them all.

What next? Complete lack of space, which means complete lack of wisdom. Just absurd decisions are being taken.

Nothing can come out of that state of consciousness that does not create more suffering. Because it's a state of ultimately great unbalance, to use a mild word. And a state where everything pretends to matter.

Absolutely. And of course there's continuous underlying fear because all you know is the world of objects, of things, of things happening, of things going wrong, of things that shouldn't be, of things that need to be added to make, so that we can be profitable and make success, become a success. What for?

I don't know. The company needs to grow. It needs to grow.

Grow. What for? So that more people can be part of it and more people can be unhappy.

And to a large extent this is the energy that's still behind a lot of the structures in our civilization. That kind of energy is behind it. It's mad.

Of course it's mad. What is missing? Space.

Can you be here as the bringer of space in any situation?

[Speaker 14] (1:29:58 - 1:29:59)
Hello.

[Speaker 6] (1:30:00 - 1:31:52)
I've been to several of your retreats and my friend encouraged me to ask the question. And I've been thinking about it. And at the last retreat I went to for helping professionals in California, you answered part of the question.

You had picked it and answered it. But both of my parents were Holocaust survivors. My mother was from Auschwitz in 1945 and my father from Bergen-Belsen.

And I had a brother who died in the Warsaw ghetto there. And I have this identification with this collective kind of unconscious where I constantly try to think about what you're saying and how to apply the feeling of there is no problem in the present moment. And I go back, it doesn't happen all the time.

But when you say that, I think about them and I think, how could they have done that? How could they have said in a state of terror, there's no problem right now? And I think about it often.

And I also just want to say that I find it really ironic that you have probably been the most influential person in my life in terms of healing. And I go to many of your retreats, listen to the tapes, and you're of German descent. And I often think to myself, there is a larger picture here.

I mean, it's irony, isn't it, kind of? You know, I was a little nervous to ask the question and even to make the statement, but my friend was encouraging me to do it.

So thank you. Well, I can assure you my sense of self is not derived from any nationality. And there was a time, but I'll come to the main part of your question is, how could they at that time have said, how could they have said there is no problem in the situation that they were in?

That's your main question. I'll address that in a second. But first, interesting question about identifying with your national background or your family background.

There was a time when I was still in my egoic identity, when there was some feelings of unease, when I realized what the country that I was born in had done. And so there was some suffering there at that time. Later, when I transcended that sense of self, that evaporated completely.

But even at the suffering that had done, it had been worse if my family background, if they had been involved in any activity of that atrocious activity of that kind, it would have been far worse. But my dad was an outsider. He was actually imprisoned by the Nazis, not because of some deeply held political belief, simply because he couldn't keep his mouth shut.

My mother couldn't keep her mouth shut either.

[Speaker 1] (1:33:34 - 1:42:31)
And so one night he had been drinking, he just said, this craziness, we have to, how can this guy is so crazy, he's going to take us to our doom. And the next day he got arrested. And there's a long story that Monday I'll tell what happened to him after that.

And my mom escaped the work service that every young woman had to go to, to work on a farm or in a factory. So she was sent to a weapons factory to work. And she escaped after two days, she ran away, she got, she jumped on the back of a truck and escaped.

And then she lived in hiding for two years with her aunt in another city and police were coming to look for her. So that's the story of my parents. So that was a little bit of a relief for me at that time that they had absolutely no, not only not involvement, they were actually regarded as delinquents.

But now the most important part, in such extreme situations, of such extreme suffering, concentration camp and so on, and even nowadays there are places on the planet where people are in these situations of extreme suffering, where the death could come at any moment. They might only have, whether if you've been captured by some terrorists and you know they're going to kill you, whatever it may be. Now, there have been accounts of people who have, who were in concentration camps, who have actually broken through to a very deep level of consciousness by being in that situation.

So, and it doesn't happen in those cases by telling yourself that there is no problem in the present moment. That is, would be a very weak statement and not really, wouldn't work. So, but what does work is the situation like that can drastically burn up your ego completely so that there's virtually, there's complete self-annihilation before the body dies.

There's complete annihilation of the egoic sense of self and all that remains is an intense presence of consciousness. You are not there as a person anymore. I know that there are a few individuals who have gone there who have later been able to speak about it and I'm sure there are many others, a minority, yes, there are many others who never were able, they died there, they were never able to later on express what they actually went through, but I believe there is a considerable number of people who went through this, the deepest shift in consciousness that's possible in this impossibly painful situation. And it actually became totally awakened as consciousness and realized that there is no death.

And others, of course, went through terrible fear and died in terrible fear, but the essence of who you are is not subject to death. And there is a, when we see the dreadfulness of that situation, which is not to be denied, so we also have to see on a deeper level there is no death. And both exist to knowing that there is no death to the essence of who you are, knowing that from an inner realization does not mean that on another level the situation is not dreadful.

So we do not, one does not deny the other and it has to be recognized in its dreadfulness. That's part, in the same way that I sometimes speak of the how many people were actually killed by humans killing, murdering other humans in the 20th century alone. And the figure is that I quoted a figure in the Power of Now, but I later found out it was far too low.

Nobody knows the exact figure, 150 million, 200 million humans murdered by other, no natural catastrophes and so on, are nothing compared to that, what humans do to each other. And that's a form of collective madness. The Holocaust is one aspect of that.

Another aspect of that would be what happened in Soviet communism, millions killed. Also in China, millions killed within their own countries, not even in the conflict between two countries. First World War, the madness of that.

Second World War, the madness of that. The bombing of cities and entire civilian populations exterminated. Complete madness.

So we have to see that what the madness that is in the, ultimately the dysfunctional egoic mind and what it produces, and this is a dreadful, you need to recognize the craziness of that, the madness of that. But at the same time, if we are able to go deep enough, we can realize that, for a moment, regard humanity as of consciousness. There's human consciousness, which is a collective of humanity.

And every human being is an expression of the collective human consciousness. And the collective human consciousness is an expression of the universal consciousness. It's one strand, one ray in the universal consciousness.

So you have universal consciousness. Then you have the collective human consciousness on planet Earth. the collective human consciousness is evolving gradually through continuously, through billions of manifestations, humans are called human individuals.

It's evolving gradually. And it's, so another way of looking at it on the deeper level is the evolution of human consciousness is a very painful process. It's kind of, it goes to a nightmarish stage when humanity, when the history of humanity looks like the history of an, it's a nightmare.

And, but it is evolving. So we, it's, we ourselves are expressions of the evolution of consciousness. And knowing that we can still recognize the madness of what happened and to some extent still happening.

People often say, by the way, things are getting worse and worse. They say on the palm, they're getting worse and worse. Well, I say, if you look at the history, just look at the first half of the 20th century, it can't be worse than that.

We're not, so far, it's not definitely not worse than that. So, but this is a long answer to on two levels. No, they would not have said there's no problem in the present moment, but perhaps the situation forced them into a state of consciousness that we call presence that they didn't have a name for and eliminated the person completely.

That is always the possibility when it happens. So, and then we, for you, it's important to derive your sense of self from the arising presence in you, not from the historical past, your own historical past, or the historical past of your family, but to acknowledge it, what happened, but not derive your sense of identity from it. That is important.

Otherwise you get trapped in that sense of identity. Thank you very much.

[Speaker 10] (1:43:12 - 1:43:42)
Kirt, my question is around surrender. I'm curious, once the egoic shell has cracked open and the light of consciousness is peeking through, can the ego surrender itself to that light of consciousness or ultimately must it be surrendered? Kirt.

Thank you.

[Speaker 1] (1:43:51 - 1:45:44)
The ego, I often talk of the ego as if it were an entity. It's not really an entity. It acts as if it were an entity.

It seems to be an entity that has taken possession of you, but ultimately what it is, it's only a particular way of your mind to function. A, an identification with the mind. So the ego itself is that dysfunctional way in which the mind works.

And when that comes to an end, the dysfunctional way cannot put an end to its own dysfunction. It can only dissolve when the mind, awareness arises. Awareness is not thought.

Awareness is consciousness prior to thought. And you realize that you are that and whatever the mind produces and says are thoughts, but the thoughts are then no longer endowed with a sense of self. And that's the end of the ego.

When you no longer identify with every thought that comes, that's the end of the ego. So that's what happens. So I don't know in the way you formulate the question, the ego cannot dissolve itself, but in the light of awareness, it dissolves.

[Speaker 10] (1:45:46 - 1:45:52)
Then what is that willingness to allow it to be seen?

[Speaker 1] (1:45:52 - 1:48:53)
That willingness is the evolutionary impulse of the universe, which created the ego in the first place in order to transcend it now. It was an evolutionary step for mankind. The ego was an enormous step for mankind.

A great thing. And then it came or is coming now to the end of its lifespan, that particular evolutionary movement or manifestation that we call ego. It had a lifespan.

It has outlived its usefulness now. We have learned a lot through it. And now it needs to go.

And that's always a critical stage. The transition from one state of consciousness to another is always critical. There could be a falling back.

There could be, we're at this transitional stage where the ego now needs to dissolve. The caterpillar has come to the end of its useful life as a caterpillar. It's been fine.

The caterpillar was happy for a while, crawling up the tree and eating the leaves. Now there are no leaves left on the tree. And it's time for the caterpillar to cease being a caterpillar and turn into something incredible.

That little slimy thing. Suddenly it doesn't know what's happening to it. Caterpillar doesn't say, I must become a butterfly or I'm trying to become a butterfly.

But the caterpillar suddenly notices that crawling is becoming more and more difficult. And it's looking for leaves. It's eaten all the leaves of the tree so there's nothing else to eat anyway.

If it doesn't change now into a butterfly, it'll die. So that's what's happening to humans. The shift to a different evolutionary level or dimension.

It's, this is us being here. That's all part of it. It's part of the shift.

The butterfly is emerging right here. The caterpillar is not totally gone yet. It's the transitional period.

Thanks. Even you can notice in every one of you, sometimes you're still a caterpillar and at other times, you're already a butterfly. Present, aware, non-reactive, aligned with the present moment.

[Speaker 10] (1:49:13 - 1:50:18)
I understand, I think pretty well, the basic idea of leaving behind the conceptual thought and retreating, making a retreat to being in order to reposition and to cope and to start out with, again, in the conceptual world we must live in at some time with fresh thoughts and new ideas. But I'm asking you and not necessarily expecting the answer just now, today, but hoping that this is a challenge and a invitation for you to help us to have the one thing that I think I've not have been able to achieve in my own life and would like to. Even at 76, I'm still striving to have one, just one, really original thought.

That's what I'm looking for. And of all people in this world that I've heard about and met, I think you're the guy that might help us with that. Thank you.

Thank you, thank you.

[Speaker 1] (1:50:20 - 2:20:09)
That's a lovely question, thank you. Well, there's one success to be reported. We already had an original question.

A very honest question and a question that actually, and surprisingly, nobody has asked before. So there you are. I don't know if that's the whole answer.

But that's certainly the truth. It's asking questions is a wonderful, wonderful thing. And it is, I would even say, more important to ask an original question than to expect an original thought or original answer, because an original question is an original thought.

A question is a thought. And so you'll find that the ability to ask questions, when in any situation, when you have to arrive at an answer, at a solution, to try to work something out, to ask questions and to ask the right questions is more important than expecting the right answer. And often the answer is already hidden in the question.

When you can ask the right question and say, oh, oh, and this already, Socrates knew because his entire teaching is questions and answers. It's called the Socratic dialogues. The Socratic dialogues, he continuously asked, he encouraged people to ask questions, and then he didn't immediately give answers.

He gave, asked more questions and gradually leading people to the truth, to realization of this or that, whatever it may be. So in many situations, I often, people present something to me. Do you want to do this or do you want to do that?

And then I said, have you asked this? Have you asked that? No.

Well, ask this and ask that and ask that, and then we'll know. It's an art that you can develop, asking questions. You need an alertness.

So I'm really talking about, you already asked an original question and a very honest question. So this is certainly an original thought. And let's see what happens after that.

The more you get in touch with the alert stillness that is presence, the more likely it is that you will perhaps more, have more original questions. And sometimes perhaps, well, original thoughts, an original question is an original thought. It is true that in most people, the thoughts that happen in your mental field, most of them are not even your thoughts.

You say, these are my thoughts, but they have come into you from the collective, especially nowadays when everybody's connected with the collective through these weird devices, you just turn on your thing and you look and you're taking in collective thoughts. Bzzz, bzzz, bzzz, and then you start thinking whatever it is, either you agree or you violently disagree. Yes, yes, yes.

No, no, no. And then you, so you, what people don't realize is that the thoughts live in you and pretend to be you. You think they're yours, but they are thoughts that have floated into your mind, most of them collective thoughts.

And so it's almost like being, carrying something in you that possesses you. It's, you're in the grip of certain thoughts. If you read social media and all that kind of thing on the internet, it's full of millions of people who are in the grip of certain thought movements and they are collective thought movements.

There are, for example, now that they're kind of, there's a separation of this one huge collective thought movement that goes one way. And there's another huge collective thought movement that goes another way. And you belong either to one or to the other.

You feel drawn to the one or to the other. And it's not ultimately nothing to do with you or who you really are. You are at the mercy of these energy fields that move through you.

And you say things and the energy speaks through you. The thoughts live in you, you're inhabited by thoughts. So the, as I mentioned before, somewhere, maybe not here, the people say, I think, but in most cases, thinking is not, you have no say in the matter unless there's some awareness.

You have no say in the matter as to what you are thinking. So there's as little truth in the statement, I think, as there is in the statement, I beat my heart because you're not doing it, it happens to you. Now, breathing is partly voluntary and partly involuntary.

You say, I breathe. Now you have some control over your breathing. You can stop it for a while, you can deepen it.

However, breathing also happens to you because although you can stop it for a little while, I don't think you cannot commit suicide just by holding your breath. Something in you makes you breathe. So breathing happens to you when you'd have to put some plastic over your head, oh, let's not go there.

But you cannot commit suicide, you cannot hold your breath for that long. So it's stronger than you. So breathing happens to you, the circulation of the countless, countless hundreds of functions that are being coordinated every second in your body, the temperature of the body, the circulation of the blood, every organ coordinating its functions with the other organs.

There's a vast intelligence operating continuously throughout your body. And it's happening to you, you are not doing it. You have no idea how the digestion works, you are not digesting your food, it's being digested for you.

You are not in control of the functions of your kidneys or your liver. Even now, the greatest scientists are still figuring out more and more about how these things work. It's just an amazing intelligence hiding there, but it's all happening for you and to you.

So you are not doing it, but you think that as far as thoughts are concerned, that you think your thoughts. You don't, unless there's an awareness in you where you become, this dimension has emerged where you become aware of what thoughts are going through your head and you can even say, I'd rather not think that because it's totally pointless and futile. And then it dissolves, that is possible.

Or to simply observe a thought takes away the momentum from a thought that is not pleasant. When you observe what a thought is doing to you, how a thought makes you unhappy, when you observe that, there's an awareness there. When you can see that this thought is making me unhappy and you see, you can, then it begins to dissolve.

But for most humans who are not aware, they are at the mercy of their thoughts, although they continuously think, this is what I think, as if there was a volition there, but what really is happening, this is the thinking that happens to me. So there's no, it's completely conditioned. So instead of saying, I think it would be better to say, I am being thought, I am being thought.

There is an eternal life there. There is a level at which the essence of that person, you know it beyond explanations, is eternal. You speak often about non-attachment.

I can understand non-attachment to objects but I can't comprehend non-attachment to my children or family. How can one be non-attached to those we love? Good question.

The question I can understand non-attachment to things. Okay. Now non-attachment to things, let's talk about that for a moment.

Non-attachment to things does not mean not appreciating things but it means not seeking yourself or to regard things as an extension of yourself or think of things as needing them to add to yourself in order to be yourself more fully. That's attachment to things. It's an ego dysfunction but in a way in which the ego survives and it's not pleasant because you always need more and nothing really satisfies you.

Whenever you buy something and seek some kind of self-satisfaction through it, very quickly you realize it doesn't work and then you look for something else. However, there is a way of appreciating things, beautiful things or simple things. Appreciate is not being attached.

You can love, even love a piece of furniture or whatever it is, a little object or a piece of something you wear too. I'm not saying all this needs to disappear. You can like things and appreciate them, love them in a sense of having appreciated without the self-seeking in it.

And when the thing leaves you, you lose it or it breaks or it gets stolen or whatever, without the attachment you'll say, oh, it's a pity but you don't, there's no reaction and no pain. You're able to let go and that's a sign that something you appreciated and yet when it's not there anymore, well, that's all right too. I always appreciated since I started between the age of 30 and well, up to the age of 30, I don't know, 36, my main transportation was bicycle and I always appreciated my bicycle and I developed a strange habit when I parked my bicycle and chained it to something, a railing outside or whatever.

I would take a few steps and look back on it and just appreciate its being. It's a very strange habit. You look back at it and look back one more time, there it is.

And sometimes people ask, why are you looking back at your bicycle? Are you proud of it? Well, it wasn't a particularly special bicycle, just a normal.

No, I appreciate it being there. And one day, I got a car, somebody gave me an old car and then I lent my bicycle to somebody and suddenly that person came and said, I'm so sorry, I lost your bike. I didn't lock it for a few minutes and now it's gone.

I had already gone through a shift in consciousness. So, I said, it's okay, it's gone, nothing we can do about it. Hopefully, somebody else appreciates it now.

Then I developed the same habit with my old car. I would look back when I parked it, I'd look back and just appreciate it being there. And I do the same now that I have a much better car.

And now with my good car, people think I must be proud of this car or something, but it's not that. I did the same with the bicycle. It's a strange habit.

I'm not recommending anybody that he should do that, but it's just a way in which I appreciate its being. And it's not attachment, but don't believe me, but the reality of attachment only comes out when it disappears. So, let's wait and see.

So, yes, it's wonderful not to be attached to things and yet being able to appreciate things. And then comes attachment to humans, attachment to human beings. And the questioner asks, I can understand non-attachment to objects, but I cannot comprehend non-attachment to my children and family.

How can one be non-attached to those we love? Well, you can't. Nor is it desirable.

Of course you are attached to those you love, and of course, if they should be taken from you, you feel pain and you weep. However, as you awaken spiritually, in addition to your attachment to a person that you love, there is a deeper level also present in which you relate to that person, not at all through emotion or the physical, but deeper through presence. You feel their presence.

You feel beyond emotion. You feel their essence. And that is vital because now it means that the love has become, well, what word do we use?

We could say, spiritualised. It's not just emotional, it's only a very limited form of love. But you also realise the formless dimension in the other human being and in yourself at the same time.

And as if a person should be taken away from you, the level at which you are attached to that person, at that level, you feel the loss and the pain of it. At the same time, there is the deeper level present in which you realise that which is not subject to death. There is an eternal life there.

There is a level at which the essence of that person, you know it beyond explanations, is eternal. The essence of who they are, and you can sense that in yourself, even while you weep, a person dies with whom you love. So we are not aiming for non-attachment to those we love, but what we are aiming for is going deeper in our love, so that there is not just the emotional level or the physical level, but a deeper level of true, ultimately, that's the true love.

And don't wait until somebody whom you love is taken away from you to find that level. Find that level while they are here with you, but don't look for it in the other. Find it in yourself.

The entire teaching here is about that. Find it in yourself and then look upon the other and sense it and recognise it also in the other. So there are times then when you can relate to a loved one, and that's an important part of the relationship, not through words and thoughts, not through physicality, not through emotion.

Those are there, but from time to time, relate to the other on a level that's deeper than physicality, touch, look, deeper than words, speaking, deeper than thoughts, thinking about the other, deeper than the emotion that you feel, look at the closeness, and so you go to that, is that possible? Yes. Be with the other person in the state of the clarity of presence, just absolute spacious awareness.

Look at the other in spacious and through spacious awareness. So there's the formless essence arises. And then they die because everybody close to you, of course, is going to leave you or you leave them.

They die first or you die first. And it's absurd not to consider that. And when death finally comes, yes, of course you feel pain, but to react as if that were the greatest unnatural thing to happen ever in the world, of course, that's what it feels like if you've never even considered death, the reality of it, which is all around you.

But to go beyond death, don't wait for death, die now to that exclusive identification with form. Die to the mind-made self. And then when death comes, you will weep and feel a deep peace at the same time.

It seems almost paradoxical, but I have experienced it, and I know others who have. You weep and you feel deep peace at the same time. There's a very strong pattern in me that doesn't want to live anymore, and that is really hard to deal with.

Can you please advise me? Well, first you need to observe whether there's negativity in there. It's just like, I can't take any more of this, or whatever thought comes up when you feel that you don't want to live anymore, can't take it anymore, I've had enough.

In other words, is it a resistance pattern that's still egoic because things are not going the way you wanted them to go? Or there may be a kind of tiredness of life, sense-perceived existence, situations, and so on. A weariness, perhaps.

You are not here, so I cannot ask you to explain exactly what it is that you feel, and how you experience that not wanting to live anymore. But anybody, no matter what it is, I suggest that you practice dying by surrendering completely to the present moment. Don't demand anything that this moment should be different.

It is the way it is. Then the ego dies. Instead of committing suicide, I highly recommend surrender.

Much more effective. Die before you die. Do situations still have the power to induce in you negativity?

Do situations still have the power to make you unhappy? Events, situations, people. Is that why you want to not live anymore?

Let's not surrender. Try surrender and see what happens. Which means no complaint about anything anymore.

Mental. Complete acceptance of this moment as it is. And even the thought, I don't want this anymore, whatever, is a resistance to what is.

You don't need it. So if you feel the pull of death, die now to the mind-made self, the ego. Allow the ego to die.

Complete surrender to what is. And see what happens. You may suddenly find the peace that passes all understanding.

It means you've died. The ego is dissolved.

[Speaker 6] (2:20:51 - 2:21:36)
Yesterday you talked about listening from presence and from stillness. And when you're listening to people directly and looking into their eyes, I can feel that presence. I'm wondering if it's possible, if you have suggestions for manifesting that in communications technologies like email and conference calls.

In my work, I talk to people and work with people who I never see. I've never met them. I don't know what they look like.

And yet, I'm often on calls with four or five people. And I'm wondering if you think it's possible to, I mean, I can be from a place of stillness, and they might just think that I've gone for coffee. So do you have any ideas?

[Speaker 1] (2:21:36 - 2:32:33)
Yes. So if you don't see them, you're just on the phone. Although with the technology these days, very soon it will be much more common probably to have these visual conference calls where you actually see people on the screen and it almost looks as if they're sitting around the table.

I imagine you could even put, I don't know if they're doing that, probably not. You could have a conference table and put little screens where the chairs are. And then you switch on and you have six people sitting around the conference table.

You see the screens. But for the time being, let's just talk for a moment about the telephone. Now on the telephone, a long silence could easily be misinterpreted as an absence, that you're no longer there, or the line has been disconnected.

Or it could be interpreted as complete lack of interest on your part. Therefore, I would not recommend any kind of long silence. But I find in my personal experience, although I don't use the telephone very much, when I do use it, and even if it's only for booking a ticket for a ferry or something like that, when I do use it and there's a human being at the other end, most of the time I do detect something deeper in our interaction than just the words that need to be spoken in order to conduct whatever business it is that you need to conduct. And I find that even through the telephone, being still does not necessarily mean that you're not speaking.

So you can be connected with presence and speak at the same time. I'd like to book a ferry for such and such a time. I find very often I get a response from the other person.

The other person likes to talk to me. They have no idea, they don't have my name, don't know who they're talking to. They just, they like, I can sense that they like to talk.

And sometimes I say a few words that have nothing to do with the business at hand, just to comment on the weather or how are you, a true question, not just a superficial, how are you, how to connect on a human level, not just use the human being as a means to an end, but realize there is a being, there is a human being. You remember, there's a human which is form, and there's a being which is formless. You are a human being.

Don't just operate on the human level, which is whatever you need to do on the level of form. Bring in the being and then you have the two. So developing the ability to speak and to listen in stillness.

So when you're listening to them, you're still. And the words come out of stillness, not out of nervousness, or out of a sense of impatience, because you have been waiting on this line for 10 minutes, and when finally somebody picks up the phone, you can feel that there's a tension in your voice, and you don't like that person anymore, because you've been waiting for 10 or 15 minutes on this call which says, your call will be answered very soon.

Your call is important to us, so please don't hang up. And in some people, they get more and more angry. And finally you talk to this human being, and then the human being can feel your upset and anger, even if you don't say anything.

Yeah, I want to book a ferry. So that doesn't work very well. So to communicate on the phone is a very subtle thing, in a very subtle way.

There can be a sense of presence that is detected by the other person, and that brings it to the being, the being level. It helps to initiate the call. Sometimes you can't always do that, obviously when you're ringing your credit card company, you can't start off by talking about the weather or something like that.

They want to know what the number is and why you're calling. But sometimes towards the end, you could say something, oh, I'm here, or where are you? They might say, I'm in New York, I'm in India.

Very often people are in India these days, and you talk to them. So you practice, and then you have visual calls, I don't know if you do that, and there you look at, you see the person on the screen, it's a little bit easier to connect, you have the visual dimension too. But in conferences and so on, it's always good to start in your company, or to have an agreement that you start with a moment of stillness.

So when you have a conference call, and all those people are conscious enough, you have to judge for yourself to see whether they would think you're mad if you suggest a moment of stillness before you start. I know people like Sounds True, I think Tammy told me in her company, often before the meetings, they start with a moment of stillness. Other companies I interviewed, or had a dialogue with, Eileen Fisher, who has a clothing company, they also, they always start with stillness.

Oprah also does it with her people before they discuss anything, they become still. So that's a wonderful thing to do. Yes, it's a very subtle thing on the telephone, but the few phone calls that I do have, usually somehow stillness manages to get in there.

You need to be aware of your inner state, of course. If your inner state is agitated when you pick up the phone, there's not much you can do. So if you cannot be still at the beginning of the call, you can be still perhaps just before you make a call.

Just before you make a call for half a minute, or one minute, take a few breaths, and then you make the call. That might help. Or if the phone rings, I've often recommended, if the phone rings, don't be the slave of the ringing telephone, because many people, the moment the phone rings, they go...

and they might even interrupt a pleasant gathering. You're just talking about something even important, and some people think whatever it is, the ringing phone is always more important. So they must answer it immediately.

You don't have to answer it immediately, and I always recommend, if you do answer it, give it a few seconds. Every time the phone rings, it can be a signal for you to become present. Just give it five seconds.

Three to five seconds. Five seconds is not long. It's one, two, three, four, five.

Even three seconds will help. Every time the phone rings, before you answer it, never come into presence. So every time the phone rings, it's an alarm clock to bring you into presence.

You can make that a habit. And if you get many phone calls every day, that will become a very powerful spiritual practice for you. So instead of rushing to the phone, you just become alert and still.

And you wait, but it's not a waiting. This can be misunderstood as if you had to hold yourself back and exercise willpower so that you don't jump and pick up the phone. That's not how it is.

So you don't go, I have to hold myself back before I answer it. No. It rings and you go, ah.

You enjoy the space before you pick up the phone and let it ring two or three times without straining mentally to get there already. And then you pick up. That would be a great practice.

And after a while, it gets easy. And that means every time the phone rings, there's a space of presence. Isn't that wonderful?

You're hoping to get more calls. You could do the same with text messages. Whatever sound you have to announce that a text message has come in, all kinds of, from whistles blowing to beeping or glass, the sound of glass.

And when that comes in, you could do the same. Why immediately rush to read the message, which probably isn't important at all, just pretends to be. Give it just the same space a few seconds before you pick it up.

And again, don't get impatient and hold yourself. It's not holding yourself back. It's just consciously giving yourself space.

In that way, you can use devices that otherwise would continuously take you out of presence and help you to be present.

[Speaker 3] (2:32:33 - 2:32:35)
So you turn them around.

[Speaker 1] (2:33:45 - 3:49:16)
Can we trust our feelings? Can we trust our somatic reading of life? Are you able to say something about intuition, which is not the same, but interests me as well?

Can we trust our feelings? Now, often you hear people say, trust your feelings. I would suggest, however, that that's not necessarily true.

Acknowledge your feelings. Yes. Be there as the observing presence for your feelings.

Yes. Be aware of your feelings, accept that they are there. Trust, which means to take them to be the truth or the truth for you, or using them as a guide to correct or a skillful action that may be doubtful because it depends where these feelings arise in you.

A little anecdote from my life to illustrate that. When I lived in England, in the country, in that alternative town, Glastonbury, for three years, I lived in a cottage and once a month I would travel to London or other cities in my beloved Russian-made Lada car to do a workshop. And usually a weekend workshop called things like transcending time or be here now.

Nothing much has changed, except that the average number of people I had was about 10. And since my income was not enough, I had to rent out a room upstairs in my cottage. So I had to, over these three years, a few people, it was a second room, which I also occasionally rent out.

Anyway, the room became vacant. I advertised in the local paper. Several people came to apply and finally chose a young woman who had just been offered a job in that town.

She came, she moved in. And after the first night in her room, she came down for breakfast into the kitchen, which was a shared kitchen, and she said, I can't stay here. I said, what's wrong?

I just, it's just a feeling. I always listen to my feelings. I just, I just can't stay.

There's something not right. So I was very nervous. And I said, okay, that's fine.

And that she found that very disconcerting because she had expected a more conventional response, which would have been what I've interviewed all these people, I've chosen you. And now what you're doing this to me. I'm not getting your rent money back that you paid in advance.

But I said, okay, I'll give you your money back. It's fine. So she was even more confused after that.

And I said, he said, I've spent one more night or two more nights. She spent the second night. And then in the morning she said, no, I think I'll stay.

I have a different feeling now. And I said, oh, that's fine. That's good.

And again, she was a little disconcerted because the conventional response would have been, which I did do, I just put another ad in the paper. And now you're telling me this. This, this is how to make the conventional responses are how to make life complicated for yourself and others.

But it's normal. It's how the ego responds. And so whenever somebody does not respond in that way, life becomes simple.

But when life becomes simple, people who expect the conventional responses become confused. This is a weird person. And so she decided to stay.

And a few weeks later, when I got to know her better, she explained to me that that first night she was in her bedroom and she said, I found you so weird that I thought you might creep in in the middle of the night and murder me. And later she said, living in the same house with you is like living in a float tank. I think she learned a lot, not so much through me explaining things to her just by being there.

Not that she didn't go through her episodes of neurotic reactivity, which is quite normal for most people, but that's fine. So feelings. Now, where did have the initial feelings that she experienced that she then believed that they were a correct guide for action?

Of course they were not because they originated in fear. And they also originated in a misinterpretation of reality, which is so easy to do for the mind, to misinterpret another person, to misinterpret a situation. You misinterpret because you see it through the conditioning of your mind.

You see it through your beliefs, your prior experiences in childhood. You see it through even other things that have conditioned your mind, maybe even scary movies about weird people who don't say much. And then just when you're having a shower, they creep in.

So it is not, therefore it's not that easy often to say, where does this feeling that I have arise? Where does this feeling originate? Now, does it come from a deeper, the intuitive place?

Intuition comes out of being present. Intuition is not, does not come out of the conditioning of your mind. So if you have an intuition also, it is usually not tainted by negativity, such as anger or fear.

So there's something certain about it. There is a quiet strength behind your feeling, a quiet strength. There's not a nervous energy behind your feeling.

There's more. You just know this is, this is right. You may not be able to explain to yourself or others why as a different quality, there's a more peaceful quality to it.

Now let's just imagine to come back to the story that happened with this young woman. And of course it could have been that theoretically I could have been a psycho and actually could not be trusted not to kill her. Theoretically that's possible.

So I don't know what the answer to this is, but the, I know from my own life, whenever there is a deep realization of what the right course of action is, it is always, there's a peace with it. And even if it was a psycho there, you know, there was absolute certainty that this is not right for you. There's an energetic imbalance, which comes from a deeper place.

But I cannot really explain in words, you'd have to, through life experience, you have to find out for yourself what a deeper feeling that comes out of presence and is a true intuition, how it is different from something that is, that arises from the conditioning of your mind. Now, a lot of the time people misinterpret reality because they look at reality through the veil of their conditioning. And that contributes to a huge amount of conflict in life, in relationships and so on.

And not only they misinterpret, they add this, what I call unnecessary baggage to situations through their reactivity, which is an ego device in order to strengthen the ego's always deficient sense of identity. So coming back again to that story, what had happened, if I had reacted in the normal way, becoming angry and accusing her when she said after one night she couldn't stay, and that would have strengthened, it would have come from my ego, it would have strengthened my sense of self, the separate sense of self. And again, if the reaction had been when she finally decided to, after the second night, decided to stay, I could have again said, no, now I've just spent, I mean, it wasn't that much, an ad in the local paper is relatively cheap, but the ego would have dwelt on that and said, now I've spent that, and all these people that are already said they couldn't come, now they have already found accommodation, I would have again made somebody wrong. And the ego loves that, to make somebody wrong, because when you make somebody wrong, and you would be, the ego could even explain, you're totally justified, because that's not fair, the person shouldn't just change like that, she's just, but instead of saying how people should be, if you just, this is what is, you can either accept it, or you cannot.

I could have said also, in practical terms, when after the second night, she said, I've decided to stay, I could have said, oh, it's too late, I've already had found somebody else, or I'd said, no, maybe it's better if you do go, because tomorrow night, you might again, after tomorrow, you might again not want to stay, all these things are possible, but the situation remained simple, because of non-reactivity, and this applies to so many cases, whenever there's some kind of, things do not go smoothly, because a person does not do what they're supposed to do, and then immediately, the ego constructs a narrative, and you know it, when you start telling other people about it, that strengthens it, so I could have picked up the phone, and said, you know, I had this girl, I rejected five other people for her, know what she's done to me, and then listen and tell the story, so satisfying to the ego, and then the person on the other end says, oh my god, you sort of, and then of course, I could have gone into thinking, oh, maybe she's totally neurotic, maybe she's a psycho, all spinning tails in the head, all kinds of things, there's a whole fictitious narratives that are taken for reality, and how simple things can actually be, if you don't add unnecessary reactivity to it, but in order to do that, it requires you to be present, not to be there as a person, because a person feels easily offended, so if you're there as a person, you get offended a lot, if you go on the internet, you'll find that the world is full of people who are deeply offended, and I can explain why, and it sounds totally reasonable, but the ego loves being offended, I'm not denying that there may be some remarks that are truly offenses, but that's a relatively small thing, and if it is something truly offensive, again, what could she have said, what that was truly offensive, she could have said, uh, I can't stay with you because you're too ugly, for example, now to the ego, that would be offensive, or she might have said, well, she happened to be white, but if you've not been white, you'd have said, I finally, I have this feeling, I cannot stay with a white male, okay, vigilance is required in your interactions with people, always a question, am I adding something to the interaction that is unnecessary, that is just there to strengthen my fictitious sense of self, to justify something, to make somebody wrong, big thing for the ego, because if I can make something wrong, there's always an element of victimhood, when I make somebody wrong, in relation to myself, there's always an element of, it may not be the main focal point, but there's an element of me being the victim, if I make you wrong, and the ego loves that, because it strengthens itself through that, and if I make somebody wrong, you know what he said, and what he did then, let me tell you about this, oh, how can somebody do something like that, and this means unconsciously, I'm always superior to the other, when this happens, when you're telling the story, what somebody did and said to you, you do it, because the ego, when you're telling, when you're making somebody wrong, because when you are right, now, you probably all know people in your life, when they talk, when you tell, when they tell you things, it's always others who are wrong, it's never them, it's very strange, why is it that I'm always right, and others are always wrong, they never ask that question, but that is a mystery of human existence, one of the great mysteries of life is, why I'm always right, and others are always wrong, I think philosophers haven't explored it in detail enough, and nobody has resolved this mystery, and everybody should ask themselves, how is that, I must be really superior to everybody, weird, so if you think back, the last year or two or three in your life, well, I'm actually talking to a group of people here, who are much more conscious than the average human, but nevertheless, even here, some of you may find, if you look back the last few years, that whenever there was some kind of argument or conflict, perhaps it was, was it always the others who are wrong, it's very easy to deny somebody's perspective, but if it conflicts with your own, and make them totally wrong, you can also make a group of people totally wrong, an entire group, an entire nation, an entire religion, you can make everybody wrong, it's great, you feel stronger and morally superior, now, does that mean there are not people who are deeply wrong, because they might peeve them, but maybe people are to deceive you, you might go and want to, you might go and buy a secondhand car, and the person is so friendly and kind, and he sells you something, that just breaks down the next day, and it's clearly lied to you, what do you do then, and even then, it's important not to amplify what has happened, by going into your mind, and creating a whole string of narratives in your mind, of what an awful person that is, and coming to all kinds of conclusions about that, and tell the story to yourself and to others, and amplify it in that way, and then you go back to him, and then you tell him really what you think of him, and rather than keep it simple, what action can I take to remedy this, even if you go to court, you can do it in a detached way, I'm not necessarily saying never do anything, just put up with anything and anybody, it's just, that's not what it means, even if you go to court, in order to rectify a situation that is obviously wrong, you can do it in a way that is detached, and just keeps it to the, just the essentials of the situation, practical, without the whole superstructure of you are the evil one, you are wrong, I won't repeat it here, but I think you may all remember the story I told, I believe it's in a new earth about the Zen master, who was accused of having fathered a child, and what his responses were at every stage of the process, is that so, now that's an interesting, so if you may remember the parents accused him, that he was the father of their daughter's child, and then the parents brought the baby to him, and at each stage when he was, the parents told him something, you are the father, is that so, you bring the baby, now you look after the baby, we don't want it, you are the father, and he had lost his reputation, et cetera, people were commenting about him on the internet, and he did not participate in the story making, and he didn't defend himself, and he didn't, he just said, okay, so it means a total refusal to go into any kind of story, cut, is that so, yeah, oh, oh, and finally it all became, resolved itself, the daughter confessed that he was not the father, and so on, and the parents came, wanted the baby back, please give us the baby back, we now know that, oh, you're not the father, please forgive us, we did a terrible thing by accusing you, terrible thing, is that so, okay, that is, that's whether this story actually ever happened, I don't know whether it's just a teaching story, or actually happened, but it doesn't matter, it shows you an extreme form of not being engaged in a story, not engaging in the story making, that is ego strengthening, so you can practice that in many, many situations in your life, refrain from calling up people, or telling up people what other people, and tell them about what other people did wrong, or how they failed, how they were deficient, how somebody lied to you, was dishonest, or expressed an objectionable opinion, and then conflict becomes almost eliminated from your life, or 90% of it.

Can we trust our feelings? Now, often you hear people say, trust your feelings, I would suggest, however, that that's not necessarily true, acknowledge your feelings, yes, be there as the observing presence for your feelings, yes, be aware of your feelings, accept that they are there, trust, which means to take them to be the truth, or the truth for you, or using them as a guide to correct, or skillful action that may be doubtful, because it depends where these feelings arise in you.

A little anecdote from my life to illustrate that, when I lived in England, in the country, in that alternative town, Glastonbury, for three years, I lived in a cottage, and once a month, I would travel to London, or other cities, in my beloved Russian-made Lada car, to do a workshop, and usually a weekend workshop, called things like transcending time, or be here now, nothing much has changed, except that the average number of people I had was about 10, and since my income was not enough, I had to rent out a room upstairs in my cottage, so I had to, over these three years, a few people, it was a second room, which I also occasionally rent out, anyway, the room became vacant, I advertised in the local paper, several people came to apply, and finally chose a young woman who had just been offered a job in that town, she came, she moved in, and after the first night in her room, she came down for breakfast into the kitchen, which was a shared kitchen, and she said, I can't stay here, I said, what's wrong?

I just, it's just a feeling, I always listen to my feelings, I just can't stay here, there's something not right, so I was very nervous, and I said, okay, that's fine, and then she found that very disconcerting, because she had expected a more conventional response, which would have been, what? I've interviewed all these people, I've chosen you, and now what, you're doing this to me? I'm not getting your rent money back that you paid in advance, but I said, okay, I'll give you your money back, it's fine, so she was even more confused after that.

And I said, he said, I've spent one more night or two more nights, she spent the second night, and then in the morning, she said, no, I think I'll stay, I have a different feeling now, and I said, oh, that's fine, that's good, and again, she was a little disconcerted, because the conventional response would have been, which I did do, I just put another ad in the paper, and now you're telling me this?

This is how to make, the conventional responses are how to make life complicated for yourself and others, but it's normal, it's how the ego responds, and so whenever somebody does not respond in that way, life becomes simple, but when life becomes simple, people who expect the conventional responses become confused, what, this is a weird person. And so she decided to stay, and a few weeks later, when I got to know her better, she explained to me that that first night, she was in her bedroom, and she said, I found you so weird that I thought you might creep in in the middle of the night and murder me. And later she said, living in the same house with you is like living in a float tank.

I think she learned a lot, not so much through me explaining things to her, just by being there. Not that she didn't go through her episodes of neurotic reactivity, which is quite normal for most people, but that's fine. So feelings, now where did her, the initial feelings that she experienced, that she then believed that they were a correct guide for action, of course they were not, because they originated in fear, and they also originated in a misinterpretation of reality.

Which is so easy to do for the mind, to misinterpret another person, to misinterpret a situation, you misinterpret because you see it through the conditioning of your mind. Now, a lot of the time, people misinterpret reality because they look at reality through the veil of their conditioning. And that contributes to a huge amount of conflict in life, in relationships and so on.

And not only they misinterpret, they add this what I call unnecessary baggage to situations through their reactivity, which is an ego device in order to strengthen the ego's always deficient sense of identity. So coming back again to that story, what had happened, if I had reacted in the normal way, becoming angry and accusing her when she said after one night she couldn't stay, and that would have strengthened, it would have come from my ego, it would have strengthened my sense of self, the separate sense of self. And again, if the reaction had been when she finally decided to, after the second night decided to stay, I could have again said, now I've just spent, I mean, it wasn't that much, an ad in a local paper is relatively cheap, but the ego would have dwelt on that and said, now I've spent that and all these people that I already said they couldn't come, now they have already found accommodation.

I would have again made somebody wrong. And the ego loves that, to make somebody wrong, because when you make somebody wrong, and you would be, the ego could even explain, you're totally justified, because that's not fair. The person shouldn't just change like that.

She's just, but instead of saying how people should be, if you just, this is what is, you can either accept it or you cannot. You all, I won't repeat it here, but I think you may all remember the story I told, I believe it's in a New Earth about the Zen master who was accused of having fathered a child and what his responses were at every stage of the process. Is that so?

Now that's an interesting, so if you may remember, the parents accused him that he was the father of their daughter's child. And then the parents brought the baby to him and at each stage when he was, the parents told him something, you are the father, you, is that so? You bring the baby, now you look after the baby.

We don't want it, you are the father. And he had lost his reputation, et cetera. People were commenting about him on the internet.

And he did not participate in the storymaking and he didn't defend himself and he didn't, he just said, okay, so it means a total refusal to go into any kind of story, cut. Is that so? Yeah.

And finally it all became, resolved itself. The daughter confessed that he was not the father and so on, and the parents came, wanted the baby back. Please give us the baby back.

We now know that, oh, you're not the father. Please forgive us, we did a terrible thing by accusing you, terrible thing. Is that so?

Okay. That is whether this story actually ever happened, I don't know whether it's just a teaching story or actually happened, but it doesn't matter. It shows you an extreme form of not being engaged in a story, not engaging in the storymaking that is ego strengthening.

So you can practice that in many, many situations in your life. Refrain from calling up people or telling people what other people, and tell them about what other people did wrong or how they failed, how they were deficient, how somebody lied to you, was dishonest or expressed an objectionable opinion. And then conflict becomes almost eliminated from your life or 90% of it.

So in itself, of course, it's neutral. The technology is neutral. It's not either bad or good.

It depends how it's used. But it is, at the moment, it is to a large extent a reflection of the unconscious mind. So if you want to learn about human unconsciousness, if you want to learn about the human ego, just go there and read what people post and look at the reactivity of people on social media and so on, the comments they leave.

You can learn a lot about unconsciousness and identification with mental positions. So the first thing, of course, is be careful with what you put out there, what kind of thing you post. If you post things online, is it reactive?

Give yourself a moment when you read something before you type in an answer or a comment. Give yourself a moment and go within and avoid making people wrong. You can talk about issues, but don't make people wrong and amplify your ego by making others wrong, even though their position, political or otherwise, you may regard as completely misguided or erroneous.

There's still a human being behind that. So you can put forward arguments against somebody's perspective or viewpoint without making another human being wrong. So what you put out is very important.

Is your communication conscious or not? Or is it reactive? And then it can be used for other purposes.

I'm there too sometimes. There are certain places where I appear on could go to YouTube or whatever. And then suddenly there's a spiritual teacher talking and there are some meditation sites on all these things.

So there's a great potential for raising consciousness there. Somebody recommended to me several apps for meditation, which I now have on my phone. I haven't tried them yet.

I've been there for a while, but I have four or five that are there. I want to try them out. So that's the very thing that otherwise would clutter your mind can actually also be used to bring about space or spaciousness in your mind.

So it doesn't necessarily mean that when you have your phone or the 99% of cases, when people look there, their mind is being cluttered, but maybe they're on a meditation app. Maybe they're looking at a beautiful, spacious picture and all listening to some sound or saying, take a conscious breath, have a little reminder every two hours, take a conscious breath and bring spaciousness. Oh yes, spaciousness.

So the very same thing that otherwise clutters your mind can now unclutter your mind. It's possible. So I believe that is also going to grow now.

And it has to, because otherwise that technology could potentially drive humans completely insane, remove their ability to focus on anything for more than a few seconds. People create young people who are totally uncentered, have no spaciousness within, don't even communicate with humans anymore because they prefer to communicate digitally. So these things are important, but what you put out is important.

So always take into consideration whether this brings people to presence or whether it clutters somebody's mind. And perhaps you can combine. Of course, what you do needs to be also commercially viable.

So, but I believe you can combine the two. It's not necessarily a question of either it's commercially viable and it clutters people's minds or its presence. And we're not going to, we are going to go out of business.

It doesn't have to be like that. It's up to you to be creative. Use, the more still you are, the more creative insights you will have into, and you might get some amazing ideas of what is possible.

I can't tell you what is possible. I don't know enough about it. I know very little about it.

So, but you're in a wonderful position. So allow yourself to go deep enough within, because then it is then the creative ideas seem to come. And if you find a thing that is not only brings people to presence, but also helps your company to grow, then that then becomes a conscious business, which is wonderful.

It's challenging. Of course, it's challenging. So don't let all your attention be absorbed though by that kind of activity.

Take still, you still need to connect with nature. Take it off as much as possible away from there, connect with nature and then bring it back. What tends to happen is that these devices, people are never, they're still in bed and they're still doing stuff on it.

And that takes you over there at dinner and they're doing stuff on it. It breaks the relation with other people. You're at dinner, I can see, I see people in restaurants, the couple sitting at having dinner together and both are on their phones.

Now that's probably means they have known each other for a while. If it happens on the first date, that's the first date will probably be the last one. But if happens after they've known each other for two years, then it's almost a normal thing.

So they're not present with each other or then they exchange a few words and then she looks at the phone again and then he stares into space and then she's still on her phone. I've actually observed it. She's still on her phone and he's staring into space and then finally he gets out his phone too because he doesn't want to be staring into space.

And then I wonder, are they texting each other? Two good things that I learned that in some huge companies, I believe it might be VW in Germany. Well, they've had enough problems, but now they tell their employees after 6 p.m. they're not allowed to use the company phones anymore, not to deal with emails or anything. They need to get off. And that's a very wise thing because the more people's attention gets absorbed by this, the more confused and non-creative they become, the more cluttered their minds become, the more ineffective they're even at their work. Not to mention as human beings, their quality of life decreases enormously.

So don't give yourself spaces. Don't allow these things to take over your life. That's vitally important.

So it's wonderful that some big companies like that have this policy now, no emails or anything after 6 p.m. Well, that's wonderful. I talked a couple of years ago to Ariana Huffington who has a famous news website and has also written some books. And she describes in her latest book how her life deteriorated more and more, although she was making a lot of money.

And finally she collapsed and hit her head on her desk and it was complete breakdown. And now she has, for example, in her private life, and that's a good thing, she has this policy of no digital device in my bedroom. So in her bedroom, she still has books.

Sometimes she reads in bed, but it has to be a book, not a Kindle, not the iPad, not the iPhone, no digital device in my bedroom. And that's a good thing to have that, at least you have that space for yourself. So everybody needs to be really conscious of the addictive nature of these devices.

Of course, there are certain questions that do not require an answer. Not all answers are necessarily conceptual answers. They may, when there's the non-conceptual space, the answer may come as an intuition, as a realization that you may not yet be able to formulate conceptually.

You just suddenly know, but you can't explain what it is that you know. And that certainly applies to your sense of who you are, which is you suddenly, there's a deep knowing inside yourself, perhaps because you asked yourself the question, who am I? And that's a beautiful question, it creates the openness.

And then you start to investigate, your attention arises, who, we talked about that before, but this is here relevant in this context. You ask, who am I? Question mark.

And there is a kind of looking, but it's not looking visually. There is a kind of searching. There is, the attention arises, right now the attention arises, who am I?

And it's looking, and suddenly it realizes what you're looking for is in the looking. There may be periods in your life when paying attention to your dreams, you can learn certain things. There may be messages there.

And the more attention you give to your dreams, the more the dream life responds. Are we able to control our minds while sleeping? Although I'm able to be present much of my waking hours, from the minute I fall asleep to the minute I wake up, my mind is chattering away.

I assume the question is talking about his or her dream life from the minute I woke up to the minute I wake, I fall asleep to the minute I wake up, my mind is chattering away. Well, it won't be chattering away during dreamless sleep. Every human, as you know, has periods of dreamless sleep.

And there's no mind activity there, where the mind connects with a source. But you don't know that. And then I assume, then you mean that you have a very active dream life.

There's not much you can do except go into sleep with as much presence as you can. So in the last 15 minutes before sleep, at least, don't engage in mind activity, television, no, listening to the radio, no, even reading a book, no. No, go into the body or use any other access point for presence or just go into presence directly and go into sleep from presence.

Don't confuse, this may not be the case with you, but it could be the case with some people, don't confuse suppressing thought with being present. It is, for some people are able to suppress thought, which requires an effort, and you become a little contracted when you do that. So in other words, some people can will themselves to stop thinking, but it's not real presence.

You can't really will yourself into presence. It's not will, there's no contraction that goes with it, and it's not really, not even an effort. So let me just demonstrate, because words sometimes are not sufficient.

If you will yourself to stop thinking, the body contracts a bit and you're holding something in and you go like this, and you might even stop breathing for periods of time. So, and if you hold yourself tight and you stop breathing for periods of time, you may be able to stop thinking while you do that. Some people call that meditation.

And some people have perfected it to such a degree that they can sit for one or two hours like that. And that holds thought at bay. And then the moment you let go, come out of your meditation, the mind is more active than before because you were holding the lid on a boiling kettle.

You're holding the lid down. But real presence is simply a natural arising of awareness in which there's no contraction in the body and there's no willpower that is exerted, but presence is simply allowed to arise like this. And that's a state of openness.

In that state, thoughts tend to quickly dissolve. Very different from the state of closedness, the tight lid to that. So, make sure that presence is not brought about by an act of willpower, exertion of willpower because that's not presence.

Presence is powerful, but soft, gentle, open. Some people have an active dream life, other people less so. Of course, everybody dreams more or less.

Some people remember their dreams. Others never remember their, almost never remember. The more attention you give to your dreams after you wake up, the more you tend to dream.

And there may be something said for some time, there may be a period in a person's life where paying attention to your dreams can be helpful, such as it's practiced in Jungian therapy and so on. There may be periods in your life when paying attention to your dreams, you can learn certain things. There may be messages there.

And the more attention you give to your dreams, the more the dream life responds. But I believe that that is a period in a person's life. And then you move on.

And then dream life becomes of less importance or maybe still occasionally you might get a very insightful dream. The important practice is presence in daily life. Then eventually the rest will look after itself and dreams tend to turn more peaceful also.

And you might even lessen the amount of dreams that you have. Not that that matters really anymore. Dreams are less needed to give you important insights when you are present because in presence, insights tend to come to you directly.

So you tend to less need the intermediary of dream images less because you're already connected with the source of all insights and wisdom. Funny thing is, if you go to a Jungian analyst, after a while you begin to have Jungian dreams. Isn't that strange?

Not that that's not valid or valuable. That's how it works. Because life responds to your, or consciousness responds to your expectations.

And the universe is moving towards, continuously towards creativity. It delights in giving birth to form, to life forms. And that is reflected in yourself.

There is, you feel the desire to create, to manifest. Just one or two little addendums. I don't know if that's the plural of addendum to what we've been talking about earlier.

Manifestation and so on. It does work even for people who still have an ego. So it works better and becomes more beneficial for yourself and the rest of humanity.

If whatever it is that you want to manifest is motivated from a non-egoic place. But it's quite good to attain things that if the ego is still operating, the ego can sometimes, you can engage in sometimes helpful manifestation practices. They're not as powerful as when you are free of ego.

But whatever you achieve eventually is not going to fulfill the purpose of making you happy, complete, or fulfilled. Course in Miracles says you will always know that the ego was the motivating force whenever you have achieved something, it hasn't satisfied you. It can satisfy you briefly, but not for very long.

But I don't discourage anybody from practicing because if you find out things that don't satisfy you, then eventually you may realize that nothing out there can satisfy you because the state of ultimate satisfaction comes from the state of connectedness with being. Therefore, anything out there is simply an addition. Or as I like to call it, as I said, it's the skimmed milk, it's not the cream.

And the skimmed milk will never satisfy you. Sorry, if your anti-dairy is not a good analogy. Then the skimmed milk nor the cream will satisfy you, literally speaking.

But another little anecdote that came to me just now on the way here, I remembered a couple of weeks ago, there was a U.S. Open tennis championship. And for the women, it was won by a 19-year-old Canadian. Teenager, I suppose, still a teenager.

And she was virtually unknown before that. I was interested to hear in an interview, she said that she started practicing meditation at the age of 12 and also started practicing visualization and manifestation techniques. She also said that when she's on court playing tennis, she's absolutely and completely in the present moment.

And she said three years ago, she wrote herself a check to herself and she knew approximately the amount of money she would gain by gaining the U.S. Open. She was $3.5 million or so. She wrote herself this check, had carried it for three years.

And last week, she received the check. A few years ago, Jim Carey showed me, he pulled out of his wallet a check. I can't remember how much it was, that many, many years ago he had written to himself, but he carries it around.

I think it was $10 million. And for after a few years after writing it, he received that check for a movie. So you can play around with that.

But remember, it won't make you happy. It's the game of form. So, and it's sometimes good to achieve a few things that you wanted to achieve and then realize that they don't make you happy.

And some often it looks as if you had made a mistake because you might have dedicated several years to something that ultimately was not right for you, but you were successful and you realized, well, that's actually making me unhappy. So a good thing is to realize that something you have been doing was not your correct path. One of the most useful things in life is mistakes.

Make as many mistakes, as many as possible. And then eventually you learn what your path is. And don't be afraid of making mistakes.

And retrospectively, once you become present, all these things are no longer mistakes because without them, you wouldn't be here now. You would not have become present. You needed to go through this journey, which in many cases is many disappointments.

Sometimes there's a disappointment of not attaining what you wanted to attain. And at other times, it's a disappointment that you attained what you wanted to attain, but it did not fulfill its purpose of making you happy or any kinds of deep, lasting fulfillment. So it's wonderful to have these disappointments.

And sometimes instead of being, what should I do? People ask, should I do this or should I do that? Some people become paralyzed through the inability to make a decision because which way should I go?

Should I go to a monastery and dedicate my life totally to, or should I apply for a job on Wall Street? And you may also notice you have different poles. You may have one pole that is a reflection of two universal movements.

One is the movement towards creation of form. The universe is moving continuously towards creativity. It delights in giving birth to form, to life forms.

And that is reflected in yourself. There is perhaps the field, the desire to create, to manifest, to do things, to change as well, to participate, create something, leave a lasting mark or whatever it is. That's the outward movement of the universe.

And then that is the out-breath one could say. And then there's a reciprocal movement and that is the in-breath. There's also something in you that is more interested in being than in doing.

You feel the pull towards back to the source, back to awakening. And you may notice different times in your life or even at the same time in your life, both poles, and sometimes the poles can be so strong that you're paralyzed in the middle. This is why I gave the extreme examples of wanting to go to a monastery for the rest of your life and not anything to do.

And then the next day you think, oh, maybe it would be nice to participate and to become big and important and drive the big cars. And then Wall Street job looks suddenly enticing. So there's the doing and the being.

They need to be balanced in your life. Not everybody is completely in the middle.

Nobody is completely in the middle.

You're either a bit more in the being dimension or you're a bit more in the doing dimension or you're very much in the doing dimension. You're very active, but there's always a remnant of awareness still there. So you don't lose yourself completely in the doing.

And then the doing can be quite fruitful. And the other way is possible too that you're very much in the being dimension without completely losing your ability to act upon the world, without completely losing your ability to do whatever your particular mission or task is in life. So you can, you're most happy rooted in being, but you're still able to do, to fulfill your, to do your work, your task, whatever it is.

Now, I'm always more pulled towards the being dimension, as you might've noticed. In fact, I must admit because of that, I'm not totally, I'm not really that well balanced, but I've come to accept that because there's no perfection on the level of the form. Sometimes I'm a little dysfunctional in the doing realm, but it's been fine.

So the world hasn't collapsed because there's still 300 emails I haven't answered. The world is still there. And I always admire Oprah.

She has a seemingly infinite energy to do, and she's continuously, how is it possible to have so much energy? And yet she is not completely lost in the doing. There's always some anchor in the being dimension.

So she doesn't lose herself in the doing, although she's so much better at doing than I could ever be. She doesn't lose herself. So in a way, we compliment each other quite well.

I'm much more in the being, but I can do, but I'm not that great at it. But I only become good at doing when doing is concerned with teaching being. And that's also a kind of doing, I suppose.

I'm doing now, I'm speaking. So it's a kind of doing. And you yourself will have to see where you fit in in the scale of the doing and being.

You will just, almost everybody has the two present within. And you may have, remember from one of the books, the term frequency holder that I used. And frequency holders in past ages would have been called contemplatives.

And in past ages, they would have lived in monasteries, people who have very little interest in achieving anything in this world, who just want to go within and be present. And there are a few, it's a very relatively small percentage of human who are real frequency holders who would find it very hard to function in this world. There may be one or two of you here, it's possible.

If you find it very hard to function in this world and you're able to function within a small sphere of activity, if it's a simple thing, if you lived in a monastery or in a commune, you would be able to fulfill your daily tasks, that's fine. But you're not interested in doing anything beyond that. Our civilization has no place for these people, unfortunately.

So we don't have monasteries really. There are still some, but not many people go there anymore. And so if that's your calling, then somehow you will able to be able to recognize it within yourself, if that is the case, and find some way of, find a sphere of activity where you can do little things and be like gardening is a lovely thing that can easily be reconciled with being a frequency holder or working something with your hands, making something carpentry, making something that you have your own place, your own job, you don't want to respond to anybody. And so frequency holders also have an effect on the collective human consciousness.

Because you affect whatever your state of consciousness is, you will affect the totality of consciousness.

Thanks for the opportunity. Over a period of six months or so, sickness or illness saw my dog get gradually sicker and sicker to the point where he was in much, much pain. The x-rays and pills and probing did not find a cause that was treatable.

We had a family meeting and collectively we decided to have the vet end his life to ease his pain by injection. And you made a comment about a lady who felt more grief when she lost her dog than when her mother died. Although it sounds mean, I had the same uncontrolled times of tears for many weeks afterwards with the death of my little buddy.

I've considered the notion of ego and suffering and pain when remembering my companion in the now. I feel that in the final moments that I betrayed companionship. So my question, how do I remove the ego side of not having my buddy or companion around whilst not removing and dismissing the love I continue to hold for him?

I realise that he's physically gone, but like in a recent interview with a quantum scientist author, I wondered about the connection. I met a nice chap here who lost a partner and he said that your talks help. Now, of course, I'm not comparing that loss, but I'm hoping you might find or might contemplate and give pointers again to perhaps how I can let go of the form and then still remember the love part without getting sadder and getting attached.

Yes.

[Speaker 7] (3:51:59 - 3:52:00)
Hope that makes sense.

[Speaker 1] (3:52:00 - 4:00:51)
Yes, thank you. I understand. And the same question would apply also to if somebody close to you dies.

People who have not had a close connection with an animal like a dog may not understand you. Only people who have had that will understand that it can be as painful as losing a human. And we had the same experience when our dog passed away under similar circumstances.

And in the end, because she was suffering too much, we had to ask the vet to come back and she died peacefully. And she had a wonderful life, was loved and gave love for nine years. And her consciousness, she was a female, benefited greatly from being together with us, with humans and with us in particular.

And we benefited from her unconditional, continuously loving presence. She loved almost everybody. Same.

She loved almost every other dog or animal and almost every other human with very few exceptions. And whenever somebody, whether it's an animal that you are very close to or a human, the moment a person dies or an animal dies, you realize what you loved was not the physical form or the physical form may be beautiful and part of the loving experience. But the moment the life is gone, that which you loved is not there anymore.

Something inhabits the physical form that is the essence, the organizing principle, the intelligence, whatever you want to call it, behind that keeps the molecules and atoms of the physical form together and organizes, holds them together. Science has not, doesn't know about that yet. It only, life, it equates life with matter, but life is beyond that.

And ultimately life is consciousness. And the dog is an expression of the one consciousness, different from a human. The human is an expression of the one consciousness or any non-physical entity can only also be an expression of the one consciousness.

The one consciousness expressing itself at different levels of evolution. So it's like a, you could say a ray of sunlight. You are a ray of sunlight and I am, and the dog is, and the flower is, all consciousness incarnating in form.

So that does not die. The essence doesn't die. And the dog, it's not a dog.

I mean, we think we know what we are talking about when we say a dog. No, it is a being, an energy field, a being, an expression of the one consciousness, we think we know when we label things and call it something, we think we know what it is. We don't know what a dog is.

And just by calling it dog, it's still, it's just pseudo knowledge. We don't know what a human is. Just the fact that somebody has a name, we think you know what that is.

No, it's an unknown phenomenon. It's through the language gives us the illusion that we know, but we don't really know. And so here you have the dog, this wonderful presence closed in matter temporarily.

And something happened because consciousness evolves throughout the universe and evolves in billions of ways and forms, in and through billions of ways and forms. It's a magnificent, ultimately totally incomprehensible miracle, totally incomprehensible to the human mind, but consciousness is engaged in this evolutionary process, the one consciousness, and whatever suffers is the one consciousness. It's not a coincidence that there's a religion on this planet where the main image is a suffering God.

Isn't that strange? I mean, we have some explanation for it. We say, well, that was Jesus who died for this.

Okay, let go of that explanation and just remain with the fact that here, the main image of that religion is a suffering, basically, although you call it son of God or God, doesn't matter, a suffering God. And there's a deep significance to that. You don't have to be a Christian.

In fact, if you're a Christian, you probably don't want to go there where I'm going now. There's a deep significance there because this suffering God is everybody. It is the fundamental human archetype.

It's the suffering that every human and every life form, but in this case, a human, he represents the human, that every life form goes through when this life form assumes the form of the material form, the separate, seemingly separate material, physical vehicle, and is then defined in form. There were ancient teachings. They are quite close to the truth that say that consciousness fell into matter as if it were a mistake.

But I don't think, I think it's a good image to say that consciousness, there was a kind of fall of consciousness into matter, but it wasn't a mistake. There is no, there are no mistakes in the universe. So, and if there is a mistake, it has a higher purpose for learning.

And so it's not a mistake anymore. So that, for those years that you lived together, you both, your consciousness and the dog's consciousness, which are not really separate, although we just call them that, benefited greatly and grew, evolved through being together. So it helped the dog and it helped you.

It added something to your consciousness, that being together with that entity, with that being. And that is not lost. I cannot tell you in what way this, that which animated that entity that we call dog continues on its journey back to the source, but it continues on its journey as you continue on it, not as a person, not as a personal identity that survives, but an underlying energy field, the underlying consciousness that gives rise to this form, of course, continues on its journey and ultimately is never separate from its source. It just believes itself to be separate.

What is the power of the dog's consciousness?

[Speaker 1] (4:01:53 - 4:02:17)
What does it feel like to be you at this moment? There is a powerful sense of presence there, which has no particular form, and that's you. And at that level, you are connected with something far deeper and more powerful than the little entity.

[Speaker 8] (4:02:22 - 4:02:30)
Hello, Eckhart. I'm so honored to be here. And I'm a little bit nervous.

[Speaker 1] (4:02:31 - 4:02:34)
That's fine. Nothing wrong with that.

[Speaker 8] (4:02:35 - 4:03:34)
I really have two questions, and I'm wondering if I can sneak one in really quick, an extra one. I work at the University of New England, and we have a Center for Global Humanities, and we have speakers come, it's like a public forum for discussion of problems that humans face. And we'd be absolutely honored if you would speak there.

Where is that? It's located in Portland, Maine. Oh, at a university?

Of New England. Of New England? Yes.

Oh, okay. And I organize the speakers, so. Oh, thank you.

And we have a really good group of followers who would just be mesmerized by you, so I hope you would consider that.

[Speaker 1] (4:03:34 - 4:03:49)
Okay, please mention it to Steven or Greg, and give your contact. I can't make any promises, but I've never been to Portland, Maine. I've been to Portland, Oregon, but not to Portland, Maine.

[Speaker 8] (4:03:50 - 4:03:53)
Oh, well, we have some really beautiful places in Maine.

[Speaker 1] (4:03:53 - 4:03:57)

Yeah, yeah, thank you. And the next question?

[Speaker 8] (4:04:00 - 4:04:39)
I'm wondering, you talk a lot, well, you know, being present, and you talk about conditioning, and how we are conditioned, and I think about my own negative thinking, and how some of that is conditioning, and then you know people who, they just seem to have this old soul, this spirit, and so I wonder about nature versus nurture, and what your thoughts are. Is there like a short gene for anxiety that causes all, I guess for me, being in the present, when you have that fight or flight, like how do you tame that?

[Speaker 1] (4:04:43 - 4:04:44)
How do you?

[Speaker 8] (4:04:44 - 4:04:53)
How do you tame that, you know, the fight or flight, when your heart is racing, is it just doing it, and being in the present?

[Speaker 1] (4:04:54 - 4:04:58)
When you are anxious, we mean, or nervous?

[Speaker 8] (4:04:58 - 4:05:01)
Anxious, and then it causes all that negative thinking.

[Speaker 1] (4:05:01 - 4:35:49)
Negative thinking, how to go beyond that? Yes. Okay.

Well, there are various ways, which I sometimes call portals into the state of presence. I just, for the previous questioner, we could break three really similar questions. How do I get out of my mind?

For the previous questioner, I talked about feeling the inner energy field of the body, but for you, I will talk about a different portal, and that is a very universal portal. All portals are closely related to each other. So this portal is called the present moment, and present moment awareness or attention to the present moment more than anything else.

It's a redirecting of your attention. As soon as you discover within yourself, you realize that you are entering a non-harmonious state of consciousness, through irritation, upset, nervousness, worry, anxiety, anger, subsisting for a long period of time, any kind of dysfunctional, non-harmonious state of consciousness, or to describe it in other words, unhappiness in whatever form, because unhappiness can take many forms. The moment you realize that, and for you to realize that, already requires a small amount of awareness, because the people who are really deeply unhappy, almost as their normal state, and there are many in this world, they don't even know it, because they don't know anything else.

So there are millions of people running around this planet in a state of unhappiness, in whatever form this unhappiness takes, and if you ask them, are you unhappy? They say, no, I'm not unhappy. What are you talking about?

I'm not unhappy. It's like listening to some machine that goes on, even let's say a noisy refrigerator that is always running in your room. You don't know it's running until something happens to it, and it suddenly stops, and you say, what happened?

Suddenly that dreadful noise is gone, and suddenly it's so beautifully still here. I never knew there was that noise going on all the time. So for you to recognize that you are in a non-harmonious state, requires already a small amount of awareness, because it's only from the awareness.

So we need to presuppose there's already some presence there, but you can recognize that you don't want that. You don't want the disharmonious state. Then you go into present moment awareness.

The disharmonious state arises usually because you are not, you lose the present moment, and believe something else is more important than the present moment. It also often usually implies there's some form of resistance to something. So present moment awareness is a conscious redirecting of your attention, away from the thinking mind, into the direct perception of present moment reality.

And present moment reality starts with you coming to your senses. Coming to your senses means you sit, so let's say, let me act it out. You are trapped, and you go, oh.

Oh. And you get more and more unhappy, or anxious, or you can feel the anxiety, and life is a heaviness there, and then you notice, oh, do I want that? Do I need that?

Does it have a useful purpose? No. Redirect attention to the present moment.

Okay, where's the present moment? Okay, the present moment always starts with sense perception. You're looking.

Suddenly, what's around you? Look. Start, look carefully.

Then you go, oh. And to really look, you need to just be silent while you look. It's the silent looking.

And this is you beginning to enter the present moment, and then incorporate another sense. Listen. So you begin to take in what surrounds you in the present moment.

Become aware that you're breathing. It's all aspects of the present moment. Visual perception.

Be where you are. Be here fully. Be here now.

Inhabit the present moment. Be present to, because that's all there ever is. There is nothing else except the present.

The mind will tell you that there are many things much more important than the present moment, but it's a lie. It's a delusion, because there is nothing else. Even when your mind tells you there are many things more important than this moment, it can only tell you that in this moment.

So there is nothing. So give more importance to the present moment, and so bring attention to the present moment, first through sense perception, through becoming aware of your breathing. And then the next step can be, as you perceive the world around you, also feel the energy field inside the body at the same time.

So you're more and more, more and more present. And this is already a shift in consciousness. Very different from a few minutes before you were immersed in useless thinking.

So there's already a shift in consciousness happening. And you can notice the difference in the energy field as the consciousness shifts from being absorbed in thinking to becoming present. And so that is the, you're waking up, basically.

It's a process of waking up out of, not out of sleep, but out of what is like sleep, which is being totally immersed in the voice in the head, totally identified with the voice in the head. So you become present through sense perception, feel yourself breathing, and feel the inner body. And then you can go one step deeper into what is the actual, the deeper reality of the present moment, because the present moment has a surface appearance, which is fine.

It's often the first step. It's what is around you through sense perceptions. Then you go into the body, and then you go deeper and become aware that as you are perceiving the world around you, there is a presence in you, which you can sense as your very own being, through which you are perceiving.

Otherwise you couldn't, if you were not here as a conscious presence, you would not be able to perceive this room and the plants and the flowers and whatever is in this room. You would not be able to perceive it if you were not here as a consciousness. So whether what you are perceiving is a reality or a dream is immaterial.

The fact is, whether it's a dream or reality, it requires your presence, the light of your presence in which everything appears. Now, can you become aware of the light of presence or the presence directly in you? In other words, can you sense your own beingness right now as I'm talking about it?

I can feel it very strongly in me, the fact that I am. Before anything else arises in consciousness, I am. So I know that I am.

Not this or that, not that I am a man or a woman or have particular age or a particular function, deeper than that. Before you add anything to I am, the I am is there. Before you add any sense perceptions to it, the I am is there.

So another, give you another little pointer to point to that place. What does it feel like to be you in its most fundamental, its most essential way? What does it feel like to be you?

And as I said before, don't remember, no need to remember your personal history for that. In fact, that becomes an obstacle. It's nothing to do with anything that ever happened to you.

Nothing to do with past or future. It's only to do with this moment. What does it feel like to be you?

And he doesn't have a conceptual answer, so don't answer it. What does it feel like to be you at this moment? What is the innermost self?

What does it feel like? And you will notice that there is a powerful sense of presence there, which has no particular form. You can't say much about it or anything really about it.

And that's you. That's the being, the self, the I am, that I am. And at that level, you are connected with something far deeper and more powerful than the little entity, the physical entity or the psychological entity.

It is there where you're connected to something vast. You're connected to the very core of the universe. And every human is.

That's the Atman, in India it's called, the divine within. And the divine within connects you to the soul of the universe, the outer, the Brahman, the divine without. What does it feel like to be yourself?

And then you suddenly hear, yeah. And you can't say anything about it. It's just a presence.

It's the presence of consciousness. It's consciousness. Another way of putting it, as you can see, I give you many different pointers because certain pointers work better for certain people.

Another pointer now, you become conscious that you are conscious right now. You suddenly realize that you are conscious. That's an amazing realization.

And to put it even more accurately, because if I say you realize that you are conscious, in that, putting it like that, there's still some duality in there. I realize that I'm conscious. No, you realize that you are consciousness.

Better way of putting it. You realize that the essence of who you are, your sense of self is consciousness, not anything that happened ever or could or will happen ever. And then this, as you, at first, perhaps it comes to you in little glimpses, and then gradually it becomes the backdrop of your entire life.

That continuously, no matter what situations you go into, or whether you're thinking or not thinking, there's always a part of you in the background that knows that you are consciousness. You know yourself as consciousness. Consciousness knows itself is another way of putting it.

And that is the transcendent dimension that can always be there in the background of your life. And sometimes it will come into the foreground when it obliterates every thought. I'm talking from my personal life, the non-personal life.

It obliterates, it can, it obliterates every thought. And you just go, ah. You are nobody in particular when it comes to the forefront.

Then the human, it shines away the human dimension temporarily. And there's only the being. When spiritual teaching happens, the being takes over for me.

When spiritual teaching doesn't happen, the human, to some extent, comes back. But it doesn't obliterate the being. So there's always the being in the background there.

When I talk, and I'm talking about this because you will experience the same, and some of you already know exactly what I'm talking about, then the being talks, the words come, it shines through. So you will observe in your life as you become familiar with dancing between form and formlessness, between the human and the being, and bringing them together, you will notice that sometimes the being becomes very strong. When you get very still, you may be surrounded by nature and you go, or somebody comes to you who is in deep agony or suffering, and suddenly you find yourself becoming totally alert and still.

And perhaps you start even saying something to that person, which is just right for that moment. Then the being takes over. And then in other situations, you become the human takes over, and there's just 10% of being in some.

And that's fine. You still, there's still some awareness of consciousness, of space in you. This is a wonderful process.

And many of you are already beginning to experience that in your life, this shift from the mental self, the usual self, as I sometimes call it, the human form self, to the transcendent self, which the Buddhists call the no self, and other traditions call the higher self. These are just words. Somebody who has never had a glimpse of it, as many academics who study religions, they say there's a total contradiction between what the Hindus believe and what the Buddhists believe because the Buddhists say there's no self, and the Hindus say there's the higher self, totally different.

They don't realize they just use different words to talk about the same thing, or no thing. If they had a glimpse of it within themselves, they would know that, but because they only approach it to the conceptual mind, all they see is the differences. This is the practice.

And hopefully, as I've been talking, you and everybody here has, at least perhaps to some extent, been experiencing what it means to shift from the human to the deeper self, what I call the being self. Right now, even if you don't know it mentally, if you are attentive here, if you are not dying from boredom as you sit here listening to me, that means it's working for you. It's that simple.

But if your mind is saying, when the hell is he going to stop talking? That means it's not working for you. And, but you've probably left already by now.

If you're here and there's actually, there's something that captures your attention, that's the truth in you, that's the being level in you that recognizes itself and is coming forth. That's all it is. Because what I'm saying, otherwise, unless you have some access to it within yourself, what I'm saying otherwise would be absolutely boring and meaningless.

I'm not saying anything to just the mind. What the hell is he talking about? Being.

So you need to have some access to it in order to find this interesting or makes you feel more alive. Being here means, yes, you have it. It's there.

That's it. Even though your mind might say, do I really understand what he's talking about? If you enjoy being here and listening and something in you feels alive, then you understand it.

You don't need to understand it conceptually. You can't. You get it?

Thank you. Thank you. Is it really possible somehow to be present and work fast and nevertheless be conscious at the same time?

Interesting. Yes, it seems at first that when you are in presence, it almost seems to people that they are forced to do things slowly. And sometimes I'm described as slow by some people close to me.

And it's true. But sometimes I can be fast too. There are occasions.

There are occasions when I'm quite, when it is demanded, I can be fast. Its presence does not have to be slow. Remember the famous Zen saying, hurry slowly, hurry slowly.

Translated into Spanish, date prisa lentamente. I think that's a good translation. So what does that mean?

How can you go fast and yet be present at the same time? It has a lot to do with the focus of your attention. So you're working here.

If a large part of your attention is where you want to get to, the result you want to achieve, then you are working here. If you said, one can't really put it in numbers or percentages, but I'll do it anyway. So if 80% of your attention is where you need to be, I need to get this finished.

And in the meantime, it creates a tension in you. There's a mental projection where you need to go. And in the meantime, you're doing this in order to get there.

If you can be more present and have 80% of your attention reverse it, have 80% of the attention in the doing itself and 20% on where you want to get to, because you have to get somewhere, then you can work fast. And working fast with presence implies enjoyment of the activity. And not being present usually implies lack of enjoyment of the activity and the arising of stress or to be working with distaste or some kind of resistance.

And that's not good for anybody. It's not good for you, for your physical body, the people around you. So you can practice with, just practice with practical things or even pretend that you're in a hurry.

So if you want to have just a trial practice, pretend that you're in a hurry and you need to get these things. Or maybe you don't even need to pretend because it happens often enough in real life that you're in a hurry, you need to get ready in order to leave the house or go out. And is it possible to do what you have to do within that space of a few minutes or whatever time you need to get ready and do it actually being fully conscious of every movement and enjoy the energy behind it, but it's really getting in touch with your conscious attention.

Enjoy the energy that's behind the doing rather than mentally projecting to the future, do it. And that's hurry slowly is the meaning, is what that means. Running the same.

If you have to run to catch a plane or a train or a bus or whatever, you can run and be totally centered and yet run fast. So it's a different kind of running. It's a smooth, more smooth, less stressful running.

You will actually enjoy every step of it because you're not excessively focused on the next moment. And of course, realizing as the Zen master says, Zen is doing one thing at a time. That's another way of pointing to this way of acting and working.

Zen is doing one thing at a time, which means giving your fullest attention to whatever you're doing at this moment. Then you know peripherally, of course, why you're doing it, where you want to go to. But in the meantime, you do it.

And then you're running. And it's not a stressful running anymore. You're actually, and if you miss the plane, what does it matter?

It's just, you're standing somewhere else and you're sitting somewhere else, not on the plane. Does it? And you're breathing somewhere.

I need to be on that plane. Maybe not. So that's, it's a practice of hurrying slowly.

There's also a tendency in our civilization to create more deadlines than are actually necessary for good functioning of things. I find there are often people create for themselves organizations and so on, create unnecessarily tight deadlines that often do not allow things to mature. And so that's, this has to be done by tomorrow night.

Why? And that often they don't even publish us do that. Sometimes they bring out books.

Some books have a slow time to, they gradually acquire their readers by word of mouth and so on. And some publishers, many publishers say, if not enough books are sold in the first six months, it's never printed again. There's not even given a chance.

There are some TV series that may actually be quite good. And they have one run and say, not quite enough viewers, but it was so good. It was just allow things to mature a little bit.

Why the constant deadlines, but you may be trapped in an organization that does that, which more likely than not, because of this world functions. So it's ultimately, you may have to create your own organization or if the organization is flexible enough, you may be able to create a different environment. I'm famous for not meeting deadlines.

And the world hasn't collapsed for some reason. But if I were an employee, I would have lost my job many times or probably would have walked out unless I could have introduced a different way of doing things. If there's room for that, that's good.

Life is so, it's extremely challenging. And those challenges of life, all the things that continuously seem to almost, almost designed to make your life difficult. If you look at your life, yes, there are interludes of we can suddenly, you can take a sigh of relief and you can say, ah, I've made it, I have arrived.

Something good has happened and here I am. But never for very long. Quite soon, something else comes up to spoil that lovely place that you thought you had arrived at.

Sometimes it's the case with relationships. Sometimes it's the case with your profession or what you achieve there or your social status or whatever it may be or possessions you feel. I made it and then these interludes are never last for too long.

And then life brings you another big obstacle. Now deal with this. And that brings about suffering.

If you don't know the deeper dimension of who you are, your reaction to the problems of life, the difficulties of life, the challenges of life, the manifold tribulations of life, then you begin, you suffer.

[Speaker 3] (4:35:49 - 4:35:58)
You get, become unhappy because you don't understand why you're here.

[Speaker 1] (4:36:01 - 4:36:16)
You're not here to find your comfort zone, although when you do have comfort zones for a while, enjoy it while it lasts. It's fine. But you're not here to find your comfort zone.

[Speaker 3] (4:36:18 - 4:36:48)
You're here to, well, I will go so far as to say you're here to, to make you feel uncomfortable, uncomfortable to experience difficulties.

[Speaker 1] (4:36:50 - 4:56:14)
And of course you are experiencing difficulties both on a personal level and on a collective level. Some difficulties are of a collective kind, such as increasing in the time period that we are living now. The external challenges are increasing.

Sometimes externals seem to be, you live in a relatively stable external environment as far as the collective is concerned. Economically, socially, or politically, you live in a relatively ordered and stable environment. And then most of the challenges that come to you are of a more of a personal nature, challenges that concern your health, that concern your finances, that concern your relationships and your living situation.

And so then you have most of your challenges come on a personal level. You're then relatively, you live in a relatively stable external environment as in Western countries has been for quite some time now. There have been, there are other countries on the planet while the West lived in relative stability collectively.

Other countries, of course, have been in turmoil and still are in extreme turmoil, where the challenges that most people in those places face tend to be more of a collective kind and then of a personal kind when the economic situation is extremely bad, the political situation is extremely unstable, there's violence around that could threaten you at any moment. But now in the Western world, we are moving from a relatively stable collective environment to a more turbulent collective environment. And it's becoming more turbulent into various areas.

And we only see the beginning of it. Now, this is not something to be afraid of. It is part of a normal cycle of development, but it's the same for an individual as it is for the collective.

And there are cycles, both as an individual, you find most people find they move sometimes into a period of turbulence in their personal life, when they're not just facing one or two challenges, when many things seem to be happening at the same time, many seemingly negative things seem to be happening at the same time. You lose your job, then you lose your marriage, divorce, then you might not even keep your home, you're suddenly, and you fall ill. So this is not all that unusual for a person to have to experience a sudden influx of challenges on a personal level.

And if you don't experience that, if your life is so regular that you go, you have a job that is not challenging, but you have almost 100% job security and you go every day, you go to the same office, come back, always, perhaps you have no, you're not married or not having no relationships, you're not challenged there. A few people may be like that until finally they fall ill or something, eventually something happens to all of them. But if not, if several decades, you had a very ordered life, that would be the most undesirable thing because there would be no evolution of awareness of consciousness in you.

You would remain stuck in your relative comfort zone and without any awakening of consciousness, you would not evolve as a human being. You remain stagnant. It's only by being challenged that you evolve.

And we have to look at why that is. But before we look at that, let's look for a moment at the collective again. Problems seem to be arising one after another in the collective and we can't even foresee what the next problem is going to be.

Suddenly something comes over, who could have foreseen what the 2020 would bring? Nobody foresaw it. Well, I haven't seen any psychics that foretold.

Well, there might've been one, I don't think so. So the important thing is to realize that whether the challenge or the adversity whatever you want to call it, whether it is mostly of a personal nature or whether it's of a collective nature, well, that's also personal. Collective just means that a large number of people in any location experience the same kind of challenge that is a collective challenge.

Of course, it still affects you personally. So a large number of people experiencing the same kind of challenge at the same time, the same location. So this is what's happening to many people now and it's going to continue to happen.

Now, what is the relationship of this? The relationship between realizing your essential identity as the light of the world and the challenges that you're experiencing that are coming towards you right now, more of a collective kind, but also of personal kind. The same external circumstances are experienced very differently by one person who is still very unconscious and another person who is much more conscious, which means more in touch with that which is beyond the conditioned personality.

This person experiences the tribulations of this world, the difficulties very differently from a person who is still deeply trapped in ego. The person is still deeply trapped in egoic identity that any challenge becomes very, very threatening. Not only that, even the possibility of challenges that might happen or going to happen, things that are going to go wrong is already an enormous source of suffering for many people who are trapped in their egoic identity.

They're even at night, they're in bed at night or doesn't have to be in bed at night, but then they're thinking, how much worse is it going to get? The world situation, for example, how much worse is it going to get? And then you can play out scenarios and you're experiencing emotions that are the same emotions that you would have if these things were actually happening or worse, probably worse.

Very often the scenarios that the mind, the unobserved mind creates, and again, it's lack of consciousness, lack of the light of, not enough light of consciousness in you, then all we have is the unobserved mind that is creating an enormous amount of suffering for you of playing out scenarios that are not here. And not only that, also reacting to challenges that are here in a very limited way through the old conditioning of their minds. And this is a very important point.

For you to realize, for us to realize that the vital thing as we move into this period of turmoil, external turmoil, the way in which you experience this is largely determined by your state of consciousness. If it's purely reactive, then it's going to be extremely difficult. Not only that, the reactive consciousness, I pointed it out before, is largely dominated by fear.

And any action you take that is arising out of a fearful and very limited state of consciousness is ultimately not going to be helpful, and in most cases will make things worse. Any fear interferes with your ability to be aware, to be conscious, and even to think rationally. Even that becomes difficult when there's fear, because then your thinking is no longer your thinking, it's fear thinking.

Thinking becomes controlled by fear. It's all part of the egoic consciousness. So our greatest challenge does not come from outside, no matter what happens.

Our greatest challenge comes from the inside, from our conditioned minds. And that's an important realization. In any situation, be aware of, in any given moment, which ultimately means in the present moment, be aware of your state of consciousness here and now.

And make that your primary reality. If fear arises, ask yourself, how does it arise? Why am I fearful?

And then in most cases, you will realize that the fear is produced by your thinking, not by the situation. In fact, the situations you can always deal with, they happen in the present moment, and you face them in the present moment. But the fear is the realm where you're incapable of taking action while you're in a fearful state of consciousness.

Or if you take action, it's completely contaminated by fear, complete lack of wisdom. So the greatest challenge is how do I face the external situation? What action do I take is always secondary.

Action may sometimes be necessary. But prior to taking action, you need to be aware of your state of consciousness out of which the action arises. And if that state of consciousness is egoic, then the action is going to, in many cases, make matters even worse, amplify the problem.

You know that when you meet a very unconscious person, just a simple example from your personal dimension, when you meet a very unconscious person, a person who is very angry, whatever, and what they want to draw you into their anger, how do you, what is your state of consciousness? Is your state of consciousness determined by this unconscious person? In which case you will react and amplify that person's unconsciousness.

And you yourself becomes drawn into unconsciousness. That's unconscious action. The same person, if you're aware of your state of consciousness faced with an angry person, you can stay present and you immediately know, even without any thought, that this person is in the grip of unconscious mind patterns, emotional patterns, and you can, instead of becoming reactive, you become more alert and thereby this difficult person, instead of making you as unconscious as they are, can actually help you become more present. In any difficult situation, whether it's a small difficulty or bigger difficulty, you can go either way.

You can go into reactivity. And once you go into reactivity, this reactivity is a force within you that has taken possession of you and it can grow in you. And then you try to still solve the external situation through this cloud of negativity, of reactivity, and you will make it worse.

You will amplify it. You will create more enemies of whether in the form of human beings or antagonistic situations, so to speak, adverse circumstances. So how things evolve in the externals, this is connected to your state of consciousness.

So it's vitally important for humans. You can try it out in your own life. If you're non-reactive, but present, when you're faced with difficult situations or people, and this applies to anything, whether it's lack of money, many people experience now lack of income, relationship difficulty, turmoil in their environment, make it your primary concern to be responsible for your state of consciousness first.

You can choose presence in your daily life. One thing, yes, as I said, is notice when presence arises spontaneously, when you can look at a person. Suddenly a person appears there in front of you, and you look at a person.

And again, for two or three seconds, there's no interpretation yet. And sometimes in those two or three seconds, you can already sense something about that person. You have an intuitive perception of that person.

How deep that is, we don't know. Perhaps you can sense something to do with the personality, or you can send something deeper that is the actual underlying consciousness, the essence of that person. You can sense that when you are present, you can sense often the presence of the other before you start interpreting the other.

You can sense their inherent presence or consciousness beyond personality. You're also aware of personality, but beyond personality, you can sense, one could say, their beingness. And then the mind usually comes in and perhaps has something to say about the person and have some kind of judgment or whatever it may be.

And, but if you are able to catch them, always the first moment, catch the first moment before the mind comes in and become aware of that first moment, conscious, so it's just not, otherwise you overlook it. So often for people, the presence, many, many people, most people have brief moments of presence, but they don't know it, it's overlooked.

[Speaker 3] (4:56:16 - 4:56:21)
So one could say the most important thing is always overlooked.

[Speaker 1] (4:56:23 - 5:01:01)
And so once you know that and you become aware of this first moment, then it actually lasts longer. This is wonderful, for example, with human beings. You, another, you meet a human being, you look at him, her, whatever, and then you become aware that for the first two or three seconds, you're not judging, you're just sensing.

Through your own presence, you sense the presence of the other. And when you become aware of that, it can last much longer. You don't have to immediately compulsively judge the other.

And that's a wonderful thing. It changes the way in which you relate to other human beings. If you can refrain from judging, the compulsion isn't there anymore because there's something else that's deeper.

And that brings about a connectedness between humans that otherwise would not be there because the moment the mind starts judging, separation comes in, a sense of separation. And the other, the human being that's in front of you becomes the other. Now, that's very important because the other, if you are operating exclusively from a egoic state of consciousness, without any awareness of any transcendent dimension within yourself or the other, then the other, you depend on the other as an ego.

In the absence of awareness, you depend on the other to be as other as possible because you define your own identity through the other, what it is not. If you emphasize that the other is different from you as the otherness of the other, you emphasize it, that strengthens your own, the boundary around your own sense of identity as an egoic self. So the moment you can, there's the ego, the moment you can criticize another, gossip is often a very well-known phenomenon when you gossip about other people, you criticize them in some way, in some way they are defective in one way or another.

What that does is it strengthens your egoic sense of self. The boundary becomes more rigid and you feel stronger in your sense of self because you are, the moment you judge implicitly, you are superior to the person that you are judging, that's implied in judgment, you are obviously superior. It's not fully understood by the conscious mind, but it's an unconscious egoic strategy to strengthen your ultimately fictitious sense of self.

So that's a very, very common thing and it can be done on an individual basis. It can also be done on a collective basis. Then you see that you, if you identify with a collective conceptual image of who you are, which could be whatever, these days, it could be political, or these days very popular things are gender and race.

So you identify very strongly with that, then the other becomes, the ego needs to make the other as other as possible. It's a crazy process.

It happens because you are unconscious, which means you're not awake yet.

[Speaker 1] (5:01:24 - 5:47:18)
That's when you're in the grip of these patterns, inherited, conditioned mind patterns. You're in the grip of them. And they have you in their grip and you don't even know it because you don't, you're so identified with the mind patterns that you are the mind patterns.

In other words, spiritually speaking, you are asleep. Who you truly are, the essence of who you are is not really there. Or very briefly, it has maybe little, then it's back into the sleep state.

Spiritually speaking, the sleep state is total identification with a stream of thinking, which continuously compares, classifies, judges everything. So suffering is one way and voluntary, entering presence voluntarily is a little easier. But you're only ready to do that now because you have had the suffering that you have had.

It has taken you to this point where you are, you realize the possibility of voluntarily entering by choice, a different state of consciousness. This possibility has arisen in you, which is an enormous thing in human evolution, where you are, in the past evolution has happened very, very slowly, a gradual increase in consciousness through multiple life forms over millions of years. And now for the first time, a life form can consciously cooperate in entering a new state, a new evolutionary stage, a new state of consciousness.

But you needed the suffering, it has had a function. And many of you know that you would not be here if you had not gone through states of unhappiness and varying degrees of suffering. So let's be really thankful.

You need suffering until you don't. And you have reached a point of realization where you don't need more suffering for your further, the evolution of your consciousness. But in case you do, life will give it to you.

You will continue, I'm not promising, I'm not telling you, you will not experience further challenges in life. The difference, however, is as presence arises more and more, you're not transforming the challenges of life into unhappiness and into an unhappy identity. You're not transforming the challenges of life into an unhappy self, a victim self, an angry self, a complaining self, a heavy self, a very dense self, a self that if you were conscious, you would never want to live with.

Unawakened people, in many cases, live with an entity, this mind-made self, that is so unpleasant, they would have left it long ago if that were a person that they live with. They would have said, no way, I'm out of here. I'm not living with you, I don't want to live with you.

You make me unhappy all the time. And in a way, many of you have reached that point where you realized something else is possible. There is another way.

And so that was the beginning of your awakening. For today's meditation, I'd like to have a little bit more silence. I believe we are ready for that, at least most of you.

I'd just like to explain how this works in the context of our technology here. When I'm not speaking, all you do is you look at the screen and you look at the image on the screen. My job is to be here in the state of presence, which means to hold the state of not thinking.

And as you look at me, please realize that you're not really looking at a person. It looks like a person, but when there's no thinking, no form consciousness, no concepts, where is the person? The person is generated by thought.

So when there is no thought, all there is is something that's prior to the person, more fundamental, more basic, more real, formless, just consciousness. So it can be helpful then if you're receptive to be with someone, even if it's only through the means of technology, to be with someone who is in that state of no thought, which means above thinking, not below thinking, because that apparent person has become transparent to the light of consciousness. And somehow if there's even the slightest opening in you to that, you can sense that there is something there that is deeper than the person.

In fact, the person becomes irrelevant. So, but that in you that senses that is of the same frequency is consciousness itself. So if you even have the slightest glimpse of there's something that transcends the person when you look at the image on the screen, you're right.

But at that moment, you have already transcended to some extent your own person, person being form identity, psychological form identity. Consists of thoughts and images. So it may look at first a little weird as the human mind would tell you to be staring at a person on the screen who is staring back at you.

And perhaps once or twice, a thought will come into your head, this is weird. That's just a thought. It's not really weird.

It's much more weird to be trapped in your mental noise for most of your life and to live on the basis of that, which is a false sense of identity. So what you endeavor is to, as you look at the screen and don't wait for me to say, let's start now. Let's consider that we've already started with our silent meditation because silence underlies the words.

That is in between the words. All you need to do then, it's not doing at all really, is you're looking at the screen and you're aware of the sense perception and you're aware that you're aware. You can sense the presence that you are as you look at the screen.

So, and you're alert, you're aware that there is awareness. Otherwise you wouldn't be seeing anything or hearing anything. So the prerequisite for any sense perception is awareness, consciousness.

So you become aware of that in yourself. And what the technology here provides is a reflection of the consciousness that you are, a helpful reflection. That's all.

When thought comes in, you realize a thought has arisen and you watch it like a cloud and then it drifts past and there's a space again. Don't believe when any thought tells you as we sit here. Don't believe the thought tells you that this thought is more important than sitting here in presence.

Thought likes to do that. Comes in to think about this. No, you've decided that the most important thing as you sit here is to be just present.

If you like, you can think for the rest of the day when we finish here. Plenty of time for thinking. But this is a time for not thinking, rising above thinking.

Looking at the image on the screen will help you to stay above thinking. When you're feeling drowsy or sleepy, then it's a sign you're falling below thinking. So continuously looking at the image helps you to stay alert, connects you with alertness.

Those of you who find it hard to sit here in presence and whose mind is still very active, thinking, feel the inner body as you sit here. Feel the aliveness in the body as you sit and look at the screen. Feel the aliveness in your hands, your feet, your legs, your arms.

There's a field of aliveness, the life within the body. Feel that in the background. That takes attention away from thinking.

And then you have two things. You have the sense perception that is helpful, takes attention away from thinking, and the connection with the inner body. And those two should keep your mind fairly clear if you're able to hold attention there.

It's no effort, just effortless. Close your eyes for a moment. Presence, spacious awareness, aliveness, life itself, the life that you are, consciousness.

Open your eyes, present, within and without. Look at your left or right hand for a moment. See the hand, the skin, the texture.

How it reflects the light without thinking, just present awareness. Sense perception appearing in the field of awareness. Looking back at the screen, awareness remains.

What appears changes. That's sense perception form. Look away for a moment.

Any object where you're sitting in the room, no matter what it is, look at it for a moment. Take in its shape, its color. No mental labeling.

Just an aware presence behind the sense perception. Amazing shift from continuously labeling everything and just being there as the presence. Look back at the screen.

Space of awareness remains. This is how you gradually become free of being dominated by the person. Of course, you're still a person in your daily life, but there's something more vital and more powerful that arises from behind the person and begins to shine through the person.

Everything else is meaningless in this life. If that doesn't happen in your life, what's the point? It means evolution hasn't happened for you.

No, it doesn't matter to the universe, but to the little entity, it does. In ultimate terms, it doesn't matter at all, only in relative terms. Of course, in miracles, there's delay.

Does not matter in eternity, but it is tragic in time. Life is not meant to be continuously challenging, to bring up to pit obstacles in my path, so it seems quite often. And to say, well, what is wrong with life?

And some people take it personally. They say, what's wrong with my life? There's something very wrong with me.

Or they take it personally and say, there's some God or God who must dislike me because I encounter one obstacle after another. And so that is an underlying assumption in many people's mind, but that is delusional because these challenges are meant to be there. They are an essential part of being here for a little while in this dimension.

And if it were not for the challenges of everyday life, big and small, there would be no awakening of consciousness. So through the pressure of challenges, we are being awakened. And not only humans, every life form experiences life as precarious and fragile and often difficult.

Many obstacles have to be overcome, not only for humans, but for all other life forms. Even a blade of grass has to be overcome obstacle until it finally comes up out of the soil. And it's every animal.

So every bird can see how alert birds are when you observe a bird. You could say the bird looks really present and compared to many humans, not you, the bird is actually very present. When you observe a bird, you see the bird goes like, very present.

But it's been like that for hundreds of thousands of million years. It has to be alert because if this alertness is there, it has survived. This has been generated over thousands and hundreds of thousands of years, that alertness, all the birds that were not alert, they disappeared.

They got eaten up. You have to, the bird was, the livelihood, the survival of each individual bird is continuously precarious and the bird has to be alert. So the bird is being forced into that state of alertness.

This is just one little example. And I know from my own life and many of you know from your life that you have gone through a certain amount of suffering in life. There were challenges, there were problems.

You had to confront them. Unhappiness arose. And at some point, something shifted in you.

At some point, there was a deepening. There was an awakening. And at some point you realized that the greater part of, to use a generic term, suffering or unhappiness in your life, which unhappiness is huge in the human consciousness, a huge weight in human consciousness, the greater part of unhappiness actually arises through a dysfunctional use of your mind and not so much the circumstances of your life.

And that's an interesting realization that it's the unhappiness that you experience, even if there are big challenges, small or big, the greater part of the unhappiness you experience arises through certain kinds of narrative in your mind, certain stories that you tell yourself about life, other people, or yourself. And that's an interesting realization which you can verify at any time tomorrow, if you haven't done it yet, and is the moment slightest irritation arises in a situation, anger arises, discomfort arises, ask yourself, what is causing this? And the first answer will be, well, obviously this rude person causes me to be irritated and angry, or this situation that I'm stuck in, the place where I live causes me to be irritated or angry, or a certain condition that my body is experiencing is causing me to be anxious or sad or angry that something has happened to me.

And so there's always, the first thing is you see the cause is there, there, there, that's the cause. And on the surface level, this is perfectly true, but that's only the surface level. And then, so next, tomorrow, when you encounter the first little thing that brings about perhaps a minor form of unhappiness in whatever form, be very alert like the bird, and say, okay, where does it come from, this situation?

I'm, let's say I'm stuck in the, I'm stuck at the airport, my flight's been canceled. This is a small, little situation, not a huge problem, but sometimes you might make it into a huge problem, the mind, so you're there and you can feel anxious, angry, irritated, ultimately you're suffering, it's a small form of suffering. So you say, well, this situation is, now ask yourself, if I did not add any narrative to this situation that I'm finding myself in, how would I experience this situation?

Narrative meaning certain thoughts that go through your mind that refer to the situation. Now, if I did not add the, ultimately, since we are using an airport analogy or example, this narrative you could consider to be excess baggage that you carry around and you carry it around in your life, you don't know it, and that becomes the burden of me. It becomes a burden of self, of a sense of a heavy sense of self, and you start discovering it in a little situation, like at the airport, you start discovering already the burden of yourself.

How would I experience this situation without the excess baggage of my narrative with which I judge the situation? Okay, you have plenty of time because your flight has been canceled, so you can experiment. Say, okay, now I'm here, now I am letting go of the narrative.

Nothing has changed in the situation. External situation is still the same. On the board, it says canceled, or maybe you're standing and there's a huge lineup, 100 people or more, which before, this was a terrible situation.

You're finding yourself absolutely dreadful. This airline is an awful, awful airline. That's all gone because now you're experimenting with experiencing the situation without the narrative.

So you remove the narrative. What remains then is the naked, so to speak, the bare, naked is-ness of that moment. The is-ness, the simple is-ness of the present moment.

And nothing has changed externally, but you have put down or let go of the excess baggage in your mind. And what is it that you're now experiencing? You're experiencing your body standing there.

You experience your sense perceptions. You look around, you listen to whatever sounds may be there, whatever other sense perceptions may be there. And you've realized that you're breathing.

Oh, that's interesting. I'm breathing. And then you say, okay, this isn't as bad as I thought it was.

Actually, without the narrative, I feel alive, I feel I'm breathing. And I might, I'm even beginning to feel a little bit of aliveness pervading my body in this moment. I can feel that there's an aliveness in every cell of the body that pervades.

I feel alive, I'm breathing. And you don't even need to tell yourself that. You simply notice it.

You notice whatever sense perception is here in the present moment. And suddenly you're experiencing the same situation as no longer something that causes you suffering because you have removed the mental narrative. If somebody, you can go up to somebody and say, do you know who you are?

If they say yes, that probably means they don't because they only know that which they can name conceptually and they think that's it. But if they say no, but you have to listen to see what kind of no that is, whether it's a no that comes, that is a no that says, I don't know, but I really should know. No, I don't, I have no idea.

But if there is another no, which is a no of the Zen master who says, I have no idea who I am. And then he says, do you know who you are? No.

And this is the most wonderful thing to find that place in yourself that you cannot really know conceptually. There's nothing really you can say about it. One could try and say it's very still or something, but it's limited too.

And that is, that's the place of where you really know who you are non-conceptually, but from the level of concept, from a perspective of concepts, you don't know who you are anymore. So you become comfortable. On one level, you know who you are.

Obviously, you have a name and a past and a history and relationships and a work situation and a home situation and a health situation. On that level, of course, you know who you are. But on the deeper level, you have to become comfortable with not knowing who you are.

And only then can you access the deeper level of who you are. If you're uncomfortable with not knowing who you are, you will immediately jump out of that stillness and take refuge in the mind and start thinking about your life again. I must remember who I am.

Some people have a fear of going to that place of not knowing who they are. That place of not knowing who they are, by the way, also includes when you're very deeply in that, and you also don't know who other people are conceptually, and you become comfortable, not continuously, there may be a time and a place for knowing people conceptually, but you can never relate deeply to another person if the dimension of depth is missing and all you're relating with is on the dimension of mental judgments of the other person.

So then you don't know them. So you become comfortable with not knowing who you are, and that includes not knowing who another person is and being comfortable with meeting a person and having no judgments in your mind, no conceptual thoughts about who or what kind of a person that is. And sometimes you can sense things about that person and without anything formulating in your mind.

And there you can connect on that deeper level. So becoming comfortable with not knowing, just like, as I said before, Socrates, the very foundation for all his teachings is he has no idea to start with. The starting point for, and Socrates, a great philosopher, the starting point for his philosophy, as he himself said, I am the wisest of all men because I am the only one who knows that he knows nothing.

What that really means is he is comfortable with a place of not knowing anything. And that place arises in the moment somebody asks him a question. What about this?

The answer doesn't start with some knowledge that he already has accumulated in his mind. The answer starts with not knowing and being comfortable with not knowing. And then at some point, we usually, with Socrates, he starts to ask questions.

He still doesn't know, but out of this place of not knowing comes a question. And then he listens to the answer. And then he still doesn't know.

And then another question comes. And another. Not as it's reported in Plato, as if he already knew he's just playing around with people.

No, I know that because I know how that kind of discourse arises. And it's a wonderful place to become comfortable with not knowing who you are or not knowing an answer or not having an opinion. At some point, you might have an opinion and sometimes opinions are fine.

You play around with opinions, not identifying with opinion, which is a mental position, but seeing that it's just a mental position that I happen to believe that this political party is better for the country than that political party. It doesn't mean you give up all that totally. You can still have those beliefs in your mind without being identified with the beliefs, which means you're not going to shout at people who have a different belief.

So not knowing who you are is a wonderful place. And because then you become the presence. Just spacious presence.

And that can be in your life, in the background of your life, all the time, in between your thoughts, when you're looking at something, when you're listening to someone, be the space. You don't need to know the next thing you're going to say. A good practice would be to, maybe one day we'll practice it today.

There may not be enough time. Invite, I could invite somebody up on the stage and say, no, sit there and see what happens and become comfortable with not knowing what to say. For many people, it would be a nightmare.

Some people have had nightmares where suddenly the curtain opens and they're on stage and there are 2000 people there and you don't know your lines. And public speaking, therefore, for many, there are many people for whom public speaking is the most stressful thing ever. Yeah.

If they could go into that space of becoming comfortable with not knowing and just being the presence and for a while they would say nothing and then the word, some words would come and they might be words like, look, I have no idea what's going to come out of my mouth. And that's fine. Of course, I can't tell you what else will come because it's not my situation at the moment.

Well, it is continuously mine, but you have to experience that for yourself. Mm. So in that not knowing, there is a deep knowing because you're going to the source of all knowing.

So you can know anything through concepts or through the presence that is deeper than concepts. And the two may operate in your life. If you are balanced, then you go into a forest, walk through a forest.

And for a while you might say, oh, that's such and such a tree or this forest. You might have knowledge about this forest and the birds, whatever you see in it. And to apply it, you look at it through concepts.

You can talk about it. And then the time may come when you let go of that. And now you're looking at the same tree that before you named mentally, you're looking at the same tree without naming it.

And then you take in the totality of the forest without naming it. And it's only then that you can know the forest on a level that's deeper than concept. You would miss the essence of the forest if you only apply concepts to your sense perceptions and you look at the forest through the veil of your concept conceptualizations.

But if you let go of concepts and you have the presence, then you can sense something that I would, can't really be put into words, but it's the aliveness of the forest. This mind made sense of self is also much more focused on the negative than the positive. To be free, you awaken to who you are beyond your history and your life situation.

Unconditional love towards all humans is the transcendent love. You love the formless, you recognize the formless as yourself in the other. Yeah.

[Speaker 2] (5:47:22 - 5:47:23)
Hi.

[Speaker 9] (5:47:24 - 5:48:55)
First of all, greetings from your fans in Poland. I promised them to tell that. We all have the very heavy pain bodies there.

So you're... As you probably know. So your teachings is quite a salvation.

And my question is again the same topic like a one track mind. Actually that question about sex triggered the question in my mind because I've just listened several times to the autobiography of a yogi, of Paramahansa Yogananda, amazing book. And those spiritual masters, they explain very clearly and logically all kinds of things, including the symbolism of the Old Testament.

And according to them, that snake is the nerve running through the spinal cord and activates the sex nerve. And the forbidden fruit was sex because it was predictable that if humans tried that, it would cause the fall of the humankind from pretty much a god on earth with powerful mind to the level of animal. So my question is, do you think that sexual life actually is an obstacle in spiritual unfoldment if someone wants to attain a high level?

Oh, thank you. In many cases, it is an obstacle to the awakening consciousness, but in essence, it is not, it doesn't have to be an obstacle. It's not, it can be transcended, which means you don't eliminate it, but there's a much vaster hole in which it loses its importance.

So you transcend it rather than eliminate it. The elimination of it, I would not recommend except for very rare individuals for who that is right. So it's transcendence rather than elimination.

But to me, the beginning of the fall, I would interpret somewhat differently from the Bible as the beginning of the identification with the mind, the human mind, the knowledge, the eating of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, the differentiation of conceptual thinking coming in. But that's one can interpret it in many ways. For most humans, I would say, do not attempt except with, unless you are one of the exceptions, do not attempt to suppress or eliminate sexuality, but bring awareness to it, and then it's no longer addictive.

And then it may fall away for some people, it then falls away by itself, but you don't need to make an effort.

[Speaker 9] (5:50:43 - 5:51:01)
And that's what made me feel bad. That because, you know, that there is that union between a man and a woman, and there's a lot of beauty in that. So actually I was sort of turned off by that information in the autobiography of a yogi and said, hmm.

[Speaker 1] (5:51:02 - 5:51:36)
Well, he still, he came from an ancient Indian ascetic tradition and there's a place for everything. So for most, for Westerners especially, but probably even for Easterners, it's really awareness rather than elimination of something that is so powerfully built into the human organism and use it for awakening rather than for letting it draw you to unconsciousness. Thank you.

[Speaker 5] (5:51:37 - 5:52:30)
My question is on sexuality and like, yeah. I would say instinctive impulse. When I see, for example, a woman jogging, I tend to look most times and I look.

And also when the lady is beautiful inside also, how do I balance not getting too lost in the little play?

[Speaker 1] (5:52:31 - 6:12:54)
You know, that's my question. Okay. Thank you.

I know what you mean. You may have heard of something called tantra. It's a, that means basically bringing consciousness into something that is usually unconscious.

For example, sexuality. I would even include other things like eating, things that tend to pull you into unconsciousness. I don't know if you've observed some people who the moment they start eating, they become quite unconscious, relatively speaking.

And then when they stop eating, there's a bit more consciousness again, they go. And then they wake up. So eating consciously would be bringing some awareness into that.

Tantra is traditionally used to point to the possibility of bringing consciousness into sex. And sex starts the moment you're looking at a woman jogging. And basically what tantra means is not to make it into a means to an end, not to look to the next moment and the one after that, the final moment of man woman union, always being orgasm, but sex starts with looking and to be at every moment, honor the moment and enjoy the moment for what it is, which is there's nothing wrong when your body, mind, organism gets drawn to that.

You know that this is happening. If you don't know that this is happening, you become the reaction and then you are lost. But if you know that this is happening, you can actually allow yourself to be drawn.

You can look and enjoy just looking. There's no need to go beyond that. Can you be, I enjoy looking at all kinds of humans, including women or men, it doesn't really matter.

I enjoy the human form. I like to be sometimes sit in a cafe in a corner and simply watch the human beings come in, leave. Some are old, some are young, some are beautiful, some are not so beautiful.

They're all beautiful inside, but on the external, the variety of the human form is just quite wonderful to watch. And if you don't want anything, the question is whether the attraction turns into wanting. The attraction is the attention moves there and it's unconscious.

And then the moment comes when you realize that the attention has moved there. There's no need for you, as some spiritual additions might tell you, you must not look at a woman. If the moment you notice your attention moving, to look somewhere else.

By denying it, you really intensify ultimately the unconscious urge to look. There's even in Buddhist monasteries, the monk, when I first visited a monastery, I could see a woman was trying to give a monk something, a pencil or something. And he said, I'm sorry, I can't take it from you.

You have to put it on the table and then I'll take it. I'm not allowed to take something from a woman. And this is how, because the power of sexuality was so strong that for a long time in the past, people were afraid of it because you can't control yourself.

If you even just take something, there might be a flash of energy coming. Who knows what will happen next? If you just take a pencil from a woman, what's going to happen next?

So to enjoy, you can also, for Tantra, you can enjoy touching someone. There's no need to, it's all really connected with the self-sufficiency of the present moment and not always needing, wanting the end result. And that includes any kind of sexual attraction.

If you bring in present moment living into normal life, you can also practice it there where you simply enjoy whatever phenomenon is arising at this moment for what it is instead of it becoming some kind of wanting something in the future, wanting more. Observe the impulse. And if you get lost in it, then you have to wait until you wake up and then can observe yourself running after her.

I remember I had a friend in England many, many years ago who suddenly became very interested in spirituality and asked very deep questions. And a couple of times we were sitting somewhere outside in a park or cafe and I was talking to him. That was my early form of teaching, individuals coming and asking questions.

And I observed a couple of times he was listening to me, which was so important to him, just this vital question was being answered. And suddenly I could see him, he was looking somewhere else behind me. And I thought, what's going on?

He stopped listening. And then I looked around and there was a woman sitting there behind and he, spirituality was so important for him. But then something else came up that was even more powerful at that time.

And that was the attraction. And then I pointed it out and he woke, he suddenly, he was like a man waking up from sleep or from a dream. Oh, it was completely lost.

And then it happened again. And after that, he was able to be aware of that pull. If you're aware of that pull, you are not the pull.

You're not in the grip of that pull. It's nature. If the pull is part of the physical nature, but then you're not aware.

If you are not aware, you become the pull and it dominates the next thing that you do. You may run after, or you may try to approach her, or you may lose yourself in fantasizing for the next 30 minutes. All kinds of things happen.

If you become the pull, the pull becomes action or it becomes thought. So are you the pull that you can sense or are you the knower, the one that knows that this is happening? And if you can be the knower, you can allow yourself or your body, your physical organism to experience whatever is happening at this moment without losing yourself in that.

It's a spiritual practice. So I recommend that you go into a place where you're likely to encounter many beautiful women. I don't know where that would be, the beach or the...

And practice, sit there and let your attention be pulled. Wonderful practice. And women can do it with men or with other women or men with men, it doesn't matter.

The important thing is, can you be the awareness of what's happening or are you losing yourself in the pull? So as a practice, just be there, space for the impulse, space for the attraction without believing that you need to change something. If you suppress it, I don't think it's the most skillful thing to do, to actually say, I must not look because it's something that will build up inside you, it will make it even more powerful.

And it will not become obsessive, the awareness will deepen as you practice that. And then you have a choice, there is always a choice. It doesn't mean you cannot act, you can act from the awareness.

You can still, if you want to meet someone, you can still approach her and say, I don't know what, nothing comes to mind. That's why I've never done it. It has arisen in the past and the question, what can I say?

Don't know, but you may be better at it, so. No. If let's say we love all, if let's say we all love each other unconditionally, how can I decide who is to be my partner?

Is this based on physical attraction? Isn't this a contradiction with this higher state of consciousness? Okay, so if you love everybody unconditionally, how can you possibly decide who is going to be your partner?

That's the question. Because it seems then there's no preference anymore. Or if it's physical attraction, isn't there a contradiction?

If you're in a higher state of consciousness, then shouldn't or not be physically attracted to anybody? Is that the implication in the question? Well, the love we're talking about, the unconditional love towards human beings and life forms, is a, is a, let's see, what is it that you love in the other when you love unconditionally?

You don't love their physical form. You don't love their psychological form, their personality. The unconditional love goes deeper.

It's a transcendent love that what you love is not the form, but the formless essence of the other. And you can only love that when you can sense within yourself that dimension of formless, when you can be still and present enough and then look at another human being. And then you can recognize something.

What you recognize is, for lack of a better word, the consciousness, which is the essence of the other human, as it is the essence of who you are. Consciousness prior to the consciousness being born into some kind of form, personality, which is there, and the physical form, which is there. But in every being, there is still the dimension of consciousness that is prior to form.

Although the human being has become form, consciousness assumed form has incarnated, so to speak. But that doesn't mean that the formless and timeless consciousness is lost. It's still there as the essence.

And when you can sense it in yourself, you can sense it because you are still and present enough. From that dimension in yourself, you can sense it in the other, and that is love. It's basically a recognition that, in essence, the other is the same as you.

But then, of course, there's always, that is the transcendent dimension to every human being. And in addition to that transcendent dimension, there is a form identity of every human being. Every human being has a physical form and an emotional form and a mental form.

That's the inner, that's the personality. So the physical appearance and the personality consisting of mental, emotional, conditioning, and so on. So there are the two levels.

The unconditional love towards all humans is the transcendent love. You love the formless, you recognize the formless as yourself in the other. But then you are still here as a form, too, and the form may respond to another form, the physical.

There can be physical attraction. It is not incompatible with a transcendent realization, although some ancient or not so ancient traditions may tell you that. It is not incompatible.

You can have physical attraction on the level of form. You can also have an attraction towards the mental, emotional form of that other human being because it resonates with something in your own form. So that means you may be drawn to another human being physically or mentally, emotionally, because you resonate with that.

And then perhaps you enter into a relationship. So the different levels operate. The transcendent remains.

It can become obscured through excessive attachment, of course, to the mental or emotional dimension in the other. So in a relationship, the realization of essence, identity, as I sometimes call it, can become obscured when form identity takes over completely, which could happen through the pain body, which could happen through emotional, getting identified with arising emotions and losing touch with the transcendent. Yes, that can happen, but it's not incompatible.

Everybody's challenge is to balance the two in their lives, in their relationships, to relate to the other on the transcendent level. And at the same time, if it's there on an emotional, mental, physical level. Without the transcendent dimension in a relationship, it's not ultimately satisfying and it cannot really, truly work for long if the transcendent is missing completely in a relationship.

It's physical attraction and attraction between personalities is not enough to keep it going. Can keep going for a while, but then it becomes frustrating and you see more and more of the limitations of the other person. And the other person sees more and more of your limitations, which are always there.

And when you live together, it becomes very obvious that the other person has his or her limitations. Now, as long as the realization of the transcendent dimension is there, that fine, those limitations can exist within the space of the transcendent and they're not destructive of the relationship. Now, you may find with, it's sometimes easier to have this unconditional love towards people that you don't know so well than people easier than towards people that with whom you share a lot of past.

Because they are the past, the form identity of that person can be very powerfully there in your mind, in your interaction. So that's the challenge of being present with family members, parents, grown up children, and so on. And of course, as you know, Ram Das recommends, if you think you're enlightened as a test, he recommends that you spend two weeks with your parents.

And that will tell you whether you're really enlightened or not. Go and spend two weeks, stay with your parents for two weeks. In most cases, that is a good test, unless your parents are enlightened, in which case there's not much point in using it.

It doesn't tell you anything.

[Speaker 12] (6:12:56 - 6:13:52)
If one is in the surrendered state of consciousness, can they, I've heard teachings from my own experience and from just reading, with romantic love, there can be, I need you, behavioral expectations. And then there's like the selfless kind of love where there are no behavioral expectations and you still love the person. My question is, if you're in the surrendered state of consciousness, if you're completely surrendered to what is, do you still have that kind of selfless love for a specific person romantically?

Or does that kind of dissolve? Or is it just only the universal, which is wonderful, the universal love? It's amazing.

Wow. But can you also have that specific kind of love? Okay.

Thank you.

[Speaker 1] (6:13:54 - 6:23:30)
So the question you're basically asking, would you then love everybody equally so there would not be one person singled out as special, as the Course in Miracles calls it special relationship, which the Course in Miracles says, of course, it's of the ego to single one out as special. Now, if you single one out as special and what you see in the other is the form only and you're attached to the form, which doesn't just mean the physical form. Of course, that's an important part of it because it is part of the sexuality and all that, which is part of the attraction.

But it also includes the psychological form of the other, who you think that person is, their psychological makeup, how they behave and speak and act. That is also a form, that's a psychological form. And there can be strong attachment to those aspects, both the physical come together with the psychological, which includes also emotions.

There's an emotional link also there. And those coming, when they all come together, you fall in love. And aptly, it's called fall because it's a fall in consciousness.

But that's okay. If that's what you experienced and that life wants you to experience that, it's part of your learning, that fall in consciousness. Now, it's not immediately, of course, experienced as a fall.

It's experienced as a high. And only afterwards do you realize, oh, that was a fall. And afterwards can be after a year.

It can be after three months. It can be after the honeymoon. It can be soon after you move in together.

And so, and then the suffering starts. What before was the love now becomes the suffering. And then for a while, it can happen that you fluctuate for the next year or two or three between still feeling the love and the suffering.

And then usually it comes to an end after a while or you compromise and for some other reason, stay together. So that's the, now, if you are able to feel in the other, well, first of all, in yourself, that which is beyond form, the essence, the stillness, the presence, whatever we want to call it, and by sensing it in yourself and being it, then you recognize it in another. And that recognition that in the space of stillness is true love, which doesn't need the other because the other only reflects to you who you are.

But even there, it can happen that the form of the other, because you are not just the formless, temporarily, you're also the form. Temporarily, you are either a man or a woman. Temporarily, you have this body.

And this form, this man or this woman, and this body and the emotional field may find a certain resonance with on different levels, be it sexual, emotional, psychological levels, a certain resonance with the other form. And that resonance, that is what in the unenlightened romantic love makes up the entire relationship. But now, when you know who you are in your essence, all of those factors are still there, but they do not make up the entire relationship beyond the resonance between the sexual or emotional or physical resonance.

There's a deeper level present. So you can go through the motions of romantic love with the transcendent level also present in yourself and recognizing it in the other. So romantic love may, after a while, of course, for the relationship to be truly deep in any relationship, some transcendent element has to be there because it's not going to last otherwise.

It doesn't mean necessarily that people need to be totally awake already, totally awake knowing who they are, but some element of the formless must be there eventually in the relationship for the relationship to survive and be a true relationship. Otherwise, all you have left in the relationship is your judgments about the other and physical attraction and just mind emotional. And that's ultimately, it's not enough.

It's not enough. The added element, the transcendent element needs to be there. And if the transcendent is there, you can be quite content even without the romantic relationship.

You no longer say, I need that. It's when it's there, it's beautiful, but you don't need that. Yeah, cool.

So the mind, it is often in relationships, the mind prevents the deeper level, the transcendent level from arising in the relationship. So the mind destroys the relationship, identification with the story in the mind, which is about yourself and the other obscures love. It might even say love, well, it's no such thing as love.

I read in a novel last year by a British writer, it does Mac Ewan, he's a well-known contemporary writer, Ian Mac Ewan. And he wrote this book about, it's called On Chesil Beach. It's about two young people falling in love in England in the fifties.

And these two young people, they feel the pull towards each other and they begin to fall in love. But sexually they are completely repressed and very fearful about, it's in the fifties, so the sex revolution hasn't happened yet about sex. So they're both extremely fearful about sex.

And then they get married and their first night, they stay in a bed and breakfast on near Chesil Beach in the South of England. And they're trying to have sex for the first time and it's a disaster, dreadful disaster. And she is so shocked.

She runs out of the room to the beach. Oh, they don't realize it's actually quite funny. I don't explain what disaster, you can probably imagine it.

So she runs out and the next day, so they don't see each other that night, that's their honeymoon, their wedding night. And the next day he goes to the beach, Chesil Beach, and she sees she's walking on the beach. They start talking to each other.

And both feel still, the pull is still there, but both their minds are bringing up stories why it's not possible, it's dreadful. They are projecting things onto the other, what she is. And so the pull is there, but they both create stories in their minds that cuts them off from the other and they separate.

And then they spend the rest of their lives doing other things. The rest of their lives in the novel is compressed to five or six pages. And that shows how destructive the mind can be of true relationship, how the mind imposes interpretations on the other, that are total fictions.

But there's so much, as Don Miguel Ruiz would say, there's so much faith in these fictions that it's an impossibility for the human being to see what the mind is creating is a fictitious judgment on that creates a barrier between yourself and the other. This writer is not spiritual at all. He just observed human nature and he presented it.

And that is the ultimate lesson is spiritual.

[Speaker 11] (6:23:33 - 6:23:34)
Thank you very much.

[Speaker 1] (6:23:53 - 6:27:17)
This is what Bodhidharma looked like or may have looked like. He certainly looks present. There's a story of, I believe it was a British writer, Paul Brunton, I think it was, who in the thirties visited the guru, spiritual teacher, Ramana Maharshi at his ashram in India in order to, he was preparing a book on the spiritual teachers of India.

The book was later published and under the title In Search of Secret India. And he visited Ramana Maharshi. The guru at that time was not too well known outside his immediate circle.

And he had a list of questions, very important questions for his book. So he came into Ramana's room and Ramana looked at him in a state of thoughtless awareness. And Paul Brunton looked at him and he didn't ask a single question.

All the questions dissolved in the presence. On that particular occasion, that was the first time he met him. He may later have asked him questions.

Another little anecdote connected with Ramana Maharshi. A famous British writer visited the ashram. Somerset Maugham is his name.

And again, he was preparing a book, a novel that involved an Indian spiritual teacher. And just before he was to meet Ramana Maharshi, Somerset Maugham fainted probably because it was so hot. So they carried him into a room and he was lying there on a bed.

And when he came to, Ramana Maharshi was sitting there next to his bed, looking at him. And he was confused and didn't know what to say. And Ramana Maharshi said something like, silence is the best speech.

And that was the end of that encounter. And later on, in a novel called The Razor's Edge, Ramana Maharshi appears as one of the characters.

[Speaker 4] (6:27:18 - 6:27:56)
But my question is, in The New Earth, you give an example of Hakuin, the Zen master, and he's falsely accused of false beliefs. Well, there's false accusations towards him. And he responds with, is that so?

I was wondering if you could give us some other examples of how a conscious person might answer or respond to that situation and how the ego might respond to the same situation.

[Speaker 1] (6:27:58 - 7:41:40)
Well, the ego one is quite easy to imagine, isn't it? And the story, of course, is a story that's been around for some time about the Japanese, the Zen master, just very briefly to remind everybody, the Zen master who has a reputation, high reputation in where he lives, in the town or city. And then suddenly he is accused by the daughter of a neighbor who is 16 or 17, or something like that, who has become pregnant, that he is the father of the baby, the unborn baby.

And so the daughter of his neighbor tells it to her parents and they get very angry and, of course, tell it to everybody and they run to the Zen master and say, our daughter has just told us that you had sex with her and she is carrying your baby, the dreadful. And he listens and he says, is that so? Yes, you are the father, she told us, is that so?

And so immediately, of course, he loses his reputation. Nobody comes to him anymore and it doesn't bother him. He's completely self-contained, present, he is presence.

The baby is born, the parents come to him with the baby and said, here, you look after the baby, we don't want it, it's your baby. Is that so? They give him the baby.

He looks after the baby, feeds it. A year later, nobody comes to see him anymore because he's lost his reputation. A year later, the daughter becomes a little bit more mature and confesses to her parents that the Zen master is not the father, but the boy who works in the butcher's shop next door.

And the parents come to the Zen master and say, we're so sorry, we falsely accused you. She just told us that you're not the father. Is that so?

And he hands the baby back to them. And the baby had a very good start in life, of course. And so that was, the story is to show the absolute non-reactivity in very extreme form of non-reactivity, not impossible.

And the power that is in that, the power for good, because that situation, which potentially would be dreadful disaster and drama for anybody else with even the slightest ego left, would be dreadful, blowed, a disaster that gets transformed into something good through non-reaction, because all the good that comes out of it, the babies had one year with the Zen master, the first year of his life, and he's then going back. And then people come back to him. Okay, so you can see how non-reactivity transforms a potentially dramatic disaster into good.

Your question is twofold. You ask, how would the ego have reacted? No, I don't need to say too much about that.

You can imagine how an ego would say, how dare you accuse me? The daughter is evil. She's an evil bitch.

She accused me of being it. And the parents are just as bad. And then you talk to everybody about it.

You call them on the phone. You know what they're doing to me? They're trying to, and all kinds of things.

Talk to everybody about it. Blow it up more and more. Give interviews.

And of course you're the victim. You become the victim. That's the main thing.

So your victim identity becomes stronger and stronger. And you're angry. And anger, of course, is designed unconsciously as the Course in Miracles points out.

Anger is designed to make somebody feel guilty. That's the energy behind anger. So you want to make everybody, well, of course it doesn't really work.

And so you have a huge drama. So you can elaborate on that. You could write a play about that.

You could have a movie about that. The Zen, what happened to the Zen master with an interesting title, Zen Baby or whatever. No.

No, you couldn't have a movie about this, what actually happened in this story because nobody would watch it. There's no drama in it. Nothing happens.

He just sits there. So I don't think you could, even if you wrote a script, I think the producers in Hollywood would not finance it. It could be very nice.

Short film, it wouldn't be a long film. Now, of course, if you are present, that is not the only way. It's not what he's, the way he dealt with that situation is not the only possible way.

There are many other possible ways of dealing with the situation and still be present. For example, he could have said, well, is that so? But I would like to have a DNA test though.

So it's a practical step. You can still take practical steps. You're not condemned to complete inactivity just because you're present.

In fact, if action is possible, you do it. You could even state clearly, that's not the case. I'm not the baby, but there's a, you're not a victim.

You could simply state the truth. This is how it is. And the important thing is the unconsciousness of making yourself into a victim does not happen.

Anymore. And you are not imposing projections onto others, deep judgments, the little 17 year old daughter who is not mature enough to tell the truth. You don't need to say that she's evil and manipulative or whatever the ego would come up with.

No, you just state, it's not the case. It's fine. And whatever else comes out of presence, but there's always non-aggression, non-projection, non-judgment, because you see clearly that she did it because of her lack of consciousness.

So what judgment could you have? There's lack of consciousness. That's lack of consciousness is not a judgment.

But if you make that into something evil in the other person, that's the judgment. So all kinds of ways of dealing with it and still remain present. The story gives us the most extreme way because then we can really learn.

It shows us what is possible. So what a wonderful story. And the two, one could have, even tell two stories.

Tell one story of, this is an idea for somebody who likes to, who is a fiction writer here among you. You could have one story that tells its story from somebody who is dealing with something consciously. And then you have the same story where it develops into huge unconsciousness and drama.

Be quite interesting. So next time then, if something happens to us, see, bearing in mind, don't become a victim. Don't become a victim.

Don't make others into perpetrators and call them bad or evil. So the two go together. So wonderful, these challenges, aren't they?

I just got, as I was coming in, got inspired to tell you that little story. It only takes a few minutes about my mom because there's some connection with us being here and the event that I relate in that story that happened many years ago when I wasn't born yet. So my mom was 19, about 19 years old.

Of course, I wasn't there yet. It was in the war in Germany and she received notification one day in the mail to report next week to such and such a place a weapons factory, some one day's travel away from there for work duty, work service, which was a bit like military service but for women. And she got a shock and she ran on the same day to the government office and said, that must be a mistake.

I was promised I could do office duty. And they said, no mistake, you are to report next week to the weapons factory. So the following week she arrived.

After a long trip to the weapons factory with up to a hundred other young girls who were the same age and she was assigned to a bunk bed in the dormitory and work was going to start the following day. And she was on the upper bunk bed and below there was another girl, same age and they were both crying. And my mom being already impulsive as she's been all her life, said she was trying to, I'm not staying here.

Tomorrow morning I'm escaping. And the girl said, are you coming with me? She said to the girl and the girl said, no, we can't do that, they'll shoot us.

And the next morning, my mom left the dormitory early and there were some trucks leaving, big military trucks leaving the factory. And she just stopped a driver and said, can you give me a ride? And the driver, assuming she had permission, she was on leave or something, he said, yes, jump in in the back.

And she got driven out of the factory. And at the end of the day, she reappeared at her mom's home, her mom's place and her mom said, what have you done? They'll put us all in prison.

You can't stay here. They'll come. So the next day she went to another city to live with her aunt.

And of course the police came a couple of days later looking for her and my grandmother, her mom said, don't know where she is, she just disappeared. We haven't seen her. Then my mom lived in hiding for two or three years until they stopped looking for her with her aunt.

And three months later, the weapons factory got bombed and virtually everybody who worked there got killed. So the impulsive decision of a 19 year old girl is everything is connected and interconnected leads to us being here. As you probably know, Buddhism arose in India.

A person, Gautama Siddhartha awakened about 500 BC, that's 2,500 years ago. And a teaching arose. People then called him the one who is awake.

Buddha means awake, the root of it in Sanskrit. So it's not a name, it's a title. And then it grew and then much about a thousand years passed and then a man traveled at that time.

Of course, geographically, there was not that much of the instances, the distances were so vast between countries. But a Buddhist monk traveled from India, probably it could already have been Persia, into China. And his name was Bodhidharma, a legendary figure in Buddhism, because he is the one, they say, who brought Buddhism to China, which was something when they arrived in China and started talking, people hadn't heard this before, wow.

But at some point they connected it with some native tradition, which was Taoism. The deeper aspect of Taoism could then merged with Buddhism after a while. And of course, Taoism, the wonderful, one of the greatest books that I've spoken about, the Tao Te Ching, probably also originated 2,500 years ago or so, same time as the Buddha independently in China.

So eventually Buddhism became transformed in China because it mixed up with Taoism and a different form of Buddhism developed. But the interesting story is that this man, Bodhidharma traveled into China and he was the first, they say, and then the Chinese began to gradually adopt Buddhist meditation practices and so on. Fortunately at that time, the internet and Twitter had not been invented yet.

So nobody accused the Chinese of cultural appropriation. I've prepared, I'd like to, this is what Bodhidharma looked like or may have looked like. Let's see if it works to show the image of Bodhidharma.

He certainly looks present. And that is also, that is the beginning of Zen, that was the Chinese version of Zen and then in Japan, it became something else. So you can imagine the Chinese meeting this man, looking at them.

And then a problem arose because they learned about the Buddha and the Chinese writing, of course, is pictographs. It's not like Western writing where the writing represents a sound which represents the thing. So a Western language, Western writing is twice removed from the thing.

If you write table, the writing of table represents the sound and the sound, when you say table, it represents the thing. So they say, what can we do? But there must have been somebody awakened already there in China who came up with the Chinese character for Buddha.

They had to come out, create it, and there it is. And now the amazing thing is, it consists of two characters put together. The first one means man or human being.

You can see it's almost, you can see still, it's distantly related to a picture of a person. So that is the human being. Now, the next character is usually translated as no or not.

It's a character, it's a denial. It's also related to the idea of undoing or dissolving, but it's usually, it's the denial of not. So it denies the first.

So human being, not. And so if you go to scholars, they don't, they might say, well, they did this because they thought that Buddha wasn't really a human being. He was a super human, but that's not it.

There's a recognition there of the two dimensions that make up a human being. There is form identity and the recognition of the ultimate illusion of form identity. So there's form identity, the person, and the denial of form identity.

So the denial of form identity is the arising of essence identity. And so it's incredible how somebody must have had deep insight to create that character that explains the essence of what Buddha means, but it really is the essence of every human being. So in that sense, as you might know, the way I interpret the term human being is that the human is your form identity.

The human is the person that you are with a history and is both the body and the conditioned mind. That's the human personality. And the being is the unconditioned.

The being is your essence identity, which is the unconditioned consciousness. So you are a human being. And in a way you could interpret that character as also as the left side is the human.

And then there's the denial of the ultimate reality of the human and there's the emerging being. So that's just a, I mentioned that briefly also, I believe in a new earth. So it's wonderful to see that there's a deep understanding behind that character.

I'm interpreting that, I have no idea about Chinese. I'm not a scholar and I don't write or speak Chinese, but the moment I saw that and I was told this means Buddha, no, human being, human, no. Wow, that's amazing.

Do you remember, or maybe you don't, or you do in the gospels, there's a line that Jesus said, two words, deny thyself, deny thyself. And now look at that character, man, human, no. Deny thyself, which means recognize the ultimate unreality of what you call yourself.

Then the essence of who you are emerges, which is formless consciousness. To achieve the state of enlightenment as if it were something that you can add to yourself or something that will suddenly transform you into a miraculous being, which you already are, but you won't know it if you think that is going to come in the future. Enlightenment, or let's call it the ego-less state, okay, I want to achieve the ego-less state.

And of course, the ego-less state cannot be achieved in the future or in time. It is only by looking through it now that the ego-less state is here now. A state that you want to achieve is a mental concept in which that's endowed with self.

And as such, you can never reach it because it's an abstract concept of who I want to be, not realizing you are it already. So the ego-less state, it does not lie in the future. It has nothing to do with future.

You cannot make it into a goal. You cannot make, whether you call it the ego-less state or whether you call it enlightenment, you cannot make it into a goal. Goal implies future because the very entry point into the ego-less state or the enlightened state is the present moment.

If you make it into a goal that you want to achieve, you miss the entry point because you're looking to the future because goal implies future. And that is the dilemma of all spiritual seekers. Because they listen to spiritual talk or read a spiritual book and say, there is such a thing as the ego-less state or the enlightened state, and perhaps I can achieve it too.

And immediately they make it into a goal, project it away, it becomes mind, a mental image of who I want to be, future. And not realize that their very search for to actualize that image prevents them from being it now because the entry point is here, this moment only. The ego can only be transcended through accessing the power of the present moment.

No other way. Enlightenment is only in the power of the present moment, nowhere else. So it's never, it's only humans who give up the search who realize it's already here.

So you have to, one way or another, either because you're totally frustrated with the spiritual search or because you suddenly see the truth of it, give up the search as if it were future. Now there's still, there seems to conflict with certain teachings that say, basically, there are two conflicting spiritual teachings. One says, that seems what I've just said, but it's not quite it.

One says there's nothing you can do and you might as well totally relax because you can't bring it about. There's nothing, absolutely nothing you can do about it. So let go, forget about all, some teachers say that.

Forget the whole thing, just have fun. The other teaching says, if you do not want enlightenment as intensely as a man, a drowning man wants air, you're not going to get it. Now, what I just said seems to be more towards the other, that you cannot make it into something to want or to get, but really the truth is hiding if you bring the two together.

And how does that look? If you bring, how can you bring those together? On the one hand, there's nothing you can do, that's true.

And on the other hand, an intensity is required. You bring the two together, the very intensity that is mistakenly interpreted as an intensity that's driving you towards a future goal can become an intensity that is driving you into the present moment. That's the uncompromising intensity of there's only this moment.

And that, yes, there's an intensity there that goes, takes you deeper into this. It's not an intensity that drives you into future. There's nothing you can do is true in the sense that if doing requires future and time, that doesn't help you.

And of course, going into the present moment and becoming internally aligned with the present moment isn't really a doing. In that sense, there's nothing you can do. You can only allow the present moment to be and go deeply into it.

It's a question of how you use language. But so in that sense, they are right. There's nothing you can do.

And the others are also right. The intensity is required, the intensity with which you embrace the now. So that's, there's the point.

No future state. You're not becoming something that you are not now. And so you may have heard some spiritual teacher saying, you're enlightened already.

And that's deep down, that is true. Every human being is already complete within. On the level of form, there are all kinds of things that perhaps you could still do and play around with and add to yourself and learn or experience.

But in the depths of who you are, your essence identity is already totally complete. It doesn't require more time or more things to be added to who you are in your essence. And really, that is what matters.

In that sense, only future can only prevent you from being it, finding it and being it now. So it's, for some people, hard to get rid of this idea because it's no more than an idea in the head that I need to achieve something, become something. But it's not really true.

So it's truer to say, you are already it, you just need to realize it. That you are already fully yourself. You are already fully yourself.

You don't need more time or more of anything to be who you are already now. You're already divine, timeless, eternal in your essence. Everything else is on the level of form and it's a dance, a game, a play of form.

There, sometimes you get more and then you lose again. You can play. So no more spiritual seeking.

Intensity, yes. But the intensity that drives you into the now. Not an intensity that wants to actualize an imagined state.

Me as the enlightened one, which you already are. A couple of weeks ago, I spoke briefly at a conference in San Francisco. A big conference, close to 10,000 people.

Annual conference, mostly for business people. But always towards the very end, they have a spiritual person. Which is better than no spiritual person.

And then the organizer invited a small group of people who spoke at the conference and some who attended the conference to his home for dinner. Small group, meaning 150. And he organized even some entertainment.

The main person providing the entertainment is a kind of yogi, magician. Nobody knows exactly whether he's more of a yogi or more of a magician. Or whether it's a combination or whether everything is just tricks.

Anyway, this person, the main entertainment of the evening, when people had eaten in the garden, they had erected a tent, a big tent, enough for 150 people. In the middle of the area, there was a raised pedestal and on it was a gigantic water tank, glass, transparent. With a few fishes swimming in it.

And then it was announced that this man would now come and get into this tank and hold his breath for seven minutes. And that's what happened. He came, still wearing a few clothes.

And he climbed up. Submerged himself in the tank. And of course, everybody could see him.

He was floating in there. And there was a countdown for seven minutes. And while he was in there, he looked at everybody from inside the tank.

Like a fish would look at you. But completely, kind of still. And he managed to hold his breath for seven minutes.

And then finally he came out. And then after he had recovered from that ordeal, the organizer wanted me to meet him. So there were a few people standing around and he was there.

And one of the people standing around said, can you do that, he asked me. And I said, I don't think I can. But I can stop thinking for seven minutes.

And the man who had been in the tank said, it's very much like that. He meant, I suppose, being in the tank. And he probably meant when he's in the tank, he's not thinking.

Because if he were thinking, he wouldn't last for seven minutes. Presuming that it's not a trick, we don't know, but it didn't seem to be a trick. He was just in there holding his breath.

So I mentioned this story because I want to emphasize again this afternoon the main point of why we're here. And that is to fully realize that there are two dimensions, so to speak, to who you are. The one that is defined in form, which includes the physical form and the psychological form and the thinking entity.

So your consciousness has the two dimensions. There's an intermediate area, but we don't need to go there. There's the conscious dimension of thinking, and that creates your conventional sense of identity.

And there is the deeper space where there is a vast consciousness that is not defined in form. So there's the two of you, the known, the person, and the unknown, the undefined, or as the Buddha called it, the unmanifested, the unborn, the uncreated. And the Buddha added, this is one of the sutras in my free translation.

So he said, there is the unborn, the unmanifested, the uncreated. If there were not, sorry, the sutras are a little bit repetitive. If there were not the unborn, the unmanifested, the uncreated, there would be no escape from the born, the manifested, and the created.

And I'm adding in my free translation, and you would be completely stuck in it and with it. So there is a dimension in every human that is far deeper than what you conventionally consider is the I. So you can say there is the I that is defined through thought, and there is a deeper I that is not defined.

And the purpose of your existence really is in evolutionary terms, is to find that deeper being, the undefined, the unknown, and bring that into this dimension and into your life. And you all make that you have made the discovery already that you don't need to think continuously and that your deeper sense of who you are does not depend on what your mind is saying about who you are. There is a more immediate, much more real sense of I than you could ever find through thinking about who you are.

So to access the unmanifested, the unborn, the uncreated, if you want to use those words, you have to find within yourself the space of no thought, which is always there. It's just covered up by continuous thought. Doesn't have to be.

So gradually you find that the unknown you comes through more and more. First, you have to become comfortable. I mentioned it briefly the other day.

First, you need to become comfortable when you enter that space with not knowing anything, because that is the, you're accessing the unknown, the undefined, which is primordial intelligence itself. Not intelligence that has become thought. That's the only thing you can measure to a limited degree, but there's primordial intelligence.

In order to access that, you have to give up, not completely because it's still there, but your reliance, exclusive reliance, and main reliance on accumulated knowledge and on thinking. If you don't give up your reliance on conditioned knowledge and thinking, you can never go beyond. So you would be very limited, not be creative, and ultimately not wise.

You can have a highly developed mind, but lacking in wisdom. And to have a highly developed mind and lacking in wisdom as an underlying guiding force, and that comes from the deeper level, to have that highly developed mind, whether it's a person or a society, culture, is a dangerous thing because that mind can create havoc for yourself and others. And the more developed it is, the more destructive it potentially is also.

So you find that often with people who, some people who run countries, of course they have a university degree, and they, well, not all, but some might be considered intelligent in conventional terms. And yet very often their actions are actually very unintelligent. They don't take into account the totality of the situation, the deeper implications of their actions.

So they are not, whatever they say or do, is not connected to the realm of wisdom. Don't need to mention any names, but look at any politician that comes to mind, look at the past 20 years. Some may come to mind.

And such lack of wisdom, quite amazing. And then you have the highly developed industry that creates dreadful weapons of destruction. And these people who make these, they're all intelligent.

Otherwise they wouldn't be able to do that. But how can you build an atom bomb without intelligence? It requires highly intelligent people.

So wisdom, intelligence needs to be guided by something deeper. And that deeper then needs to, can actually use the mind, the human mind, as an instrument for its expression. And so, again, in order to get to that place, which is not a place, it's just a deeper dimension to who you are, you need to give up that reliance, that unconscious belief that you continuously need to think, to work things out, because otherwise things will get out of control.

So every moment you need to have some kind of, comes to some kind of conclusion about what's happening at this moment. Immediately have some kind of opinion and conclusion and call it something. And often at school, that quick, the quick, like very quick comeback is often encouraged.

The people who are, when the teacher asks questions, the one who can give the quickest answer is usually considered the best. And then there are others who may be slower and they don't even have time to raise their hand because they haven't, it hasn't sunk in yet. The question hasn't, the question needs to sink in for, and then at some point an answer may come, but they don't wait for them.

There was, for example, when Einstein was four years old, his parents became concerned because the serious concern was that he might be mentally retarded because he was so slow at thinking. So we need to have that courage to go into that unknown place. And what is that unknown place?

Which is not a place. It's not to impose immediately interpretations on the world and on situations and on people and whatever arises. So to be able to just look at things, look not just visually, but look in also use metaphorically, which means to give attention to whatever is here now and to feel the power of your attention itself, which is intelligence, like a light that shines on a situation or on a person, and to feel that inherent power of consciousness that falls, is not, doesn't, is not produced by you.

It comes through you. Then you feel enormous amount of so-called self-confidence, not egoic self-confidence, but you are connected with, you can feel there's a power at the depth of who you are, and that power can flow into this moment. And it is there when you give your fullest attention to something and you're not thinking about it.

You're just looking, you're just giving attention. It could be a situation, a person you're looking at, whatever it is. You're just there as a field of attention, of awareness.

And so you are the bringer of awareness. And that flows from a deep place that is far transcends who you are as this physical form. That deep place connects you, not only with others or other humans, it also connects you with a source of all life.

And so you are not disconnected. You just seem to be. And the ego is a disconnected sense of self.

You are not disconnected from the totality of the universe. You are an aspect of the totality of the universe. You're not autonomous.

That's the delusion that every person is considered to be an independent consciousness, whereas the truth is every person is an expression of the one consciousness. So when you can feel that one consciousness as presence within yourself, you don't go around in continuous anxiety anymore. What's the next thing that's going to upset me?

And of course it always comes. So in other words, a certain confidence comes in that is not based on anything that you have perhaps achieved on the level of form. It's not confidence because you have an important position.

It's not confidence because you have accumulated wealth, not confidence because other people think you're great, or not confidence because you have a certain ability that you have developed that you're better at than most people. Usually those things, or you look better than most people, or at least above average, either good looks or you have a great body. So all those things could give you your sense of confidence.

So a person who is very good looking would gain most, unless there are other factors where that person is even more remarkable, but in the absence of other factors, the good looking person would predominantly gain self-confidence from looking in the mirror and seeing other people's reactions to who they are, which could be admiration and envy, depending on who is looking at you. And the ego would quite love that. It loves admiration and envy.

And so it feels, you feel confident because you're so good looking. And that lasts for, could last for a few years. And then it gets shaky because good looks don't last indefinitely.

And that's just one example. But whatever it is, it could be wealth, it could be what other people think of you. So you derive confidence from some source, but it's always very shaky.

And instead of then creating a thought in your mind and allowing this thought to survive and even proliferate in your mind and start complaining and so on, you can recognize that every human does that. When I lived in England, in the country, I had a cottage and there were two bedrooms, three bedrooms upstairs. And because my income was low, I had to rent out two bedrooms.

And so I had a succession of people renting over a period of three years or so. And probably about, it was a place where people would spend, come for a period of time and then move on. I had probably 10 or 11 people.

And out of those, eight out of 10, sooner or later developed, when I got to know them, lived in the same house with them, relatively small place, be displayed, there were areas in their behavior that were quite dysfunctional, almost called insane. And I don't just mean quirks of their personality, different ways of doing, no, some more than that. Patterns that led to complete distortion of reality in certain areas of their lives.

And that wasn't just one person, it was eight out of 10. And only one person didn't fit into any of these. Two people stayed relatively displayed, higher degree of presence.

There were certain variations also in them, but they didn't get taken over by personalities, temporary personas, sub-personalities, they're sometimes called, whatever you want to call them. They didn't get taken over completely, leading to almost total distortion of reality. I had one person, however, that she came, stayed for two or three months and was quite peaceful.

And a friend told me that she had told him, living at Eckhart's place is like living in a float tank. And the moment she moved out, I heard secondhand accounts, she was involved in huge drama, including physical violence with men and other women. And she was known for always generating huge drama in her life, except when she stayed with me.

I didn't know that, otherwise I probably wouldn't have invited her in. So somehow in the energy field of presence, she was able to drop into or rise into presence. But the moment she left, the old patterns came back.

Now that was an unusual case. Mostly you find humans are not one single being. This is the point of the story.

Once you know that, you can no longer perhaps misinterpret when humans shift and then do display behavior that is not conscious. So, and instead of then creating a thought in your mind and allowing this thought to survive and even proliferate in your mind and start complaining and so on, you can recognize every human does that, has that to a greater or lesser degree. Okay, then that's a step forward to that realization.

And then you can allow them because you probably are the same. There are different people in you. There's a more conscious you and there's a more unconscious you.

And then the more unconscious you has many different facets to it, different sub, different ways of being unconscious. And then you can see, okay, now we know that we can't trust people, except in the sense as Byron Katie said, I trust everybody, said I trust everybody to do what they do. So you have to, you can't trust them to display consistently conscious behavior.

That would be absurd. So you go to a deeper place and see what the real trust is not from doesn't come from people. The real trust is finding that place of depths within yourself that does not.

And once you're there, then you can relate to humans from there. And you no longer say, I demand that you are conscious all the time. And if you're not, I'll hold it against you.

And then I'll never talk to you again. So it all comes back to that place of dropping down into where the mind activity subsides. And instead of always being trapped in your thoughts and relating to the world and to people through your thoughts, plus the emotions that accompany the thoughts, you go to that deeper place of just feel your own presence.

Let's put it like that for a moment. Feel the presence that you are, the beingness of you, the most, that deep level of I amness, the presence. The only thing that cannot be doubted that it is absolutely real, that exists.

That is the isness of you. And if that is in the background of your life, then you can allow others to do what they do. The likelihood is when you meet others from that deeper place, their behavior will become a little more conscious.

The very unconscious sub-personalities may manifest themselves less. Because when you erroneously mistake a person's unconsciousness, unconscious sub-personality, or whatever you want to call it, when you erroneously mistake that for who they are and mentally focus on that, you also bring it out more in them every time you meet them because those are the expectations. And quite often, unless humans are really present, they oblige and they give you what you expect them.

If you expect dishonesty, you're more likely to find dishonesty in humans. When you expect violence, you're more likely to find it. So trust, really another word for it in spiritual terminology is faith.

Because what is faith? Faith is not belief. Belief means you have a story and you say, this story, I believe this story to be true.

And of course, you'd have no idea whether it is true. But you say, if you knew it was true, then you wouldn't say believe anymore. You can't say, I believe in this table.

You don't need to, it's here. So belief would be belief in some abstract story or whatever it is. It could be an ideology, something your mind tells you, but faith is very different.

In some languages, belief and faith, unfortunately, are the same word. Faith is trust. Faith is a sense of deep connectedness with being.

From that deep place of connectedness, you can also manifest things. But let's not talk about that right now. That is the conscious connection with source, the source of life, which is within you.

And it's so easy. It's you just become still and direct your attention to what? You direct your attention to nothing in particular.

You're just aware of attention and that's it. So if the attention is looking for your true self, it doesn't realize that it is your true self because it's consciousness. You are consciousness.

And knowing that, that's trust suddenly, because you're no longer dependent on the continuously shifting things out here for your sense of the beingness of who you are. Because not only humans are continuously shifting, but even things around you, they come and go. Situations continuously come and go, change.

Impermanence, as the Buddha called it, fleeting. And so as long as you look to externals for any sense of security, including humans, can I trust him? Can I trust her?

That's very precarious. And usually when I would say, no, don't trust him or her, trust yourself. But then you're no longer in a state of distrust.

No, trust then arises, but not from him or her. It's such essential teaching, but not many people seem to realize it yet. Now at that deeper level, really many things that are different concepts on the external level, they really all, they merge into one.

So when we speak of trust, or when we speak of presence, beingness, perhaps to put it more accurately, we'd say the connectedness with beingness is presence. And out of the presence flows trust. And out of the presence also flows, and that's also inseparable from trust, flows what you could call goodwill or benevolence towards other humans and other life forms.

Because when your mind is telling you something about another human and fixes, constructs an identity for that human by selecting the unconscious, one of the unconscious aspects of that human, by selecting that, then manufacturing a mental identity for that human. And then for the rest of your life, continue to relate to that human through that mind form. Then you can, there is no, the goodwill cannot flow.

You can, there cannot be an outflow of goodwill anymore. It's blocked by the mind pattern. But if you no longer trap the other human and yourself in the mind pattern, then there is an openness for the outflow, let's put it like that, the outflow of benevolence towards the other person, the other human being.

Well, you could call it love, but it's not the conventional, better maybe to call it loving kindness. And that is a wonderful thing to experience in relation. It makes human contact much more pleasant if you can feel an outflow of goodwill, even towards a human that you might not meet very briefly.

And even there, sense it for a moment when you're not, there's no thought, there's just a presence, and you're looking at another human and you feel an energetic, one could say also an energetic connection for a moment, and it's an outflow of goodwill, no matter who, what their function is at that particular moment in your life. There's always then an added dimension. Otherwise you reduce other human beings to whatever their function have, whatever function they have in relation to you, the man who is selling you something.

Is he only the man who is selling you something? Is that, are you reducing this person to the function that he or she performs at that moment in relation to you? Or is there a deeper dimension so that there is a human being that you recognize?

And the way I, as you may, I don't know if you have heard me say that before, the way what I, how I interpret human being is you might notice that there are two words in the English language. In a way at first I felt it's a pity that English doesn't have one word for human being. It only has man, and that's supposed to include women.

So when you often, when you read, when people say men, it's supposed to include women too, but it doesn't, but it still means men. So some languages like German, they have a word that applies to man and woman, mensch. So that would be mensch is man or woman.

But English language, you need to have two words. You have to say human being. At first I felt, well, that's a pity, but then upon looking more closely at human being, I realized, oh, that's actually quite wonderful because there's a deep truth there.

You have the human and you have the being come together. The human is a form. It's the physical vehicle and it's the psychological form, including all the imperfections and all the accumulations and the conditioning, the person, basically the person who you think you are, the person who other people think you are, the person that you've been told you are, and the person you believe to be.

The person, ideas in your mind about who you are, that's a person and that's a human. Now, most people only know the human. They think they are the human.

They don't realize that they are also the being. But you have to know both really to be awakened in this dimension. You need to be awakened to the being dimension in you so that you can be in the balance between form, physical, mental, emotional, psychological form, the form who you are, the person, and the transcendent dimension, the essence of who you are, which is the being.

And your identity to awaken spiritually means that your identity shifts from the human to the being. And when your identity has shifted from the human to the being, the human becomes a more pleasant human. And it's more comfortable for yourself to be this particular human in that life, this particular lifetime.

And it's more comfortable for others to be with you as that particular human. And that's because you also know the being, the transcendent dimension. Wait.

That's good. Release it all, whatever it all is. Yes.

[Speaker 4] (7:41:43 - 7:42:01)
I'm very nervous to be asking my question because I feel like I have a lot of confusion. But I know that that's a good place to be asking my question from. I've been a financial planner for 33 years.

[Speaker 1] (7:42:01 - 7:42:02)
Sorry, what planner?

[Speaker 4] (7:42:03 - 7:44:07)
A financial planner for 33 years. And went back to school six years ago to become an energy healer. And I love it because I don't have to know.

As a financial planner, I had to know. You know, I had to give answers. But with energy healing, I get to hang out in the unknown.

And it's really fun for me. And I'm not attached to the outcome for my clients. I know something's happening, but I don't know what is happening, always.

And I love that. So the question that I have for you, wait. It has to do with something you said this afternoon that I got very confused about.

Any resistance closes the channel. Right. And I know that I have a powerful effect on anyone that I come in contact with.

I know I vibrate at a very high consciousness level. And that I'm here to contribute on that level. And I'm very good at manifesting.

But the place that I'm confused about is that I don't know how to figure out those internal resistances. I'm not clear on that. I'm clear on all the external resistances.

Like, do you want to do this or that? No, yes. But I get confused about being in the source and knowing when I'm in the source versus when I'm maybe in my egoic creation, because I'm so good at manifesting.

[Speaker 1] (7:44:09 - 7:44:57)
So what is in your daily life, your state of consciousness? Do you undergo great fluctuations in your state of consciousness? Do you still experience the pain body occasionally coming up?

What are your thought patterns throughout the day? Do you have episodes of negative thinking that you identify with? To what extent are you able to be aware of your thoughts?

Do you get taken over by streams of thinking on a daily basis? What is your state of consciousness in your daily life?

[Speaker 4] (7:44:57 - 7:45:58)
I'm very good at witnessing myself. I'm fairly good at being able to make a choice in the moment, a different choice in the moment when I'm witnessing myself. I've done a lot of work on my pain body.

I think where I have a challenge is in something along the lines of clarity as to, there's like a fear or something that runs maybe in me along the lines of knowing that I'm good at manifesting and not wanting to go in a direction of manifesting when I'm not sure that that's the direction. So there's that confusion in the piece that you said this afternoon. Any resistance closes the channel.

I just keep sitting with that going, where's my resistance that's closing the channel?

[Speaker 1] (7:46:00 - 7:46:25)
Well, only you can know that resistance arises as negative thinking that you are identified with and then an emotional contraction that reflects the negative thinking. Maybe there isn't very much resistance and that's why you get confused. You're looking for something that isn't there anymore.

Maybe you think there must be some resistance. Where is it? I'm confused now.

[Speaker 4] (7:46:28 - 7:46:38)
It could be because I have spent my life on a very deep healing journey and been very open to always looking at those places.

[Speaker 1] (7:46:38 - 7:49:01)
Yes. So trust yourself and not only not the personal self, but the deeper self and what emanates from that. And it seems to me that you're fine.

You don't need to be concerned about resistance right now. There's already enough presence in you to dissolve it when it comes. Nobody needs to demand that they should be totally free of resistance or that they should be totally conscious on a continuous basis that is not necessary.

Just detecting when you're not conscious is fine. Every time you detect a dysfunctional state that you have slipped into in a relationship or at work or wherever you may be, then the moment you know it, the moment you lost it, so to speak, that's an expression, I lost it, which usually means in common usage, I got very angry. But here I'm using it in a wider sense.

When you say, I lost it, it means I lost presence. I lost consciousness. I got totally identified with the stream of thinking.

I got totally identified with the pain body. I lost it in the way we use it here, or I use it means I lost presence completely. So you may sometimes still lose it, but I believe you're fine.

I don't think there's that much resistance. Your mind is perhaps looking for a problem where there isn't one. And that, by the way, is not uncommon because the mind always looks for a problem somewhere.

It's amazing. You could take a person to heaven, a person who is not, no, you are okay. You'll be fine in heaven.

But if you take a normal person to heaven, normal meaning unconscious, he would get very unhappy because, well, why is the problem? He will find something wrong. Peace would be very threatening.

They're not ready for that. You are ready for heaven, it seems, so embrace it.

[Speaker 2] (7:49:03 - 7:49:04)
Okay, thank you.

[Speaker 14] (7:49:05 - 7:49:06)
All right. Thank you.

[Speaker 1] (7:49:29 - 8:51:35)
So it's not really true to say, I am aware of the awareness in me. No, the awareness in you is aware of itself. When the person and the deeper I, the person that I call the surface I and the deep I don't exist as separate.

So one day you're, and then for a moment you're, but the two can come together. And so then you're able to function in this world as a person, but always with an additional dimension that operates now through that person. In other words, the way in which you deal with difficulties and situations and people changes, it's no longer an egoic way of dealing with things, but dealing with things consciously, this greater intelligence can now operate and use your flow into your mind.

And then their mind comes up with the right solution suddenly, or spontaneously you take the right action. Whereas before you would have been reactive out of the egoic conditioning, which usually is wrong. It just makes things worse.

So that's the, then the two you can have, I sometimes put it like this. You can have one foot in this dimension where you are a person and you have the other foot in the transcendent dimension. So, and then you don't lose yourself anymore in your, ultimately in your mind.

And that means you don't lose yourself in the world anymore because ultimately the so-called world and your mind are one and the same thing. So you don't lose yourself anymore. You can, you operate within this limited realm, but you're no longer looking for yourself or for some kind of ultimate completion or fulfillment in this limited realm of the horizontal dimension.

Which means you can now pursue a goal still because the surface eyes still operates here. You pursue a goal, but you do not make the mistake of overemphasizing what this goal can do for you once you reach it. Yes, you might be very dedicated to what you're doing, but there is not an excessive projection into where you're feeling you need to get to.

I need to get there. I need to have achieved the success that will make me feel complete and fulfilled. And then I will have made it.

Made what? The ego. That goes, you pursue a goal, but your attention is in the doing rather than where you want to get to.

You know where you want to get to, but your main attention is in the quality of the doing now. Whatever action you take now, you're able to be present with it rather than always devaluing everything you do now in the service of this greater goal in the future that will never ultimately satisfy you anyway. And that is a very dysfunctional way to live.

Whenever stress arises, something has happened. You don't want to be where you are, and ultimately you don't want to be doing what you're doing now. Stress means there is a projection to some future point where you want to be, rather than here, you want to be there.

So the quality of the doing diminishes. There's no, the consciousness doesn't flow into the doing. The doing is a means to an end.

It goes like, I want to be there and here I'm doing. Instead of, yes, peripherally, you know where you want to get to, but that's not where your main focus is, your peripheral, but your main focus is the doing itself. So the doing is no longer in the service of the future.

It is self-fulfilling, and then it becomes actually much more empowered. In other words, you enjoy the doing, no matter what it is. There is an enjoyment of the energy that flows into the doing, and that's enlightened or conscious action, as I call it, conscious action.

It's not reduced just to a means to an end. Yes, it is also a means to an end, but it is not only a means to an end. It is fundamentally an end in itself, the doing itself.

That's already, this teaching has already, the ancient scripture, the Bhagavad Gita, which if you haven't read it, you should. Nobody knows how old it is, maybe 2,000 years or more. Again, one of the main lessons in the Bhagavad Gita is it is possible to perform an action without losing yourself in some desired goal, which in the Bhagavad Gita is called the fruit of the action.

Don't give, it says, don't give excessive attention to the fruit of the action, but just be conscious of the action itself, and this is regarded as a spiritual practice, and this is the, it's called karma yoga. The yoga in the sense of, yoga here means spiritual practice, not necessarily body movement, but that's fine too. Karma yoga, karma means action, karma, action and reaction, karmas.

So karma yoga is the practice, the action as spiritual practice, and that's a very, very powerful teaching that's been around a long, long time. Any activity that you perform as a person, by performing it in this way, becomes actually empowered, and then you have a foot in both worlds. You have the unconditioned consciousness acting through you, giving your attention, your fullest attention to the doing in the moment, in this moment, whatever you do in this moment, and if it's not just doing, it might be something else.

One isn't, you're not always doing, you're always walking around this world, perceiving things, and talking and perceiving and so on. You may be familiar, I'm sure you are, with the term that's mentioned a lot these days as in New Age teachings and others, gratefulness or gratitude, and again, that is related to this. What does it mean, gratitude?

Well, people say, well, you say thank you for, okay, it sounds a little weird, you say, thank you, thanks. Somebody asked me, I think it was a Buddhist, because Buddhists don't believe in God as such. It's not that they are atheists, but they don't believe it's a complete thing, but don't need to talk about this, but what is that, who am I thanking if I don't think of a God that has just given me something?

So why do I say thank you? I don't understand, who am I thanking? Gratitude is really appreciation.

It's an alternative term you could use, and what is appreciation? It is, again, it's related to be present with a sense perceptions, for example. You can have appreciation for anything by giving it attention, and to give attention, your mind needs to be free of the conditioned naming and labeling, so awareness, again, presence.

You give attention to this flower, for example, you give it attention, and so this is visual in this case, and you appreciate its beauty, but without mentally saying, you may, yes, the thought may come into your mind, it's beautiful, but you don't stay stuck in that thought, then the thought disappears, and you continue to be aware of that flower, and you appreciate its, it's just, if one had to use words, incredible presence and aliveness, and then a kind of thank you arises that is not necessarily verbal, it's a deep appreciation, but you can even do it with even so-called inanimate objects. There's a glass of water here, and I can see the reflections of the light in the water, it's really beautiful, and for a moment, the mind stops, and simply perceives the incredible beauty of this, without even calling it beauty. It's really, wow, and then you feel this, everything is a gift, there's a aliveness all around you.

Some people make a mistake with the gratitude practice, which is a way of being in the present moment. The mistake is they associate gratitude with a story in their mind, and the story would go like this, I really should be grateful what I have, because look at all these people who have less than me. Okay, well, this may be true, but it's not the path to true gratitude, because if you can only be appreciative and have gratitude by comparing yourself to others who are worse off than you, that is not true gratitude.

You're dependent on others to be worse off than you to feel a bit more grateful. I should be more grateful. It's just, don't look for gratitude on the level of narratives in your mind, but the immediate thing, sense perception, hearing birdsong, clouds, sky, whatever, even how light gets reflected off the surface, just this moment of pure appreciation of the aliveness of things, and there's always another factor that comes in, and it's important whenever you are aware of these things, whether you are performing an action, or you're simply contemplating something and feel this gratitude or acknowledgement of the being of whatever it is, there's a very subtle thing here. Again, let's make it experiential. Right here now, we take in the totality of this room and the lights and a man on the chair talking, and perhaps you're aware that you're breathing while you're contemplating all this, and now we come to the, perhaps the most important point of realization.

As you're aware of all this and appreciate it, are you also aware of yourself at the same time, but not the person? As you are aware of all this and you're inside, you're still, are you aware of that still, let's say, what words to be used, are you aware of that still presence that is aware of all this? Are you aware of yourself as that awareness?

And that's a very subtle thing, but it's very important. So you have here the outer world of the senses, which ultimately is only the surface reality, but beautiful too, but you're also aware of yourself as consciousness, as the stillness, which is the unconscious, the unconditioned consciousness. Now, when I put it like that, in words, a little error arises, which is created by language, because I'm asking, are you aware of yourself?

And that seems to imply that there's a duality there, but it arises because we're using language. When you say, I am aware of myself, that looks like a duality. There's I, and there's that which I am aware of, but that's not how it is.

It only appears like that when you begin to talk about it. But when you don't talk about it, there's just the awareness itself, because you are not separate from the awareness. So it's not really true to say, I am aware of the awareness in me.

No, the awareness in you is aware of itself. That's perhaps a better way of putting it. And that is so, that's the secret of the awareness not losing yourself in the world and in your mind while you're operating in this world.

Can you be aware of yourself as, now I'm using another term now, but it's all the same. Are you aware of yourself as the space, which is the presence, the awareness? Are you aware of yourself as the space for whatever it is that arises in your awareness, the forms that arise, your physical body, even your thoughts and trans-perceptions?

All these things arise in the awareness that you are. The awareness is the space for it. And so to be aware of that space is ultimately to be aware of yourself at the deepest level where you find that far transcends who or what you are as a person.

So you're aware of, and that space of awareness is actually the true meaning of the presence of God. The present moment, that is the power of the present moment, the power itself, of consciousness itself, of life itself. And that power is the power of now.

Then you're aware of yourself as that, and there's the world, and there, this is the, in some spiritual traditions, called the I am, the beingness of you, the essence of you, that is the I am that, in the Old Testament, God replies when, I can't remember who, Abraham or Moses asks, meets God, so to speak, it's a story. I mean, you can't meet God like that, but there's a story there, there's a deep truth in it. God, what's your name, he asked God.

And God said, my name is I am, the I am that I am. And he's very surprised, oh, I am is the name of God, wow. That's very strange.

I'm sure that's what he said, it's not in the Bible, but that is so weird. And perhaps he realized something, when the essence, I am, it's not just your I am, it is the I am of the universe, it is the being itself, the beingness of the universe itself. You can realize that within as your essence, and that connects you to the one, God, if you have to be very careful with words like that, because they have been misused a lot and misunderstood.

But the way I see it or perceive it or sense it is that the consciousness that is the hidden essence behind all the phenomenal universe that we see with our perceive, with our senses, behind it, there is a vast intelligence operating that is not part of this dimension, but somehow flows into this dimension and gradually creates more and more complex forms. It gradually expresses itself more fully in this dimension. And this, it flows into this dimension from the transcendent one that we call God, but we cannot, of course, understand at all.

God does not exist in space or time, but is transcendent to all that. But just as the sun emanates light and creates life here by the energy that it emanates continuously, and that could be used as an analogy in the same way, this is my perception, and perhaps it makes, perhaps you can sense the truth of it too, maybe not, maybe yes. The God's, the emanation of God into this dimension is like the emanation of light that comes from the sun.

And this emanation is consciousness. And this consciousness is behind every form that arises here. It's an intelligence that operates.

You could also call it the soul of the world. The ancients had a term for it. In Latin, it's called anima mundi, the soul of the world, that everything ultimately is a manifestation of that deeper transcendent aliveness.

And so the, what you sense in yourself as yourself, as the consciousness, is the light of God in you and as you. It is the light of God in you. That's how I sense it somehow.

And so just as the light of the sun is not separate from the sun, it's somehow, it's an extension of the sun, one could say, in the same way, the consciousness that flows, that is the essence of what you are, is an extension of God, is an emanation of the one source of all life. And that is you. That is the essence.

But that is the transcendent self, which the Buddhists call no-self. That is the essence. So in essence, you are the light of God in this world, one could say, the light of consciousness.

You are the light of, you are the light of the world as consciousness. And that's exactly what Jesus said to his disciples. You are the light of the world.

So there's nature and there's the present moment. Here, now, here. Oh, and I thought there was nothing to be grateful for.

I'm breathing. Now, there may be one or two people being with us here, there, who perhaps are stuck somewhere in a room and can't get out because of physical disability or they may be in prison and they say, what can I do? What can we do?

We can't get out into nature. Well, you need to remember that your body also is nature. So you can start there.

Every time you take a breath, that's nature. Nature is breathing. The air that you're breathing is nature.

The very fact of breathing is a natural process. It's not choice. It's done for you.

It's not so much that you breathe, although we say I breathe, but you're not the body breathes. So it's a natural thing that happens. You wouldn't say I'm beating my heart.

You don't do that, but that's the same thing. The body does it. It's a natural process.

For some reason, we say I'm breathing because breathing is semi-voluntary. You can't stop it for a while. But not for that long, because if you stop it for too long, nature takes over and you go, ah, ah, ah, ah, ah, ah.

So nature takes, as nature, you live with nature, with your body. So even if you can't get out, you can start by being aware of that level of yourself, the physical level, the natural part of who you are, the body, and not just by saying, okay, I'm looking at my hands or my feet, not just the physical, not the external image of the body, but you can go into the body with your attention. And that's, you're in nature.

Even if you're in a prison cell, you can do that. And even if there's no opportunity, you might be in an office block in Manhattan and you look out of the window and all you have is maybe a little bit of sky. Okay, there's a little bit of nature there.

You can look at that. But you have more nature than that in yourself. So as you sat in your office, wherever it is, go within first, be conscious that breathing is happening.

Hmm, the body is breathing. Be conscious also of the preciousness of the air. It's such a precious substance.

So to acknowledge that is actually part of what sometimes is called to live in a state of gratitude. Now, some people say, what can I be grateful for? There's nothing in my life that I can be grateful for.

Well, are you breathing? Yes. Well, you start there.

If you start being grateful for the tiniest things, then gradually that expands and that shift in consciousness of honoring life, no matter how small it is, the manifestation of life as yourself, by honoring that, gratitude arises and a totally different state of consciousness then brings about good things. But you have to start with the good that is already there. If you want, there's not enough good in my life, people say, I need more good.

Life hasn't given me what I needed. Start with what you have. And the most obvious thing to start with is I'm breathing.

And that's something, it's something very beautiful to feel that you are absorbing this energy that is air. That then merges with your being. It's an amazing thing to honor the process of breath, to honor the fact that you are breathing.

And that is, that you can start with that, that is being, becoming, honoring the present moment. If you're looking for the present moment, which is of course all there ever is, some people write it in the power of now and we're surprised. And they're still surprised when I say the present moment is all there ever is in your life.

There's nothing, there is no past and future in your experience except when you think about it, but not in your actual experience. Oh, well, yes, it's actually true. The greatest philosopher could come and he could not argue with the fact that you only ever experience the present moment, there is nothing else.

The mind asks, well, where is the present moment? Well, start with your breath. That will always take you into the present moment because you're breathing now.

And you're only ever taking one breath, this one. All other breaths you either remember or anticipate mentally. And it's actually said that the Buddha recommended this as a meditation, maybe even before the Buddha, but the Buddha certainly recommended that people should be aware of their breath as a meditation.

He didn't say, as far as I know, that that will take you into the present moment. And he didn't say that will actually stop your mind, too. He just said, be aware of your breath.

So breath awareness meditation has become a Buddhist meditation that's practiced, but the dangerous thing is with practitioners of meditation is they make it into something to be achieved through it. They want to become good at it. You can't become good at one breath.

This is just one breath. So there's nature and there's the present moment. Here, now, here.

Oh, and I thought there was nothing to be grateful for. I'm breathing or breathing is happening. And then as you become aware of that, you're beginning to feel that your body is also alive on the inside, to feel that there's an energy that is pervading the entire body.

That's nature, and it's very close. That's the closest, and you can't get to a tree that close as you can to your body or anything else. So that's really the closest you can ever get to nature is there in yourself as the physical body.

But when you become aware, now, this is something for us, for each one of us to do right now, not to do, but to notice. There's no doing as such because we don't have to do anything. You can do.

Sometimes it helps to move about, to get a little bit of sense that your body is alive. It can help, but you can see this. The body is alive.

Can I feel that? Yes, the breath is happening. And there's aliveness in my feet, my hands, my legs.

Very subtle at first, but it's there. And there's nature, and that's already a deeper level than what you see. Out in nature, when you look at a tree, you can't, to get deeper than the image of the tree, you have to have gone deeper within yourself so that you can sense the aliveness of the tree.

You cannot sense the aliveness of the tree unless you can sense the aliveness in yourself. If you don't sense the aliveness in yourself, you're only approaching the tree with your mind, and your mind might say, oh, that's a nice tree, but you're missing the depth of it. You're missing the fact that there's more here than what the mind tells you there's here.

When the mind says there's a tree or a flower or whatever it is, what you're looking at and call a tree and then believe that the word that you have attached to it is actually describes its reality. No, it's a label. It's an abstraction that you put onto this thing that you cannot really understand.

It's a vitally alive, mysterious being with great depth. As much depth as you, because all life forms are connected and come out of the one source of life. So you're beginning to go to feel that when you feel the aliveness of the inner bodies, not quite the deepest source yet, but you're going towards the non-physical, the life energy that comes from the source.

So connecting with yourself through breath and feeling the inner body is part of connecting with nature. When you're in nature, you may be looking at something, whatever it may be, but then you can also take in the totality of where you are, whatever it may be, your surroundings, trees, mountains, the ocean, or just simple grassy surface, bushes. Take in the totality and then bring in other sense perceptions too, but that requires alertness so that you don't drift back into mental concepts.

Stay alert and you bring in, become aware, not just of the visual aspect of being there. You become aware of the sounds. There may be sounds, natural sounds, or there may be sounds that are not natural that are interfering, but that's fine.

There may be natural sounds, a breeze, you can hear the wind, the leaves are moving in the wind, or the birds, who knows, all natural sounds. Then there's also the air. You can feel the air, perhaps there's a very slight movement of air.

You can feel it on your skin. And then there's a sense of your smell. Maybe there's a certain sense arise as you become aware of your sense of smell.

Maybe you can smell the moisture in the ground or whatever. Be there with all your senses, all senses. You can also, for a few moments, close your eyes so that you can more focus on the other senses that tend to be neglected for many people.

So you just take in your, so you smell the air. You feel the slight breeze on your skin, sounds. It's a beautiful experience.

And you don't need to look for always the spectacular in nature. Sometimes nature can be very spectacular, but a lot of the time, it's just ordinary things. Yes, sometimes you have a beautiful, incredible flower or gigantic sequoia tree or whatever, incredible things.

And many other times, there's just normal nature there, nothing that says, pay attention to me. So you have to find, if you're alert enough, you will see the, concealed in the ordinary spectacle of nature, there is an extraordinary aliveness and beingness and presence. So you don't always look for the one, the great thing.

Just to be aware of all, many things that one would habitually overlook in a normal state of consciousness. It's just, there's a bush there. There's a grass here.

It's been cut. Nothing special. But if you really come alert, then you see everything is intensely alive.

There's a consciousness there. It may not be self-conscious, not conscious of itself. There is a consciousness that has manifested as the tree, the flower, the grass, the bush.

There's a consciousness that has manifested in that form. A different vibrational frequency, one could say to your consciousness, but it's not your consciousness. There's only one universal consciousness manifesting in countless life forms.

So you begin to recognize because, but only because you know yourself as consciousness, your mind has become still enough for you to know yourself as consciousness. You sense the consciousness that is inseparable from who you are, that is the essence of who you are, that is who you are. And then you can sense the consciousness in other life forms, it's only then.

And that sensing of consciousness in other life forms is a deep state of connectedness. You're no longer separate from it, which you are condemned to this separateness when you only relate to things through conceptualization, because that becomes a barrier to everything. The concepts become the barrier.

When they are free of that, the sense of separation disappears. And there's a oneness, for example, of you and the flower, the oneness of you and the tree, because there's no longer an entity there that is me, the conceptual entity. There's only consciousness perceiving itself in a different form.

Welcome. I just want to remind you that we are not here to do anything. We are here to, one could say, experience something rather than do something.

And what we are here to experience, and even that's not quite right, I'll come to that in a minute. What we're here to experience is very subtle, but very powerful. Whatever name we give that reduces it.

It's not that. It's very vast. For the time being, let's just call it stillness.

Now, when I said we're here to experience something, that's not absolutely right, but whenever we use language, we are bound to falsify that which goes far beyond concepts. It's not so much that we're here to experience something as to find that which lies, which underlies all experience, a dimension that is deeper than any experience. Becoming aware of that within yourself.

So, some of you may have written down or have in your mind goals you want to achieve in life, and that's good. It's unlikely that achieving stillness will figure prominently as one of your goals, or even number one, and yet it's the most important thing in your life. But it's a good thing that it's not on your list of goals to be achieved, because if you make it into a goal to be achieved, it implies that you need the future to be achieved.

To achieve stillness, which is, of course, true for all other goals, but not for that which we call stillness. Temporarily, we just call it, for the time being, stillness. If you make it into a goal to be achieved, you place it into the future and you'll never find it, because it's inseparable from the present moment, the now, the now that usually people are not aware of as an actual presence.

And here we have another pointer we could use instead of stillness, and that is presence. And as the word implies, presence is inseparable from the present, the now. Now, for most people, yet the now is not a living realization.

They are only aware of what happens in the now, and even that's not quite right. They're not really aware of it. They are reactive towards it, and they are identified with it.

They are identified with their thoughts that arise. They are reactive to what happens outside. So I'm here just talking a little bit, giving you pointers with every sentence, every word is really a pointer towards that, and I trust that as we sit here together, giving up the idea that we are here to do something, as we sit here together, a realization arises within you that is the living presence within.

The thinking mind stops for a moment, and there's just spacious awareness, stillness. You haven't gone to sleep. You've become still without falling into dreamless sleep, without falling into dreams.

Just something has arisen that usually you would have overlooked, and our meditation here, if we want to call it that, is to become aware of the space within, another pointer, the stillness, the space. Becoming totally at ease with the present moment, a very rare state for most humans. Usually they're only at ease when some desire has just been fulfilled, and then they're at ease for a little while, a few minutes, perhaps.

Or they are at ease because they're so tired. They're moving towards sleep. So I'm here to lead you into that realization of inner stillness, of that dimension within.

Lead you through words, which are only pointers, and through the demonstration of presence, which you can sense if you pay attention to the underlying stillness that is here as I speak, behind the words, between the words. Tune into that. Nothing personal in that, nothing to do with this person.

And as you tune into that, the same dimension arises within you, which again has nothing to do with that person that you think you are. So there is a dimension that transcends the person. It's in this person, and it's in that person.

The dimension that transcends the personal and the person. And everything to do with the person, the personal history, the personal problems, the life situation, the ups and downs of the life situation. They will always be there, the ups and downs of the life situation.

But the miracle is finding the transcendent dimension within you, without which life cannot be a pleasant experience, not for long. It cannot be satisfying, not for long, never for long. So without the realization of the transcendent dimension, the formless, spacious, stillness, nothing will satisfy you.

It's frustrating. Life is very frustrating without that dimension. If you haven't found it.

But of course, the dimension is there in everyone. It's not something that you need to achieve. You can't achieve it, let alone achieve it in the future.

You can discover it here and now within. It's lurking there underneath all the doing, underneath all the thinking. It's always there, but completely, ignored by most people.

If you're comfortable with theistic terms, you could say God is always present, but completely ignored by most people. Because if God has any meaning, it is the transcendent dimension of life. It transcends, means it is beyond whatever arises in life, beyond thought, beyond physical forms, beyond form.

It transcends form. It is beyond past and future. It transcends time.

It has nothing to do with time. It is presence, eternal presence. And presence, eternal presence or eternity, is not some weird abstract philosophical concept.

It can be, and it points to a living realization. So the most precious thing to find in life is that there's stillness inside you always. Always.

You just have to pay attention to it. But then the strange thing is that when you become aware of stillness, you realize that the awareness and the stillness are not two but one. So it's only when we use language, we say, I'm now, I'm aware of stillness.

You put it into language. So when you're aware of stillness, there is a knowing where concepts are not needed. Words are not needed.

And there is no duality, really. It's only when you translate it into words, there's a duality, and you say, I'm aware of stillness. But what really happens is that awareness and stillness are a single realization.

There is no subject and object in this realization. When we talk about it, it sometimes seems that there is a subject. I am aware of stillness.

I can feel the stillness inside me. When you put it into words, that's how it's the subject and object. But when you look more deeply beyond words, you see that there's not me as an entity who is aware of stillness as something in me.

It's only when we use language and that duality appears. So when I'm aware of stillness, really, the awareness and the stillness are one.

Just feel your body. Feel the vibration, the tingling of your inner body. Just by feeling even your hands.

Can you feel your hands? And that energy body acts as a bridge connecting you to stillness. That one life, it's energy, pure energy.

The same energy that are in the plants and the flowers and in other human beings before it's distorted by thought, by emotions. So continue feeling that as we go deeper within, and perhaps you'd like to close your eyes, listen to that silence that is in the room, and who is aware of that silence, that awareness itself. When we become aware of whether it's external silence or aware of some sort of object, whether it's outside of us or an object that is inside of us, such as thoughts or emotions, it's like turn that attention, your awareness onto itself.

By doing that, you tap into that stillness that is within, the stillness, the consciousness that you are, and that consciousness coming through your form and manifesting as your individual soul. It appears to be individual, but there is really only the one consciousness, the one life, the one spirit, and you are that spirit. And even though you may, on this level of form, be in different stages of consciousness, if you can say that, or as I was saying yesterday, some are buds, some are more open and flowering.

So you may be walking in, like both worlds right now, the world of form and that dimension that is stillness. It is the flowering of human consciousness, that unfolding that happens within, that we are moving, shifting from that material world, the sense world, the world of form into consciousness, into that stillness, into that dimension that is unconditioned, that is formless. And as we shift and move through that level, there are times where it's going to be challenging, where it feels up and down, and times that it just feels nice and smooth.

But remember that those times, if there is any movement, that is the movement of form, not your true nature. Your true nature is the stillness in which you are aware of the forms manifesting and moving through time and space. But the dimension, the core of who you are, that spiritual dimension, is the screen, the background, the ocean, the sky, the vastness, eternal, infinite, life in which forms appear and eventually forms dissolve.

The longer that forms stay in our field of vision or our life, and the more that we have that mind level, if we connect more to that mind level, we will grab hold of that form. And when it goes, it's more painful. There's more suffering involved as it dissolves.

There's a practice in India where people will go to maybe the Ganges or a place where they will burn the dead bodies and a practice where you sit there and meditate on death. Perhaps you can even go to a cemetery and sit there and meditate here in the Western world and meditate on death. But here in the Western world, we kind of like, we hide those things away.

Death? There is no death. What are you talking about, death?

We put it away, and yet in some cultures, it's almost like a celebration. It was in India one time, and I would hear all this music and this chanting as people are walking down the street. There's a stream of people, and I saw these people holding up this on a platform, a dead body with sunglasses on it.

I don't know why it needed sunglasses, but apparently it did. And they were just singing and chanting and dancing as they were bringing to the body to, I don't know where they were bringing it to, but someplace where they will cremate it in front of you, and you watch it. And part of connecting to that spiritual life, the essence of who you are, which is the eternal consciousness, which is no form, is while you are here in this body and on this level of the human realm, it is beautiful to be able to practice or to be with, to meditate on the dying, the death, the letting go.

It's the ultimate letting go. And even when we are on our deathbed, it will be the ultimate of I'm leaving this so-called world, the form, the ultimate death. When Eckhart's mother was getting older, her body was failing her, and she was very attached to her body.

You know, oh, you know, I don't wanna see, you know, have people see me using this walker. And we had just put her into an assisted care home, and we just said, you know, have you looked around? Everybody else is using a walker.

So she was very attached to her body. And I remember having the thought, I really hope as I age, I will age gracefully. And there is that process, because there is a slight attachment where as I was aging and as my body started to change, and I realized, wow, this is harder than I thought to be able to let go of certain aspects of the way you look, you know, the wrinkles that come, or your body starts sagging, or you start gaining weight, or whatever it is that the change begins to happen from this age of this dimension of the world of really celebrating only youth, that youth is the best thing on the physical level. But we forget that there is the eternal youth within us, but yet we have this form. So we are in constant reminder that are you going to be one with that divine consciousness?

Are you going to be more attached to form? And it definitely is a process of what appears to be a process, unless you're really, really super advanced, and you age and there's no problem at all, with no attachment to it. But there was, and it's like, okay, how can I age gracefully here?

Because I could see that attachment, because it's all around me, I see it all around me in commercials, and on the TV, or in movies, and the female movie stars in America, they speak about this all the time, where at a certain age, it's like nobody wants them anymore. So they had all this attention, and given all this attention, and suddenly you're just no good, you're too old. So they get injected here, and injected there, and I look at all these women who have been injected, and eventually, there's something very similar in their face, even though they have different faces, there's something very similar with all these different injections of Botox, or whatever they do.

And we recently have got a place now in California, in Santa Barbara, and I'm like, okay, I'm gonna be faced with this all the time, when I'm down there. Here it is, right in my face. And it's this continuation of this, being very meditative on the letting go, because I am on that decline of going down and the body definitely changing, aging, and then at some point, I'll leave the body, the body will be no longer this body anymore, as my consciousness is still here.

Her consciousness never dies, was never born, it is. So this is our practice in our everyday lives. Every moment can be used as a practice, and really is a practice if you are sincerely choosing and wanting the spiritual life.

There's nothing wrong with form, there's nothing wrong with having a business, having money, having a family, it's how much are you attached to it. If it all got wiped away from you, would that be okay? And really, the ultimate test is when it happens, or if it happens, because you really can't think how you were going to respond, you may think you know, but the ultimate test is when and if it actually happens.

So this is why we cannot think that we are so-called enlightened. We have no more attachments. We really ultimately don't know that until we are really tested.

So any thoughts you have about your spiritual life is a thought. So where does that leave you? It leaves you here in the present moment to connect with this present moment and be conscious, be aware, relaxed in this moment until something happens that you're called to action, called to speak.

But we rest in that stillness, in the soul essence of who you are without that desire to move outward, without that desire to speak or take action. Because if there's any desire in it, that desire comes from the mind, you have thought about it. Whereas a pure action arising from the stillness of who you are has no prior thought, no prior thought.

But when action comes, it comes. When words arise, they rise and you speak it. In the meantime, we watch our minds going back and forth, watch how the desires arise in us, watch how the concepts or the opinions or the judgments arise.

And all of that, as I mentioned yesterday, is on the level of the material of form. And how much of that material form life is causing you suffering will bring you out of that material world and into the essence of who you are. Because as we are, and everyone here, that you've come here this weekend, is on some sort of spiritual awakening.

So the mind, the mental level, the old sort of consciousness that is in you may think it still wants this world, the world of form. But the essence of who you are deep inside you is calling you to go into the life that is really meant as the truth of all beingness. So it's like we waffle back and forth because there is something that is undescribable, something that we cannot understand on the mental level, but it's bringing us home.

But your mind can still be in operation and still think, no, I kind of want this and I want that. And that's okay. You may have to go there and play that out and have that desire met before you get tired of it.

I met this one guy in India and we were visiting this guru who apparently grants wishes. Don't know how he does it, but anyways, it happened for him. And he desired more sex.

He wanted to experience more sex. So that's what he asked for. And he met this lady in India and of course he was thrilled, absolutely thrilled.

But then after about a few weeks or I don't know how long it was, whether it's a month or two months, I was there at that time for three months. So it wasn't more than three months. Anyways, he said, oh my, I go, how's it going, you know, with the girl there?

And he goes, oh my God, all she wants is sex. So, you know, oftentimes we get what we wish for until we realize, oh my God, you know, like it's way too much, slow down. I don't want this anymore.

So we get it and we play it out until it's absolutely, we get so tired of it, we can't stand it anymore. And then we go, okay, I've had enough of that. I'm going back to the essence of who I am.

Until life comes along and shows you something else, pulls at a different thread and say, you know, oh yeah, but you know, I want that big house, you know. And then you'll get that big house and you're happy and you might throw a housewarming party. And then all of a sudden it's like, wow, this house isn't so great.

Oh my God, my electricity bill is so big and, you know, whatever. So life will show us and it's showing you and it may show a few things at a time, one thing at a time and you get a break, it doesn't matter, but it will show you because you are on this awakening path, everything will be dropped away from you. And I don't mean in the literal sense, like your house isn't gonna drop away or, you know, I'm not talking about that.

I'm talking about that attachment to the things of this world. So we are shown, you will be shown what attachments you have and don't be afraid to look. Don't be afraid to even admit, wow, I have that attachment and, but you know what, I really want that.

Or even when the pain body comes up, there may be a time and it has happened with me where I feel the pain body arising, I go and I meditate with it and I ask myself, you know, I truly ask myself, do I wanna let this go? And there have been times where the answer is actually no. And as soon as that happens, whoop, I'm fully in that pain body.

So for some reason, you need to, maybe you need to experience that again, but you'll experience it and experience it until you just say, no, I don't want it anymore. That's not where I'm headed to. I don't wanna keep going, being pulled back.

And we'll keep getting pulled back until we're able to rise above it and choose only the one power, the one consciousness that truly exists as reality. For the forms that are impermanent is not reality. The forms that change and come and go is not reality.

So what is reality? But the one eternal life that is within you, deeper than that mind body connection.

[Speaker 5] (9:19:11 - 9:21:24)
And welcome. It's great to be with you. My name's Tammy Simon.

I'm the founder of Sounds True. And it's my joy and honor to welcome you to this special question and answer session about conscious manifestation with Eckhart Tolle. Our team has gathered many, many questions and sifted through them to select some of the most common and compelling questions about conscious manifestation.

And I'll be asking those questions to Eckhart in just a few moments. Here at the start of our program, for those of you who are unaware, I wanna let you know that Eckhart and his teaching partner, Kim Eng, are creating an in-depth teaching program. It's called The Spiritual Guide to Conscious Manifestation.

And it's a four-month learning journey that begins at the end of May next year with a four-day retreat in Huntington Beach, California. And then following the four-day retreat, there's a four-month online learning immersion and at-home curriculum that follows. And right now we're in the process of letting people know about The Spiritual Guide to Conscious Manifestation, the in-person retreat followed by the four months at home.

There'll also be a fully virtual version of the program that we'll announce soon. And also you can apply for scholarships to attend the program. So if you're interested in going even deeper into some of the themes that we'll be starting to explore here in this Q&A session, I encourage you to check out The Spiritual Guide to Conscious Manifestation.

You can just click the Learn More button that's under the player page. And with that, Eckhart, shall we move into the questions?

Welcome. Thank you, Tammy. Welcome, everybody.

Welcome to the present moment. Before we start, I'd like to mention that you might be hearing a strange pitter patter in the background, which is due to the heavy rain that's falling here at the moment. It's all part of the live session.

When I speak, you will probably hear less but when I stop speaking, you will hear it more clearly, for example, now. All right, Eckhart, shall we begin? Let's have a little meditative talk and then I will hand it back to you, Tammy, with the first question.

Wonderful. At any given moment, part of being present in the moment is what is conventionally called gratitude or thankfulness. I guess gratitude and thankfulness are the same thing in the English language.

Thankfulness is of Germanic origin or Anglo-Saxon and gratitude is of Latin origin, but they mean the same thing. So part of being present is when you're really in the now, almost inevitably, a certain appreciation arises for whatever is manifesting in the now. At this moment, what's manifesting, for example, here in the background, is the sound of the rain on the window pane or the external windowsill.

It kind of amplifies the sound and that's something to be grateful for because it's a life-giving substance that's just lots of trees here, very tall trees. It's actually not far from where I'm sitting. There's a rainforest.

Actually, this area of British Columbia is the largest temperate rainforest. And this is why they call it rainforest because it loves the water. It rains so much, it has created this wonderful vegetation.

It's been there for a million years. So you can be grateful for the sound of the rain instead of feeling it's something to be rejected or complain about. Gratitude arises for the life-giving substance of the water.

And this is only one example. Whatever arises when you're really present and give it attention, whatever manifests naturally, you welcome it. And even if it's something that looks like an obstacle or a hindrance, that can also be welcomed.

Life is full of these things that we call challenges. A real challenge always arises in the present moment and there are other challenges that arise in the mind. A real challenge arises something, an obstacle arises.

And again, there can be a kind of a gratefulness even for that because you realize that the evolution of consciousness requires obstacles. It requires the rising of a limitation in your life. Because only by encountering limitation do you become motivated to transcend or rise above the limitation.

And that requires more consciousness. In some simple cases, it may just require more physical strength. So, but whatever it is, it requires an influx of energy on whatever level, whether it's on just purely physical level or a more refined level of conscious attention, consciousness itself.

So, I'm just mentioning this importance whenever you are interested in manifesting. First of all, acknowledge what is already naturally manifesting in this present moment and see if you can become friendly with it. Instead of wanting to eliminate it in order to have something better, that's already an obstacle that arises when you're trying to, that you're creating an obstacle and you're trying to manifest something but there's an unhappiness at the basis of it.

So, when we begin to talk about, answer the questions, I'm sure I'll come back to that. It is a very common obstacle that arises and that is a dissatisfaction with the present moment, an inability or unwillingness to acknowledge the aliveness of the present moment, no matter what way it is and what form it takes. And that becomes a hindrance to your ability to manifest, powerfully, because that's ego.

Ego lives largely through non-alignment with the present moment that keeps the ego going. But let's go to the first question and then we'll continue talking about this importance of being aligned with the present moment and that the power resides in the present moment, the power that is available to you to manifest resides in the present moment, here and now.

[Speaker 5] (9:28:28 - 9:28:45)
This first question, Eckhart, is directly on that point. It's from Jack from Massachusetts, who writes in, do you have to be, quote, out of your head, unquote, and totally present in the moment to consciously manifest something?

[Speaker 3] (9:28:48 - 9:40:11)
Well, yes, that's a good question. Out of your head, I guess the questioner means by that, out of the thinking mind, head is often used, meaning the thinking mind. Yes, the foundation for manifesting is to be deeply rooted in the present moment and in the dimension of being.

The dimension of being is there when the mind, you encounter this dimension, you access this dimension, when the thinking mind subsides for a moment, and let's not just talk about it, but actually experience it in this very moment, the possibility for the stream of thinking to subside just for a moment, and yet you remain very conscious of that, and you're not only conscious of the sense perceptions around you, which you acknowledge and perhaps find some sense of appreciation, that we sometimes call gratitude, an appreciation when you become present, appreciation for whatever surrounds you, even seemingly insignificant little things. They're all there, they have a certain presence, sense perceptions, and then the deeper aspect of being rooted in the dimension of being is to sense the presence, let's call it your presence or it's not yours, but just as a pointer, let's for a moment call it your presence, to sense your presence, not your story, which is a personality of a person, because when you're not thinking, the story disappears, so the personality as which you appear most of the time, recedes into the background, and what replaces the personality, which is a narrative in your mind, it's a story, that's your personality, or the conditioning of the mind, so when you get out of your head, out of your mind, that subsides, and what is something else arises, so this entity, the personality, recedes into the background, and what arises is a sense of alert presence, and at first you notice it indirectly, because you become more conscious, more aware of your surroundings, your sense perceptions, and you acknowledge that and you appreciate that, this is indirectly, you become aware of the beingness of the present moment, that's the first step, when you begin to appreciate whatever the universe has manifested, or you have manifested in this moment, that's the world around you, that you take in your sense perceptions, visual, auditory, tactile, whatever it may be, so that is part of becoming present, an appreciation of what is, and then the deeper, we could call that, you become indirectly aware of the power of the present, the beingness of the present moment, and then you become aware of something deeper, that is there at the same time, and that is the presence itself, without which you could not be aware of anything, it's a very power of awareness, and that is very still, it is still, so there's no mental noise anymore, this is an alert stillness, stillness here means, absence of the thinking noise, the noise of thought, and what is left is awareness itself, we could call it consciousness also, consciousness itself, and that stillness is consciousness itself, in other words, you become conscious of being conscious, you know yourself, you know your essence, as that consciousness, that is much deeper than the person, as that conscious awareness or presence, as that you, you have no past, and no future, and as that presence, you have no age, doesn't matter whether you're 18 years old or 19 years old, that in that presence is ageless, and also that presence has no gender, man or woman, or any of the other many genders that people are very much concerned with these days, but as that presence, that is not male or female, it transcends that, and that is the point of power, that is the very foundation for manifesting anything in this world, is you have to go there first, and discover in that dimension, here and now, at this very moment, it is possible to let go of thinking, but not to become some spaced out state, or start, you're very alert, you're just present, and then you sense what we call stillness, is only one way of pointing to it or speaking about it, it is, of course, more than just stillness, yes, it's a good pointer, but stillness really means the absence of noise, in this case, mental noise, but this presence is not just the absence of something, yes, it is the absence of all my objects, it is the absence of all objects that may arise in consciousness, because it's the space of consciousness itself, but it's not just the absence, it is an absence of thought, and an absence of objects of consciousness, but there's also a powerful presence that is within you, but whether it is within or without, it's actually hard to say, but when you sense it within yourself, you also sense it is in the space that surrounds you, what we call space, is also filled with presence, so inner and outer kind of meet, become one, and that is a very foundation for spirituality, whether or not you're interested in manifesting or not, yes, if you are 95 years old, perhaps you've lost the interest, there's not much more that you want to manifest in this world, there's no need, or you might even be younger, you feel there's no need to manifest, that's perfectly fine, or you may be at a stage in your life where you feel the universe wants to manifest something through you in this dimension, but it doesn't matter what it is, but that is the foundation, so getting out of your head, as the questioner asked, yes, in that sense, it's important, but when you begin to manifest, then you will use your mind to some extent, you will, for example, you may, some people like to visualize something, so you begin to use your mind, or you may have affirmations, which is a controlled use of your mind, and yes, you do get, you need, first of all, you do need to get out of your head, as the questioner puts it, and then you sense the power of presence, once you sense the power of presence, if it is your choice to manifest, you want to manifest something, then you may use affirmations, you speak a sentence, a few words, that point towards where you want to, whatever you want to manifest, even a simple thing, I'm filled with spiritual power, it's not an egoic statement, because power, spiritual power is not power of the ego, it's not power over other human beings,

but by saying, I'm filled with spiritual power, can actually deepen your ability to sense that power,

[Speaker 3] (9:40:19 - 9:44:03)
because that is the power of presence, so I'm filled with spiritual power, can deepen that, so you use that pointer, and in between the statements, there is a space of just, where you can sense the power itself, it's a wonderful thing, so you can use your mind, you may have to use your mind to some extent, but it is a focused way of using your mind, and the wonderful thing is that, that dimension, we could call, yes, the dimension of presence or being, it's so fulfilling or satisfying, to sense that within yourself, that all manifestation, whatever you can manifest out of that, becomes of secondary importance, that's another important part of manifesting, this realization, whatever you want to manifest in this world, people want what they want, better, more abundance in their life, perhaps material abundance, there's a shortage of money, you want to experience an expansion on this dimension, fine, or they want to find some companion in their life, or they may want better health, or a better way of contributing to this world, as the expression goes, to make a difference in this world, they want to be a positive force in this world, that's all, these are all wonderful things, but the primary thing is to touch that, to not touch just deeper, to access that dimension within yourself, and stay rooted in that dimension of being, presence, that in itself is so fulfilling, that anything you can manifest, becomes the English expression, if English is not your native language, I don't know if you've heard the expression, the icing on the cake, the icing on the cake is the stuff you put on top of it, you have a cake, icing on the cake is the stuff you put on top of the cake, you put little ornaments to make the cake look nice, it's the icing on the cake, but it's not the cake itself is more important than the icing on the cake, so the icing on the cake is the step of the realization of being, that is this, sorry, that is the cake, the icing is whatever you manifest, Jesus said the same thing, he didn't actually use,

[Speaker 1] (9:44:04 - 9:44:14)
he was not familiar with English, and the expression icing on the cake didn't exist, I don't know whether they even had cake at that time, but Jesus used the expression,

[Speaker 3] (9:44:17 - 9:44:57)
seek only the kingdom of heaven, everything else that you may think you, that you need will be added unto you, seek only the kingdom of heaven, everything else will be added unto you, it's only an addition, it's not the main thing, so whatever in this life, whatever you may want to achieve, it's an adding on to the main thing, the main thing is the kingdom of heaven, which is your realization of being,

[Speaker 1] (9:44:57 - 9:45:03)
the realization of that which transcends the personal personality,

[Speaker 3] (9:45:05 - 9:46:20)
the realization of being, you see, I am, without adding anything to it, presence itself, and so then, that's the foundation for all manifestation, and out of that power, maybe some people like to visualize the situation, others may want to use verbal affirmations, and that's fine, but as you use those things, you stay connected with that dimension, so that means when you want something in life, the wanting is very different from the egoic wanting, because you no longer, you don't need it to be fulfilled or happy, so it's the different kind of wanting, you don't need it to be fulfilled, the fulfillment you have to find in the present moment,

[Speaker 1] (9:46:20 - 9:46:30)

you have to go deep enough into the present moment, so you find, and again, quoting Jesus again, because he talked about it,

[Speaker 3] (9:46:31 - 9:47:14)
in the present moment, you find what he called the fullness of life, that's actually an expression that Jesus used, he said, I want you to have the fullness of life, in some translations it's called abundant life, I want you to have abundant life, in other translations it's, I want you to have the fullness of life, and that fullness of life does not mean many things, it means that the essence of life itself, that is the fullness of life,

[Speaker 1] (9:47:14 - 9:47:22)
then all those things that you may want, will be added, well, maybe not all of them,

[Speaker 3] (9:47:23 - 9:47:26)
but many of things will be added unto you,

[Speaker 1] (9:47:28 - 9:47:36)
so that is the essence of manifestation,

[Speaker 3] (9:47:39 - 9:47:43)
we'll talk about some other aspects, as I answer some more questions.

[Speaker 5] (9:47:46 - 9:48:20)
This question, Eckhart, comes from Wiebke, from Barcelona, Spain, who writes in, thank you very much, Eckhart, for sharing your wisdom with us, why is it sometimes super easy for me to manifest, and it arrives in no time, and then other times, it doesn't seem to work at all, does it have to do somehow with me not fully letting go of wanting it, or believing that I already have it, am it? Thank you.

[Speaker 3] (9:48:21 - 9:48:57)
Right, well, another good question, so first of all, congratulations that you're already quite successful in manifesting quite often, and sometimes, yes, you're right, sometimes it may not appear, or it may also appear after a much longer time gap than you might have expected,

[Speaker 1] (9:48:58 - 9:49:09)
so certain things appear when you almost forget that you attempted to manifest these things,

[Speaker 3] (9:49:09 - 9:49:55)
let's say you spent a couple of weeks, or three weeks, repeating certain affirmations and visualizing it, and then after a while, it's good to let go, give it some space, and then nothing happens, and it could be that a year later, the very thing you almost forgot that you practiced this manifestation method in order to manifest this or that, and a year later, it suddenly appears, and you remember, oh, that's what I worked on a year ago to manifest, and I'd almost forgotten about it, that can happen,

but other things can happen too.[Speaker 2] (0:00 - 4:24)
Oh, and that is, there could be too much wanting, the wanting can be an obstacle. If you want some, if you want it too much, that implies you're not sufficiently rooted in the power of presence, and then the wanting takes over, and if there's too much wanting, by implication, you are saying that you don't have it. So in that kind of wanting, this is sometimes people try to exercise willpower, and they try to manifest, I really, I'm going to, I really want, I want this, there it is.

That is not necessarily a good way to manifest, because by saying I want it, you're also saying that you don't have it yet, but the most powerful way to manifest is the feeling that you already, that it's already here, and that only arises out of the fullness of being, of presence in the present moment, because then you merge the image of what you want with a sense of fullness, the fullness of being. So the image and the fullness of being come together, and that is a powerful way of manifesting it, which means you don't need that thing for your happiness anymore, you don't need it for your ultimate fulfillment.

The most powerful way to manifest is to regard it as a play, or a game, the game of life, the play of life, of manifesting, then there's also a sense of detachment from the outcome, an excessive attachment to the desired outcome is also an obstacle to manifesting. If you desperately need something, if you are unhappy, if you are unhappy, if you don't get it, then there's something wrong. So if you're unhappy, when you don't achieve whatever you want to manifest, then you didn't do it right.

So there needs to be a detachment, so to speak, from the desired outcome, so that you don't project this, whatever you want to manifest doesn't become a future projection, but whatever you want to manifest needs to be realized as already existing on some level in the unmanifested. That's why Jesus said, I want to go back to Jesus because whatever you want to learn about manifestation, just read what he explained it all, in very simple words, he said, whenever you pray for something, believe that you have received it and it will be yours. That's the entire secret of manifestation already there, and the importance of the words are not believe that you will receive it, because then there would be too much wanting, I want this, I will get it.

No, he said, believe that you have received it, and it will be yours, and it will be given to you. So believing that you have, in other words, it's already there, and how does that happen? How does it happen when your senses tell you that it's not there?

[Speaker 1] (4:25 - 4:35)
Let's say you live in a trailer, there's nothing wrong with living in a trailer, I love trailers, but let's say you live in a trailer, but you want a nice house.

[Speaker 2] (4:36 - 6:03)
Okay, your preference would be a nice house, but are you unhappy in your trailer, or are you appreciate being in a trailer, and you can hear the pitter-patter of rain on the roof. Well, I can hear it now, I'm not in a trailer, I can still hear it from the windowpane. So in a trailer, but you want a nice house.

Okay, where's the house? Because you look around, it's not here. Are you creating some kind of dissatisfaction by telling yourself a story?

This is what my life has come to. I've reduced to living in a trailer. I need to get out of here.

This is all disempowering, all those narratives, telling yourself stories that are not good enough, all very disempowering. Yes, your senses are telling you that you're not living in a nice house, just in a trailer, but that's fine for the present moment. So where's the house?

The house is in your imagination, in your mind, maybe you visualize it, or maybe you have certain verbal affirmations that you have a lovely house that you live in, and then the visualization and the verbal affirmation, you bring it together, allow the visualization of the verbal affirmation to be empowered by that sense of presence, so that it meets the presence, so that house merges with the sense of presence, and then inside you feel you already have it.

And the weird thing is, when you do get it, let's say next year, or in six months' time, or in two years' time, or in three years' time, when you do get it, and then suddenly you sit in your nice house, it makes no difference to your inner state anymore, because when you were in your trailer, you were already in the same state of fullness of life, when you sit in a nice house and say, okay, it's fine, but you're not, you say, yes, a certain amount of satisfaction may be there, but basically, your inner state is the same as it was before, because you already touched the fullness, you were already rooted in the beingness, the dimension of being, the fullness of life. In other words, when it does manifest, you don't suddenly become, oh, I'm so happy, I got it, oh, finally, it doesn't happen anymore, you say, oh, it's good, but your inner state is the same as it was before, no matter what you achieve, you already have the foundation for everything, you're already rooted in that, this is why Jesus called it, all these things will be added unto you, it's no more than that, an adding, or use the expression, icing on the cake, and you have an enormous sense of freedom, of liberation, because you're no longer, your inner state is no longer dependent on external conditions, there's something in you that is more powerful than any external condition, the inner state is not determined by external conditions anymore, and that's very different from when you achieve something, as I said, a certain amount of satisfaction may be there, but you did not need it for your fulfillment or happiness, you didn't need it for that, because you already found that. So, let's go on to the next question.

[Speaker 6] (9:35 - 10:19)
Eckhart, this is from Samantha in Tampa, Florida, who writes in, I understand that conscious manifestation means that I operate from a sense of the fullness of being, and yet the truth is I feel a sense of lack in certain areas of my life, and in particular with my finances, I can sit quietly and feel content and still, but then when I re-engage with my life, and especially my banking details, the feeling of lack returns. How do you advise that I work with this sense of lack when it comes to the practice of conscious manifestation?

[Speaker 2] (10:21 - 12:21)
Right, yes, another interesting question. The sense of lack, of course, is inseparable from the human ego. The human ego always operates on the basis of lack, whether it's financial lack, or other kinds of lack, in the human ego there's always a sense of, there's something missing here, and if you're wealthy, it probably won't be in the region of, if you have a few million dollars, maybe the sense of lack will come from somewhere else, it may not come from finances, it may come from something else, something very important that's missing in my life. Many people who are experiencing financial restrictions, or not experiencing that abundance that comes with having sufficient financial funds in their life, or income, they may believe that when they finally get enough, get this abundance in their lives, then everything will be okay, but that's probably not the case, because the ego will still be there, and you will sense that lack in other areas of your life, whether it's a lack of partner or companionship, or the lack of, inability to find any kind of real satisfaction in any experience, no matter what you do and where you go, there's always an emptiness that you feel.

[Speaker 2] (12:28 - 14:24)
So I've met many wealthy people over the years, and many, some were able to, at least to some extent, go beyond ego and go beyond the sense of lack, but in others I found a very wealthy people with a very deep sense of lack, sometimes deeper than in some people who had very little money, and this sense of something not right, something is missing, and often they don't even know what it is, and then they want to fill it up sometimes with drugs, or a desperate search for experiences, for sensory experiences, maybe a desperate search for or needing to whatever experience, sex, sexuality, or in taking in substances, or eating of substances, and I need this, I need all of this neediness that's part of the ego, and always looking for the next thing to fill that void that they feel, and so this void that they feel is part of the ego, but, so let's come back to the question of finances, it is, the sense of lack is an inseparable part of the ego, that is true, but of course, when you have a shortage of money that restricts your life,

[Speaker 1] (14:25 - 14:32)
you can't live where you would like to live, or there's not enough freedom of movement

[Speaker 2] (14:32 - 18:04)
because there's not enough money, there is a sense of something missing, and you see it's not just in your mind, it's also here when you look at your bank statement, you see it's not very much there, going beyond the sense of lack that is an inseparable part of the ego, you need to, I believe the questioner to some extent has already done that, you need to discover the fullness of life, to use Jesus' expression, which is the fullness of being, which is inseparable from the present moment, so when you go there, you can see that abundant, another expression is abundant life that Jesus used, you can sense this abundant life in the present moment, regardless of whether there is actual abundance in this manifested dimension, you feel the abundance of life, and you see, when you appreciate all the countless manifestations of life that are around you, that you perceive with your senses, and you acknowledge the abundance of life, no matter whether you go out into nature, you see the abundance of nature, the abundance of brain right now that's coming down here that I can hear, there's an acknowledgement, an appreciation, even a potted plant, I have a potted plant there, there's another one here, to appreciate their manifestations of the aliveness of the universe, and there's an abundance in everything, you live in a city, there's abundance everywhere, you can look into a shop window and you see abundance of goods there, you don't even need to go and buy them, you just appreciate, you go past a flower shop, and you see abundance of plants and flowers, and you appreciate and you feel abundant already, but the deepest abundance is the feeling of the fullness of life, and then, I believe what the questioner is asking, at times when he looks at his bank statement, the sense of lack comes back, because then you see, oh, I have very little, there's not much left, and then the mind will start creating a narrative of lack, and will tell you that you've been wronged, that actually you don't have much, and that can be a great hindrance, it will diminish your power of manifestation,

[Speaker 1] (18:05 - 18:21)
so what do you do when you look at your bank statement, or you go to the ATM machine, and you want to get out $300, or whatever it is, and it says, you put it in,

[Speaker 2] (18:21 - 18:47)
it says insufficient funds, and that's the time of, I'm not talking about right now, what you can do on a practical level, the question is, as much as possible,

[Speaker 1] (18:49 - 18:58)
do not succumb to the feeling of financial lack, even if there is financial lack in your life,

[Speaker 2] (18:58 - 19:33)
do not succumb to the feeling of lack, and that is, whatever you can do to generate a sense of abundance, and the main thing, of course, is going within, and sensing the fullness of life, even when you look at your bank statement, don't personalize it, don't have any kind of projection,

[Speaker 1] (19:35 - 19:44)
this is just factually, these are the figures, and then perhaps you have a certain course of action,

[Speaker 2] (19:44 - 20:08)
in addition to feeling the sense of abundance, you may have to work out a certain goal that you have, that may give you more abundance, so perhaps you have something that you want to do to create more abundance,

[Speaker 1] (20:08 - 20:17)
and then your manifestation can flow into that, so that the sense of abundance flows into the,

[Speaker 2] (20:17 - 20:40)
whatever it is that you are wanting to manifest in your life, you have to combine action and whatever technique you use, or whatever method you use,

[Speaker 1] (20:41 - 20:50)
it is to be recommended that you combine it with some kind of action,

[Speaker 2] (20:51 - 21:35)
so that you can generate abundance even on this outer level, so this applies in many cases, people have, let's say, you might feel a sense of lack, of something meaningful in your life, or you might feel a sense of lack, of feeling that you are not good enough, you are not enough in this world, and some people then come up with, what is it that I want,

[Speaker 1] (21:35 - 21:41)
and the egos, I might say, in many young people you have that, you might say I want to be a famous this or that, I want to be, if you ask young people, because they are always online and doing things in the virtual world,

[Speaker 2] (21:41 - 21:54)

[Speaker 1] (21:54 - 23:20)
I want to be a famous YouTuber, I want to be a famous, okay, now what, let's say somebody says I want to be a famous YouTuber, that is not good, that is not enough, you can sit down and then you imagine, I am a famous YouTuber, and even if you feel the power of beingness, there is still something missing, and what is missing is in the dimension of doing, let's say you have the dimension of being, you are rooted in the being and you feel the fullness of life, and then you say, okay, I am an influential and famous YouTuber, but what are you doing, do you have anything to convey to people on YouTube, is there anything that you are enthusiastic about, is there anything that people would love to hear from you, or that people would find helpful, it is not enough, the foundation, yes, the foundation is to be rooted in the dimension of being, so that you sense the fullness of life within you here and now,

[Speaker 2] (23:20 - 23:27)
but then for many things, maybe not for all things, but for many things,

[Speaker 1] (23:28 - 23:51)
you need to also address the dimension of doing, you have the being dimension, that is the foundation, the doing dimension is, okay, let's come back to the famous, I want to be a famous YouTuber, do you have something that you feel enthusiastic about, that perhaps other people would appreciate, it would help them, what could it be,

[Speaker 2] (23:51 - 24:07)
is it music or singing or information, conveying information or entertaining, whatever it is, and then you focus on that, develop technical skills,

[Speaker 1] (24:07 - 24:27)
because putting things on YouTube, skills of editing and cameras, producing videos, and enjoy the doing of it, when you are engaged in the doing of it, this enjoyment of being flows into the doing, and again,

[Speaker 2] (24:27 - 24:34)
do not be attached too much to the outcome, that is very important,

[Speaker 1] (24:34 - 25:18)
but enjoy the doing of it, so that the being flows into the being dimension, flows into the doing dimension too, so you enjoy learning how to produce videos, learning editing, video editing, learning, and then whatever subject matter you have, that you feel enthusiastic about, that would help the world and other people, then you learn more about it, or you go more deeply into it, and then you begin to practice, and it's all a wonderful thing, and you're not attached to the outcome, but from time to time, then you're able to, from time to time, you go within,

[Speaker 2] (25:19 - 25:34)
and you imagine yourself as a famous YouTuber, that's reaching hundreds of thousands or millions of people, who are being helped, or you contribute something to other people's lives,

by doing whatever it is you're doing, and by doing that, you are a famous YouTuber, then it's more powerful, if you feel that this is already the case,

[Speaker 2] (25:43 - 25:52)
it's already, I'm already a famous YouTuber, perhaps for the time being, you only get 20 views per video,

[Speaker 1] (25:52 - 26:07)
that's fine, at the moment, that's fine, but even that you appreciate those 20 views, great, I've reached 20 people, and then you go within, and again, if you're already a famous YouTuber,

[Speaker 2] (26:07 - 26:20)
and you're helping, it's not just this image of me as a famous YouTuber, there must be another dimension to it, that relates to the world,

[Speaker 1] (26:20 - 26:24)
how does that affect the world, whatever you want to achieve,

[Speaker 2] (26:24 - 26:50)
that can be, that empowers you, what does, how do you help, what does the universe want to manifest through me, when I say universe, I mean the intelligence that pervades the universe, that's behind it all, the universe of the intelligence behind it all,

[Speaker 1] (26:51 - 27:00)
the divine intelligence behind the phenomenal world, what does it want from me, and maybe it wants me to become a famous YouTuber,

[Speaker 2] (27:01 - 28:40)
but the most important thing is not the famous, it's just, what is it that, the energy that's flowing through me, so in addition to visualization, or affirmation, in the being dimension, you may need to address also the doing dimension, and again, bring the two together, enjoy the doing, don't use it, don't treat the doing as a stressful thing, because you need to achieve this or that, no, you enjoy the doing of it, that's the power, the power of presence, has to flow into the doing, the doing is not just a means to an end, it's an end in itself, that is a very important realization, so that the doing does not become stressful, if it's stressful, it means you are excessively attached to the outcome, which means you want to be there, but you are here,

[Speaker 1] (28:40 - 29:26)
and that gap between there and here creates stress, and that's, and then you, as far as manifestation is concerned, that is disempowering, now some people who work very hard, with that mindset of stress, exercise willpower to achieve this, and sometimes they actually do achieve, occasionally it happens, but it doesn't make them happy, it makes them, when they achieve, they are still unhappy, and in the meantime, anybody else they had contact with, in whatever work they were doing,

[Speaker 2] (29:27 - 29:43)
they are made unhappy too, so if that is your underlying mindset, I will achieve sheer willpower, and of course it's stressful, you create stress for yourself, you create unhappiness for yourself,

[Speaker 1] (29:43 - 30:01)
and whoever you are in contact with, you make them unhappy too, some companies operate like that, everybody is stressed and unhappy, so if you work in a company like that, my recommendation would be to depart,

[Speaker 2] (30:01 - 30:19)
and so if your environment is dysfunctional, that can be a considerable hindrance to your power of manifestation, if you are trapped in a dysfunctional environment,

[Speaker 1] (30:33 - 30:50)
so look out for any sign of stress, when you are moving towards your goal, and you are active in whatever area, look for any kind of stress that arises, there is something not right, if stress arises,

[Speaker 2] (30:51 - 32:39)
now this is not to be confused with a kind of feeling, a low energy activity, when you engage in something meaningful, there is intense energy behind what you do, but this intensity of energy is not stress, there is an enjoyment behind it, so yes, you may be very intensely engaged, but as you are intensely engaged in whatever it is, let's say, let's come back to this person who wants to be a famous YouTuber, at this moment he or she is learning how to edit videos, how to do that, and again, enjoy the learning process, trying this out in bed, asking questions, what can I do here, there, and then there is the next thing to master, enjoy the doing of that, rather than, why am I not a famous YouTuber already, I need to get there to feel happy, no, you are happy in the doing, and then even if you don't become a famous YouTuber, you will still be happy, maybe you reach only a thousand people, or five thousand, or ten thousand, or two hundred, and even out of those two hundred that you reach,

[Speaker 1] (32:41 - 33:13)

some people may contact you, and something else will arise out of that, many things arise, you have to be always open to new possibilities, you haven't even thought of, not everything that you achieve in this life comes through wanting to manifest, often it's a good starting point, but sometimes, quite often, the best things may come that you never even thought of to manifest,

[Speaker 2] (33:13 - 33:55)
but if you hadn't started with this particular manifestation, the other things that you never thought of would never have arisen, so sometimes the universe, so to speak, may have greater plans for you than you could even think of, but you have to take the first steps, and sometimes the first step is, I want to manifest this now, and then you practice, you go into being, rooted in the fullness of being, then you visualize, or you affirm this or that,

[Speaker 1] (33:56 - 34:02)
and in doing that, you feel it's already there, in the unseen,

[Speaker 2] (34:03 - 34:07)
and then, in addition, you may have to go into the doing dimension,

[Speaker 1] (34:09 - 34:24)
and in the doing dimension, don't lose touch with being, because if you lose touch with being, you're lost in doing, and you're stressed, and you're not effective anymore, and even if you achieve what you wanted to achieve through sheer willpower

[Speaker 2] (34:24 - 34:31)
and hard work and stress, it'll make you unhappy, and make others unhappy, so it's pointless.

[Speaker 6] (34:38 - 35:05)
Eckhart, we have one final question, one final question here. This comes from Nadine in Denmark, who writes, Hi Eckhart, I'm very concerned about the current state of turmoil and disruption on the planet, and I want to help create what you call the New Earth. What role could conscious manifestation play?

[Speaker 2] (35:07 - 39:18)
Right, yes, yes, many people have this concern, not surprisingly. We are in an area of upheavals on our planet, increasing upheavals, so be prepared for more things to come. The greatest contribution you can make is your state of consciousness, because the upheavals are mostly caused by certain dysfunctions in the collective human consciousness.

There is something in the human consciousness that creates suffering for other humans. It's been there for a long, long time. This is not the first time.

Sometimes the world is in moments when it's not so... There have always been some areas on the planet where things are... There's violence and dysfunction more than other parts.

But then there are time periods when many parts of the planet become affected by upheavals, human suffering inflicted by other humans. The greatest enemy of humanity is the human mind, obviously, because it's humans who kill hundreds of thousands of other humans, millions in the 20th century, countless millions, 30, 40, the most exact number. So the greatest danger for humanity is something, there's a certain dysfunction in the human mind, and that manifests in the world.

Most of the things you hear about when you listen to the news or you watch the news are manifestations, yes, manifestations of the unconsciousness of humanity. And when I say unconsciousness, I mean lack of awareness, ego, unconsciousness, complete identification with the conditioned mind. And when you watch the news, almost all of it is manifestations of the most extreme forms of unconsciousness happening on the planet.

The dysfunction in the human mind that all the spiritual traditions have spoken of, there's something not right, there's something wonderful in the human consciousness, and the potentials are enormous, and humans have created wonderful things too, but there is an element of insanity that all humans inherit from the collective.

If you doubt that, listen to the news tonight.

[Speaker 2] (39:24 - 41:30)
If you doubt that, read a book on history, 20th century history, good place to start. And then you see that there is a, what we could call a mental illness in the collective consciousness of humanity that creates that suffering. Mental illness is one way of looking at it.

And at times, the mental illness becomes more acute. At other times, it's more latent in the background. And at other times, this mental illness comes into the foreground and creates an enormous amount of human suffering.

So, whatever world humans create, inevitably must be a manifestation of the collective consciousness of humanity. It comes out of the collective consciousness of humanity. And in this case, better say the collective unconsciousness of humanity.

Your greatest contribution is your state of consciousness, so that whatever the unconsciousness that you see around you, so it does not draw you down into unconsciousness also. Are you able to remain conscious? Which means, are you able not to succumb to either anger or fear?

These are two important things that I've observed many humans succumb to easily when they engage with the news and so on. Either anger or fear. And if that is the case, then be aware of that.

And it seems natural almost on a purely human level that one should feel anger or fear. There's a third thing that you could feel is compassion for human suffering. And that is beautiful and wonderful.

And the question arises, is there anything I can do? And whether you are in a position to alleviate human suffering on a practical level, I don't know. Some humans are in a position, but in many cases, you may say, well, it's horrible, but there's nothing I can do about it.

I only see it. I watch it. What can I do?

Don't underestimate the importance of your state of consciousness, because your state of consciousness is connected to the totality of humanity on an unseen level. Don't underestimate the importance of staying conscious and present as you observe the suffering around you. Yes, compassion may arise.

Sadness may arise. But stay conscious and present and realize that what you are witnessing is a manifestation of where humanity is at present on its evolutionary path, where it is at present.

[Speaker 2] (43:16 - 43:41)

And the suffering is part of the evolution of consciousness and part of the egoic consciousness that is approaching its end.

[Speaker 1] (43:41 - 43:47)
The egoic consciousness in humanity has been prevalent for thousands of years.

[Speaker 2] (43:49 - 44:09)
And now the conflicts that are arising now, which are going to be even more serious than what we are witnessing right now, are the final manifestations of the egoic consciousness.

[Speaker 1] (44:16 - 44:45)
What you are witnessing on one level, yes, we need to recognize that the deep dysfunction, the deep unconsciousness that makes humans do these things, then seemingly many unconscious human beings get killed, suffer.

[Speaker 2] (44:46 - 44:50)
We need to recognize the madness of it. That's important.

[Speaker 1] (44:54 - 45:29)
But as you become very present, you may begin to realize there is another level of truth. There are levels of truth. On one level of truth, what we are witnessing is dreadful, and it needs to be recognized as such.

On another level of truth, what we are witnessing is certain events that are part of the evolutionary path of humanity.

[Speaker 2] (45:33 - 46:06)
If you consider that a human being is a ray of consciousness that assumes a particular physical form, the essence of who you are, what you are, is consciousness, a ray of the one consciousness, like a ray of sunlight, one could say. We could say a spark of consciousness. That remains even when the body dies.

[Speaker 1] (46:07 - 46:20)
The essence of who or what you are, this particular ray, is still there. It's not dead. So there is an aspect to a human being that is not subject to death.

[Speaker 2] (46:20 - 46:22)
Only the physical dies.

[Speaker 1] (46:23 - 52:42)
And the consciousness that's behind the physical form, whether you call it soul or the divine spark or the ray of consciousness, that goes on. So every human is part of the evolution of human consciousness and goes on to another lifetime, another lesson to be learned, another incarnation, unless they no longer need to reincarnate, in which case you would go on to other dimensions where evolution continues there, too. Only the body dies.

And that's a liberating thing to realize. You need to realize it for yourself, too, otherwise you will be very afraid of death. Death is all around you.

But death is particularly awful to witness when it is violent death happening to children, to young people. But if you realize that there is an essence in every human being behind the physical manifestation that is not subject to death, then from that higher perspective, what we are witnessing is a kind of nightmare that humans can awaken out of. So we are witnessing a nightmare.

For many humans, their life has become a nightmare. And so we are witnessing a nightmare that's happening for many humans. And what happens is a nightmare is a dreamlike state, a state of unconsciousness.

Eventually, when you're trapped in a nightmare, a point comes when you awaken out of the nightmare. And then you look back and say, that was horrible, that was a terrible nightmare. So at some point, a human being can evolve out of that.

And every human that leaves, if you leave their body, you will find that you look back and say, that was a terrible dream, this lifetime was a terrible dream. And then there's a collective dream of humanity, collective suffering, a terrible nightmare. Because what's happening, part of the evolution of consciousness is the awakening of human consciousness.

The key term is awakening. That's the whole purpose of us being here, not to witness, but to embody, to be part of the awakening of human consciousness. Now, what does that imply?

It implies that before it awakens, it's asleep. It's in a dreamlike state. That's the egoic state.

And that creates all the suffering that is created by the human ego, the collective ego and the individual ego. Collective ego in the form of a nation or a group of people, or the individual ego creates enormous suffering, but it's a nightmare. It creates a very painful dream.

But if within the dream you recognize, suddenly you recognize something, your desire to awaken will become very intense if you're in a nightmare. It will be much more intense than if you're engaged in a relatively pleasant dream where you're relatively comfortable and things are going okay and you have your little things that you drink and take But if the dream becomes very unpleasant, becomes a nightmare, your motivation to awaken will be much greater. So the awakening of consciousness and the intensification of the nightmare come together.

And that is the whole purpose of it, where you're witnessing the truth, both coming together, the intensification of the nightmare and the awakening of consciousness. The more painful the nightmare becomes, the stronger the motivation to awaken. This is looking at the whole situation from a much higher perspective.

And then every human who is engaged in the nightmare, at some point, they awaken. Not perhaps in this lifetime, but at some point they awaken and they look back and say, oh, that was a nightmare. I'm glad I'm out of it now.

That was a horrible nightmare. But if it hadn't been a nightmare, I would still be trapped in the dream. So the crisis of humanity that we are experiencing is inseparable from the awakening of human consciousness.

They come together. It's only under immense pressure that consciousness evolves. Only under immense pressure does consciousness evolve.

[Speaker 2] (52:43 - 52:54)
That is a function of suffering. Suffering represents that intense pressure under which consciousness evolves.

[Speaker 1] (52:55 - 53:22)
And once it has evolved, the suffering is recognized as a kind of nightmare. It is then transcended and is recognized as a kind of, very similar to a nightmare, a very painful dream. So that's the crisis we are going through and we're moving into.

[Speaker 2] (53:22 - 53:30)

But it's an inseparable part of the awakening of human consciousness.

[Speaker 1] (53:35 - 53:49)
It doesn't mean that we should not help on this dimension wherever we can. Obviously we do. It also means that we have compassion for humans that are trapped in the nightmare.

[Speaker 2] (53:49 - 53:50)
It's horrible.

[Speaker 1] (53:50 - 56:21)
I still have memories when I saw the witnessing the destruction in Israel and Palestine and the destruction of buildings and people dying and then the other side, terrorists. I remember when I saw the destroyed buildings when I was a child, I was born three years after the end of a horrible nightmare, a collective nightmare that was called the Second World War. And when I was a child, still, because all the cities in Germany had been, most cities had been erased through bombardment.

And as a child, my favorite playground was still the ruins of houses that had been bombed. We played in the ruins of houses and I remember that when I watched the ruins of houses in the Palestinian area, I said, oh, that's where, as a child, I was born at the end of this particular nightmare and it was a natural thing for me. I thought it's normal for almost every other house was still a ruin and that was my playground.

So these things have happened already many times before on a much larger scale, even in the 20th century, on a gigantic scale and it may get even, it will probably, the situation will most likely deteriorate more in the world in the next few years, but that's perfectly fine. It's all part of the evolution of consciousness, but your contribution is vital and your contribution is to stay present and conscious while this is happening.

Stay present and conscious while this is happening and do not succumb to fear or anger.

[Speaker 1] (56:32 - 58:59)
They're totally pointless. First of all, anger is totally pointless. Obviously, you would, and if you act out of anger, you contribute to the unconsciousness or fear.

Fear is not recognizing the essence of who you are as a human being and whoever every other human being, the essence of every other human being as conscious awareness itself, which is not subject to death. So recognize it. Ultimately, you do not die and no human dies, only the body dies.

Whether that is a belief that you have, but it doesn't need to be just a belief. It is possible to actually experientially realize that dimension in yourself that is the invisible you, which is you. Most of you is invisible.

I mean, nobody can find you by opening up your brain and looking for you. Nobody can find you because the essence of you is invisible. It's not part of this material realm.

The essence of you is invisible. And I can sense that essence and then there's a body that has a limited lifespan. So then the realization of immortality ultimately liberates you, of course, from the fear of death.

In essence, you cannot die and no human can die, but that's a wonderfully liberating realization. And that's why it has been said in some spiritual tradition where it originates, I don't remember, die before you die, which means die to the ego itself, the conceptual identity, the narrative, remind me, and identification with the physical body. Die to this.

And before you die, physically die. Die before, find death before death finds you is the expression. Find death before death.

[Speaker 2] (58:59 - 59:31)
Finding death happens when we started today with becoming aware of yourself as consciousness and ultimately the person subsides and this person is what dies eventually. So when you become aware of yourself as consciousness, you find death before death finds you.

[Speaker 1] (59:31 - 59:57)
It's only the death of the person, the accumulated stuff in the human mind that you identify with, the character that you play in this lifetime, the script that consciousness plays out when it is not awakened. When consciousness is not awakened, it plays out a script and that script is the condition, entity that you call I, the person.

[Speaker 2] (59:58 - 1:00:30)
And that is recognized as illusory when you go deeper and you realize, even when you let go of that entity, the script, the character that you play unconsciously, what remains is the light of consciousness itself, totally free of time and not subject to birth and death. So therefore Jesus taught that also.

[Speaker 1] (1:00:31 - 1:00:53)
He talked about eternal life. He said, I want the possibility of finding eternal life. That's one of his main teachings and eternal does not mean it goes on and on.

That would be very boring. Eternal means timeless. The timeless life that is consciousness itself.

[Speaker 2] (1:00:53 - 1:01:10)
He used that expression, eternal life. It doesn't mean you live forever as this thing, but you find the essence of yourself. And in Buddhism, you have a similar term.

[Speaker 1] (1:01:11 - 1:01:31)
I'm just saying it because they all recognize this, but they use different terminology to express it. In Buddhism, we have the expression Amara. Amara is translated as the deathless realm or the deathless dimension.

[Speaker 2] (1:01:32 - 1:02:09)
The dimension in which there is no death. Amara. Amara means death.

A denies it. The deathless realm, which is a dimension of consciousness that you find within yourself. Jesus talked about the eternal life, which is the same thing expressed in positive terms.

In Buddhism, it's the same thing expressed in negative terms. So Jesus says eternal life. Buddhism says the deathless.

Buddhism says everything in negative terms. And Jesus sends the token of positive terms pointing to the same reality.

[Speaker 1] (1:02:10 - 1:02:30)
So you find that. Then you find death before death finds you. And when you find death before death finds you, you realize there is no death.

And then you're able to stay present when you contemplate what humans are doing in the state of unconsciousness.

[Speaker 2] (1:02:31 - 1:04:12)
And then you can say what Jesus said on the cross, supposed to have said on the cross, forgive them, for they know not what they do. They know not what they do. Which of course means they are completely unconscious.

They don't know what they do. And when you realize that, you forgive them. You don't make their unconscious behavior, the behavior motivated by unconsciousness into their identity.

That is the forgiveness. And you recognize unconsciousness being acted out in this world, causing suffering. But you don't make an identity out of it for other people.

You recognize they are displaying behavior that is caused by the present evolutionary state of humanity. On its path towards awakening. So let that be sufficient for today.

I wish you well. Stay present. Stay conscious.

[Speaker 6] (1:04:19 - 1:05:41)
Thank you, Eckhart. And thank you everyone for being with us. For those of you who are interested in diving even deeper into this topic of conscious manifestation at this time, the most comprehensive offering that Eckhart and Kim have ever created on this topic is coming up.

It's called The Spiritual Guide to Conscious Manifestation. And it starts at the end of May in 2024 with a four-day in-person retreat in Huntington Beach in California. If you want to learn more, you can press the learn more button.

In a few weeks, we'll also be announcing that there'll be a virtual version that's available. And if you're interested in receiving a scholarship for the virtual version, you can write to support at EckhartTolle.com. Again, that's support at EckhartTolle.com.

And I hope to be with many of you at The Spiritual Guide to Conscious Manifestation. And thank you so much, Eckhart, for this fabulous and helpful and deeply instructive Q&A. Thanks, friends.

[Speaker 1] (1:05:56 - 1:15:46)
Problem solving is sometimes necessary in life because problems drop up all the time. Although I prefer not to call them problems, but that's a word that is mostly applied to situations that need some kind of response or action, challenges is another word. It's important to practice accessing non-conceptual intelligence before you apply, and even while you apply, your analytical mind so that you approach the problem both with the non-conceptual intelligence and with the analytical mind that looks at a situation, can divide up, for example, a complex situation into, for example, possible steps that I can take to solve the situation, one, two, three, four, course of action, you think about it, you focus thought, analyze, look at the possibilities, but fluctuate between, this is quite an art, between thinking about it, applying focused thought, which is different from compulsive overthinking, such as happens when you are worried and so on, to apply focused thought, but to really skillfully and effectively apply focused thought, you need to have access to the non-conceptual intelligence in you that is beyond thought.

So there's a continuous stepping back out of thinking into, where you take in the totality of a situation without breaking it down, where you look at the situation without any verbalization or conceptualization, just being very alert and very still. And you look at it, look not necessarily visually, hold it in your awareness as a totality and then just become still. Even let go for a moment of the entire situation, just become still, alert and still.

And then an answer may come out of that or as you continue to, there could be one answer that solves the whole thing or you may continue to apply thought after that. And then perhaps again, step back into alert stillness and then apply thought if thought is called for. And there's so much intelligence in you that is not accessed, potential intelligence.

It's all this huge realm of non-conceptual intelligence that arises out of the unconditioned consciousness. So, and most people move only within the conditioned and they try to solve all their life's problems with the very same instrument that in many cases has created the problems. Because many of your problems without you knowing it are actually created by unconscious use of the mind or rather the mind being doing what it does.

You are not using it, it's using you. You're mistaking the mind for who you are. So that's a huge set of problems in your life comes from that dimension.

And if you are able to bring awareness into that dimension so that your mind creates as few problems as possible or perhaps even no problems at all anymore, then the mind can be left for solving problems. And what are those problems? Those are not the problems that are generated by the mind but the problems that come to you seemingly from the external world in the form of situations you encounter, in the form of things going wrong, so to speak, challenging people, very common source of problems.

But again, very important to differentiate between is this really a problem or am I contributing to it being a problem? Am I contributing all of it? If I did not argue with the is-ness of this moment, would there be a problem?

No. So there would still be a challenge perhaps to deal with. Yes, not a problem.

It's sometimes not easy to tell the difference between is this something that's actually mind-created or is it out there? Now, if you arrive home and your house has collapsed in an earthquake, that is clearly, perhaps on the very deep level, it's created by your mind too, but we're not going there right now. It would be the dream of your particular incarnation would have created that, but we don't need to go there.

On the level that we're dealing with it now is to say your house, it has collapsed in an earthquake, you did not create it. Although many new age people will tell you, why did you create that? What?

Yeah, if you experienced it, you must have created it. I never say that, although there are many, there are different levels of truth. So one does not invalidate the other.

I usually don't go there because I would lose, not that I mind, but I don't want to lose you because it's important for you. So, your awakening, I'm happy to lose you when you don't need me anymore, which hopefully will be very soon, but the mind, my mind suddenly stopped. Very weird thing, the mind, very weird.

Very weird. But when it suddenly stops, that's a good thing. If you're okay with it.

It's not a good thing if you think, oh, that shouldn't have happened. So the mind, let's see it start again. Again.

The different levels of truth at a deeper or higher level, of course it's true to say whatever there's a correspondence between inner and outer and whatever it is that you experience is part of your particular consciousness and so on. But I rarely say you created this if it's a bad experience because your mind would suddenly say, no, that's not true. And then you wouldn't be hearing the rest that I'm saying, which may be much more important than to say you created this.

I'm more interested in you waking up into awareness than believing in a particular perspective. Whatever perspective you need will arise from within you. Whatever perspective you want to approach reality through will arise from within you.

I don't want you to adopt a particular perspective. And in order not to generate resistance in you, I never really say that you created it if it's something bad, but I do say accept this moment and whatever arises in this moment as if you had created it. No, that's more acceptable.

[Speaker 8] (1:16:13 - 1:17:04)
I work with technology and I actually, it was quite interesting to hear you talk about technology a few times in the past couple of days and the way that you mentioned that smartphones are actually an extension of our minds and the way that the internet is actually, it's a space for our unconscious mind to actually be reactive. So one of the things I do for work is to raise a bit of the ethical questions around that and the thing that we usually call digital nudges, which is when we try to influence other people through technology. So I would really love to hear a bit of your opinion and then maybe your advice if there is a way for us to use technology as a tool and as a channel to actually increase humanity, our consciousness and presence.

[Speaker 1] (1:17:04 - 1:19:42)
Yes. So in itself, of course, it's neutral. The technology is neutral.

It's not either bad or good. It depends how it's used. It is, at the moment, it is to a large extent a reflection of the unconscious mind.

So if you want to learn about human unconsciousness, if you want to learn about the human ego, just go there and read what people post and look at the reactivity of people on social media and so on, the comments they leave. You can learn a lot about unconsciousness and identification with mental positions. So the first thing, of course, is be careful with what you put out there, what kind of thing you post.

If you post things online, is it reactive? Give yourself a moment when you read something before you type in an answer or a comment. Give yourself a moment and go within and avoid making people wrong.

You can talk about issues, but don't make people wrong and amplify your ego by making others wrong, even though their position, political or otherwise, you may regard as completely misguided or erroneous. There's still a human being behind that, so you can put forward arguments against somebody's perspective or viewpoint without making another human being wrong. So what you put out is very important.

Is your communication conscious or not, or is it reactive? And then it can be used for other purposes. I'm there too sometimes.

There are certain places where I appear on, could go to YouTube or whatever, and then suddenly there's a spiritual teacher talking so do you professionally work with, what exactly do you do in your work that involves the media?

[Speaker 8] (1:19:43 - 1:19:57)
Pretty much involves the creation, the ideas around the digital products and services. So creating the product that people actually use and designing the interfaces that people actually use on the phones and on the computers.

[Speaker 1] (1:19:57 - 1:32:05)
Right. There are some meditation sites on all these things. So there's great potential for raising consciousness there.

Somebody recommended to me several apps for meditation, which I now have on my phone. I haven't tried them yet. I've been there for a while.

But I have four or five that are there. I want to try them out. So that's the very thing that otherwise would clutter your mind can actually also be used to bring about space or spaciousness in your mind.

So it doesn't necessarily mean that when you have your phone or the 99% of cases, when people look there, their mind is being cluttered, but maybe they're on a meditation app. Maybe they're looking at a beautiful spacious picture and all listening to some sound or saying, take a conscious breath, have a little reminder every two hours to take a, take a conscious breath and bring spaciousness. Oh yes, spaciousness.

So the very same thing that otherwise clutters your mind can now unclutter your mind. It's possible. So I believe that is also going to grow now and it has to, because otherwise that technology could potentially drive humans completely insane, remove their ability to focus on anything for more than a few seconds.

People create young people who are totally uncentered, have no spaciousness within, don't even communicate with humans anymore because they prefer to communicate digitally. So all these things are important, but what you put out is important. So always take into consideration whether this brings people to presence or whether it clutters somebody's mind.

And perhaps you can combine, of course, what you do needs to be also commercially viable. So, but I believe you can combine the two. It's not necessarily a question of either it's commercially viable and it clutters people's minds or it's presence and we're not going to, we are going to go out of business.

It doesn't have to be like that. It's up to you to be creative. Use, the more still you are, the more creative insights you will have into, and you might get some amazing ideas of what is possible.

I can't tell you what is possible. I don't know enough about it. I know very little about it.

So, but you're in a wonderful position. So allow yourself to go deep enough within because then it is, then the creative ideas seem to come. And if you find a thing that is not only brings people to presence, but also helps your company to grow, then that then becomes a conscious business, which is wonderful.

It's challenging. Of course it's challenging. So don't let all your attention be absorbed though by that kind of activity.

Take still, you still need to connect with nature. Take it off as much as possible away from there, connect with nature and then bring it back. Another thing that's just in connection with this, not perhaps directly related to your question, but related to this, what tends to happen is that these devices, people are never, they're still in bed and they're still doing stuff on it.

And that takes you over there at dinner and they're doing stuff on it. It breaks the relation with other people you're at dinner with. I can see, I see people in restaurants, the couple sitting at having dinner together and both are on their phones.

Now that's probably means they have known each other for a while. If it happens on the first date, the first date will probably be the last one. But if it happens after they've known each other for two years, then it's almost a normal thing that they're not present with each other.

Or then they exchange a few words and then she looks at the phone again and then he stares into space and then she's still on her phone. I've actually observed it. She's still on her phone and he's staring into space and then finally he gets out his phone too because he doesn't want to be staring into space.

And then I wonder, are they texting each other? Two good things that I learned that in some huge companies, I believe it might be VW in Germany. Well, they've had enough problems but now they tell their employees after 6 p.m. they're not allowed to use the company phones anymore, not to deal with emails or anything. They need to get off. And that's a very wise thing because the more people's attention gets absorbed by this, the more confused and non-creative they become, the more cluttered their minds become, the more ineffective they're even at their work. Not to mention as human beings, their quality of life decreases enormously.

So don't give yourself spaces. Don't allow these things to take over your life. That's vitally important.

So it's wonderful that some big companies like that have this policy now, no emails or anything after 6 p.m. Well, that's wonderful. So I talked a couple of years ago to Ariana Huffington, who has a famous news website and has also written some books. And she describes in her latest book how her life deteriorated more and more, although she was making a lot of money.

And finally she collapsed and hit her head on her desk and she was complete breakdown. And now she has, for example, in her private life, and that's a good thing, she has this policy of no digital device in my bedroom. So in her bedroom she still has books.

Sometimes she reads in bed, but it has to be a book, not a Kindle, not the iPad, not the iPhone, no digital device in my bedroom. And that's a good thing. At least you have that space for yourself.

So everybody needs to be really conscious of the addictive nature of these devices. How I sometimes say, I even said that before these things were invented, the greatest addiction for human beings is compulsive thinking. They can't stop thinking.

What is the meaning of being an addict? Whatever it may be, if you are an addict it means you have no power to stop, whether you are addicted to a drug or to alcohol. And many people who are addicts say, no, I'm not an addict, I could stop, but they can't.

So the nature of being an addict is you no longer have the power to stop doing this. And this applies for many humans. First of all, all humans are addicts, and that was already before these devices came.

All humans are addicts, addicted to their thinking, to their compulsive and unconscious, superfluous, excessive, often destructive thinking. They can't stop and they don't want to stop because they're so identified with it, the entire identity is in their thoughts. So they have to go on.

They don't even know it. So the greatest addiction for humanity is not heroin or whatever, it's the human mind that's actually, you're addicted to thinking. And now these devices are an amplification, externalization of the human mind.

And so that makes it even more difficult to deal with, because then you not only have your mind, you also have the collective mind that comes at you through your iPhone and the Samsung, which hopefully doesn't explode in your face. Well, if it did explode, that would make you present. And it might suddenly break the addiction.

So give yourself space in your bedroom, that this is a good policy and don't be on it at all times. And now the more, the younger you are, the more difficult this is for you. For old people like myself, it's still relatively easy.

But if you're 18 or 20 or 25, then you've grown up with these things. The older than us, they didn't grow up with these things. They're not quite, perhaps not quite as addicted and identified with it.

Another way to tell is whether they've grown up with these things is how they type into their phones. I always admire young people because they type, they go like that at enormous speed with their thumbs. How they do it with their thumbs, I don't know.

And they can even talk to you while they're doing it. And then I get a text message and somebody expects an answer who might not know that I'm not that fast because with a text message, you can actually see that somebody is replying. You know that he's replying.

And so they wait and say, why isn't he? He's doing something. They don't know that if I go like that, it takes time.

And that's a good thing because it's easy to be present when you're not good at this. You can be much more present. Where is the bee?

So it's a challenge. I hope you come up with something wonderful that promotes presence in this world and helps your business. Thank you.

[Speaker 2] (1:32:32 - 1:32:42)
So part of this is of course to give more attention to the present moment because the more you think, the more future you generate.

[Speaker 15] (1:32:46 - 1:32:57)
And the more attention you give to the present moment, the less thinking because to be really present, you don't think about it.

[Speaker 2] (1:32:57 - 1:32:58)
You just are with it.

[Speaker 1] (1:32:59 - 1:33:21)
Give it attention. I recommend the little things of life to be more attentive to all the little things that make up every hour, every day, every minute, every hour and give them more attention.

[Speaker 2] (1:33:28 - 1:33:33)
Walking steps, one step at a time. Objects that you're handling.

[Speaker 1] (1:33:34 - 1:34:43)
All the time you're handling objects in your life. You're always touching something, putting something here and there. Is everything that you handle just a means to an end or are you able to just appreciate the simple presence or even of a so-called inanimate object?

Contemplation also of all the lovely things that make up your environment, part of your environment. For example, if I were sitting here alone, let's say I'm waiting for everybody to arrive. I might be sitting here looking of course at the flower, sense of stillness.

And then there's a glass table here. And then there's a glass of water here. And there's a clock and a bell and tissues.

And they all reflect the light in different ways.

[Speaker 2] (1:34:44 - 1:35:09)
There's a little bit of a rainbow effect in the glass of water here. And then the lights are reflected on the bells, almost like a mirror. And there's the clock ticking away.

It's a beautiful scene.

[Speaker 1] (1:35:10 - 1:38:10)
Sometimes you go to an art gallery. Well, not so much with modern art, but a very favorite thing would be still life artists. And it took a while in art before they discovered the artists in the history of art, before they discovered the seemingly insignificant things and started to give attention to those.

Before that happened, they were very much interested in the huge things, the saints or the kings or the huge battle scenes or the big... They painted those things or the important people or some dramatic thing, volcanic eruption or whatever, a fire. And then at some point, they started to discover the beauty and the incredible sense of the quality that is in the little things.

They started painting, for example, simple people. The Dutch artists, perhaps they're not that knowledgeable about artists, but the famous Dutch paintings show not so much big, important people. They show simple people, a woman in the kitchen baking bread, simple people sitting around the table eating a very simple meal and there's a light, incredible light effects.

Light comes through the window. There's an incredible sense of presence and aliveness in the painting. And this is a scene that in normal life, you would never have, unless you're really very conscious, nobody would have stopped and said, oh, isn't that amazing?

These people are sitting around a table eating a simple meal and there's light coming through the window. Nobody would have done that. Perhaps after these, more of these artists depicted relatively, seemingly insignificant things, perhaps it motivated some people to give more attention to that.

But even now it's still, people very much overlook that. And you overlook then a large part of your life. You don't give it attention.

When I say give attention, there's an element of appreciation of everything, of the little things. And you begin to realize that your entire life consists mainly of little things. Even if you are VIP, it still consists mainly, you're always sitting somewhere, standing somewhere, looking around, handling things, going from here to there.

[Speaker 2] (1:38:11 - 1:38:14)
Either on a bus or your private jet.

[Speaker 1] (1:38:21 - 1:39:38)
And this giving attention, that is sometimes called gratitude. That's kind of part of it, this appreciation. But I don't necessarily use the word gratitude too often because it implies that you say to somebody, oh, thank you.

But there's a simple appreciation of the isness of things, of their presence. So you no longer regard almost continuously your entire environment as a means to an end. And what's the end?

You need to get to some future moment where suddenly everything is going to be better than now. And so you're always on your way. It's a stepping stone to the next moment in every object that you handle has only utilitarian value, but has no value in itself.

It's never appreciated for its beingness. And then you do the same to human beings. They're only regarded, what can they do for me now?

How do they fit into my schemes, into my plans? Because there's a future orientation continuously, which is the mind. Because there is no future.

[Speaker 15] (1:39:38 - 1:39:57)
It's created by the mind. It becomes extremely enjoyable just to be contemplating the little things that surround you.

[Speaker 1] (1:39:58 - 1:41:18)
Then there is an element of gratitude that comes with it, this appreciation. It's an element where you appreciate the sense perceived world. This is an aspect of reality.

It's not the deepest aspect of reality, but it is the surface of the ocean and it's beautiful. And that also means it's not just when you are quietly contemplating, it's also when you're going from A to B to perform some action. You're going to buy something, going to the, whatever it is, post office.

Appreciate the journey and every step of the journey and look around so that the 10 minutes of going to the shop or driving to the shop or taking a bicycle to the shop isn't completely wasted and reduced to means to an end. And you can actually, that every moment is significant and ultimately it's only ever the one moment.

And then this waiting game comes to an end, waiting for the big break.

[Speaker 1] (1:41:34 - 1:41:50)
That's an expression. I don't know what break, what breaks, but waiting for whatever it is. Of course you have a goal.

You may have a goal in life and you're moving towards it.

[Speaker 2] (1:41:50 - 1:41:55)
But in the meantime, this is now and yes, you know you're moving towards it.

[Speaker 1] (1:42:03 - 1:42:20)

It becomes very enjoyable to be wherever you are when you have this ability to contemplate the little things, both when you're passively contemplating or even when you are moving, being engaged with things.

[Speaker 9] (1:42:45 - 1:43:47)
So when I'm not here in the greenhouse and I go back home and there's storms and chaos and I get tired and overwhelmed, the thing that I keep tripping on and struggling with is reaction. So when there's just pain, body calms, your teachings have helped a lot with that, but when the anger, reaction, particularly when there's stress and I've got three boy children, so when there's stress and there's demands and I'm tired, then I notice the reaction happens before I can, and I've heard you answer the question, but somewhere I keep, even as the presence I suppose is growing, it is probably less. It's hard to determine because I'm not in a relationship which is another trigger.

It's just me, kids, life, things that happen that are annoying or stressful. So there's that. Can you give some...

[Speaker 17] (1:43:47 - 1:43:47)
Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (1:43:52 - 1:44:10)
And then after the reaction, then you suddenly know, oh, there was the reaction again, right? Afterward, presence comes back, but in the moment, the reaction arises so quickly that it takes you over. I call that reactivity.

[Speaker 9] (1:44:10 - 1:44:19)
Yes. And sometimes what happens, particularly when it's with my children, I feel guilty, and so then I react more.

[Speaker 1] (1:44:24 - 1:44:53)
Yes, the human mind is complicated. Now in most people's lives there are certain situations that are more likely to provoke you into reactivity. In your case, it's perhaps to do with children doing things that they shouldn't be doing or whatever they do.

[Speaker 9] (1:44:53 - 1:44:54)
Some form of relationship.

[Speaker 18] (1:44:54 - 1:44:56)
Or relationships also.

[Speaker 9] (1:44:57 - 1:45:07)
Yeah, things that... Relationships and children, but demands from less outside, but then when there's a demand that I get overwhelmed by.

[Speaker 1] (1:45:07 - 1:45:13)
Yes. And what form, what are the usual forms that the reaction take? Anger, irritation?

[Speaker 9] (1:45:14 - 1:45:20)
Well, the anger is the one that I have the most trouble with. Okay. It comes quite fast.

[Speaker 1] (1:45:20 - 1:45:20)
Yes.

[Speaker 9] (1:45:21 - 1:45:21)
Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (1:45:25 - 1:57:55)
There are situations where you know, you can almost see it coming. You have to be very alert when you see people behaving in a certain way, like the children or somebody close to you starting to talk about something. You see it coming.

For some people, there are certain particular areas that provoke reaction. And there can be people who are already conscious in most areas of their life, but there are still pockets. There are areas where they lose consciousness and go into reactivity.

For some people, it's to do with intimate relationships. They can lose it there quickly. Or money matters.

Whenever I talk about money, they go, they get talking all about fear and reactivity. So if you are alert, you can look at a situation and you can see it's developing very quickly into the usual situation that makes me reactive. It's happening now.

It's coming. It's like a train coming at you. And just before it happens, you can see a minute before it's building up.

And that's the moment of practice where you realize the most important thing here is my state of consciousness. And am I able to use this situation as part of my spiritual practice? Because that's how you awaken.

It's not by eliminating situations, but by using situations to incorporate them into your spiritual practice. Whatever situation arises becomes part of your spiritual practice and don't believe when the mind tells you if I had a more peaceful life and peaceful surroundings, it would be so much easier for me to awaken spiritually. It wouldn't.

Superficially, you might fool yourself that you're awakening spiritually, but it wouldn't be very deep. It would just be a superficial awakening. So these children and other annoying people around you, they force you to go deeper and they aren't a great opportunity for you to go deeper.

But how do you take advantage of that opportunity? So knowing that is already helpful. So when the situation begins to build up, an opportunity is coming right at you.

And then you can see what it is, suddenly the usual behavior of the children or whoever else it is, you saw it coming a few seconds before, but there was an alertness now that says, oh, it's coming. And when it comes, you have it suddenly, when the awareness is there, an element of choice comes in and the element of choice is you can react or you can allow the situation to be as it is. And people sometimes learn that when they do meditation practice, when you sit in meditation, of course you want everything to be quiet around you.

You don't want to be disturbed. The ideal situation people think for meditation is to be in a very quiet room and completely undisturbed. You certainly don't want to have children screaming outside.

You don't want to have a noisy drill suddenly starting up there, breaking up the road just outside your window while you're meditating and the drill goes. And your usual thing would be, you would react. You would say, I can't meditate under these conditions.

Why can't I live in a more quiet place? I need to, this is not the right way to do your meditation. So when you do your meditation, whatever happens, you incorporate into your meditation and you surrender to it.

So the children screaming outside, the drill going up on site, what is the most annoying thing about this drill? Is it the noise or is it your reaction? It's your reaction.

If you let go of your reaction, there's just the noise and you kind of, the ego itself kind of dissolves and the noise goes right through you. That's called surrender. So people can start practicing that when they meditate.

There's nothing that does not become part of your meditation. Then you're a real meditator. When you're complaining that things are not quiet enough around you, you don't know what meditation is yet.

You're trying to. So sometimes people learn when they meditate how to incorporate seemingly annoying things into their practice of not offering any resistance to the present moment in whatever form the present moment takes. So in your case, it can be children are screaming, demanding this or that.

Are you able to accept that they are screaming and demanding because that's what children do without opposing or fighting internally? That's your practice. But if you lose it, if you find you've lost it, and suddenly you know you lost it, because in the moment of losing it, you don't know it.

If you knew it, you wouldn't lose it. I'm using this expression, I'm losing it, which real people sometimes use. But what are they talking about?

What are they losing? I'm losing it. I'm going to lose it.

What they are meaning by that is I'm going to get very angry. Usually that's the meaning. But it's a good expression because what they are really saying, I'm going to lose consciousness completely.

They don't know that that's what they are saying. But that's what is implied in that I'm going to go completely unconscious in a minute. So you better stop talking now.

Or run away from me. Now, so when you lose it, at that moment you don't know it. You just lose it because you've gone quite unconscious.

Then the moment comes after losing it that some consciousness comes back in and suddenly you know that you lost it. And the next thing is, guilt comes in, as you mentioned, in your case. Guilt comes in, I lost it, but I shouldn't have lost it.

You get angry with yourself. You're angry with the children, now you're angry with yourself. And that gives even more fuel to the anger towards the children.

So that's the mechanism. So at what point does consciousness come in? So when you lose it, you're gone.

Nothing you can do. Then, moments later perhaps, a minute, I don't know how long, two minutes, you suddenly, oops, I lost it. And then immediately comes a reaction to losing it, which is another reaction, which adds another layer of reactivity to the original layer of reactivity.

That's how complicated humans are. So one thing you can do if you do lose it, and you will again lose it, despite our talk here, it will still happen, but less so, there is a shift that's happening, but the old unconsciousness can and probably will from time to time reassert itself, but less frequently. And so if you do, the moment you do notice that you lost it, surrender, it means you haven't surrendered at first, you offered resistance to the present moment.

And then you notice that you lost it and you accept that you lost it. You can practice there too, surrender. Okay, I lost it.

You're a human, nothing personal in it. You are one aspect of a universal shift in consciousness. And it's a monumental thing that the unconsciousness that has been prevalent on the planet for thousands of years, something is happening to it and it's awakening.

The consciousness is awakening through humans. You are part of that. So don't get angry with yourself because you are part of the awakening process because what's happening to you is part of the awakening process.

If it were not part of the awakening process, you wouldn't be standing here talking about it. You would simply continuously be acting out your unconsciousness day after day after day, and you would pass it on to your children and they would pass it on to their children, and you wouldn't even know what you're doing. You have no idea that you are unconscious.

You would just be totally in the grip of the conditioning which is inherited from our parents, inherited from their parents, goes back generation and generation and generation, and is passed on to the next generation until somebody like you awakens, begins to awaken. So there's no need to be guilty or angry because the moment you know that you lost it, there is an awareness. Otherwise, you wouldn't know it.

So that's your awareness. Oh, great, I lost it, but I know that I lost it. So you surrender to having lost it, and there is awareness.

But if losing it means you're immediately going to reactivity towards that, you become unconscious again, which means there's been a flash of awareness, I lost it, which immediately turns mentally into a judgment about yourself, which means you lost it again. So, again, you need to be alert in your daily life. You watch a situation develop in such a way that you feel, okay, it's happening, it's happening, I'm about to get triggered.

And then you have a choice suddenly. You can accept this moment as it is, and the children do what they do. It doesn't mean that you become incapable, by the way, of telling the children they're doing something wrong or they must stop that.

I don't know how chaotic your home life is, but some children are totally out there. So that's a different subject. But here we just talk about yourself.

Be alert when you feel a situation developing into what usually would provoke a reaction, and then stay alert. And then you may find your action doesn't come. If it does come and you lose it, the moment you realize it, awareness is back and then you welcome, say, oh, I lost it, but I know that I lost it.

That's fine. And then you haven't lost, and then you remain present there. It's a very subtle practice, but being here, although I said that the old pattern will most likely still come up from time to time, but you can deal with it in a different way.

It doesn't have to turn into guilt or anger towards yourself. No, you accept because you've noticed. And so that's your practice.

I wish you well. That's your spiritual practice. Much better than living in a monastery for three years.

[Speaker 17] (1:57:57 - 1:57:58)
Thank you.

[Speaker 1] (1:58:10 - 1:59:06)
This mind-made sense of self is also much more focused on the negative than the positive. To be free, you awaken to who you are beyond your history and your life situation. The mother bird is taking the little chick and going, and then it will, oh, no, you can't fly like that.

You have to do this.

[Speaker 9] (1:59:11 - 1:59:37)
I guess just to go along with questions about boys, my daughter is 17 years old. There are times when, and many times recently, when she does not want to follow my direction. How do I stay present when she's doing, you know, meh, you know.

[Speaker 1] (1:59:42 - 1:59:44)
So she's 17.

[Speaker 9] (1:59:45 - 1:59:45)
She's 17.

[Speaker 1] (1:59:45 - 1:59:49)
So you've only got a few more months of control over her.

[Speaker 9] (1:59:51 - 1:59:58)
Let go. Well, she's been at this for a while.

[Speaker 1] (1:59:59 - 2:00:56)
So then the shift, then, as your children grow older, of course, the younger they are, the more you need to, in some cases, control what they do because they might do something to hurt themselves, like don't play with fire, don't walk on a high wall because you might fall off. So those things, then gradually the parent needs to learn to allow a bit more, always a bit more freedom and a bit more just give guidance rather than control. Some parents find it hard to shift from exerting control as they grow older and giving guidance.

And as teenagers, especially, they resent, as you know and everybody knows, they resent being told what to do because they're beginning to be independent adults.

[Speaker 12] (2:00:56 - 2:00:57)
Well, she knows everything.

[Speaker 1] (2:00:57 - 2:07:54)
Yes, of course, yes. So there's as much learning for you as there is for her in this situation. For you it's to do with continuing to give guidance without giving the impression that you're trying to control what she does.

And if guidance is not received, no matter whether it's given but it's not received, then you need to accept that, especially as soon as she will be reaching 18. And then compassion comes in. You continue to help her as much as you can, offer help or guidance, realizing that she now has her, she is autonomous now and will decide what to do on her own and she will make mistakes, hopefully, because if she doesn't, she's not going to grow.

She will make mistakes and you may see it and she won't. And ultimately, they're not really mistakes because they're all part of one's growth process and becoming eventually conscious of mistakes if they are leading to suffering and then can lead to awakening. And then retrospectively, they're not mistakes.

If a mistake leads to awakening, it's not a mistake. Eventually, so it's a letting go internally, compassionate letting go, like think of the image of a nest and the bird, the mother bird is taking the little chick and going. And then you go, oh no, you can't fly like that.

You have to do this. But birds have learned to fly for a million years and more without the mother bird telling them what to do, they'll learn. So it's trusting in the movement of life and realizing how that so-called mistakes are an important part of our growth.

We had somebody else before, we talked about allowing them to do that. So think of the image and that will help you to be, your associated question was to do with patience or presence. This will help you, the bird, you let the bird fly off.

And the flight at first may not be smooth and they may have a hard landing. And you just watch and you know that's fine. Do as much as you can.

Patience is not quite the same as presence. In presence, the whole idea or concept of patience disappears. When you're present and somebody says, oh, you're so patient, you say, patient?

I didn't know I was patient. Patient is not something that you're trying to do, really. I'm trying to be patient here.

Here is the key word. I'm trying to be patient here. So the patience is something you're kind of holding back.

I'm very patient with you. But in presence, really, you're not thinking of yourself as patient at all. It doesn't come into it really anymore at all.

You're just present with what is. And as I said, if somebody called you patient, you'd say, what does that mean? I'm not patient at all.

It's like forgiveness also. In presence, forgiveness happens naturally. And so you don't need to make a big deal and say, I'm trying to forgive that person.

I had, again, in my life, I had for many years resentment towards my father until I finally woke up. And then the resentment disappeared and my relationship with him changed completely. There was suddenly love.

And until the age of 29, I had an enormous amount of resentment. I didn't realize, of course, that he did what he did because of his programming. He had an enormous amount of anger in him that comes from his childhood.

And again, I could explain why, but it's not necessary. It comes from his childhood and the way in which he interpreted his childhood, what his mother did to him, not actually rather how he interpreted her motivation. He was the seventh child, the youngest.

And then his father died when he was only 14. And then the family didn't have enough money to have all the children at school, at grandma's high school. So two of his sisters were kept at school and he was taken out of school because they didn't have enough money.

And he had to become an apprentice in some store, not supermarket, they didn't have supermarkets then, but some store where he had to make deliveries to big houses. And that enormous anger started to come up in him during all that time, what my mother did to me, what they did to me, and that never really left him. So living with him, the anger was usually not directed to me, but was directed to my mother always.

And living there was like living with an unexploded bomb. It could go off at any moment. Whenever he was there, it was like a powder keg.

Any moment it could go off. One wrong word by my mom, and my mom was very good at saying the wrong word.

[Speaker 17] (2:07:54 - 2:07:57)
Oh, of course. Yeah. Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (2:08:00 - 2:09:34)
I didn't, I, that was his, he couldn't help that. And as I then disidentified from that, in his later years, there was a considerable degree of awareness coming in. Some remnants of that anger remained, but far less than before.

And he read The Power of Now a few years before he died, and it was meaningful to him. And there was quite a bit, in some areas of his life, he was virtually enlightened. And in other areas, there were still big pockets of unconsciousness.

But compared to what he was before, there was an enormous shift. And it has, I'm sure, something to do with the shift that happened in me towards him. So there was no longer anything to forgive.

That's the beauty of it. And it was all my, I had to, his ego was huge. So I learned about ego before I even knew the word ego.

Throughout all my childhood, I learned about how the ego behaves and what it does through observation, without knowing that that was ego. But I saw the dysfunction, normal dysfunction in relationships. It's all fine.

It's all fine. Trust, compassion, letting go, and then life will do the rest.

[Speaker 18] (2:09:35 - 2:09:37)
Wow, thank you very much.

[Speaker 1] (2:10:03 - 2:22:12)
My prostate was cancerous, and I had surgery on it. I had been cancer-free, or so I thought, but after seven years, cancer has once again reared its ugly presence in the region. I'm having difficulty coping with this, plus type two diabetes.

Well, it is, it seems the destiny of many humans to be confronted with something like that at some point, or something similar. So I will just explain what I have addressed before a few times with regard to serious illness. And that is not to, as much as possible, avoid the mental, I'm not saying don't recognize reality like in the previous question, but what I'm saying is avoid an excessive mental dwelling on either the condition that has a name or me as the one who suffers from that condition so that your mind does not continuously strengthen that mind form of the illness mind form, or me as my identity as a sufferer from that illness by thinking about it, which of course creates a lot of fear and won't make you feel good.

In other words, in order to become free, now it is a secondary thing, what kind of treatment you go in for, whether it's conventional treatment, whether it's alternative treatment, whether it's no treatment at all, all that only you can know, but what is your state of consciousness? And it's a wonderful, it sounds strange for me to say that it is a great opportunity to have an illness like that. And this has been confirmed to me by a number of people that I've known who have had similar illnesses, one or two seem to get cured, others did not, but that was secondary.

They said that it forced them into very intense presence because they noticed when they were not present, they were very unhappy. So the illness forced them into just living more and more in the present moment. An extreme example of that was I read last year, I sent it to, I read it on the BBC news, my app.

There was a musician in England, popular music. I had never heard of him, but apparently he was quite well known in England who got diagnosed with cancer. And he reports in an interview that when he left the doctor's office, he felt ecstatic.

This is very rare. He felt ecstatically happy and he couldn't quite figure out why. And now he says, I now realize all the problems that I thought I had were completely meaningless.

And he lives completely in the now. And the rare thing with him was that that happened immediately as he left the doctor's office. I've never heard that before, that somebody, so can you be, allow the illness to push you into the awakened state?

Their motivation is very strong now. And it could happen to anybody who is Nuganti. I have not had a serious illness my whole life.

I haven't even seen the inside of a hospital, but who can say that it's not going to happen? Everybody is one heartbeat away from death. Well, the death of the physical body.

And most, if you don't die in an accident, if you die, you might die of old age, if you're lucky or unlucky, depending what your old age looks like. Or as somebody once said, old age isn't so bad if you consider the alternative. So it's either that, most people here, including myself, will probably die of something, which would be heart attack, cancer, stroke.

I think those are the main things. Could be an accident too, of course, or something more rare. Something eventually comes.

So ultimately how long your life is, although I must admit, if it comes to a very young person, it may be more difficult. A young person hasn't lived completely. But even there, the shift is possible so that you allow the condition, the illness to force you into just absolute present moment awareness in which you do not suffer.

A lot of the suffering of the illness arises from what your mind is saying. Of course, with some illnesses, pain eventually comes. That is pain.

When I use the word suffering, I really refer to psychological suffering. If there's pain, then perhaps something is done to alleviate the pain and you also need to surrender. But there may be many conditions where there is actually no pain for quite a long time, but you know there is that illness.

So go away from focusing excessively on the idea of illness in the mind. And in order to get out of the idea of illness, which is not a denial, it's not saying I don't have it. No, you're just not going there.

You're just being in the present moment. And several people that were part of, came to me over the years, especially at a time when I still had more personal contact with people who would come to me. I've seen several who had developed fatal illnesses and in the last months of their lives became quite radiant, quite awakened.

Really the flowering that is meant to be the purpose of human life, the flowering of consciousness happened. They didn't need another 25 years of life, which means 25 years of eating, 25 years of taking the dog for a walk, going on vacation, seeing a few more sunsets and adding more life experiences. You can add more and more, but is that the real purpose of your life, to add more?

And they're good, but then you need more and more and more life experiences and add more. No, there's something else that is more vital, more important. That's the flowering, the shift in consciousness.

Then time becomes immaterial, whether you have a few more months or another 20 years or 30 years. So it was wonderful to see those people becoming radiant and becoming like, in a way like little children, because the whole personality collapsed. The ego could not survive knowing that it had no future.

If the ego really knows it has no future, either it goes into intense suffering and complaining and victim identity. Why did this happen to me, to me? Or it dissolves.

And sometimes it happens to people spontaneously, even without any spiritual teaching or teacher. It just happens that they can't stand the pain anymore and then they just go, oh, there's nobody left. Nobody who says, I have an illness.

No, there's just presence. And then they look at you as if they had just been born. So a deep shift happened inside them.

So that is the potential awakening that's there. That illness, so-called fatal illness, can help you with that. There are situations that force you, if you allow, they'd force you into the present moment.

And those are good things. They force you into the present moment. As you know, some people seek out activities that force them into the present moment, dangerous activities, where you have to be so alert.

If you think you die, so you have to... Some sports events are like that. Most of the people participating in the Olympics, the sportsmen, they have to be, while they are performing, whatever it is, the discipline is, they're all...

And they love it. They love that aliveness. They may not realize that they could have the same aliveness sitting by a fireplace.

And that is the same aliveness that can be there when there is a threatened life, so-called life-threatening illness. But it's longer. It's not just a moment like five minutes.

Mind-Made Sense of Self This Mind-Made Sense of Self is also much more focused on the negative than the positive. To be free, you awaken to who you are beyond your history and your life situation.

[Speaker 15] (2:22:47 - 2:22:48)
Okay.

[Speaker 9] (2:22:49 - 2:22:54)
Actually, my question is already being answered.

[Speaker 1] (2:22:54 - 2:22:55)
That often happens.

[Speaker 9] (2:22:56 - 2:23:05)
And I think one day we're all going to come here and once we're all in presence, we won't have any questions for you.

[Speaker 1] (2:23:06 - 2:23:07)
That's true. That would be wonderful.

[Speaker 9] (2:23:08 - 2:23:10)
You're going to be out of business. Yes.

[Speaker 1] (2:23:12 - 2:23:14)
Yes. That would be wonderful.

[Speaker 9] (2:23:14 - 2:23:23)
Actually, my question was, could you elaborate on ego versus healthy self-esteem?

[Speaker 1] (2:23:23 - 2:33:27)
Ah, yes. Okay. Eventually, what we call healthy self-esteem, which is a wonderful thing, eventually that is not enough.

And as a human being evolves, that healthy self-esteem is no longer satisfying as you grow older and is transcended. And what takes its place is healthy no-hyphen self-esteem. The self-esteem, of course, means that you are reasonably satisfied with who you are as a person and the achievements of the person, what the person can do, or what the person knows, or what the person possesses.

And you compare what the person can do, abilities, what the person knows, knowledge, or what the person has in terms of possessions. You compare that with others, and you come out favorably. So either you can do more than somebody else or others, feel better about yourself.

I can do this, but they can't. I can, but you can't. Or you have more knowledge.

Did you know that this and such and such is such and such a case? You didn't know that? Well, let me tell you.

That feels good. These ignorant people, they don't know anything. Or you have more.

How many bedrooms does your house have? Four? Well, we have eleven.

Do you have an advanced degree? No? I have two PhDs.

And that's fine. It starts with a child already. It says, look what I can do.

I can jump further than you. And for the child, it's fine. There's no point in telling a child, don't do this, don't do that.

Your ego is arising. No, the child has to go through that. And it is better to have healthy self-esteem, as you describe it, as it's usually described, than extremely low self-esteem.

I'm no good. Everybody's better than me. I have nothing.

Life has treated me unfairly. There's a self-image there also. As there is a self-image in healthy self-esteem, one, of course, is much nicer than the other.

It's more pleasant to live with healthy self-esteem than with a low self-esteem, or unhealthy self-esteem, one could call it. But they're both identification with some kind of form. And you compare the form of who I am with the form of others, and you are better, at least in one area, you must be.

And that's satisfying. But there's still, you're trapped in form, and you're depending on, for your sense of value or worthiness, you're depending on, ultimately, to put it bluntly, others who have less or know less or can do less than you. And that's fine.

It doesn't mean you shouldn't strive to do great things or to have things or to know things. But the question is, ultimately, is that a satisfying basis for your sense of who you are? And in the long term, it is not.

It is not satisfying. That is why people who are maybe very happy with what they possess, after a while, there's an emptiness that comes, not the spiritual emptiness, the sense of emptiness of what's it all about. And even things you can do, a time may come when you can't do it anymore.

Whatever it is that you do, that's so great. Playing an instrument, the great pianist, wonderful, why not be a great pianist? But if you derive your sense of who you are from that, then one day you find arthritis in your fingers.

And who are you now? Or just the agility goes. It's not there anymore.

Oh, my God. Suffering comes. Or you invent the greatest new computer, some computer.

I don't know the expressions, but program or whatever it is. And everybody says this is the greatest ever, but three years later or two years, these things happen very quickly. Somebody else comes and makes yours obsolete, and then you have no new ideas, and there you sit, completely devastated, because you come from somebody great, you've become nobody.

But it was all illusion, because you derived your sense of who you are from something in the world of form, which is fleeting, not reliable, not solid, dreamlike. And so the true self-esteem comes from not identifying with form. Now, whether we even want to call that self-esteem, I don't know.

The true sense of worthiness and of power, true power, comes when you realize the formless in yourself, that dimension, and that all power comes from that. But it goes far beyond the person that you are. And then you are rooted in the formless, so to speak, or you are it, and that there's enormous sense of worthiness in there, but it's not comparative.

It's not more than. You see the same worthiness in everyone, even if they don't know it for themselves yet. So there's power, but not more than.

There's just the power of life itself, and you know everybody is an expression of that, although they may not know it yet. Everybody. So this is, you transcend conventional self-esteem, and it doesn't mean you lose your sense of worth.

It shifts into something much deeper. So every human really is, there may even be some children these days who don't need to go through the egoic state anymore. That is possible.

But traditionally, and humans had to go, and some, many probably still have to go through the stage where they identify with form, develop some self-esteem, do something that you feel good about, you can do it, and then comes the time going beyond. Except perhaps, as I said, some advanced souls who may be coming into this world, already in this world as children, who don't need, even need to identify with that anymore. A question that comes from there also is, if a person has low self-esteem, in other words, a mental image of not good enough, then does that person have to go through the stage of healthy self-esteem before they can transcend it altogether?

I don't know. I haven't tried it enough with enough people. I don't know.

It may well be that the unhealthy self-esteem, if it leads to a state of suffering, great suffering, you may be able to, with the help of a teacher, go from there to no self. Because the way from unhappiness or suffering to transcendence is easier than the way from superficial happiness to transcendence. Superficial happiness keeps you in the dream world for quite a while.

It's not that bad. My life, I can't complain. It's not that bad.

It's going okay. I'm quite happy, just got a promotion. I'm so happy I just got my annual bonus from my Wall Street bank.

[Speaker 17] (2:33:30 - 2:33:31)
Great, I'm doing great.

[Speaker 1] (2:33:44 - 2:34:04)
So from there, the transcendence is not directly from Wall Street, probably not. But if you go from Wall Street to prison, then...

[Speaker 15] (2:34:04 - 2:34:05)
much easier.

[Speaker 1] (2:34:27 - 2:41:59)
Well, the ego lives in an almost continuous sense of not enough, we could say, a sense of lack. It may not be always in the foreground, but it's always in the background, at least, that sense that you're not complete, you don't have enough, you are not enough, you're not fully yourself yet, which, of course, is true on the human level, because on the human level, you can always achieve more, you can attain more, you can experience more. But it's not true who you are, who or what you are in the essence of your being.

In the essence of your being, you're already complete. So there's the depth dimension to who you are, and there is the surface dimension to who you are. The surface dimension is the ego.

The ego comes from a place of lack. And whatever you attain through the ego, and the ego has access to some power, obviously, it's a form that consciousness has taken, but you're a much less powerful creator as an ego compared to what you could be if you're aligned with the essence of who you are, and you're coming from a deeper place that is in alignment with what the universe wants and where the universe is going, which is greater consciousness. So if you come from the ego, there's a sense of lack.

You always know it retrospectively that after you have attained something through egoic endeavors, if you haven't attained it, then sooner or later, and usually sooner, it does not satisfy you. Whatever you attain, the moments of satisfactions are fairly brief, and then again, you fall back into the state of lack and dissatisfaction. So no matter what you create from ego and through ego, it won't satisfy you.

Now, you may not know this while you're engaged in the process, but retrospectively, you can always know it. And while you are creating, though, there are also certain signs that are indicative that the ego has gained the upper hand.

If you might even have started your manifestation from a deeper place, and then suddenly something happened and the ego started to take over.

And so, for example, a good sign is that when you no longer enjoy what you're doing, you're engaged in a creative process, you're active, you believe that you can achieve it, but a time comes when you suddenly realize you don't enjoy the work anymore. And whenever an obstacle appears, because in any creative process, even though it may be empowered, you will still occasionally encounter obstacles. Anybody who has created something new in this world has experienced that, yes, you are assisted.

The more you are aligned with the depths of who you are, the greater the assistance you get. Nevertheless, even in those cases, you will encounter, when you create something new, you will encounter obstacles because there are certain structures in the world that don't want to change. They are against change.

There's a certain inertia in the structures of this world. And if you want to bring about something new, then sometimes you come up against that and some of the inertia manifests through human beings who don't want the change that you are trying to bring about. So when you encounter obstacles, as you're bound to, when you're coming from ego, you will be upset and you will regard the obstacle as an enemy and you will start complaining or you will become discouraged.

You might become aggressive. You may become stressed. You can't sleep anymore.

So you're finding the obstacles create a dysfunctional state within you. And then your entire work becomes a source of stress for you. And when stress arises, it means the ego is there and is interfering, even if your initial attention might have been very good.

You say, for example, I want to create a great spiritual center where people come to learn to be more conscious. Now, what could be better than that? And that's great.

So the intention is great. Maybe the initial intention may be absolutely wonderful, but as you start working, then without you knowing it, the ego can come, can creep back in and claim, first of all, it says that you are in desperate need for this to happen and you cannot be fulfilled and happy unless this happens. These are the first thoughts that come.

They may not become conscious or at the back of your mind, this feeling arises. So you desperately need this to happen. Every obstacle and every person who represents this obstacle becomes an enemy and you get upset when you encounter them.

And so without you knowing it, if you fall back, if you fall into a state of lack, of neediness, of not enough, of the place you want to get to, the aim, the intention becomes so important to you where you need to get to. The end result that you want to achieve becomes so important to you that you neglect the importance, the primary importance of the present moment and your state of consciousness in the present moment. So instead of focusing on the step you're taking at this moment and giving your utmost attention to what you're doing now, and if you do that, you will actually enjoy what you're doing.

Instead of that, you're excessively focused on the desired outcome and the present moment is no more than an inferior moment towards this imagined future moment. So your fault is these are all egoic patterns that you fall back into and that is why it can become very frustrating. So a good intention is not enough.

You need to be conscious throughout the creative process because the ego can creep back in during the creative process without you knowing it. It's a very subtle thing.

[Speaker 2] (2:41:59 - 2:42:04)
You need to be really alert, but that's how it is.

[Speaker 11] (2:42:17 - 2:43:40)
I'm a quantum physicist by education. Now I work with blind people and people are losing their sight to try to preserve the sight. In doing so, I carry a lot of their pain with me all the time.

And wherever I look, I see your teaching. Whether it's quantum physics, whether it's how the body works. And I try to convey that to my colleagues to try and not only focus on saving the sight, but also, even in a very small part, healing these people.

Helping them deal with that. However, I'm in the investment world, so I'm always faced with a lot of resistance. Because it's not conducive to good business to spend too much time being too soft.

And I was wondering if you could comment a little bit on how can I help the patients and also help the people who are in the business side of things. Yes. Thank you.

[Speaker 1] (2:43:40 - 2:43:48)
So you work in a hospital or clinic that specializes in helping people with their sight.

[Speaker 11] (2:43:48 - 2:44:12)
Actually, I'm an inventor and I take my inventions. We have an investment firm. So we work with people, not only in this country, but other countries to try and find solutions to restore sight for people who have completely lost their sight.

Or preserve whatever sight is left for people who have things like that. Yes.

[Speaker 1] (2:44:14 - 2:44:52)
So in addition to treating the eyes, the eyesight of humans, you realize there's more that you are able to do for them. There's an additional dimension there. And there's a little bit of conflict between this.

Again, we come again to the system that you work in and what you feel that you need to do to feel fulfilled and to help others becoming more conscious. Sometimes using their suffering to become more conscious.

[Speaker 16] (2:44:53 - 2:44:53)
Yes.

[Speaker 1] (2:44:54 - 3:08:08)
So is it you need to see whether you can still... This is very important for you to continue to do that because this is why you are here. It's not just you treat the whole human being, not just one part of the body.

Are you able to still do that within the structure that you work now? Or can you change it from within? Or do you need to create a new structure?

It's basically, it's the same question as the previous question. I would not give up, do not compromise on what you feel you are called upon to do with other human beings. And don't compromise and say, okay, I'll just have to drop this and just treat them to like everybody else.

But see if you can still function from within the system and do what you feel you need to do. And if you can't, again, it's a question of doing it in a new way, creating something that makes it possible for you to work on both levels, on the outer level and the inner level with human beings. Thank you.

Again, this question comes up very often for many people in different ways. And many of you may find, because you represent the arising and the awakening consciousness, many of you will find that the existing structures within which you work are not able to carry the new consciousness anymore. Jesus used this funny expression, new wine in old bottles, because apparently at the time, the bottles were not glass bottles, they were kind of leather bottles.

And if you, for some reason, if you put new one in, they would probably burst. So what that means is many of the existing structures, social structure, that also applies to economic structures, the structures in medicine, psychiatry, psychology, education, school system, university system. Many of those structures, they were created not by the awakened consciousness.

They've all been around for a long time and they evolved out of the egoic consciousness. So many of the structures are the products of unenlightened states of consciousness. They reflect the unenlightened, unawakened states of consciousness.

So many of you will find it necessary to step out of, sometimes, as I said, they can make, in certain cases, they can be changed from within if there are enough people within who want to change it. But many structures are too rigid for change. So it is up to you to create new structures that reflect your, and come together, perhaps, with others who are also awakening so that the new structures will reflect your state of consciousness.

So this is what the world needs. The world cannot continue to function within the old structures that are a product of unenlightened states of consciousness. The economy, the political system, even here in the States, it seems to, compared to some other places, functions quite well, but it's dysfunctional too.

The economic structure, certainly, you can see how dysfunctional they are. The educational system, how children are brought up, all those things, they require new structures to reflect the arising consciousness. So that's your job to create those.

And here we come to that part of manifestation, which the universe also wants. It does not, it wants you, yes, of course, it wants you to go within, realize who you are in your essence. And then from there, it also wants you to create.

It wants you to manifest. It will use you, it will work through you to manifest new forms because the old forms don't work anymore. And that's, it's a wonderful thing to do that.

And you will see how empowered you suddenly become as you go about creating new forms, how powerful your abilities to manifest will be if they are in alignment with what the universe wants, with what the one consciousness wants. They are not little egos wanting to create something. You are in alignment with what the universe needs right now, what the awakening consciousness wants.

If you then start manifesting from that deeper level within yourself, you will be amazed how empowered you can be in your own manifestation. Sometimes there is a time gap. So sometimes manifestation happens very quickly.

Sometimes you need to, as you are inspired, so to speak, a blueprint of what is possible, of what you, or not so much you, of what consciousness wants you to create may arise in your mind. And this mental blueprint of what you want to create, this may be there for a while. It might attract others with similar mental blueprint.

And then at some point, the manifestation begins. Some action may be necessary, but again, the action that you take will be inspired by the consciousness and it will not be stressful. This is a new way of creating.

If stress comes in, you're falling back into the old consciousness. This is a joyful way of creating new forms and new structures in this world. The old way is to create, while you're creating, you're stressed and angry and you're fighting others.

You will encounter obstacles to that which you want to create because the old structures, they don't want to, they will regard you as an enemy in some cases. And that's fine. You have no enemies.

Let them regard you as an enemy. But to you, you don't attack. Another important thing.

You don't attack the old structures and say how dreadfully wrong they are. Focus on the new rather than, and especially don't attack the people who are still identified with the old structures and work within the old structures. They are just a little slower in awakening.

So the important thing in the new way of creating external forms is if obstacle arise to, then the obstacle can be overcome, not by attacking it. Some obstacles are overcome by yielding. So let's say something is coming at you.

You want to go this way and create that. And he says, somebody says, no, you can't do that. And so sometimes you yield.

Here comes the obstacle and you go, you almost go wrong. Or you use a very similar to a martial arts. Maybe Kim knows more about that than I.

Something comes at you and the very energy of the attack can be turned around if you're not in a resistance mode against. That's vital. But yes, you will encounter obstacles.

And that's part of that can only help you with deepening your resolve and deepening your connectedness to the consciousness that wants to create through you. I saw the first, many years ago, you may not even remember, on the Oprah show, Oprah said once, I don't know how many years ago, they were talking about how the slaughterhouses, how animals are treated and how, and Oprah said, I'm never going to eat a hamburger again. And then she was taken to court by the Texas cattle ranchers because the moment she said, I'm never going to eat a hamburger again, the shares of all the cattle ranching businesses plummeted.

So she was, she was a huge court case against Oprah and her company. So much so that she had to move her entire show to Texas because she had to be there every day to be in court. And she did, she moved to Texas.

And then she started having, talking about how wonderful Texas is and how nice the people are in Texas. And they all showed the problem. People were not, she actually didn't attack anybody.

She just said how great it is to be here. And people loved her suddenly being there, not the cattle ranchers, but the others. It was a wonderful example of somebody who does not engage in fighting the other.

He just cooperates with that and sees the good in the situation. And in the end, the cattle ranchers lost. So she won the case and there wasn't a triumphant, I won the case against the, it was just fine.

It was the natural outcome. If you respond to a situation consciously without creating an enemy, although you might be seen as an enemy by them, but to you, they are not. And that was a wonderful thing to watch.

So there are other examples of that when handling these things consciously rather than in the old way. But so for you, see what life, as you know what I sometimes say, it's not a question of asking yourself, what do I want from life? Or what do I want in life?

Asking what does life want from me? Life means consciousness. Consciousness is the essence of all life.

What does life want me to do? And many of you know already, it might not be come up very clearly yet, but you have an inkling at least of what it is that life wants you to do. And if you don't have it, then just wait a little, become still.

It could take a while. Some of you may not have to do anything at all. That's fine too.

Not everybody is there to create some new structures. You may remember I use the expression frequency holder for certain people who are contemplative. There are some people who are by nature quiet and withdrawn.

And then they're never really interested in creating anything. They just want to emanate peace. In traditional societies, they would have lived in a monastery or in an ashram.

Well, in India, ashrams are still popular. So you can go to monasteries. These days are closing down because these are very, some may still be lovely places, but in many cases, this is part of the old structures through which in the past, spirituality expressed itself.

Some of the most spiritual people in the West, they were not part of the hierarchy of the church. They lived in monasteries and you didn't even know them. They were simple, humble monks.

Most people in the church hierarchy had huge egos and they were only interested in power. Well, to some extent, it might still apply nowadays. So new forms, whether some of you might create healing centers, some may create a place like this, a retreat center for people to come to, all kinds of things, or you use your own modality of work and create a new structure through which that can express itself in this world.

So wonderful opportunities and challenges lie ahead. And if you are a frequency holder, that's fine too. Get a job as a gardener and tend your plants or sell tickets at the toll booth of the bridge where the cars stop and say, thank you, have a good day.

You say that 2,000, 3,000 times a day and everybody who goes past gets that, oh, a moment of presence. So there's not one thing, not everybody is called upon to go out there and create something new. Many are, and others just, you cannot not affect others if there's a transformation of consciousness and an awakening in you, it will affect others, even if you never meet them, because underneath the surface of things, all humans are connected.

There is such a thing as I mentioned earlier, the one human consciousness being an aspect of the one universal consciousness. So one human being goes, going through an awakening, makes it easier for many others to go through an awakening. Even if that human being never does anything particularly interesting in his or her outer life, others go through an awakening and they will do significant and interesting and meaningful things in their outer life.

But even if you don't, it will affect the totality of human consciousness. You could withdraw to an ashram or live as a hermit, you would still affect the totality of human consciousness. Your challenge then of course would be to stay present in the absence of challenges, major challenges, stay absolutely present and don't...

A frequency holder is at a level above thinking, somebody who is predominantly still without being very active, predominantly still. For a frequency holder who is above thinking, the danger is that he or she may inadvertently after a while, inadvertently fall from being above thinking to feeling below thinking. And the danger of the active person who acts from this higher level of consciousness is that he or she may become so focused on the doing, beginning to think that the doing is more important than the being behind it and then loses touch with the being and therefore also gets lost in doing and falls below thinking and gets trapped what he wanted to avoid in the first place, gets back into the same trap of mind. So I have seen people who...

There have been people who wanted to create a healing center and they were not vigilant enough to observe their own states of consciousness because there's so many things to do and to consider and then you come together with others. We all have the same endeavor, but unfortunately, they're not vigilant enough so the ego creeps back very quickly and then instead of creating a healing center, they create an extremely dysfunctional organization where they all hate each other. There are also churches like that, church organization.

When they have their committee meetings, there's some extremely angry people in these committee meetings. They hate others. Even while they open the book and say, love your neighbor as yourself.

As you know very well, when you want to create something or something wants to be created through you, the important thing is not to believe that you need to attract something from into your life. It doesn't manifest from there. It manifests from within, from within out.

So the feeling that it's already a reality in you, Jesus already said that, when you pray for something, believe that you already have it. And of course, many books that you can read on manifestation, the good ones will also tell you that when you want to create something, you need to feel it's reality already as here and now it is already here. In a way it is already here.

And you don't, you feel, you do not postpone your feeling of accomplishment and fulfillment and the joy of this being that needs already to be there because in a way it is on the inner level, it's already fully there. That is the secret of powerful manifestation is to feel, how would you feel if you already had that right here now? Oh, that would feel, that's the basis for creation.

That would feel wonderful. Okay. So you are feeling wonderful right now.

Yes. Why are you feeling wonderful? Because I'm imagining that it's already here.

Okay. That's the beginning of manifestation that you feel it's already here. You're not looking to the thing that you want to create, expecting some kind of future fulfillment through it.

So you need to manifest out of the fullness of the present moment. If you lose touch with the fullness of the present moment, which means being in touch with being, in touch with the essence of who you are, that's where all fullness arises. The fullness of life as Jesus called it, the emptiness, the Buddha called it.

If you are in touch with that, you create from there, then there's no, the satisfaction is already here. It's not postponed to some future moment. And that's, then you become a powerful creator or the universe creates powerfully through you.

So the manifestation is also a joyful thing. And it could be that something else wants to manifest. You might have had a vision that wasn't quite correct and something even better comes about.

That can happen also. You wanted to create a little healing center with five people and suddenly you have something with 500 people. You're not, you don't want the child to do this or that.

You're just there with a child. That's a beautiful thing. And that's beyond any pattern.

That's not an inherited pattern. It's presence.

[Speaker 14] (3:08:13 - 3:08:59)
I have a question about children. I did a lot of spiritual work on myself before I had children. And now I realize that I've transferred all of my fear of death and need for security onto my children.

And I don't know what to do about it. I don't know what the best course of action is because I realize that it's part of taking care of them is to protect them. But on the other hand, it goes against being present and being in presence and definitely brings on anxiety and wanting to control situations and overprotection.

[Speaker 1] (3:09:00 - 3:09:05)
Do you overprotect? Or how does it manifest in actual daily life?

[Speaker 14] (3:09:07 - 3:09:50)
Well, my children are unusual in that they both have special health problems. So they involved both my husband and I a great deal in caring for their health at a time when it was really important. But now we give them the same amount of attention even though for the most part they're okay.

So it's kind of like we got into that pattern of putting all of our energy into them. And it's continuing, but I'm not sure where to let go and where to hold on.

Yes. Thank you. Certain behaviors, once they are in place, have a certain momentum and they kind of take you over almost.

Especially then if it happens between two people or an even larger group, behavior pattern can become an energy stream that takes you over. You can have it, for example, when there are riots or whatever, sometimes they go on for days because the people who participate in the riots have nothing to do with you, of course. Just a similar, same phenomenon on a larger scale, the phenomenon of people being in the grip of a certain behavior pattern which is an energy stream.

And so they are not doing it, they are in the grip of it. Nobody is doing it. So that can even happen here a certain kind of behavior becomes initiated and then refuses to go away.

Similar phenomenon would be when you are in a certain state, you don't want to get out of that state. Children, for example, many children, a very simple example, and even adults, even when they are tired, they don't want to go to bed because somehow there is always something else. Because the state of being awake wants to continue despite the tiredness.

But once you are in bed and asleep, you don't want to get out of bed in the morning because then that momentum wants to continue. Or the child doesn't want to go into the bath or the shower because it doesn't want to change its state from dryness to wetness. Once you are in the bath, you don't want to get out because it's so nice.

So there are certain energies that want to sustain themselves and behavior patterns can be like that. So the essential thing then for you is to have spaces of awareness during the day from where you can be aware of whatever behavior you are manifesting at that moment so that you are not totally controlled by the old pattern. And this is why it's so essential to have your daily life, your day, totally interspersed with what I call spaces.

This is just another way of saying step out of your life situation, which is in time, past and future, mind, and step into the present moment. So a little space opens up inside. That's the space of awareness.

From the awareness you can see the energy behind an old battle of behavior and this pattern either makes you think a certain thought or it immediately goes into action. It makes you do something. And so you can sometimes then feel the arising behavior before it manifests as an action.

You can feel the impulse to go there and do this protective thing to the child when it's quite unnecessary. It's no longer needed. So you can feel the impulse arising and recognizing it as an old impulse but only from the space of awareness and then you don't need to act on it.

You can say, oh, there's the old impulse. The impulse is there, arises, and then subsides. Or if thought comes in, some compulsive thought about your child, that also from that space of awareness, that inner space of aware presence, the stillness, another word for it, from the stillness you observe the thought that wants to push itself, is pushing itself into your mind.

You have to think this now and say, OK, there it is. And you allow it. You don't fight it because whatever you fight you make stronger.

So you are not in the grip of it anymore. So more aware spaces. Vital with all children to bring spatial consciousness, as I sometimes call it, or space consciousness, nothing to do with science fiction, to bring space consciousness into the relationship with your child.

For example, it's essential not to always relate to your child from the point of view of doing. Do this, don't do that. Now we need to do that.

Now let's do that. Don't do that, don't go there. Go there.

But to relate to your child, that has its place, of course, but if that's all there is, then it's a very one-dimensional relationship because what is missing is being. What is missing is to bring in the spaciousness into the relationship where you can just be with the child and look at the child and listen to the child and be there as the aware presence for the child. And so you don't want the child to do this or that, you're just there with the child and observing, watching, listening, being, giving attention.

That's a beautiful thing and that's beyond any pattern, that's not an inherited pattern, it's presence. Presence is not an old pattern, it's eternally new, it's timeless. So most parents don't know that yet, they cannot bring the timeless dimension into the relationship with their child and so the relationship becomes full of conflict eventually.

You have the best of intentions and yet then the child grows and then suddenly the child is reactive and you don't know why and there's conflict. The reason is that the most vital dimension is missing. You've done all you could but doing wasn't enough.

Doing is necessary but it's not enough. Being was neglected, so being means to bring the aware spaces into the relationship where doing doesn't matter so much when doing can still happen within it but that's vital. And of course not only into the relationship with your child but also bring it into every relationship.

No relationship can thrive if there is no spaciousness in it. And the spaciousness is there when you look at the other person and there's no thought in your head while you look because you're simply there as an aware presence. Then there's a true relationship beyond the forms, the psychological form and the physical form.

If you can look at another person and just be there as the aware presence with no thought, just an alert presence. That's what I call, that is space. If you can't do it with another human being start by doing it with a flower but I know you can.

If you can't do it with another human being do it with a dog. It might be a little bit easier to be the aware space with a dog because the dog is already free of thought. So the dog does not stimulate thought in you as a human being would do the other person is probably thinking so that transmits itself, it's contagious every state transmits itself so you might be dragged into thinking also.

So to have that no thought in any relationship is vital. It's vital for your children so that old patterns cease to operate and the new can come in and then from that state of consciousness you can respond to the need of the child but it's no longer responding from a pattern that is no longer useful. From the aware space you also know what is right for any given moment whether you need to allow the child to explore for example or whether you need to say come away from there because there's a 50 meter drop you might fall.

So there's always a balance between allowing the child to find out for him or herself and to protect the child and say no, come here. It's a very subtle balance but it's much easier from awareness to know where the balance is and to do the right thing from there. So your entire life then it's not just that so the question has wider implications it's not just to do with your children but the spaciousness needs to be there inside yourself wherever you go if you go into nature without spaciousness you're hardly there because you're thinking while you're surrounded by beauty and aliveness you're thinking.

Now, you're either thinking about you and yourself and your problems and you're only aware of the forest or the seaside or the mountains or the clouds or the wind and the breeze and the beautiful noises of nature on the periphery of your awareness because you're thinking about your failed investments or a little bit better you might be thinking about what you're looking at oh, I wonder what that's called what's that? I can't remember what that's called I'll have to look it up you're not fully present either you're maybe a little bit more present than the person who's totally away but not much more because you're still trapped in concepts in your mind can you be there simply as spacious awareness like a little child but deeper, more intense be there can you be anywhere as spacious awareness rather than a person that's a new state of consciousness that's arising can I be here as spacious awareness with anybody of course, as I said probably a little easier with a dog or a cat because you can meet the dog or the cat in the state of no thought the dog has no thought because it hasn't arrived at thought yet it's intelligent but it has no conceptual thinking the dog hasn't arrived at conceptual thinking it's below conceptual thinking and you have gone beyond conceptual thinking into the spaciousness and there you meet in no mind that's why it's so beautiful to relate to an animal and why so many people feel drawn to animals these days because it's the only time they can be free of their conceptual mind when they look at the dog or the cat nothing to think about and you know the dog or cat is not thinking about you they're looking at you no thought it doesn't mean that you have regressed it means for you, you've gone beyond thinking stepped above thinking and then you can meet the entire dimension that is below thinking in a wonderful state of oneness the oneness that you sense with all nature that's around you if you're in conceptual thinking you're separated you meet everything because when you're not thinking about the tree and the bird and the breeze and the insect there is no me and them there's a single phenomenon the forms arising in consciousness and so you're like God that says and God saw what he, she, it had made and recognized it as good the consciousness out of which the whole universe came you represent that when you're in the state of no thought you represent the ground of being of all being and you walk around nature and you say if you had a thought it would say oh, I did a good thing there and you see that even in the tension between opposites even that there's a deeper good beyond that yes, occasionally one thing eats up another but there is a greater harmony that envelops the whole you cannot sense that harmony when you're trapped in conceptual thinking so next time you can tell me how it's going with your children it's a spiritual practice like everything else

it becomes a spiritual practice hi

[Speaker 13] (3:24:10 - 3:25:01)
I often feel overwhelmed by anger so I and that anger makes me throw my spiritual practice really out of the window so it's like a big impotence and pessimism so it's not going to work anyway so just the hell with it and that's one thing and the other thing is I also feel very often that something is wrong so I need to take some action to correct something that probably is just imaginary, so it's unreal so there is no action needed most probably but I have to do something about it

[Speaker 1] (3:25:01 - 3:25:02)
yes

[Speaker 13] (3:25:02 - 3:25:05)
and I get carried away by that

[Speaker 1] (3:25:05 - 3:25:05)
yes

[Speaker 13] (3:25:09 - 3:25:17)
for example right now I feel my heart beat very strongly yes and I guess there's no reason for that but

[Speaker 1] (3:25:18 - 3:26:25)
well you're doing public speaking right now so maybe that's why yes and that's fine you acknowledge that the heart is beating and you let that be and the feeling that something is wrong that's not a personal problem of yours it's a universal human condition to carry that feeling inside that something is wrong and then the mind looks for what can I do about this or where is the thing that's wrong and then it misinterprets situations so anger when anger comes of course the energy field of it immediately flows into your mind and the thoughts that you then think are reflections of the anger the anger makes you think certain thoughts and as you put it it says all that spiritual stuff obviously doesn't work these are thoughts that come out of the anger, the energy field

or whatever I do it's going to be always the same no point of it because it's not going to work the kind of thoughts that it generates

[Speaker 1] (3:26:36 - 3:30:45)
yes but next time it happens see if you are able to in addition to thinking those thoughts at the same time you can be aware that these are thoughts that have arisen out of the energy field of anger in other words see if you can have an awareness it's not easy with anger because it comes so suddenly whether you can have an awareness not only that there's the energy of anger flowing through you but also perhaps that the energy of anger which may be old anger that has lived in you for a long time pain body I call it which can easily then rise into your mind and control your thoughts are you able to stay aware while it happens and recognize anger as an expression of the pain body and if you are thinking angry thoughts to realize that these are the thoughts of anger anger is thinking these thoughts they are not true so they are simply thoughts that reflect the energy field of anger so the experiment then is whether you can stay aware as the observer or the witness of those thoughts and of the energy field of anger you may not I'm just suggesting it as an experiment whether or not you are able to stay present depends on how much presence there is already in you how much presence power there is already in you perhaps after having spent some time here with us there may be more presence power in you because this energy field is helpful for drawing that out of you once you are there as the witness then changes begin to happen you don't even have to do anything you know what I mean by witness simply to witness to be aware of the energy so that you don't become completely identified with it so the witnessing consciousness is in the same way that you now witness perhaps a certain nervousness your heart is beating there may be a certain nervousness as you stand there and you witness there is the nervousness and there is the heart beating and the witness allows everything to be as it is but there is a deeper dimension in you from where you can say my heart is beating I feel nervous energy inside me these are still verbalizations but beyond the verbalization there is the ability to simply see it so to speak then that will change all the old patterns the more awareness comes in the more the old patterns will change so you don't have to change yourself because that's complicated many people try to do that I have to change myself the most powerful the real change comes with becoming aware of whatever is happening inside you so that the anger is no longer you the anger is anger and you are the awareness you know it, you see it you feel it, there it is and that's the decisive shift from being the anger to having the anger in your energy field and observing it it's a wonderful shift so use anger as your spiritual practice, if you fail of course anger will immediately say you see you failed again, you can't do it that's the anger speaking

[Speaker 13] (3:30:45 - 3:30:46)
there is something wrong with you

[Speaker 1] (3:30:46 - 3:33:25)
particularly that there is something wrong with me now I don't know if you may be surprised to know that there are millions billions of people on the planet who have that same thought pattern, there is something wrong with me it's part of the human ego but so you bring in the awareness and that will change everything that's the only true key if you fail, next time the anger arises what happens you will become aware immediately after the anger has subsided oh there it was and I wasn't present and then the the moment will come when you are there if you can catch the anger the first moment it comes or if you might even see that it could be the result of a thought that creates the anger and if you can be there in the first moment before it becomes the fully blown anger, then you can stay there and it might not even become fully blown anger if you catch it the first moment, you can feel the first stirrings of anger, you may only have 3 seconds it may come very quickly anger is like an explosive energy you may only have 2, 3, 4, 5 seconds to stay there with your awareness and feel it, oh it's coming, there it is that's the pain body, the angry pain body coming and if you catch it in the early stage don't suppress it by catch it I mean feel it be there as a witness then you can stay even as it grows the witness grows with it it may not even grow we'll have to see whether it still grows into full blown anger or not, that doesn't matter and so you be thankful for your anger because the anger can become a very important spiritual practice for you because through it awareness can grow so it's sometimes strange for people to see you can be thankful for things that you think are the most difficult obstacles in your life but they become they can become your greatest opportunity for spiritual awakening use it as part of your practice

yeah, I think the most difficult thing to deal with is impotence, when you feel it's

[Speaker 1] (3:33:31 - 3:33:33)
not going to work, yes you feel powerlessness

[Speaker 13] (3:33:33 - 3:33:41)
yes, like a deep pessimism it's not going to work, it's not you're about to fail yes, and you have to

[Speaker 1] (3:33:41 - 3:36:52)
recognize that these are thought forms, they are thoughts that arise in your mind and when you're aware you don't need to believe in every thought that arises you don't no longer and that's an enormous freedom you recognize it as a thought that comes from anger not the truth it's a thought a thought form that comes from anger the pain body if a thought comes from anger, it's not the truth it's a distortion recognize it and you say oh, there's another thought form that says something negative there's nothing you can do you might as well give up whatever thoughts come recognize that, it's a thought form, do you see how important that is well, perhaps we will meet again in a year's time and it's always interesting to see how things have evolved as you practice now what happened to you as you bring awareness into the anger, see what happens to it a year later thank you we need to finish now thank you wonderful it's just wonderful to see consciousness evolving awakening in different human forms, in different ways and that we can be thankful for everything, especially the difficult parts of our life, because without that there would be no awakening it's that which creates, the challenges create the necessary energy for the flowering of consciousness so it's not only in the movies where things need to go wrong in every movie if nothing goes wrong, there's no movie the character doesn't develop everybody remains the same in a bad movie that which goes wrong is resolved on some external level, but in a good movie as the character faces his or her problems he or she grows, changes develops abilities that he or she didn't have before and in very good movies there's some kind of spiritual realization but only because something went wrong

ok so I always have this desire to know which I know may not be very correct all the time like based on what you have been saying but still I always feel comfortable if I know what's going to happen, especially about important things in my life and whenever there's a situation, let's say at work or like an emotional relationship one side of my mind is like, this is not going to work out, blah blah and the other side is, yes, it's going to work out no, yes, no and all day long seriously I'm doing something and in my mind, they're going to lay you off no, they're not going to lay her off no, no it seriously comes to a point of losing my mind and sometimes, but sometimes I know it so strongly so I can calm myself down so I just wanted to ask you how can I know what's the right answer what's the voice of intuition, like how do I know the voice of intuition instead of this fighting

ok, ok, well I believe I believe many people recognize your question it's a pattern in the human mind and perhaps in you it's stronger than in some who knows but it's in many people's minds so it's of course the answer is in and this is your challenge is not trying to figure out which of these voices is the right one that's not it it's to discover within yourself that space that is not the voice that space of awareness so that can only, you can only practice that while it happens there's that voice and there's the other voice and who is aware of these voices you don't need to answer that question I'm just putting it out don't answer it because there's no answer there's only a direct realization of it within yourself there's no external answer because if you give an answer that's another voice so this is the question that you should not answer in words so I'm asking again who is it in you who or what there's something in you that is aware of these different conflicting voices there is an awareness otherwise you wouldn't know that there is a voice now the voice these are thought formations these are energy every thought is an energy field and each thought formation wants to draw your attention suck it up into itself come here and the other one says no, come here these are like little this may sound a little spooky but it's not spooky you can regard a thought almost as an entity not a physical entity but as an energetic entity and that lives there it has a lifespan and some thoughts persist for a long time and certain thought patterns are also entities that can shift, take on one form and then another form and another form so you have every thought is a little entity or energy field it wants to it wants your identification with it it wants to draw all your attention in because the more attention drawn in the more it grows it wants to grow like everything it doesn't want to disappear so it's for you to know when this happens who am I?

you are are you this voice or that voice? no, you are aware of the voice all these voices and that is the place where you go so that from that place of aware presence the voices are no longer disturbing you you recognize them as only a voice this is not important whether you go this way or that way or whether something is going to work out or something is not going to work out you don't know that your responsibility is to be present which means to disidentify from the voices and my first recommendation is when these conflicting voices come trying to figure out whether something is going to work out or not work out you don't know and the voice doesn't know it's just pretending to know one voice pretends to know that it's not going to work out the other one pretends to know that it is going to work out they don't know laughter so once you know that they don't know laughter then you don't place so much importance on these voices they are just like people around you let's imagine that each voice is a person one person stands on your left and tells you something the other person stands on your right and tells you something but they are just ignorant they are just trying to come up with something so if these people were around you would say go away laughter I don't need to listen to this all I need is to embrace the only thing I ever have in my life which is this moment I need to honor and give my fullest attention to this moment and if I honor and give my fullest attention to this moment rather than to this voice that does that and the other voice that does that then I can be sure that things are going to work out now one way or another so if there is a new relationship that you go into of course it's going to work out either you'll stay together and you'll be happy for a while or you won't

[Speaker 1] (3:44:23 - 3:48:04)
but even if you don't you have learned something you have learned that certain patterns don't work or certain humans that come into your life may not everything is a lesson in that sense there is no failure everything works because everything is something you grow in consciousness and to figure out for example people ask what am I supposed to do in life I still don't know what is my real life mission what am I supposed to do so and sometimes they become paralyzed because there are so many possibilities and I just can't make up my mind which way am I going to go this way or that way and then you sit there for a long time I could go that way and then the mind brings up more thoughts but if I go that way then those things may happen no I better try that way but if you just become present then rather than looking for an answer through the movement of thought, there is never any real answer that you arrive at through the movement of thought, you have to become present first then at some point a thought may come that has a different energy field to it a thought that you feel yes that is it's no longer a thought maybe, maybe not there is a certain realization that comes that may finally take the form of a thought when I was living in Europe in England one morning I woke up and I felt for some reason I have to leave didn't know why but the thought was so strong and it never went away there wasn't another thought that said no maybe I should stay that thought came out of presence so the question is what really matters here is realizing that you are not this voice or that voice you are something deeper you are the awareness or the presence and the awareness or the presence recognizes the voice as just a voice in the head doesn't believe it's absolutely right and sees it's relatively unimportant who am I is a vital question and ask yourself that and that will drive you deeper who am I you are the presence but you can only realize that for yourself one recommendation I have when these voices start up again consciously choose not to follow that voice or that voice but to place your attention into the inner energy field of your body that frees you from the otherwise crazy self talk in the head it's crazy that self talk it's nothing personal it's a human thing almost everybody has it but it's crazy especially when there is no aware presence underneath it or you don't know if there is but you haven't discovered it so when you get beginning of when confusion arises in your mind go realize there is no answer there place attention have you been able to do that placing attention into the inner energy field of the body

that's why sometimes I know for sure like you said but then especially recently this argument started I don't know why now so it's very and the thing is but I don't know I have to give this up but I have this desire to know also which is a bit annoying yes

very good thank you very honest many humans have that also yes it is annoying but you have to be on the one hand of course on one level you want to know it's understandable and there is a place for that but there is another dimension where you need to become comfortable with not knowing that's the being dimension then in the doing dimension yes sometimes you need to figure things out especially on the practical level of life on the practical level of life you can't figure out on that level what is my destiny who am I those things you cannot figure out on that level where you figure things out mentally there you have to go into a place of not knowing that's the being dimension don't move only in the dimension of trying to figure things out about your life about situations you are in about other people there is a place for figuring things out but a more important place is to embrace the state of not knowing which of course implies the state of not thinking where there is simply an aware presence and there is a deeper knowing there that has nothing to do with working anything out mentally that's the place of wisdom so you need to be able to operate on the human level which is the level of figuring things out mentally of course there are situations when you need that at work etc but you also need to have access to the deeper dimension that's the most vital thing in a human life to have found that dimension within and that is not operate through figuring anything out mentally it's actually the opposite of that it's relinquishing thought and that's almost frightening to the human self that relies on thought that has built up an identity based on thought it's sometimes frightening and it doesn't want to let you go there because it believes if you're not constantly trying to work out what your life is all about and figure things out mentally it believes that your life is going to collapse even in the night you wake up in the middle of the night and have to worry about your problems and there's an underlying assumption if I don't worry about my problems I'm not taking responsibility for my life and things are going to collapse around me of course the opposite is true so you are creating a lot of unnecessary turmoil in your life and a lot of unnecessary unhappiness because 90% of human unhappiness arises not because of situations around them but because of what your mind is saying about situations in your life so the unhappiness is caused by certain stories in your mind not the situation that was already discovered 2000 years ago by certain philosophers in ancient Greece it's not and so a lot of unnecessary suffering arises there through the human mind the two dimensions of life you inhabit the human as I said before somewhere you are a human being I like that expression in English in a way the English language does not have a word that includes men and women you can use human as a noun but the English language in the past you would always read about man and you were supposed to mentally include women in that but it doesn't sound right the destiny of man well what about the destiny of woman in the past it was supposed to include women but we don't do that anymore so we have human being and I love that because that shows the two dimensions of who you are the human dimension which is the mental the working out, the physical form and the being dimension which is the formless the stillness the presence the two come together so your challenge is to take your attention away from the mind don't try to figure out not even try to figure out how you can get rid of the voices there is more voices suggesting how to get rid of the voices so just easy step but it needs a minimum of awareness when the voices start up again that you don't want that you have to have a minimum of awareness so that you are not immediately totally drawn into the thoughts, the voices and then you realize it's pointless I don't want it and obviously it is especially if it happens in the middle of the night what can I possibly what point could it possibly be in worrying about anything in the middle of the night so you don't want it, you don't need it it's actually even harmful so I'm getting out of there I'm out of here and you place attention start with the hands feel the energy in your hands and immediately you are taking attention away from thinking and there it is the hands feel alive do the arms feel alive too and you don't even need to comment on that you just feel it and then the rest of the body there is a field of aliveness that's actually so much more pleasant than thinking and that's where you go and then it becomes an anchor for not thinking and that is the whole body is participating in the arising of the state of awareness one could almost say every cell is becoming conscious it's participating in the process of becoming conscious you can feel the aliveness in every cell of the body so you don't just become conscious with your head the presence the state of presence involves the entire body become conscious and it's beautiful and you are out of the head quickly, easily you just need to be aware that thoughts will try after a minute or two or three thoughts will try one thought will try and again, try to tell you this is very important and you should think about this so you need to be recognized that and say ok, I let you go you don't fight it you don't fight a thought go away, I don't want you that's another thought they are like clouds that drift past but you are the sky and this is the sky the inner space you are the sky and the clouds are fine let them pass you don't have to go with every cloud that goes there and the more you follow the cloud the bigger the cloud gets and then another one no, no, come here get out of your mind in other words, that's my answer this mind made sense of self is also much more focused on the negative than the positive to be free you awaken to who you are beyond your history and your life situation now here we have another question, another person who is dissatisfied for another reason I'm on a path of awakening but my deep loneliness at not having a life partner is an obstacle to my spiritual development I get deeply depressed though I do my best to stay present in the now instead of dwelling on my longing what advice could you offer?

okay well I won't say internet dating there is a part in every person the form the form identity of who you are and the level of form tends either towards the male or the female it might not necessarily be the physical the physical male may tend more to the other so it doesn't necessarily depend on the physical form but you tend to tend either towards the male or the female and therefore you're not complete because you're only one half on the level of form which is the physical form or just underneath that the psychological or emotional form and so there is a natural longing for the other polarity or completeness in a human being and you can feel that as a ah sex is only a part of that but it goes beyond sexual longing, there's more to it than that, there's also an emotional longing for the other and you can, so they go all together and there's that pull that you can feel on the level of form and when that is not satisfied then that can lead to unhappiness particularly if you have not transcended at all your identification with form if you're still totally totally identified with you as this physical form and psychological form the transcendent dimension has not come into your life at all then you will become very dissatisfied and ah depending also to some extent what culture you live in, there are traditional cultures still on our planet where it's almost, you have to find a partner and if you're not, everybody would look down on you as being a total and miserable failure in some traditional cultures, if you're not married by a certain age or you cannot give birth to children, people look down on you and despise you and you're miserable for the rest of your life if you have not fulfilled your form identity and so, and also in some traditional cultures the sense of self is very strongly bound up with whether you're a man or a woman so more so than in the west, it still persists to some extent in the west but much less so than in some traditional cultures where if you're a man in certain cultures, you are this becomes 70% of who you feel you are, your self identity is the male, you are the male and you look at every woman as a female, you can't relate to a woman as a human being, you are the male and she is the female and she of course is not your equal and the woman is totally identified with being the female form and behaves according to that kind of collective conditioning so depending on where it is I won't act it out but here in the west it's a little easier to step out of those collective expectations, it is more acceptable in the west to say my choice is not to get married and you can even say my choice is not to have children and people say okay so there's a bit more freedom there and yet the longing for the other on the form level is still there, emotional sexual the essence is to be able to transcend who you are on the level of form whether or not you find a partner that meets that longing or whether you go from one partner to another and another or you find one life partner with whom you are for the rest of your life that is secondary really because even if you have a partner if you have not gone deeper and encountered the transcendent dimension to who you are beyond the form identity of you as the male or the female or whatever the nationality or the particular status in society whatever makes up your form identity in addition to gender if you haven't gone beyond that then even the relationships yes you might have found your partner but you won't be satisfied in the relationship in the absence of the transcendent dimension, the spiritual dimension you may come to some kind of compromise living together somehow, managing to stay together but you'll be actually you have a longing to get out so the people who are who are outside the relationships have a longing to get in or marriage and those who are in have a longing to get out so the young girl or man late teens early twenties they want to get into the cage and those who are in the cage want to get out of the cage so it is quite possible to notice the sense of in the absence of a partner it is quite possible to notice a certain sense of lack on the level of form and yet have a lot of spaciousness around that sense of lack yes I can feel that there is a longing but the longing does not consume you, the longing has not taken possession of you and making you into an unhappy person a totally unfulfilled and bitter person perhaps no, the longing is there but the longing that arises from your particular form of you exists within a spaciousness because that is the transcendent dimension and who you are is not the unfulfilled longing who you are is the presence or the stillness around it that is the shift so the longing may persist but you can live with it however if you are no longer trapped in the longing it is also quite possible that a change will come into your life particularly if the intense neediness goes I need somebody and then everybody you meet can feel the neediness when you have given somebody a phone number, you have just met and then you are waiting for them to call and they they are less likely to call when the neediness is there they are more likely to call when a certain spaciousness is there I'd love you to call, I'd love this person to call me but he may or she may or may not and there is again a spaciousness around it so of course you can take action towards meeting somebody I don't know whether the questioner has taken any action and actually gone to places perhaps where one meets people not necessarily night clubs we might not meet the most conscious people in bars but there are other places one can go to where you meet people and even the internet, why not this is the way many people lead that way but even there if you haven't gone beyond the absolute neediness of needing somebody then it's less likely to work out for you but if you have that sense of inner some inner spaciousness around the longing then the way in which you approach others changes without that absolute that pull so that's my suggestion then is see if you can on the outer level see how and where you could meet people and explore perhaps you will find somebody here or there to realize that the transcendence is the most vital thing does not exclude the possibility of taking action on an outer level of course that is always secondary but why not and maybe you find a good website where you meet conscious, is there such a thing conscious dating if there isn't maybe it's a business idea conscious dating of course the difficulty is a person who thinks of themselves as conscious may be deluded so find that place where the polarities actually don't are not there anymore the being, the I am-ness that's deeper than the form and go there as much as you can it may not totally free you of the longing but that's okay the longing will just become a thing that's no longer overwhelming and then if you take action and see what happens this mind made sense of self is also much more focused on the negative than the positive to be free you awaken to who you are beyond your history and your life situation

holy wow hi my name is Alexis I wanted to ask you a question last year I went to your retreat at Omega so I guess I've been like hanging on to this question first of all your book, Power of Now saved my life so thank you I was planning on committing suicide until I read it I have a severe mental illness, type 1 bipolar disorder I've suffered from it since I was 15 and I've only just started getting treatment so I'm medicated now I guess and even though suffering from bipolar unmedicated was hellish there was a certain component of presence to it in its own way, just that intensity of emotion and feeling all the time I've just barely been struggling since being on medication with accessing that same abruptness of being and I know that I don't really have a choice because otherwise I'll be hallucinating and things I was wondering if you might offer any insight

[Speaker 1] (4:13:29 - 4:13:40)
when did you so the Power of Now helped you greatly when you read it and then you were free of medication for quite a while

[Speaker 7] (4:13:41 - 4:13:47)
I guess I was untreated for like 7 years

[Speaker 1] (4:13:48 - 4:13:51)
and then the point was reached where you did need it

[Speaker 7] (4:13:51 - 4:13:56)
no, no, then I when I did need it or didn't need it

[Speaker 1] (4:13:56 - 4:13:58)
yes, how long have you been on medication

[Speaker 7] (4:13:59 - 4:14:02)
only a few months actually, I guess coming up on a year

[Speaker 1] (4:14:02 - 4:14:06)
what was the reason for going on medication

[Speaker 7] (4:14:08 - 4:14:18)
I fell in love and I realized that I couldn't be sick and also be present for my partner

[Speaker 1] (4:14:26 - 4:14:30)
so bipolar is what your condition

[Speaker 7] (4:14:30 - 4:14:31)
yes, type 1 bipolar

[Speaker 1] (4:14:33 - 4:15:00)
I've only had some contact with perhaps milder cases, I don't know of bipolar disorder often can you explain just very briefly maybe in just a couple of sentences what exactly you experience when the condition arises

[Speaker 7] (4:15:01 - 4:15:30)
so sufferers of bipolar usually experience two different types of phases manic phase and a depressive phase people often confuse it with a multiple personality disorder but it's actually quite different you're the same person but just sometimes you can't move or get out of bed or do anything and sometimes you can't sleep for days on end and you are seeing things that aren't there and hallucinating and running around

[Speaker 1] (4:15:30 - 4:15:34)
you do strange things yes

[Speaker 7] (4:15:37 - 4:15:59)
when you're in one state you can't ever remember the other so when you are depressed it seems like you're going to feel that way forever but then it could be two days from then you are back up and manic there are many kinds of bipolar disorder but I suffer from a rapid cycle type which means that I have like four to six times more cycles than the average

with the milder forms of bipolar it's sometimes possible for people to remain aware in both the cycles when they come so that you don't get taken over completely by the cycles and awareness remains so that you're not totally identified with the energy that arises I don't know how is the are you able to be present with the medication

[Speaker 7] (4:16:36 - 4:17:03)
yeah I think that it provides me it gives me a bit more space to reflect on when I am actually in a cycle but it's very dulling so being present doesn't have that sort of joy it takes much longer to look at something I mean I used to be able to just like sit next to trees and have conversations with them and it was wonderful I mean I'm getting used to it but it's more difficult

yes

[Speaker 1] (4:17:06 - 4:17:08)
well do you have a meditation practice

[Speaker 7] (4:17:09 - 4:17:10)
I try

[Speaker 1] (4:17:11 - 4:18:36)
yeah I think it would be good for you to have a practice of formal meditation every day that could eventually replace the medication but you have to be very careful of course and get some professional help hopefully a physician who has some awareness of the other, the deeper dimension who can help you to gradually get off medication and I believe that a structured meditation which is not for everybody I don't necessarily recommend structured meditation for everybody it's a wonderful thing for those who feel compelled who feel they want to do it but I think for you it is a necessity and that could provide the support in consciousness that you need to eventually become free of medication what type of meditation you may have to try out one or two meditation methods I don't know if you already have done that perhaps transcendental meditation might be good for you

ok

[Speaker 1] (4:18:40 - 4:18:54)
so how do you feel right now? a lot better are you at any particular cycle of now or are you in a neutral space now?

[Speaker 7] (4:18:55 - 4:18:59)
no I am actually in one of my longest lasting neutral phases ever

[Speaker 17] (4:18:59 - 4:19:01)
oh well

[Speaker 1] (4:19:09 - 4:20:48)
of course in the neutral phase then the real you shines through as it does right now and that's wonderful so I believe being here also has helped because here but just by having been here presence power has grown and that's really what you need because if presence power in you so to speak is strong enough it can be the place in which you can be anchored when these two movements come you need a deep anchor within yourself because these two the two movements have an enormous pull as you know and without the anchor there is no hope they pull you every time this way or that way but the presence should become strong enough in you and maybe very soon for you to not need the medication anymore but you don't do it always do it with guidance don't just go off and you may be surprised how deep your presence already is so I do hope we'll have another retreat in a years time or so and you will come back and let us know how you're doing

[Speaker 7] (4:20:48 - 4:20:51)
that would be amazing thank you so much

[Speaker 1] (4:21:05 - 4:21:23)
this mind made sense of self is also much more focused on the negative than the positive to be free you awaken to who you are beyond your history and your life situation

[Speaker 15] (4:21:57 - 4:22:00)
I feel like I don't have a life

[Speaker 4] (4:22:00 - 4:23:01)
that belongs to me I feel caught in this web and every time I think about getting a part time job or something like that I still have student loans to pay for I've got a partner, she's got two kids and it seems like I can't lower my income so I tried presence I've got the CD that you made, Resist Nothing every time 12 noon, 12 30 Sunday comes this huge pain body comes over me and says you better get some rest because tomorrow you're going to be working all day long and you don't have the energy for it and that's just how it feels, even if I try to put presence to it, it feels like a monster and everything else that happens in my life, it seems it's much easier to put presence to but this is like hugely overwhelming

[Speaker 3] (4:23:02 - 4:23:08)
when you say it's easy to put presence to some things what are those some things that you can put presence to?

[Speaker 4] (4:23:09 - 4:23:47)
Just little things that happen like some of the teachings that I've learned like looking at other people and myself as works in progress, there are certain things that people are going to do in life that may be upsetting but you understand that whatever their level of consciousness is at that time then that's how they're acting so not to take things quite as personally I look at my past and look at mistakes I've made and say if I wouldn't do the same thing again then I've grown so I can have more compassion on myself and I can have more compassion on things I don't understand right now and what exactly feels overwhelming for you?

[Speaker 3] (4:23:48 - 4:23:51)

[Speaker 4] (4:23:51 - 4:25:00)
because my body's tired and when I have to work for all day long stressful kinds of situations and things, even if it was a job that wasn't quite as stressful it seems like my body's exhausted and I can't get rest okay, and what are your thoughts that go along with it? I shouldn't be that's one of the thoughts this life doesn't feel like my life it shouldn't be like this I should figure out a way so that I can live in a way that's better for me I feel like even things that have to do with the political climate that I don't like very much I wish I lived in a country that was more progressive where do you live? in the United States laughter laughter applause applause applause where in the United States?

[Speaker 3] (4:25:00 - 4:28:29)
I live in a progressive city but but it's maybe progressing too fast for you, huh? you know, I know the feeling things can feel overwhelming and that's and it starts to feel overwhelming when those kind of thoughts come in of that resistance to what is actually happening and then how do we take care of ourselves it's actually a good sign when you come to that point of feeling overwhelming the this came to me actually at a time where I was actually feeling really overwhelmed and I feel like as if I was going to just fall apart and that nursery rhyme Humpty Dumpty sat on a wall Humpty Dumpty had a great fall all the king's horses and all the king's men couldn't put Humpty together again and when that verse came into my head I realized oh my god I've been searching outside of myself all my life to try to fix me inside now I've come to this spiritual teaching and am I actually going to now live that spiritual teaching so in other words who's going to put Humpty Dumpty together again but you not you as the egoic sense of self not you as you know yourself as through the thinking mind but that stillness, that awareness that consciousness will put you back together again and will give you the tools that you need and not only the tools but the right action will follow where you say you have say for example you've got the two kids coming up to you and then you go not now you know it's like not now and there's a not now of meaning it or do you have a not now where you just don't quite know where your boundaries are and you kind of think you have to take care of everybody else first when really it's like the you're on a plane and you know the plane's going down and the little things drop down what are they called again the oxygen mask drop down and the advice is you put your own mask on first before you help your children and often times and I know yesterday when there was that questioner who came up who said she just didn't know who she was anymore after having her two kids and taking care of her two kids and I understand that I have a child I didn't have two but I have one and it's like this precious little soul and you just feel this big responsibility and it was all transferring everything over and then not really taking care of myself first and when you don't take care of yourself first then you do end up coming to that point of breaking down of feeling that overwhelm so when you feel that overwhelm what are some of the tools that can help you get back on track do you have yeah okay

coming here is one of them I'm trying I'm going to physical therapy to get back being able to run again that used to be an outlet for me running and age group triathlons and things like that but once I stopped doing that then I really don't have much of an outlet now except for

[Speaker 3] (4:28:48 - 4:28:49)
do you do any meditation

[Speaker 4] (4:28:50 - 4:28:54)
I don't do much sitting meditation I try to do more mindfulness

[Speaker 3] (4:28:55 - 4:29:02)
what is what does that look like when you say you try to do more mindfulness so when you're doing you are being

[Speaker 4] (4:29:02 - 4:29:17)
mindful when I'm doing things I try to pay attention more like the example the washing the hands just try to be more present smelling so you know feeling the warm water try to be more mindful walking things like that

[Speaker 3] (4:29:18 - 4:29:23)
and then when you say your body just feels so tired do you then rest

[Speaker 4] (4:29:24 - 4:29:51)
yeah a lot of times I do and that's causes strain with the family because I a lot of times I don't go downstairs I stay up in the room where it's quiet and sometimes the kids can be noisy and that just adds to my stress level so I go upstairs I shut the blinds sometimes shut the door and read or I'll watch a show I'll watch the Eckhart TV things like that

okay so forgive me here but I'm failing to see when you say that you're overwhelmed and you will take a rest you will lie down you will relax so in that period of time are you truly relaxing or are you

[Speaker 4] (4:30:10 - 4:30:26)
thinking probably both I mean there are times when my mind is going on different things but I'm an introvert too so I like the quiet yeah

[Speaker 3] (4:30:27 - 4:31:31)
so do I so when you relax it needs to be a full relaxation that will recharge you that will feed you that stillness that in that relaxed awareness and being still will recharge you is the healer will bring healing to you so become aware of the kinds of thoughts that you have but don't you can be aware of them but don't believe them stop believing in those thoughts when you say that you like the quiet and you kind of go upstairs and then it's causing stress in your relationship because the children or your partner isn't wanting you to do this so is there then an argument about it

[Speaker 4] (4:31:32 - 4:32:33)
there's not much of an argument about it just little comments or something that she says sometimes because and what are those comments oh you're going upstairs again there you go again oh it's dark in here open the blinds oh it's too hot in here it's like she doesn't mind me having time alone because she knows I'm introvert but she thinks it's excessive and I would tend to agree that I spend more time than I probably would if I didn't feel so exhausted and right now I do have physical stress that's causing problems with my body like my endocrine system and stuff is off and I didn't really realize that but it's distress coming from too much stress in my life and my day which I didn't even know was happening, I thought I was doing good

just stop for a second because this is what I'm seeing and this is what I'm hearing you're saying that you're stressed, you're saying that your body is tired but yet at the same time if you can see yourself and see that your mind is actually racing a mile a minute it's going and going so can you right now, because all it takes is the present moment when you're starting to feel stressed and overwhelmed, can you in this instant quiet your mind and just be still

[Speaker 4] (4:33:16 - 4:33:17)
I can sometimes

[Speaker 3] (4:33:17 - 4:35:16)
can you do it right now this is what I meant, I'd like you to do it right now, standing there finding that inner stillness finding your breath feeling that inner body and if thoughts arise, you notice them but you choose not to follow them bring your attention your focus right down into your breath into this room where you hear sounds you're aware of the sounds you're aware of the breath you're aware of sensations in the body you're aware of thoughts step out of that awareness of form and step into the awareness of awareness itself who or what is aware it's not a thing you can sense it you can feel it and breathe and from this place what are you afraid of

maybe being alone

[Speaker 3] (4:35:23 - 4:35:25)
being alone

[Speaker 4] (4:35:26 - 4:35:28)
it's the first thing that came to my mind

[Speaker 3] (4:35:28 - 4:36:21)
right, and yet you say that you like to spend a lot of time alone so do you see the conflict that's inside you you have on one hand you're saying to yourself I want to be alone but in the other hand you are afraid to be alone that causes stress a lot of stress, it's a pull you're being pulled in two directions so I invite you to either because I'm not quite sure whether it's that you're afraid to be alone or that you're actually afraid of people

[Speaker 4] (4:36:24 - 4:36:26)
probably non-acceptance

[Speaker 3] (4:36:27 - 4:36:28)
non-acceptance of people

[Speaker 4] (4:36:28 - 4:36:30)
people not accepting me

[Speaker 3] (4:36:30 - 4:36:36)
people not accepting you so if we turn that around you don't really accept yourself

[Speaker 4] (4:36:36 - 4:36:38)
I accept myself

[Speaker 3] (4:36:38 - 4:36:39)
do you?

[Speaker 4] (4:36:39 - 4:36:40)
yeah, I love myself

[Speaker 3] (4:36:40 - 4:36:45)
ah, ok but you just don't like other people

[Speaker 4] (4:36:45 - 4:36:50)
well I don't like I don't like it when other people are doing things that irritate me

[Speaker 3] (4:36:52 - 4:36:55)
well a lot of people are going to be can irritate

[Speaker 4] (4:36:55 - 4:36:57)
yeah, that's, I mean

[Speaker 3] (4:36:57 - 4:37:02)
so the judgment is that you're kind of disturbing me

[Speaker 4] (4:37:04 - 4:37:16)
yeah, if just the example of the noise and stuff in the house I don't like, I like to go away from that I don't dislike them, but I dislike the

[Speaker 3] (4:37:16 - 4:37:21)
so are you a spontaneous person? would you say?

[Speaker 4] (4:37:22 - 4:37:48)
sometimes yeah but not much when it comes to planning you know, I'd rather it just depends what I feel like at any given time I don't really like to make plans and then that day I don't really feel like it so I like to wait until it's time to do something and then say let's go do it

[Speaker 3] (4:37:51 - 4:38:33)
so there's a resistance to life because children are often times noisy and often times spontaneous and they just live in the moment and you're a meditator who when the kids come in the door you may not say this outwardly but inside it's like go away, stop it can't you see I'm meditating? now I could be wrong but my guess is is that you really don't accept yourself

[Speaker 4] (4:38:37 - 4:39:19)
I don't know maybe that's true but I feel like I do like I don't know when I'm around here I feel fine it's just when I'm I guess the highly sensitive person book by Aline something I forgot her name but a lot of that is the way that I am I'm more quiet I like quiet environments and things like that and when I'm there I'm fine it's just when I'm around like type A kind of people who are like really aggressive and loud and things it causes a certain degree of discomfort like with me

[Speaker 3] (4:39:21 - 4:39:25)
was there somebody aggressive in your family?

[Speaker 4] (4:39:27 - 4:39:50)
well not in a mean way aggressive but yeah my well I know this is being recorded but but there are people who are more pushy I guess you could say and they won't stop talking I find that when I'm

[Speaker 3] (4:39:50 - 4:39:57)
so you're not able to sort of put up your boundaries and just sort of say well I guess it's enough for me and somehow excuse yourself

[Speaker 4] (4:39:57 - 4:39:58)
I do that

[Speaker 3] (4:39:58 - 4:39:59)
you do that

[Speaker 4] (4:39:59 - 4:40:01)
yeah but it's just

[Speaker 3] (4:40:01 - 4:40:04)
I'm failing to see the problem then if you do all those things

[Speaker 4] (4:40:06 - 4:40:33)
well it's for an example like my partner's she has like groups like friends and stuff that go and I often I'm there but the conversation I like conversation involving like feelings and talking about things like that I don't like small talk very much so I like the way that I am but it presents a problem when it comes to people who aren't that way

[Speaker 3] (4:40:34 - 4:40:49)
what's the problem though? I don't understand what the problem is the only problem would be if you think there is a problem if you think that the other person is I don't know thinking that you're not enjoyable or something

[Speaker 4] (4:40:49 - 4:40:55)
it feels like they're not interested in what I'm saying if I'm talking about these kinds of things

[Speaker 3] (4:40:55 - 4:40:58)
you really don't accept yourself then

[Speaker 4] (4:40:58 - 4:41:01)
I love myself I just don't like being around certain

[Speaker 3] (4:41:01 - 4:41:08)
but you don't accept the fact that you're just not a small talk person

[Speaker 4] (4:41:08 - 4:41:27)
yeah I just don't put myself in those situations where I'm not comfortable and the other people maybe are not interested in what I'm saying either like I know myself enough to know that it's uncomfortable so I don't put myself

[Speaker 3] (4:41:27 - 4:43:19)
when I'm hearing you speak this is what I see instead of this focus right down into the situation okay and that fear of being alone it's like going outside of yourself and seeing oh well they won't like me because I'm you know not somebody who does small talk they won't like me because I want to spend time alone so there's it's like I see you bouncing around inside yourself bouncing here, bouncing there and not really getting down to the just the crux of it, the point if you are really truly exhausted and overwhelmed and tired and your body is tired then just let it go and rest be still rest your body but what I'm hearing you, you say it but then you're not really doing anything really for yourself I mean you will go and rest but then your mind is going but can you just fully be overwhelmed fall apart like humpty dumpty let yourself completely fall apart, what will happen, do you think something will happen if you fall apart are you afraid of falling apart

[Speaker 4] (4:43:19 - 4:43:22)
no at this point I really want to fall apart

great, because that's the best place to be is to fall apart and then from there so for me it was like that humpty dumpty sort of first came in, I let myself just completely go and then I realized I'm the only one and not me as the ego but I'm the only one that can now build myself, put myself back together again, and how will I put myself back together again and let that question remain and sit in you, because it's not going to come through most of the time it doesn't come through instantly and it'll come through maybe as a thought form but it will gradually it's like gradually putting yourself back together again now maybe the mind might come in and say but I want to get put back together again right now instantly, and that can sometimes take years maybe months, or maybe weeks you can't really put a time frame on the evolving the evolution the unfolding of your true nature into your true self so that you can live in this world be completely okay if you truly are a person who really wants to be alone, it would be okay if you really are a person that says I don't want the small talk but you can be in small talk and you can just be silent you can be there as this witnessing presence as this alive being and then maybe when you sit there, instead of having these thoughts of which are the egoic sense of self thoughts, the pain body thoughts of oh they won't like me and oh I'm sitting here and nobody's paying attention to me and oh they're talking really just frivolous things you're just enjoying yourself there's this wonderful little I don't know I think you call it I'm not sure if you call it a joke but there was this famous English writer at a cocktail party and you know everybody's making their small talk and he's just sitting there and somebody comes up to him and says are you enjoying yourself here? and he says it's the only thing that I'm enjoying here so it's like getting to that part where you just allow that awareness to come through, that consciousness to come through without it doesn't matter what other people are doing, who cares what other people are doing, in fact it's none of our business what other people are doing just be there as this witnessing consciousness and as you're there as a witnessing consciousness you will either be there and sit there and enjoy yourself you may not enjoy what's going on but you're enjoying yourself because maybe you have you know a partner who likes to do this so you kind of compromise and you kind of attend these things, but you're just there doesn't matter doesn't matter if somebody talks to you, but you'll find the more that you have less of those kind of thoughts and less of the demand on yourself and on other people of an expectation of how things should be expecting that it should not be this way, people should be more deeper, talk about more deeper things or I should be able to be alone I shouldn't have come here well if you truly want that in the awareness in that presence you will either find yourself moving and saying hun I'm going home you stay and enjoy yourself or you'll just surrender and just go okay I'm here but you know what, I feel the aliveness within I just feel really good I'm having a good time wow and it's not about the other it's about what is going on inside you, are you filled with these different emotions filled with these different thoughts rather than being filled with the Holy Ghost the Spirit the Holy Spirit, your Spirit that is relaxation that is a way to get over the overwhelm you're just being yourself not that head self you start identifying and seeing what those kind of thoughts are and just really going wow you don't have to pay attention to those you don't have to believe in your thoughts they're just thoughts they're just judgments, labels, concepts whatever you want to call them they're just thoughts presence consciousness is not a thought even though we use the word consciousness, we use the word stillness, we use the word Buddha nature, Christ consciousness whatever you want to call it and there's this saying, a Taoist saying the Tao is not the Tao if you can name it and that's your true self that's the self that has that peace and that joy that is beyond all understanding beyond all activity no matter what is happening in your world so let yourself collapse and fall to pieces and then create yourself, you're recreating yourself but not you as the entity the old entity it's you as consciousness so always the practice of returning back to that consciousness returning to that stillness okay, what's going to happen here how am I going to build myself up here and don't think about it you post the question and it will be answered but not on your time on the consciousness time which is really no time it's just this moment what do I need to do for this moment how am I going to build myself up in this moment feel, oh gosh, I'm thirsty simple sip of water maybe that's what you're needing mmm ah, wonderful oh, my body's really tired I think I'll go and have a nap ah, lay down just feel the body, maybe even sleep maybe not, you're just feeling the body the kids come in ah, hey oh, hi sweetheart so I'll give you a hug, but you know what I need to rest right now I'll be down in maybe 10-15 minutes and just fully rest so that when you're resting you're fully resting when you're with your children, you're fully with your children but knowing the limits because there are limitations and maybe your limitation's a little shorter than some people in being able to be with people that's not a problem it's actually okay so maybe you take shorter moments with them and then take a break and just be with yourself and rejuvenate fully by truly being present let go of those thoughts that something should be different than what it is does that make sense?

[Speaker 4] (4:51:30 - 4:51:43)
yes, it makes sense and just a quick question when 12 noon comes or 12.30 comes on Sunday I feel this overwhelm the same thing, go into presence and say, okay, I'm going to feel whatever this is

[Speaker 3] (4:51:43 - 4:52:00)
yeah, because that thought, when you say you're even starting to create it right now and that is, you're thinking you're going into the future and that future hasn't even happened yet you don't even know what Sunday's going to be like you may not even feel overwhelmed on Sunday, but you're already predicting that you will

[Speaker 4] (4:52:00 - 4:52:03)
I want to ask, well, I have somebody who can help me

[Speaker 3] (4:52:05 - 4:57:42)
so stop that mind stop that anticipation stop going into the future and be in the present moment when the present moment is here if you're overwhelmed take care of it present moment's here maybe you're feeling wonderful great maybe you want to be with people hey, kids, let's go out be present because only in the present moment right action follows so, Sunday isn't here drop Sunday completely and when it comes who knows who knows but what we if we keep on thinking that we will create that situation again and again and again it's like I mentioned it might have been actually in the morning group maybe it was yesterday where or maybe it was even here, I don't remember where you can have this profound meditation and I've done this many times myself where I'm sitting, doing a meditation and I'm like, oh my god, this is so profound I had this great meditation and then comes, you know, the next day and you do your ritual of your meditation and you're wanting that same profound meditation we're holding on to yesterday's meditation instead of being in the present moment, in the aliveness of now where maybe you'll have a more profound meditation maybe not but there's no attachment to the forms of this moment all forms come and go but the more that we hang on the more that we contract the more that we have expectations that our life should be going a certain way and the more that we begin to feel overwhelmed because life is not matching our thought about how it should be so now I'm seeing a little bit more focus and clarity in knowing what it is that's going to that you're going to have to do and that is coming into the present moment and stillness instead of being here or there and looking at that, thinking about that worrying about this going into the future over here right here right now I think it was I forget the woman's name who wrote the Course in Miracles what was your name again?

Right, so I believe she had a dream where she dreamed that there was this book and she could see into the future or see back into the past and she was able she had a choice, she could go into the future or go into the back past she looked at it and then she said no, I just want this moment right now and then the Course in Miracles came through her channeled the Course in Miracles all you need is right now cut through time just this moment how am I feeling this moment? what am I sensing this moment?

am I lost in thoughts? am I lost in emotions? and if you are even aware that you are you're not completely lost if you were completely lost you wouldn't even be aware, you would just be in your emotions in your mind, thinking and thinking and following your thoughts everywhere and going everywhere with it but you cut through that and then you have that choice and usually it's a very short window of opportunity when you choose choose to become be present or choose to be again, lost in thought or emotions or in the pain body but we have that choice and as awareness grows that choice is so clear to us and you might maybe sometimes choose to go into your pain body choose the thoughts, choose the emotion but eventually you'll come back to this falling apart place, this place of overwhelm, and then when it gets too great you realize, okay I gotta come back to the present moment, because this is the saving grace, is the present moment this is where you can be rejuvenated and filled with that spirit within you it's right here and right now the only moment that exists as reality is right now so be with that, work with that I know that you're going to succeed

you can have an agreement with whoever you live with and a mutual agreement if you see me falling asleep spiritually speaking, in other words becoming unconscious please let me know I will be thankful at least I'm telling you that now I won't now the person who has gone unconscious, when you first address the unconsciousness, it depends how far your partner has already gone down the rabbit hole so if he or she hasn't gone down too far he or she will still hear you when you ask, have you perhaps become unconscious are you still awake, but if he or she and then says, oh thank you well thank you, but if he or she has gone further down the rabbit hole then when you say those words they won't hear you anymore because only the unconsciousness the unconscious entity which may be associated with the pain body, the unconscious entity will be listening to you the emotional field the mental emotional pattern will have taken over that human being completely like like some horror movie completely taken over by whatever you want to call it don't want to put any strange images in your mind, you can find them on the internet so it's been taken over by this strange entity and then of course your partner won't hear you because he or she will be completely asleep and it's possible then that the entity will talk back at you and won't be happy but then it's your your next task then is not to react to the entity which is an energy field that has taken over that human being because if you react you give it more energy now that's a non-reaction

however does not mean that you close the shutters around you, metaphorically speaking

[Speaker 11] (5:00:46 - 5:00:54)
laughter laughter laughter and

[Speaker 1] (5:00:54 - 5:00:59)
then you say nothing can touch me anymore, I'm safe behind these shutters

[Speaker 17] (5:01:00 - 5:01:00)
laughter

[Speaker 1] (5:01:03 - 5:01:08)
and you can talk to the entity and say whatever you say, I don't care

[Speaker 17] (5:01:08 - 5:01:10)
laughter laughter

[Speaker 1] (5:01:12 - 5:03:07)
that's not it that's not because you separate yourself also from the possibility of staying in contact with who is truly there that human being so don't use the shutters what does work is first of all to accept that this is what has just happened that this human being right now is in that particular state of deep unconsciousness, this is what is so you might as well accept it because even if you don't it won't make any difference so say yes to the present moment this is the dictum I often repeat say yes to the present moment no matter what form it takes and it may take the form of an unconscious human being right there in front of you so you and you recognize what has happened you don't confuse this entity that temporarily has taken over your beautiful partner laughter you don't confuse that with who your beautiful partner, beautiful outside or inside or both certainly beautiful inside if you get to their real being you don't confuse who that real being is so you recognize what has happened and that makes it easier for you not to be in a state of reactivity to that unconscious the unconsciousness and the entity and thereby you don't strengthen it

[Speaker 15] (5:04:18 - 5:04:19)
Hi Eckhart

[Speaker 12] (5:04:19 - 5:04:40)
my question is when I try to maintain presence in my everyday life I'm aware that my subconscious need for superiority sabotages me pretty regularly and it happens very often so I wonder what suggestions you have

[Speaker 1] (5:04:43 - 5:04:49)
it would be nice for us to have one or two examples of how that

[Speaker 2] (5:04:49 - 5:04:51)
looks laughter

[Speaker 12] (5:04:51 - 5:05:37)
I was afraid you would ask that well typically when like this morning someone approached me and they were anxious and worried and off balance and I thought it's sort of an automatic thing sort of why don't you get your act together rather than just having a positive exchange and then I notice of course when I'm anxious or off balance I want everybody to be kind and understanding so it's I judge that as not a good thing I would like to be more automatically kind laughter laughter laughter

[Speaker 1] (5:05:39 - 5:05:41)
one more example perhaps

[Speaker 12] (5:05:41 - 5:06:24)
one more ok when my question was chosen and I was invited to be here I was really excited about that and it was tempting to think and it was kind of my first thought that oh isn't this wonderful I have this great question but laughter laughter you know I quickly realized that in reality that's it might be a pertinent question but it's not about me and it's not it doesn't mean that I'm great laughter it seems like a constant fight for me yeah

well of course it's very normal that kind of mind activity it's just as awareness arises it seems to be more of a problem than it would be for a normally unconscious person now the good thing is that the awareness is there of it if you were totally unconscious that is identified with those thought patterns you wouldn't even know it because the essence of identification is you don't know it you are it you are the thought so you would then instead of feeling superior and realizing that you feel superior and then not wanting to feel superior you would just feel superior laughter and that would be really unconscious and that would be quite normal now as because awareness arises it's a good thing you're aware of certain mind patterns subtle things where you feel superior or special it's another word for it that specialness because specialness doesn't superior always implies better than specialness could also be I'm much worse off than you that's why I'm so special my problems are much bigger than yours don't tell me about your problems let me tell you about mine or as my dad used to say when people said I have a headache or whatever you have a headache? I've had a headache for weeks laughter that's not so much superiority but well in a way it is, it's specialness I'm more special than you because I have more headaches than you I must be more interesting or whatever the reasoning behind it is it's irrational of course so awareness is there which is a decisive factor it has come in, the awareness is aware of that mind pattern then however the awareness is obscured again by an additional mind pattern that says I shouldn't be having these thoughts which are more thoughts so we have three things here in operation there's the original thought pattern, harmless as it may be but there's a recognition of the thought pattern which comes from the fact that there's awareness through awareness the thought pattern is recognized but then the mind comes in again it uses the awareness the recognition that arose through awareness to construct an additional level of problems which says I shouldn't be having those thoughts, I'm not a good person anymore if I have those thoughts I'm not kind if I have those thoughts and what is that?

Thoughts so it can happen that as awareness arises which is a wonderful thing you're not totally identified with the mind pattern anymore and then the mind is so cunning that out of that recognition it creates new mind patterns and the new mind patterns say I'm not a kind person if I think that I feel bad about thinking that, I shouldn't by now I should be rid of that whatever it says so that's where you have to be careful to become aware that the mind has come in again after the awareness that is not necessary but you didn't know that, that was unconscious so the mind has little it's very cunning, you recognize the mind there and then the mind comes back in again and uses your recognition to manufacture more thought out of that

laughter laughter right

[Speaker 1] (5:10:34 - 5:10:42)
and this is why it's very good to ask that question it helps everybody so you are special

[Speaker 17] (5:10:43 - 5:10:45)
laughter thank you

[Speaker 1] (5:10:47 - 5:12:07)
but of course everybody has similar problems so we are all special laughter that's where you once you're aware of that you can then recognize that as unnecessary you don't need that it's superfluous mind activity that does nothing except strengthen your mind so and then you can simply allow the recognition to be there without the additional mental judgment of there's something wrong with you and that in itself gradually dissolves the power of the mind pattern, all you need is the awareness of what your mind is doing and gradually what your mind is doing becomes less dense, less powerful and the awareness grows so there's a shrinking of the mind pattern and a growing of the awareness the only way the mind can stop that pattern is by, as I said by coming in after the awareness and creating more thought around that so just be happy with being aware it's a mind pattern it's nothing to do with who you are you're not an unkind person you're not whatever the mind says, it's just this, that mind pattern, isn't that interesting that is, and that is in itself sufficient

[Speaker 12] (5:12:08 - 5:12:10)
great, thank you so much

[Speaker 15] (5:12:29 - 5:12:34)
if you surrender to it come to a different relationship with it

[Speaker 1] (5:12:34 - 5:12:40)
that can be the agent that awakens you into consciousness

[Speaker 5] (5:12:45 - 5:15:36)
so my question has to do with what you were just talking about about how ego death can be painful so I'll give a little background just to give context for my question so since I was little, I had spontaneous satori's that I didn't understand and ultimately it led to shame because it wasn't normal and it led to confusion about what seemed important and I have my understandings about where it came from but at any rate so having experiences of formlessness and all of that is very familiar and understanding you know, certain understanding of identification and non-identification and I don't have fear of dying physically that I'm aware of however I have a spontaneous like how the satori's came on I suppose people would say it could be Kundalini energy spontaneously usually when I'm fully asleep I will wake up and I can have this absolute unstoppable realization that I am not going to exist I'm not afraid of dying in that moment it's that existential awareness of I'm not going to be here anymore yeah so it's not about fear of death but it is about ego death I imagine and I've tried to work with it in many different ways I don't know if it's just simply being maybe more than average narcissist and don't want to die I don't know if it's that or if it's just at any rate, I've talked with many spiritual teachers and gotten very different kinds of responses but mostly I want to understand how to be able to face it because it feels intolerable and it comes on unwittingly, will come up and my body starts to run, literally I wake up out of sleep and I'll run and sometimes I'll scream the scream is the only thing that gets me out of that realization I don't want that realization yeah and so growing up with both of these I would call it my agony and my ecstasy would have both so anything you can offer I'd appreciate

[Speaker 1] (5:15:38 - 5:15:54)
and as a child you had similar experiences so wanting to run is just an impulse that you want to run when this comes on you don't actually stay in bed or you get up

[Speaker 5] (5:15:54 - 5:16:05)
and run I wake up and I'm already running and screaming is the most effective way to try to get it out of my consciousness

[Speaker 1] (5:16:05 - 5:16:33)
and so the experience itself that makes you run it exists as an emotion and a thought or mostly a thought that suddenly triggers that or is it what is the thought the element of thinking you just mentioned a thought I'm not going to be here that's a thought and that is always there when this happens

[Speaker 5] (5:16:33 - 5:16:55)
yeah that's the it's like a realization sometimes when I'm almost falling asleep and I see it's coming I can direct my attention elsewhere but usually when I'm pretty sleepy it takes over and I can't stop it yeah and then it's just it's just like an epiphany so it's a thought

[Speaker 1] (5:16:56 - 5:17:03)
so it's almost as if you were experiencing little mini-deaths frequently yeah

[Speaker 5] (5:17:04 - 5:17:08)
and it's not like I'm afraid of dying right then it's nothing to do with that

[Speaker 1] (5:17:08 - 5:17:12)
but what about the panic that you feel isn't that fear

[Speaker 5] (5:17:13 - 5:17:14)
yeah it feels like terror

[Speaker 1] (5:17:14 - 5:17:16)
well that's extreme fear

[Speaker 5] (5:17:16 - 5:17:17)
yeah extreme fear

[Speaker 1] (5:17:17 - 5:17:26)
so there is fear maybe at other times you don't feel the fear but in those moments you feel it very strongly yeah

[Speaker 17] (5:17:26 - 5:17:26)
right

[Speaker 1] (5:17:32 - 5:17:38)
so it's particularly in the morning or at night time it happens when you wake up

[Speaker 5] (5:17:38 - 5:17:51)
it's night yeah I mean if I wanted to I could consciously and I have done this will it on like I can remember it I can get myself into that space just like I can get myself into satori it's the same

well I was actually going to suggest that as a practice if you can consciously bring it about because then you have a bit more power because it doesn't you're not if you can but before you do that there has to be a lot of conscious awareness for example generating a lot of conscious presence through inner body awareness for example do that for 15 minutes or so and then attempt to consciously bring it on so that you can surrender to what it is that you feel and then once you surrender to the feeling then it's no longer fearful and then it could bring about it's a relatively I don't have many people who have this particular experience in the way you describe it but it's very interesting so it's a if you can bring it as a practice do consciousness practice and then just experiment with it and see if you can bring it about consciously and because then there's more awareness in you so that you may not need to run away from it anymore and if you go into it suddenly it will lose it's frightful nature and then that is a kind of death it's like facing a monster some people have terrible nightmares where they face monsters and they cannot quite the monsters are always coming from behind and you have to run away but you can't run anymore because you can only move very slowly, you're trying to run but you can't and it's always when you face the monster it becomes transformed it's no longer a monstrous presence because facing it means consciousness is there it's only when you run away from it it remains a monster and can even get bigger so you have to consciously face it that is your monster but that monster will become transformed into something completely different when you face it consciously but in order to face it consciously you need the power of consciousness there needs to be preparation for that so that there is enough consciousness in you to face it and then you may find that it's actually a powerful spiritual experience what before what is preventing you was the fear the fear of death comes up very strongly perhaps you don't notice it the rest of your life as you said, in the rest of your life you don't have a fear of death but in those moments you have an intense fear of death because death is very close it's right there and of course it's easy to say for anybody I have no fear of death they're not facing death in that moment so it's very easy to make a statement but you face it regularly, it's there anybody else who says I don't fear death well, maybe you're right but you won't know it until you're actually looking, death is right there and then you'll know and another thing is when you experience a great loss of whatever kind, that's a kind of death too so then you'll know whether that perception is correct or not, whether you fear death this is potentially a powerful spiritual experience but I would suggest that you, through the fear the panic that arises, which is the personal self fearing its demise through that you kind of stop it every time because you have to run away from it you cannot fully go into it, but the possibility is there if there's enough presence in you enough consciousness, you can allow yourself to experience that fully without the need anymore to run away from it and then the monster becomes transformed into an enormously helpful figure so to speak, it becomes an opening, it is often the case, there's a general it's a general rule some people have one major huge obstacle in their lives, which can be many different things, it could be a very serious physical thing, disability it could be very serious, something in their emotional field, it could be a very serious external thing that dreadful family karma that they are born into, some crime that happens in their childhood around them some people have one huge dreadful thing in their lives and it is often the case that the worst thing in your life that thing that would normally be regarded as unacceptable that no human could accept, if you surrender to it, come to a different relationship with it that can be the agent that awakens you into consciousness that transforms you, that becomes the opening, your cross becomes the opening to you as a Christian almost medieval Christian term the cross so I've seen people who've had one major thing that was the most dreadful burden in their lives and that eventually became the opening and they woke up through that, and so this can be the case with you, I believe it can and I trust that next time we meet you will stand there and tell us about it and you will be perhaps awakened through it, have been awakened if not what is total awakening anyway, but awakened, so that is my advice to you

and that's all I can say

[Speaker 15] (5:24:11 - 5:24:12)
thank you

[Speaker 2] (5:24:13 - 5:24:14)
applause

[Speaker 6] (5:24:38 - 5:25:01)
this person writes in I'm often fearful about being ill, being poor, growing old, death, and other worries how do I overcome these fears in other words how do I live my life without these kinds of fears, or is that possible even

[Speaker 2] (5:25:03 - 5:25:05)
yes, that's the

[Speaker 15] (5:25:06 - 5:25:09)
question that many people have

[Speaker 2] (5:25:09 - 5:25:54)
I still remember well it's now becoming distant past for me I still remember having those fears, waking up in the middle of the night sometimes almost in a state of panic although I was in a warm bed and there was nothing wrong at that moment and yet there was a sense of panic

[Speaker 15] (5:25:55 - 5:26:02)
oh my god, what's going to happen so the fear

[Speaker 2] (5:26:04 - 5:26:24)
if you look at pay attention to how the fear the anxiety arises angst is sometimes the word they use in English it's a German word

[Speaker 1] (5:26:25 - 5:26:28)
angst is used for existential

[Speaker 2] (5:26:29 - 5:27:13)
anguish, the anguish of just being alive, which is so problematic so if you see how it arises then you will notice that it's created not by any true problem in your life but by thought it's created by the unobserved mind so there is a lack of presence

[Speaker 1] (5:27:13 - 5:27:39)
which means that certain thoughts, repetitive thoughts take you over many of those thoughts refer to possible future events nothing that's happening here and now but something

[Speaker 2] (5:27:39 - 5:28:07)
in the future and as I've often you might have heard me say that ultimately the future although we need it and it makes sense for practical purposes but in your direct experience of life

[Speaker 1] (5:28:07 - 5:28:19)
well that's an important criterion for what is real it's your direct experience of life in your direct experience of life

[Speaker 2] (5:28:19 - 5:28:34)
the future does not exist because when the future arrives it's the present moment you cannot

[Speaker 1] (5:28:34 - 5:28:39)
experience the future you can only experience the present moment

[Speaker 2] (5:28:39 - 5:28:55)
for some people that's news and then you see that ultimately the future exists as thought the future is

[Speaker 1] (5:28:55 - 5:29:19)
essentially a thought in your mind so the fear of future and the fear of things going wrong in the future I might become poor I might become ill I might become old I might become destitute whatever it may be

[Speaker 15] (5:29:20 - 5:29:26)
those are all thoughts that

[Speaker 2] (5:29:26 - 5:30:15)
have such hypnotic power over you that you cannot tell the difference between a thought and actual reality actual life and then you miss and the body does not know the difference so when you think of fearful thought imagining a certain scenario the body reacts with emotion that is exactly the same

[Speaker 1] (5:30:15 - 5:30:33)
as if you were in a real situation the body cannot tell the difference whether your mind is imagining something or whether it's actually happening the body doesn't know the difference so fear arises

[Speaker 2] (5:30:34 - 5:30:48)
when a thought comes up repetitive thought persistent thought and you don't recognize it as a thought

[Speaker 1] (5:30:48 - 5:31:13)
because it occupies your entire mind there is no room for presence or awareness in other words there is no observing consciousness and then the emotion is there and the emotion gives even more power to the originating thought so then you get

[Speaker 2] (5:31:14 - 5:31:30)
thought forms that are fueled by emotion, emotional thinking, a vicious cycle, thought creates emotion, the emotion

[Speaker 1] (5:31:30 - 5:31:43)
gives more energy to the thought thought gives more energy to the emotion and so it grows so so the problem is not the future

[Speaker 2] (5:31:43 - 5:31:57)
the problem is in the present moment is are you able to be aware of your thoughts especially

[Speaker 1] (5:31:58 - 5:32:09)
thoughts that create suffering thoughts that make you unhappy thoughts that have nothing to do with what's happening around you here and now

[Speaker 2] (5:32:11 - 5:32:18)
and can you recognize first of all that those thoughts are

[Speaker 1] (5:32:18 - 5:34:18)
not referring to anything that's happening here and now, in other words that is real and can you also recognize that they are that they create unhappiness in you they create suffering in this case fear or anxiety which is not pleasant I had an encounter not long after I experienced the awakening I was in a waiting room somewhere and this this huge guy came in compared to him this puny little guy sitting there and he planted himself in front of me and obviously enjoying his power I can't remember what he wanted he wanted something and I could sense the that sense of presence intensifying and I just looked and he said a few things and suddenly he became extremely disconcerted because there was no attempt on my part to put up any kind of defense or compete in any way and

[Speaker 17] (5:34:19 - 5:34:20)
he got

[Speaker 1] (5:34:20 - 6:06:10)
deflated like a balloon and didn't know what to say or do anymore that's an interesting phenomenon so the important thing for you is in any situation be in touch with that inherent power of presence because ultimately that is the power of now ultimately the now is the presence and the presence is you and ultimately you are in its deepest sense, you are the now because the now is the presence and this is why I speak of the power of now, the power of now is also the power of you and not the not the personal you but the you that is that remains and never was not connected and always is connected and always is an intrinsic part of universal power itself, universal consciousness itself the one the one consciousness that underlies all phenomena, the one consciousness of which all phenomena are only a temporary expression so there's enormous power there, how that manifests in this world is a secondary thing perhaps it only manifests as an emanation that comes through you or it flows into something that you you do or create and it's a great thing to feel that power which is not comparative because you know that everybody else is also a temporary expression of that inherent power although most people don't know it it's the famous guy that I spoke of in the perhaps the power of now he's sitting on, the beggar is sitting on his old box for many years asking for little coins and then somebody says what's inside that box?

I've never looked and it's filled with gold and I gave that analogy or parable at the beginning of the power of now so that is discovering that power in you and for most people they're looking for little substitutes to give them a sense of who they are and of course this is the reason why it is not unusual for humans to awaken spiritually to awaken to who they are in their essence when either one big thing or many things that they had derived their identity from good looks physical strength possessions abilities to do this or that recognition status in society those things and suddenly they lose these things or they lose one big thing that was the main that gave them their sense of identity the one main thing that gave them their sense of identity and that's gone and that's of course terrible suffering and then it can force a human to that deeper place because out here unless you quickly the ego might make an attempt to quickly rebuild some mind made identity by creating another narrative that's possible too not every human who loses who experiences great loss necessarily goes to that deeper place but the potential is there so it could be a sports person who is great great master of some sports and then he or she has an accident can never participate in it in that activity again and that gave him or her a sense of identity that at first leads to terrible suffering and then potentially there is a deepening there and the essence, then you are forced into your essence there's a medieval image of Fortuna Fortuna is a goddess of good luck or fortune it goes back to Roman times that shows the fickleness of things the transient nature of all the things of this world which are the things that people identify with it gives them their sense of identity their self esteem and it has a Latin inscription on it it's an image of the goddess and translated from Latin it says this is supposed to be a king speaking or former king, which king stands for any ego and it says as these words in Latin the first word is I shall reign the next word says I reign to reign, to have a to reign a kingdom I shall reign I reign I have reigned I have lost the kingdom the normal sequence of events old age is a great opportunity for that unfortunately missed in many, many cases tragically missed the opportunity as old age comes, approaches and then you enter old age proximity of death loss of physical abilities of social status, retired who am I when I no longer have that title my work all these things are great opportunities for going deeper and what we are attempting to do now is getting as many books and other material out to old people's homes everywhere and also hospices and hospitals and so on, because those are great places where spiritual transformation could happen so the important thing then is sense your presence the presence of you which is not the person something deeper that is consciousness being aware of itself and then you do no longer need a narrative to tell you who you are free of that conceptual sense of self and this telling yourself of a story in your mind about your life that also goes out of the window my life this is what it has come to all those illusions that I had all those wonderful ideas I had when I was twenty oh now you may well still be at the peak of your success, worldly success and that's fine, why not enjoy it it's not who you are so you better go into the presence because it doesn't last with it also comes a wonderful ability to appreciate other human beings what they can do, what they know how they look without feeling diminished by appreciating the external things connected to another human being the ego can't do that because if the ego appreciates something, it might pretend because it wants something from you but if the ego appreciates something it feels diminished if you meet somebody who obviously looks so much better than you the ego feels diminished by that, so sometimes it tries to say something critical about that person in order to restore the injured sense of self it's absurd but that's how it works but when you come from presence you can look at a beautiful form of a human being and appreciate that and feel it's so beautiful or the achievements of another human being to appreciate their achievements great, what wonderful things that this person can do, it's so wonderful I would never be able to do that and yet the fact that you would never be able to do that because perhaps you're not strong enough or you're not inclined in that particular direction does not diminish anything of you so the appreciation of others then comes in and it's a lovely thing I even appreciate when I occasionally see people getting into their Ferrari and of course usually their ego is walking with them and so the car usually it's red color just to make sure that everybody notices and actually I love that thing too it's a beautiful thing that somebody built and this ego is enjoying himself, that's okay that's okay and you may find that sometimes very creative people, there are some who are who have no ego about their creations they do not derive their identity from what they create, others have fairly big egos that happens too I believe the greatest creators in this world don't have an ego about that maybe they have it somewhere else but not around that and that sometimes means that they continue to be creative so sometimes you see this modesty which is lack of ego in people who have created something really great composers poets even some scientists like Einstein never developed an ego around what he came up with the incredible realization about space and time but he never developed this ego I created that there was a relatively little conceptual self and he found it absurd that he had become one of the most famous people on the planet even in his lifetime he just couldn't, it was so weird and he talked about the gap between what people think of me and who I am is just incredible and by the way that's the last thing that's also the place where you can manifest out of the power of presence if that presence if you are linked into that presence see what the universe wants to, because that presence is the presence of consciousness does it want to create something through you, perhaps it does but in that presence everything is already present in an undifferentiated state so whatever it is that you create externally is like the diluted form of something that in its essence, its concentrated non-form is already there in you so whatever you can possibly create is already present on some level on a deeper level there have been composers who created the most incredible pieces of music and many of them said they listened as if it came out of that place of depth already fully created and they just wrote it down so there's been an increasing awareness of people who look different from the main stream culture and so for a long long time they felt disadvantaged and people sometimes made fun of them and gradually empathy grew in humans and so all the people who did not belong for a long time because there was this exclusivity in the main stream culture many of them can now have come to a place of greater acceptance of who they are on the level of form and that's a wonderful thing gay people, people racial minorities and so on, they come to an acceptance and appreciation of their form identity and that's a wonderful thing so that was a good movement more consciousness has come in but the ego is there and although that's a good thing if you exclusively identify with whatever form it is of the form that you are temporarily if there's exclusive identification there's always ego that comes in so acceptance of who you are on the level of form is wonderful complete identification with who you are on the level of form is the ego so you need to see the difference between accepting and becoming comfortable and appreciating who or what you are on the level of form but if you are completely identified it means you are unaware of your essence identity if you are unaware of your essence identity you don't never even have glimpses of your essence identity then you are still completely trapped and you're not just comfortable accepting of your form identity no, you then have to create boundaries and the ego does that then it makes others into enemies of yours the ego likes to do that so you always have to be very vigilant something that is a good thing can be used by the ego for its own purposes and then the good thing is no longer a good thing nothing that is good now if you have more of what is good that's even better and then you add more to what is good that's even better one glass of water is good two glasses of water a day is better three glasses of water a day is even better, four glasses of water a day is even better than that but at some point you reach a point where it's not better anymore, it's worse true change cannot happen if humans if you attempt to bring about true change in society without addressing the fundamental question of who am I and who are you at a deeper level without that realization in human beings there cannot be true change only permutations of ego the fundamental questions who am I so you can identify as male female something in between that's all fine white black, yellow whatever that's fine is that who you essentially are no essentially I am not a man or I'm not a woman on the level of presence there's no gender on the level of presence there's no race on the level of presence there's no age on the level of presence I'm not young and I'm not old as presence I don't have a history as presence I'm not a victim lovely the ego loves being a victim so be careful of that people that see themselves the moment you complain about another personal situation the ego is there the victim me and it feels bigger and then you have the danger is you have entire groups it is true that there have been many groups that were suppressed or victimized but the danger is if you continue if you're a member of a particular group if you continue to derive your sense of identity from being a victim you're still trapped in ego you're not liberated and a victim is ultimately powerless but the ego believes that's power so the at first you practice in non-problematic situations you practice being the presence not having all these moments when you don't add thought so you walk around looking at the lights an object your hand the flowers a glass of water and it's an amazing thing when you're trapped in thinking the entire sense perceived world that continuously surrounds you is just a peripheral phenomenon because most of your attention is trapped in thought so you're unaware of the miraculous nature of the sense perceived universe around you and the moment you give it your complete attention without, and you can only do that without adding thought to your perception every little thing is alive and miraculous and beautiful perhaps this is what they try, I don't know in so called conceptual art when you go into an art gallery and somebody and there you have an exhibit it tells you who the artist is and all you see is on there's a on the floor or on a table is an everyday object a can of beans and then it tells you the name of the artist laughter I believe that's called conceptual art and you're lucky if it's a can of beans, it could be something worse laughter many art galleries have these exhibits and of course some people go in and say hmm, interesting laughter I wonder what he's trying to say laughter there's a message here, I can't quite get it and some people are so knowledgeable about art, they can write a long piece about this can of beans laughter and why it's there, and what the artist's intention is, by putting it there laughter and you would have to ask the artist what the intention was, if it is an artist but let's just see on the screen if it means anything if it's anything significant, then it would be drawing the viewer's attention to something ordinary so that the viewer becomes aware of the extra ordinariness of an ordinary object if it works like that then I can accept it, it might have a purpose but then I would not be able to write very much about it, except what I've just said laughter so it would really, it would take your attention away from the movement of thought, into thoughtless perception so that would be conceptual art then I mentioned a couple of times this phenomenon that arose on YouTube of people it's now thousands and thousands of people are doing it of people who take an ordinary object and handle it and touch it and make noises with it the most boring YouTube videos you can possibly imagine laughter so they might go and have something like this now the amazing thing is some of them get hundreds of thousands of views, so there is a longing they're not called spiritual but the good ones have a spiritual dimension to them, there's a longing in the collective for that kind of thoughtless perception, because it does by looking at those videos you either fall asleep and many people do they use it in order to go to sleep or you enter that state of presence and you suddenly become aware that a simple object has an aliveness and a beauty that you didn't know before, so when somebody goes and might drink and people watch that and some of these are 30 minutes long laughter I watched some of them myself laughter but I watched them for anthropological reasons laughter laughter laughter well not really, I watched them because I'm looking for is there in the background something spiritual and people don't even know it, the people who are watching it, there's a longing in humans to be free of the incessant noise of their minds and those videos they're called ASMR for some reason Autonomous Sensory Meridian Response some people claim that it produces tingles in their bodies but many others just watch because they stop thinking while they watch most people who watch them probably fall below thought laughter and a few, especially for the good videos, probably rise up into presence and you become aware that an ordinary thing can be extraordinary it has an extraordinary presence laughter so if you haven't heard of it, look it up on YouTube ASMR, because it's become so popular, there are many bad ones but somehow there's a self-selecting process at work and if you look at the number of views, the better ones have like a hundred thousand views or more with the exception of some produced by young ladies who reveal aspects of their body while they're doing it so that could be misleading, they're not necessarily good laughter laughter but something that has arisen spontaneously and there is a longing in humans to be free of the noise of the voice in their head and of course most humans believe the only way they can be free is by falling below thought I want to go to sleep, but I can't sleep laughter

so the

whether it's conceptual art or those videos, there is truth there and that is the world of ordinary things is also extraordinary the multiplicity of this universe that surrounds us the multiplicity of life forms, of things, of beings is quite miraculous and if we are continuously so absorbed in the thought processes that we are only peripherally aware of the aliveness of the world around us, then we are missing something really vital and that's again, it's to do with being too absorbed in one's mind mind made sense of self in that and occasionally they say, oh look it's a lovely flower oh that's a nice sunset, three seconds but I have other problems to think about more important things on my mind I have a lot on my mind don't have time for sunsets don't have time for beauty what are you talking about beauty I've got problems so look practice it outside or indoors there are two ways of looking around one is choosing an object and briefly just wherever your gaze falls upon whatever it might be for a moment you look and then there's something else you look at but as you look there's a two-fold awareness one is the awareness of what you are looking at and you see it fully the other is the awareness of the awareness without which you wouldn't be able to look and that is your essential beingness so the two-fold nature of this act of perception so if I'm looking at you as a person I'm looking I'm aware of what I'm seeing I'm also aware I'm aware of how you look I'm also aware of myself as the awareness and because I'm aware of myself as the awareness I'm aware of more in yourself, in you than the external appearance I'm also aware of you as the conscious presence that's the essence of who you are and I can also do that when I look at a flower there's more one could say that everything that you perceive is a surface phenomenon it's the surface of reality and underneath your perceptions there is a vastness like the ocean and whatever you're seeing is the surface of the ocean so underneath that, there's a vastness of energy formations ultimately the one consciousness expressing itself in these all very short-lived forms and the deeper you go the stiller it becomes this is probably what Plato talked about, the ancient Greek philosopher that there are ideas in the unseen realm there's the world of what is translated as ideas, but that's not a good translation he said before things exist as a physical thing they already exist on an unseen level in the world of consciousness and then the consciousness manifests as something or someone the universe manifests briefly as you and as you become conscious, in you it is the universe that is becoming conscious you think you are a person and of course in conventional terms you are a person but ultimately you're not a person, it's absurd what does it even mean?

I mean, the word means a mask person comes from Latin persona means mask I mean, you're not a mask you're not a person what are you? who are you? you're not separate from the universe so you are an expression of the universe you haven't fallen into this universe from somewhere, you've come out of this universe and then you go back into it and then you come out again as something else you die you're born oh, what's this all about?

and then you and then you oh, that wasn't a very nice life oh oh, this one is better but it doesn't last so the one consciousness appearing as multiplicity of beings so you are the awareness of the universe, you are the consciousness of the universe, how could you not be? if being or god is the creative source of all energy and thoughts and thoughts from the ego are negative form of energy don't these negative thoughts originate from being? in other words did god create evil?

so let's just look at it again if being or god is the creative source of all energy there's only one source right and that is the creative source of all energy thoughts from the ego are negative form of energy but energy of course don't these negative thoughts originate from being? and so did god create evil? that question of course has been similar that kind of question has been asked and talked about by many philosophers and it has remained the kind of stumbling block in christian religion so let's see what the intuitive answer is in this sense perceived universe if you want to use anything here to compare god to the most appropriate thing in this sense perceived universe would be the sun because the sun is the source of seemingly inexhaustible energy and the giver of life the very heat in your body is sun comes from the sun indirectly the sun of course is not eternal but compared to the human life span could be considered as virtually eternal so much faster and it gives freely of itself millions millions and millions of years of just pouring out energy now let's say the sun is in a process of becoming conscious of itself because my intuition is that the universe or rather that which underlies the universe or the one behind the many is in the process of becoming conscious of itself in time the dimension of time although the one also exists in the timeless dimension where there is no past and future so God, to use that word for a while in the timeless God is already complete and perfect but it seems that in the realm of time God is becoming conscious through all these life forms now if that were the sun then in the process of becoming conscious let us say that light particles if there is such a thing well there is they are called photons well they are not really particles but nobody knows what they are waves or particles or both in the process of becoming conscious the sun which continuously emits zillions of photons light particles let's say the individual photon of course is part of the process of becoming conscious of the sun and in that process the individual photon of course would undergo a change of consciousness arising more consciousness and temporarily the individual photon as it becomes together with the sun, it is part of the sun it makes up, conscious it and as consciousness arises it misperceives itself as a separate entity and no longer because it is becoming conscious it no longer realizes its oneness with the sun that it is a continuum, it never really loses connection with the sun and so temporarily as part of the process of becoming conscious it believes itself to be separate it's a temporary thing and while it believes itself to be separate it creates all kinds of illusions that reflect the basic illusion of separateness and that's basically where we are at humanity is at because humanity is the human being is the photon the sun particle so to speak not the intelligence within the consciousness within is the consciousness of God, there is only one consciousness and that consciousness in the process of the whole becoming conscious misperceives itself temporarily and that creates the illusion of separateness in the individual human and that creates the illusion of identification with form which is the illusion of separateness that's seeing oneself as a separate entity and the stronger that illusion is the more that gets reflected in its actions outside which then become deluded and that's called evil ultimately in evil nothing is destroyed the essence of all life form is eternal but on its own level it's not pleasant from the point of view of the larger whole it's only a brief dream episode that takes place as the one is becoming conscious so that is the answer to did God create or does God create evil so the teachings that say that evil ultimately is not real of course that is correct but on its it's a question of look of levels if you look at it on one level it has a certain reality and the fact that it ultimately is not real does not mean that on this temporary level it appears very real and must but it must be recognized as deluded so evil, I have defined it before somewhere can be defined as complete identification with form that is the illusion and the more an entity is identified with form the more seemingly evil the entity creates and the more suffering is created and what's the answer? the answer of course is why we are here we are here you me, us here is the arising and the ending of the answer and the answer is not just the answer it's also the end of the illusion of separateness and the end of so called evil

hello so my question has to do with the ego and so much of what is discussed and what you discuss is about the ego and often times it feels like it's characterized as the enemy or someone that we are fighting against or some type of connotation like that and yet it seems like the intelligence of the universe probably didn't make a mistake with the ego so just trying to reconcile those ideas

[Speaker 1] (6:26:23 - 6:26:23)
yes

[Speaker 10] (6:26:23 - 6:26:24)
it's

it's although from a certain perspective the ego may look quite insane from a higher perspective it is no more than part of the evolutionary process of the species it's a stage in the evolution and as we are approaching the next stage in the evolution we are beginning to see that the ego has completely outlived it's usefulness but it had it's usefulness and it's we are only now beginning to see that it is insane because we are approaching the next stage in human evolution before nobody could see that the ego was insane although except very rare great masters the Buddha already said it's an illusion Jesus said deny thyself which means recognize the unreality of the ego but not many people understood what they said they were kind of precursors of the next step they were pointing to it before it actually became a true awakening on the planet so from our present perspective because we are at the end of one evolutionary stage the ego looks totally absurd once you see what it is and how much havoc it has created but from a higher perspective it's part of the evolution of humanity without there could be no enlightenment or awakening without it ultimately so it's fine, in your own life you can see it, how you had to go through the ignorance in your own life, I mean not ignorance in the sense of lack of education but spiritual ignorance not knowing who you essentially are and making so many mistakes on the basis of the illusory ego identity and you can see it now and you had to go through it there was once most likely humanity once had not an ego yet and that perhaps is captured in the myth which you find in many different cultures that didn't even have contact with each other, the myth of the golden age when humans lived in harmony with each other and in harmony with nature and life was easy and that myth points to probably to the fact that a long long time ago humans lived in at one moment in a sense of oneness with nature and the surroundings and the ego hadn't developed yet and that perhaps became later survived, the memory of it survived as the myth of the golden age which of course is expressed in the Old Testament as paradise as just one aspect of the myth of the golden age when life was easy and then something happened the fall, whatever you want to call it, it happened and then the ugliness came in and that of course was the beginning of human ability to think which at first was a miraculous thing, thinking suddenly happened, some anthropologists are telling us that and I believe they are right, when thinking first began to happen in humans, humans were very surprised and they thought that some god was talking to them in their head and so because thought suddenly came, of course part of that was the development of language and so language started to happen in people's heads who's talking?

and then often, and they acted on it often, when a thought came and then they did it kill this man laughter the enemy, the other tribe the enemy they're not human that's what the voice is telling me so the voice in the head, language internalized that, so it was a miraculous, because but it also made many things possible that would not have been possible without it knowledge arising, you can transmit knowledge and how civilization as we know it wouldn't happen without that all kinds of transmission of knowledge, architecture and then philosophy starts and whatever all these things, conceptual knowledge arising, a miraculous thing, a strange thing and then over the millennia the voice became so all pervasive that it took over people's sense of identity whereas for a long time probably after the arising of thinking humans still had a sense of rootedness in being the natural sense of rootedness in the depths of their being and gradually over the millennia they got drawn more and more into the thinking heads mode and then the whole sense of identity was no longer rooted in the depths of their being but in the voice in the head and that's how the but it made many things possible and now the next step in the evolution is a return to the pre-egoic state with the added dimension of consciously knowing your connectedness with the one whereas before they were connected with the one without even knowing it, it was a natural state of connectedness but as we return to the go beyond ego we now knowingly we return to the one consciously and that's the next stage, so it's not a regressive step, in some sense we go back to the golden age, one could almost say but knowing and that's expressed of course in the ancient parable of what in the bible is called the prodigal son the son leaves his father's home, gives to the father, give me your inheritance and the son goes abroad to a distant country, squanders all his wealth and becomes destitute and then the message comes from the father the father sends a messenger come back home come back to me and then the son begins to remember who he is and then he comes back to the father's home and as the parable says is loved more deeply than before there's a deeper there's an added first you lose it you never really lose it completely otherwise you wouldn't even exist but you lose it and then you return when you return to it there's a depth to it of knowing and that's where we are destined to go and so once we realize that we're actually grateful to the ego because it has been

it was part of the journey

[Speaker 15] (6:34:28 - 6:34:49)
yeah thank you very much these devices it breaks the relation with other people you're at dinner with

[Speaker 1] (6:34:52 - 6:34:56)
don't allow these things to take over your life, that's vitally important

[Speaker 8] (6:34:56 - 6:35:51)
I work with technology and I actually it was quite interesting to hear you talk about technology a few times in the past couple of days and the way that you mentioned that smartphones are actually an extension of our minds and the way that the internet is actually it's a space for our unconscious mind to actually be reactive so one of the things I do for work is to raise a bit of the ethical questions around that and the things that we usually call digital nudges which is when we try to influence other people through technology so I would really love to hear a bit of your opinion and maybe your advice if there is a way for us to use technology as a tool and as a channel to actually increase humanity consciousness and presence

yes so in itself of course it's neutral the technology is neutral it's not either bad or good it depends how it's used it is at the moment it is to a large extent a reflection of the unconscious mind so if you want to learn about human unconsciousness, if you want to learn about the human ego just go there and read what people post look at the reactivity of people on social media and so on the comments they leave you can learn a lot about unconsciousness and identification with mental positions so the first thing of course is what be careful with what you put out there, what kind of thing you post, if you post things online is it reactive give yourself a moment when you read something before you type in an answer or a comment give yourself a moment and go within and avoid making people wrong you can talk about issues but don't make people wrong amplify your ego by making others wrong even though their position, political or otherwise, you may regard as completely misguided or erroneous there is still a human being behind that so you can put forward arguments against somebody's perspective or viewpoint without making another human being wrong so how what you put out is very important is your communication conscious or not or is it reactive and then it can be used for other purposes I'm there too sometimes, there are certain places where I appear could go to YouTube or whatever and then suddenly there's a spiritual teacher talking so do you professionally work with what exactly do you do in your work that involves the media or

pretty much involves the creation the ideas around the digital products and services so creating the product that people actually use and designing the interfaces that people actually use on phones and other

[Speaker 1] (6:38:43 - 6:50:47)
there are some meditation sites on all these things so there's a great potential for raising consciousness there, somebody recommended to me several apps for meditation which I now have on my phone I haven't tried them yet, I've been there for a while but I have four or five that are there, I want to try them out, so that's the very thing that otherwise would clutter your mind can actually also be used to bring about space or spaciousness in your mind so it doesn't necessarily mean that when you have your phone or the 99% of cases when people look their mind is being cluttered but maybe they're on a meditation app, maybe they're looking at a beautiful spacious picture or listening to some sound take a conscious breath have a little reminder every two hours take a conscious breath and bring spaciousness oh yes, spaciousness so the very same thing that otherwise clutters your mind can now unclutter your mind, it's possible so I believe that it's also going to grow now and it has to because otherwise that technology could potentially drive humans completely insane and remove their ability to focus on anything for more than a few seconds people create young people who are totally uncentered, have no spaciousness within, don't even communicate with humans anymore because they prefer to communicate digitally so these things are important but what you put out is important so always take into consideration whether this brings people to presence or whether it clutters somebody's mind and perhaps you can combine of course what you do needs to be also commercially viable so but I believe you can combine the two, it's not necessarily a question of either it's commercially viable and it clutters people's minds or it's presence and we're going to go out of business, it doesn't have to be like that, it's up to you to be creative use the more still you are, the more creative insights you will have and you might get some amazing ideas of what is possible, I can't tell you what is possible I don't know enough about it, I know very little about it but you're in a wonderful position so allow yourself to go deep enough within because then it is then the creative ideas seem to come and if you find a thing that not only brings people to presence but also helps your company to grow then that then becomes a conscious business which is wonderful it's challenging of course it's challenging so don't let all your attention be absorbed by that kind of activity you still need to connect with nature take it as much as possible away from there, connect with nature and then bring it back another thing just in connection with this not perhaps directly related to your question but related to this is tends to happen is that these devices people are never they're still in bed and they're still doing stuff on it and that takes you over there at dinner and they're doing stuff on it it breaks the relation with other people you're at dinner with I see people in restaurants the couple sitting having dinner together and both are on their phones now that probably means they've known each other for a while if it happens on the first date the first date will probably be the last one but if it happens after they've known each other for two years then it's almost a normal thing that they're not present with each other or then they exchange a few words and then she looks at the phone again and then he stares into space and then she's still on her phone I've actually observed it she's still on her phone and he's staring into space and then finally he gets out his phone too because he doesn't want to be staring into space and then I wonder are they texting each other right two good things that I learned that in some huge companies I believe it might be VW in Germany well they've had enough problems but now they they tell their employees after 6pm they're not allowed to use the company phones anymore not to deal with emails or anything they need to get off and that's a very wise thing because the more people's attention gets absorbed by this the more confused and non-creative they become the more cluttered their minds become the more ineffective they are even at their work not to mention as human beings their quality of life decreases enormously so don't give yourself spaces don't allow these things to take over your life, that's vitally important so it's wonderful that some big companies like that have this policy now no emails or anything after 6pm well that's wonderful I talked a couple of years ago to Ariana Huffington who has a famous news website and has also written some books and she describes in her latest book how her life deteriorated more and more although she was making a lot of money and finally she collapsed and hit her head on her desk and she was a complete breakdown and now she has for example in her private life and that's a good thing she has this policy of no digital device in my bedroom so in her bedroom she still has books sometimes she reads in bed but it has to be a book not a kindle not the ipad, not the iphone no digital device in my bedroom and that's a good thing at least you have that space for yourself so everybody needs to be really conscious of the addictive nature of these devices how I sometimes say I even said that before these things were invented the greatest addiction for human beings is compulsive thinking they can't stop thinking really that is what is the meaning of being an addict whatever it may be if you are an addict it means you have no power to stop whether you are addicted to a drug or to alcohol and many people who are addicts say no I am not an addict I could stop but they can't so the nature of being an addict is you no longer have the power to stop doing this and this applies for many humans first of all all humans are addicts and that was already before these devices came all humans are addicts addicted to their thinking to their compulsive and unconscious superfluous, excessive often destructive thinking they can't stop and they don't want to stop because they are so identified with it with the entire identities in their thoughts so they have to go on they don't even know it so the greatest addiction for humanity is not heroin or whatever it's the human mind that's actually you are addicted to thinking and now these devices are an amplification externalization of the human mind and so that makes it even more difficult to deal with because then you not only have your mind you also have the collective mind that comes at you through your iPhone and your Samsung which hopefully doesn't explode in your face well if it did explode that would make you present and it might suddenly break the addiction so give yourself space in your bedroom this is a good policy and don't be on it at all times the younger you are the more difficult this is for you for old people like myself it's still relatively relatively easy but if you are 18 or 20 or 25 then you've grown up with these things the older than the rest they didn't grow up with these things they're not quite, perhaps not quite as addicted and identified with it another way to tell whether they've grown up with these things is how they type into their phones I always admire young people because they type they go like that at enormous speed with their thumbs how they do it with their thumbs I don't know and they can even talk to you while they're doing it and then I get a text message and somebody expects an answer who might not know that I'm not that fast and with the text message you can actually see that somebody is replying, you know that he's replying and so they wait and say why isn't he, he's doing something they don't know that I go like that it takes time and that's a good thing because it's easy to be present when you're not good at this you can be much more present where is the bee? so it's a challenge I hope you come up with something wonderful that promotes presence in this world and helps your business thank you

[Speaker 1] (6:50:58 - 7:32:54)
so then this ability to ask a true question comes from becoming familiar with and familiar with and comfortable with not knowing the state of not knowing which ultimately is the state of not thinking because when you're not thinking you don't know anything conceptually you don't know anything and yet when you're not thinking a different dimension of consciousness arises that is has no conceptual knowledge in it but there is an intelligence there there is a vast intelligence there that is non-conceptual in order to have a balanced life we need to be able to dwell in both of these dimensions the dimension of conceptual knowledge we can't do without it and the conception of the deeper I call it the deeper knowing that is non-conceptual so it's not ignorance I often recommend that you should try this out in everyday life and see how do you know something how do you experience something new you can go into nature you can go into a forest you can experience the forest through your conceptual knowledge depending on how much you know about trees and plants and birds and vegetation and so on and you can as you go you enter a forest, you've never been there and you immediately you can say well this is that and that's a tree of the approximate age how it grows, the nature of the soil, you know a lot or you could go and ask somebody to explain the forest to you so you have a guide so the guide takes you into the forest and explains and you learn a lot about the trees and after an hour you come out again and you have absorbed an enormous amount of knowledge about the forest that is one way of knowing the forest conceptually and there's nothing wrong with it but there's another way of knowing you go into the forest and you don't have a guide and you don't know much about trees or anything you go into the forest and simply experience the forest directly without the intermediary of conceptualization which means you look at the trees you look at the plants you take in all the sense perceptions of the forest, the totality of sense perceptions not only do you look at individual life forms you're also aware of the totality of the forest that is an energy field that surrounds you and all these things, you take that in with little or no conceptual thinking so you're beginning to know this forest in a totally different way that is non-conceptual and that moves you also you experience the forest no longer do you experience a clear separation between you and that amazing life form which is the forest around you there is a sense of merging with there's a sense of oneness with it which cannot be there when you approach it through conceptual knowledge the concept is a little little sticking labels on things and then mistaking the label for what it is it's that, oh now I know what it is this is the name of the tree, now I know what it is no you don't, you've just put a label on that mysterious and miraculous and profound thing and then you believe every label that's what it is you don't know what it is, you just have a name for it, but we need that kind of knowledge too but the thing is if all you have or most of your life is conducted through conceptual knowledge and this is what is encouraged in our civilization when that is all you know then a vital dimension is missing from your life a very vital dimension, in fact one could almost say you inhabit very much a surface reality I think there's a Ken Whittle, the philosopher, I think calls it flat land you inhabit this flat land so there's no depth to anything, there's just conceptualization, so you inhabit ultimately a universe that is dead, deadened you are dead to it because you can no longer experience it in its depths, and also of course when you are confined to knowledge, conceptual knowledge only for example, in regard to nature you cannot possibly sense the I reluctantly use the word the sacredness of nature in fact, from a point of view of conceptualization sacredness is a meaningless term, when you say the sacredness of the forest, they say can you please define what exactly do you mean?

you want more concepts so you can't understand what this pointer sacredness, what it points to, you don't know it until you get a glimpse of it and then you say no explanation will suffice for you to know what sacredness is, in the same way that as Mathieu Ricard said the other day here the famous example from the east you can talk about honey for a long time, you can write a PhD about honey I'm sure people have done that and you've never tasted it so you know an enormous amount about honey but you have never tasted honey, so do you know honey?

no, you know about honey, but you don't know honey because there are two different different modalities of knowing the world, so we need to be in both without being especially we need to be careful not to be absorbed continuously by conceptual knowledge which is not only about things, even about other human beings how do you know a person? what do you know about a person? in some languages, this is interesting there's sometimes wisdom embodied in language in Spanish or French you have actually two words for to know there are different ways of knowing one is a more abstract knowing which in Spanish would be saber yo se, I know this is a fact I know who he is yo se quien es I know who he is but if you know him, you use a different verb conozco le conozco I know you I know who you are, uses one verb I know you uses a different verb so there's in French the same savoir, connaître this is very interesting so there's sometimes a certain amount of wisdom embodied in language so the knowing savoir, connaître that would be the more direct non-conceptual knowing so our task is to again this is related also to doing and being we need to be able to move in both and have access to both modalities of knowing our danger is losing ourselves in the conceptual mind so that we inhabit ultimately we inhabit a universe that is basically lifeless and dead because these are lifeless concepts so this means we need to develop the ability to periodically let go of the conceptual mind without losing consciousness so it's not you're not going to sleep you're not falling off the chair because you've had six whiskeys I don't know how many you need to fall off the chair but you let go of the conceptual mind and just be present with what is and then you can know anything you can know whatever it is through sense perception you're very much become very much more aware of sense perception and you take it certainly things suddenly become more vitally or vibrantly alive when you look at something without interference of the conceptual mind and at the same time you're not only acutely aware of sense perception so that things are more alive suddenly around you but you're also aware of the underlying presence of consciousness itself which is you you're aware of yourself not the person but you're aware of yourself as the presence and so you become the space for whatever arises there and so that's a totally different way of knowing something can you speak about how to be in this world with this constant push for connectivity how did we get to the most profound things from a relatively simple question oh yes we talked about doing and being without feeling that being present is another thing to do how to be in this world without this constant push for connectivity well the first thing is you turn off your push notifications that's already a big step forward and you need to be disciplined in the use of your device your phone whatever tablet, phone so that it doesn't take you over because it's simply an extension of the mind and if it wasn't enough before we invented these devices humans had already been taken over by their minds even 2,000 years ago not as much as now but even 2,000 years ago Jesus said why are you always thinking about tomorrow why are you always worried about the next thing look at the flower, look how it lives in total alignment with the present moment and it's being sustained by the one consciousness that's my translation so already then humans had been taken over by mind but even more so since then mind has proliferated and then the clever human mind came up with these devices said let's extend ourselves into the realm of things and then we can create this which is an extension of the human mind so when you might have noticed when you are with yourself you have the voice in the head unless you begin to awaken in which case you're able to experience spaces of alert still presence, it's beautiful but otherwise you have this think, commenting talking, arguing and then this becomes a burden for many people of course it is a burden because a lot of the stuff it says is actually not pleasant and it's so you experience it as a burden and since you derive your sense of identity from it it becomes yourself this talking voice you think that's you it becomes the self and you walk around with this burden of the self and in order to unburden yourself one thing you can do you think you can do is you can watch the television or you can go on there are countless things that you can watch on the little screen the entire world's knowledge at your fingertips and the moment you watch the screen, whether it's television or whatever screen you might have noticed that your own your so called own thought processes come to a stop so to some extent you are free of the self, this is why people sometimes find watching television relaxing say okay I just need to relax now, just turn it on by this they mean while they watch the television screen, they are not burdened by their self induced thought processes what they do however they replace their own thoughts with the collective thoughts, so they just you are in a state you are not in a state of thoughtless awareness when you watch television or you watch something on the screen you absorb the thoughts from there into your mind and you link into so for people often in a state of semi or hypnosis when they watch it kind of paralyzes you it can also happen with the screen with television already started of course I don't know when, whenever, 60 years ago whenever television started and you go and so your mind is just absorbing whatever is playing it's the TV mind which is receiving stuff from wherever it comes from is going into your mind and you become a no longer thinking your own thoughts occasionally your mind is saying oh this guy is so stupid and then you are watching again and then another thought why am I watching this rubbish half an hour later this is so awful but you can't you can't turn it off here is the remote let's just try one more channel there might be something else oh no that's stupid try one more this is how an addict behaves and the device is even more addictive because you carry them with you and you have to admit, you may have to admit that there is an addiction in you not everybody here but quite a few it would be almost normal to feel this draw towards it and you use it even when you don't need to use it that's the amazing thing when you are standing at the elevator waiting another person is standing next to you and he or she is pulling out the phone and then you pull out and it's yours, you don't know why or anywhere you are waiting you are ordering a tea or coffee somewhere and you are standing in line and if you look around there is almost nobody and probably nobody who is not looking at this little thing this is scary zombie like now if somebody from the past the so called past time traveler from the past came here not the distant past let's just say even 20 years ago and he arrived and would see in the streets in restaurants, in cafes, everywhere public transport people walk around with these things staring at these things what's that? something has happened to humanity they have all become zombies something terrible must have happened what was that? there are these are wonderful devices incredible possibilities of having access to all kinds of knowledge but there is always the downside there is a huge huge downside to it they are addictive they stimulate the mind the thing you want to become free from you want to become free of mind and this will prevent you from becoming free of mind so you need to be disciplined enough to not automatically look at it whenever there is a moment and you are waiting for something or whatever it is there is no need to check these things I don't even know what they are but I just know that Facebook is the biggest thing and then there is Instagram and Snapchat and countless names and some people have all of them on their phones and you need to know the latest thing crazy but if you detect the addiction in yourself then you have to first of all admit that you are addicted don't deny it you know Alcoholics Anonymous the first thing when you go there you have to say I am an alcoholic now some people say well that is not a good thing because your identity is not being an alcoholic of course not so it could be misunderstood but your nature is not being an alcoholic your present condition is that but to recognize the problem the difficulty, the challenge is just to state it yes I am addicted to this phone and I choose not to be addicted and then you can be the only one in many places who is not looking in waiting rooms waiting in line whatever it is waiting on the phone for somebody to talk to you and in the meantime but you use this beautiful thing of just being, just being present and you look around and you step out of thinking and all the others are still in their hypnotic state Meditation to another live meditation we call it meditation but that is not really what it is meditation is another concept that creates a compartment in your mind or your life different from other things but we are not really here to do a meditation as such but to realize the essential you or to put it more accurately and directly to realize the essential I because one could say and don't take this too literally because whatever language one uses is always somewhat wrong so they are only approximations they are only helpful hints used temporarily whatever words we use here are helpful pointers not the absolute truth can't be expressed in words so all pointers of course have certain limitations knowing that I can use one or two pointers so we could say then that there is two of you here or at any time there is the I that is circumstantial relative fleeting and it's not a unified body it includes all kinds of sub-I's and patterns its form the form of who you are the psychological form physical form conditioned by circumstances reacting to circumstances having fears and desires and then there is the deeper I which one could say is the dreamer of all the circumstances and the events and the experiences that make up a person's so-called life so I'm comparing then circumstantial existence to a kind of dream which is what it is because it dissolves fairly quickly not only your life but every event and circumstance in your life it changes continuously and that's why we can compare it to a kind of dream which also is not substantial it's also fleeting and subject to change and subject to impermanence just as this world that looks deceptively solid but is also subject to constant change it's not really solid and physicists agree if you look deeply into matter you see there is ultimately nothing there is no solid matter only energy fluctuations but the energy fluctuations appear to us it's an illusion they appear to us as solid so there's a solidity to the world that is not absolutely real it's part of the illusion and then people always get shocked when they realize how fleeting it all is and whenever you think your life has a secure basis very quickly you realize oh it wasn't that secure because something happens and you realize that that sense of security that one seeks in circumstances is also an illusion so the deeper eye is that which illuminates the circumstances creates them in a way like a dream creates a dream the question is whether that deeper eye which is the light behind it all without which there would be no world that deeper eye the question is whether the deeper eye is totally lost in the dream or whether it knows itself as the deeper eye even while the dream continues lucid living similar to lucid dreaming which some people are interested in which is staying conscious while you're dreaming and knowing that you're dreaming but here we're talking about that may or may not happen but here we're talking about lucid living which is to know yourself as the light behind it all the presence behind it all and to sense that presence that has no form as the life that you are or the consciousness that you are is no longer the separate you that's behind it all now the important thing is to know that not conceptually but in the background and over the years I've used many different pointers to point to it every pointer of course limits it it's not that but it can be temporarily helpful I've said the stillness and the background the space the inner space or the spaciousness or the light light, Jesus also used that term to point to it you are the light of the world there's the world and there's the light in which it appears you are the light of the world is the light God?

if we even want to use that term well if we use that term I would say the light is the emanation of God in the same way that the sunlight emanates from the sun and is not really separate from the sun God is the absolute unmanifested timeless we can't say anything about it and from the absolute unmanifested something shines into this world and creates this world I've used other pointers also yes, stillness inner space spaciousness presence or in negative terms the cessation of thinking the end of compulsive thinking and that's why we're here to realize that possibility what's left of you when you stop thinking and of course I'm inviting you to stop thinking you can't make it happen but you can allow yourself to just be present there's the essential I not much you can say about it but you are whenever you enter that dimension so to speak power flows into you you could call it spiritual power it may not immediately become transformed into something in this world it could become creative action could become an emanation of love towards your fellow human beings it could become other things as it flows into this world but it doesn't immediately necessarily have to do that you're plugged into the source of all power and it's not the power that the ego would call power which is noisy it's not that there's a silent power that's far more powerful than that so it's not the power of the monster which is what the ego thinks of as power or power over others control very different it's silent power which from the point of view of the ego looks like weakness weakness the Tao Te Ching sometimes compares that power to water it seems very soft but it can erode the hardest rock and does and that of course is the power of now what that really means don't expect immediate results I'm saying be content with opening yourself to this influx of silent power and though the circumstantial you with its situation life situation of course is still there continues the ups and downs of circumstantial existence one day everything is going great the next day things collapse and then it's fine again new things arise and while all that happens you feel yourself you sense yourself as the presence behind it all and then you can sit there discussing this or that with people even putting forward your opinion and still sense the powerful spaciousness in the background even while you say no I think that's how it is, not like that that is what I think you don't lose yourself in the circumstantial I you stay rooted in the essential I you are essentially that of course now they are not absolutely separate the circumstantial I is the the waves on the surface of being the ripples and waves and of course there's no division between the waves on the surface of the ocean and the ocean it just sometimes looks as if every wave had a separate existence and of course you could say oh this wave, that's called John and there's wave Mary, it comes and there it comes, there it comes oh it's gone that's all terrible

[Speaker 2] (7:33:28 - 7:33:38)
is there any is there a dimension that is deeper than this self, this person

[Speaker 1] (7:33:38 - 7:34:09)
that you are here for a little while everybody has a history and you are a person you are a conditioned entity is there anything beyond this conditioned entity, the self the Buddha calls it the self and he, another other than the fact of suffering another important part of his teaching is the

[Speaker 2] (7:34:09 - 7:34:17)
ultimate unreality of that self the ultimate unreality of that self

[Speaker 1] (7:34:18 - 7:34:58)
which was also Jesus teaching but it's usually overlooked by churches and theologians because Jesus said literally, here's another little quote that I'm sure he actually said literally he said deny thyself oh I thought the Buddha said that, it was actually Jesus deny thyself means what does it mean what is the point in denying yourself if your self is actually real if it has a substantial ultimate reality then to deny

[Speaker 2] (7:34:58 - 7:35:08)
something that is real wouldn't make sense but deny thyself he said that because he agrees with the Buddha

[Speaker 1] (7:35:08 - 7:36:19)
that that identity that people carry around with is ultimately an illusion there is something deeper that is beyond that so when Jesus says deny thyself what is really meaning is recognize the unreality of yourself that's what is deny yourself, recognize it ultimately this is not who or what you are yes it has a certain function here it is a part of who you are on the level of form physical form, psychological form, this is why I call it your form identity, everybody has one you have a body that's a physical form and you have a mental form which is you as this person that you can think about and talk about and it has its emotions that go with that, conditioned by the past, whatever happened to you

[Speaker 2] (7:36:19 - 7:36:38)
in the past conditions you to become this particular person is there anything beyond that conditioned entity and here we come to the realization that

[Speaker 15] (7:36:38 - 7:36:48)
there is it is possible to go deeper where you

[Speaker 2] (7:36:48 - 7:37:03)
your sense of who you are goes beyond this personal sense of self, the personal sense of self is still there but it is no longer all consuming

[Speaker 1] (7:37:04 - 7:37:29)
and that's a very important difference, if you discover something and we are here to many of you already can sense what it is that I'm talking about but we go in more deeply there is a dimension in you that transcends the who or what you are as a person, as a self

[Speaker 2] (7:37:29 - 7:38:07)
there is a deeper we could say higher but I prefer deeper doesn't matter what word you use higher could kind of take you out of yourself and you I'm looking for myself up there, my higher self, but it's better to go within and encounter the deeper dimension of yourself so how do we access that, how do we discover that and that's the awakening

that is the awakening what is it that you awaken from not sleep that's the ordinary awakening every morning you awaken and you open your eyes and you realize there is a significant shift from the dream state to the so called awakened state in the morning you suddenly go, oh here I am again but before you were there was a sleep state you were dreaming or perhaps you were in a state of dreamless sleep and then you come out of that and you're suddenly awake and that traditional, spiritual traditions use this to point to another awakening that is similar but much higher than awakening from sleep, the ordinary awakening from sleep that happens to you every morning there is another awakening and that is the awakening out of the ordinary level of consciousness which we could call unconsciousness spiritually speaking, which is complete identification with the mental, emotional conditioning complete identification with every thought that arises, every emotion that arises, it has you in its grip oh my god there is nobody who is there who is able to say oh what a thought the witnessing faculty is not there there is no awareness, no presence you are totally in the grip of the conditioned stream of thinking and emotion and you're like people say people say I think as if they had a choice but most humans there is not sufficient awareness or zero awareness which is presence zero awareness, so they are not able to step out of their thinking and become aware of their thinking they are they are in it like a raging river that drags you along and they are made unhappy in many cases they are made very unhappy by this thing that drags them along, they think that's me oh god, can't stand anymore can't take it anymore what's going to happen to me tomorrow oh I must think about this can't go to sleep think how am I going to solve this problem of me me and my problems many humans consider their identity for many humans is mostly their problems and they take it to a psychiatrist or a psychotherapist trying to get rid of their problems but on the other hand not wanting to get rid because that's all they know of their identity so every psychotherapist knows you reach a stage when the humans resist they don't want to let go because that's all they know that's their identity, their problems well at least I have my familiar problems I'm not going to step into the unknown at least I know who I am I may be unhappy

but at least I know who I am it's delusion so in ancient Indian, from India in ancient Indian spiritual teachings you have

[Speaker 1] (7:41:53 - 7:42:54)
they differentiate between different states of consciousness and they have they differentiate dreamless sleep this goes back hundreds of years yes dreamless sleep the dream state that's the second state of consciousness the third state is normal wakefulness but even normal wakefulness has different levels to it but let's put that aside normal wakefulness and what they call the fourth state of consciousness which in Sanskrit called Turiya, the fourth that is the awakened state, that is the state where you no longer identify with the stream of, you're not continuously drawn into the stream of thinking and it does not absorb your consciousness continuously there is an ability to be aware of your emotions and to be aware of your thoughts there's also an ability to step out of the stream of thinking that grows

[Speaker 2] (7:42:54 - 7:43:07)

[Speaker 1] (7:43:07 - 7:43:24)
when that arises you will find that in your life that is the beginning of your awakening, for some people the beginning of their awakening is they suddenly are aware that all the thoughts that go ahead is ultimately not who they are, they're just thoughts

[Speaker 2] (7:43:25 - 7:43:34)
and then who they are is beyond is behind that but it's not easily defined, you can't

[Speaker 1] (7:43:34 - 7:43:38)
really define it at all but I'll try just use as pointers

[Speaker 2] (7:43:40 - 7:43:58)
so you are able to take your consciousness out of the stream of thinking at least to some extent and you're able to be aware of what your mind is doing you're able to be aware of what your emotions are doing without being

[Speaker 1] (7:43:58 - 7:44:04)

[Speaker 15] (7:44:04 - 7:44:44)
totally identified you're able to step back the moment of stillness is always a good start to anything

[Speaker 1] (7:44:44 - 8:06:53)
that you do any activity so it's important to become comfortable with stillness there are many humans in this world who are made extremely uncomfortable by stillness they can't stand it so we are here at a higher education establishment which means you've already been through lower education and have arrived at higher education and higher education of course in most fields it requires you to sharpen and to constantly use the conceptual mind and that's fine because the conceptual mind is a wonderful tool conceptual mind means the ability to think and to apply thought and so that's a wonderful thing it's been an incredible evolutionary development this evolution of the ability to think but as in anything in this world there's always a downside downside and we can clearly see the downside of the conceptual mind because millions of humans, and not just in higher education millions of humans are not so much using their mind as being at the mercy of their mind so humans say things like I think and that sounds reasonable they don't say things like I beat my heart because the beating of the heart is something that happens to you you're not actually doing it but people think that when they think, they do it but in most cases that's not true, it happens the same way that your heart beats thought happens to you thought suddenly appears in your mind and there it is where did that come from? and so the current state of human consciousness is one in which with the exception of those humans who are already going through a spiritual awakening, an awakening of consciousness and I will come I will talk about what that actually means tonight in case you have some doubts about what I'm talking about when I say awakening of consciousness with the exception of those humans who are already going through the process of a shift in consciousness the millions of others who are still totally identified with the conceptual mind totally identified with thought this continuous stream of thinking that incessantly arises and that they mistake for who they are and that's why people say I think of course especially with certain types of thought like so-called worry you can see very clearly that it happens to you so the mind goes and you cannot stop it you wake up at three in the morning and you start thinking fearful thoughts bad possible bad outcomes and it goes on and on and you're trapped thought arises in you so the beginning of spiritual awakening is to see a thought arise, to see a thought and not be completely identified with it to recognize thought as thought the awakening of consciousness then when we talk about awakening people might say well, I'm awake already we're using awakening in a different sense here as you probably know like when we talk about the Buddha the word Buddha was not anybody's name it was a title later given to this person and the meaning of the root meaning of the word Buddha in Sanskrit is Budd which means awake so the Buddha is somebody who is awake and in other spiritual traditions the term of being awake is an important one so what does that actually mean to be awake when we think we are awake are we not awake here and now in ancient spiritual in Indian spiritual philosophy there's a term a Sanskrit term called Turiya T-U-R- Y-A Turiya Turiya by the way we are at an institute of higher learning so I'm just mentioning some Sanskrit terms Turiya means the force the force they divided human consciousness into four stages one is dreamless sleep which of course you enter every night one is the dream state that's the second state of consciousness then there is the normal state of wakefulness that's the third state of consciousness and then there is the fourth Turiya which is the state of wow this is a state that is beyond the conceptual mind it is a state of being disidentified from the stream of thinking and in modern terminology we may call this awareness or presence and this state is arising already in many of you and that's why you are here so what you experience here tonight may be perhaps a deepening of that state of awareness that's arising if you are not aware, if you are not present in your daily life then you are identified completely with the conceptual mind and your entire sense of identity is a conceptual one, in other words you derive your sense of who you are and this is very important, your sense of who you are is very important because that determines how you relate to this world, it determines how you react to things, how you interact with people your sense of identity is very important so in the absence of awareness or presence your sense of identity your sense of who you are is derived from the conceptual mind which means you inhabit a conceptual reality which basically is a narrative in your head that tells you who you are and it is derived from your past it's a way in which your mind has been conditioned by your past and these are stories that you tell yourself and basically what you, when you think or talk about your life and you say my life that is the conceptual mind that is the narrative in your head that is derived from the past and it has emotions that go with it and that's fine, there's no doubt that there is a certain reality to that dimension in you you remember your past you remember things that have happened to you, your failures your successes things that people did to you what you did to others you identify with things you incorporate things into that conceptual sense of self you incorporate possessions you incorporate what other people think of you, you take that on board, you incorporate those concepts into your sense of self this is in spiritual terms the egoic sense of self, so the ego, spiritually speaking, the ego is a sense of self that arises when the mind is completely unobserved the unobserved mind brings about the ego, in fact the unobserved mind is the ego, these are mental structures which are energy formations because every thought is an energy formation, energy formations in your head that say that's me, that's me in my life, and there are certain characteristics to this egoic state one characteristic is that it exists in a state of frequent dissatisfaction discontent and there's an underlying an undercurrent of something vital is missing in my life I have not arrived yet there are some people or many people who feel they haven't started to live yet, they're waiting for that moment when it's really going to take off sometimes they have certain expressions that say one day I'm going to make it we don't know what they're going to make but I'm going to get there, the big breakthrough or whatever it is, whatever that may be varies from person to person, it could be to achieve financial success or recognition or better the two together fame, it could be meeting the ideal partner that is going to complete me and my story because right now there's not enough of me I need somebody to complete me and then you start looking for, and sometimes you find, it seems that you found that person that the egoic sense of self was so longing for and now there he or she is and you're ecstatically happy and for a little while the ego feels, ah I've arrived, the same way that would happen if you if you're offered a great job or you've just won the lottery or you get some kind of recognition in this world, not that there's anything wrong with recognition but it's a wonderful thing to achieve things is wonderful to endeavor to achieve things is wonderful, but to look to these things and hope to find a more complete sense of self through it to hope to find that complete sense of fulfillment and a lasting sense of fulfillment that doesn't seem to work because I haven't met anybody for whom that has worked, except for brief periods that these periods are brief, you may, even though many of you are young you may already have experienced that the initial stage of meeting the ideal person does not last very long and at some point you realize that you met the wrong person and it was all a big mistake and at the latest when you start living with somebody you realize that the person that you first met and that you that was so wonderful when you were having dinners together or going for a walk on the beach or wherever that person was looking at you like this and then you start living together and suddenly that person no longer looks at you like this so there's something the ego longs for something to add to, the ego is always in a sense of insufficiency and remember the ego is a concept, ultimately a narrative in your mind a conceptual reality that can never fulfill you, no matter how much you add to it, which does not mean you should not strive to do things in this world but do not expect this world to make you happy, because happiness does not ultimately derive from this world this world is not designed to make you happy it is designed to challenge you and if you believe that this world is designed to make you happy, then you're going to get very angry, because as the years pass in your life, you realize why isn't my life working why is this reality seems to be always throwing obstacles in my path the moment I say oh, it's okay now, this problem has been solved, another one pops up from behind you and so you have these areas of your life the main areas being your physical health your financial situation, your living situation your professional situation, your relationship situation and one of these areas usually develops problems you solve a problem in your financial area and then pops up a relationship problem you solve the relationship problem suddenly you have a health problem it's interesting that you're constantly being challenged and you might have noticed one of the greatest sources of challenges are human beings because humans are incredibly challenging and although humans look to other humans for some ultimate fulfillment through other humans, more often what they find through other humans is that other humans turn out to be a source of suffering and that is because you're stuck in the egoic mind and you have the egoic mind has certain expectations of the world, which includes whatever you experience in this world has certain expectations that the world cannot meet but if you believe that the world should then that is a delusional reality that you will be continuously unhappy the world continues to challenge you but you believe the world is here to make you happy that's a terrible dilemma so it means your entire all your expectations are delusory but you don't know it and that creates an enormous amount of suffering because then every challenge that you encounter in this world and they come one after another every challenge that you encounter in this world you then, because of that underlying expectation that something is wrong when you're being challenged every challenge is then turned into unhappiness there's a big difference between a challenge and unhappiness so when you have delusory expectations of the world, then the world will make you unhappy and not happy but you continue to believe that something has gone fundamentally wrong in your life because life does not leave you alone, you want some peace, you want some ah, you want a sense of I've arrived, this is it and occasionally it comes but it never lasts for very long so that's the dilemma the underlying state of ignorance, not knowing that the function of this world is to challenge you because only by challenging you does it provide the necessary incentive to awaken you and it is that you notice after a while that as you gradually begin to awaken out of the unconsciousness which is the complete identification with the conceptual egoic mind you begin to realize that oh a lot of the unhappiness that you experience, and unhappiness is a generic term that could be many many things even a state of irritation is already unhappiness sadness is unhappiness anger is unhappiness, any state that doesn't feel good is unhappiness any state of unhappiness you begin to realize that a greater part of it is not derived from the situations in your life, and when you realize that, that's the beginning of an awakening let's say 90% of the unhappiness that you encounter is actually produced by your mind and that's an amazing realization there remain 10% unhappiness you might be very somebody, a loved one dies close to you, of course you experience, you weep that is of course normal but if you observe the various forms of unhappiness in your life from the very the mildest forms of unhappiness to the more extreme forms of unhappiness let's say just two brief examples a mild very small little bit of unhappiness arises many times when things happen in daily life and you can't immediately get what you want you're on the phone trying to get talk to your bank but of course there's no human being there and even that is a minor form of unhappiness but it is you get very irritated and you think well this is caused by this dreadful bank that has no longer human beings that you can speak to or you're lining up airports are a great place to observe small forms of unhappiness because often so many things go wrong and you're lining up and this line up is not moving and of course these people are just so inefficient I'm never going to fly with them again and you feel more and more and in any of these situations if you observe okay unhappiness is arising is it really coming from the situation or is it coming from the way in which I speak to myself about the situation does it derive from the mental commentary about the situation or is it the situation and in most cases you actually find and I suggest you start with little small forms of unhappiness you will find that the unhappiness is derived from the narrative is derived from your self talk in the head

now not each one of

[Speaker 1] (8:07:25 - 8:10:44)

you not everyone of you is able to yet step into no thought without some kind of help meditation is designed to help you with that but as you probably know the main thing I recommend is to have some attention in the inner energy field of your body and that keeps thought at bay in a gentle non-violent way not willpower it involves no willpower so it involves just a decision that right now you would prefer to be alert and still and not be thinking and that decision could you could arrive at because you've realized that let's say for the past hour you've been engaged in futile useless thinking that all it did was make you unhappy and suddenly the awareness is there again that had been temporarily lost and you say what's all this futile thinking about it's just making me unhappy it has no point whatsoever and then a decision comes to not to think because you realize there is another dimension in you that is deeper than thinking so you say okay I'd rather be there than up there in the mind and how can I get there because the mind will have its momentum so unless you're already your presence power so to speak is already quite developed you may find it very hard to stop the momentum once it started to stop the momentum of thinking has this enormous pull a gravitational pull behind it and for some if presence power is not yet that developed you can say I need to stop thinking but I can't because it goes on and on and I can't stop it it's like a river you can't get out of this raging river it drags you along just try especially when you're stuck in a train of negative thinking or fearful thinking or angry thinking you don't even want to get out because you're so identified with the stream of thinking that your sense of self is in it and you don't want to lose that sense of self it's a fictitious sense of self but it's a sense of self and so you don't want to stop your train of angry thinking you want more angry thinking and if possible you're looking for more feedback from others to reinforce your angry thinking I need another argument and after you've walked back out of the room one hour argument you walk back into the room because you haven't had enough you need to talk to that person again oh one more thing I want to tell you

[Speaker 17] (8:10:44 - 8:10:44)
so

and even when that person is no longer there you're still thinking and then you need to pick up the phone and tell your friend about it and then you repeat the whole argument you just had and how right you are and how wrong the other person was and then when you hang up the phone it still goes on in your head so you can enormous and at that moment to tell somebody you need to stop thinking would be futile the person doesn't even want to stop thinking because that person is the thinking total identification with thought so there needs to be a realization some awareness needs to be there it's totally pointless to talk to anybody about stopping thinking without having at least some access to awareness maybe not in the moment of enormously empowered thinking and empowered not in a good way but the awareness needs to bear what's going on inside me right now and then at some point you might be able to realize what's happening to you it's happening to you you didn't actually do it, it just happened to you because you're being possessed by your mind and then at some point you realize that there is a choice, you can actually perhaps not when you're in the middle of it, at some point a very strong mind stream subsides, you might get tired of it and then it goes and then finally you go oops and then do I choose to carry on?

Does it make me feel happy? No it doesn't I thought it did because I felt so good to be angry about that but it doesn't make you feel the body doesn't really feel, if you asked your body it would tell you this feels horrible but of course if you're not in touch with your body you don't even know that and then at some moment the choice comes in and so at other moments the choice may come much more quickly because it's just the usual stream of futile in the middle of the night you wake up, the usual stream of futile thinking and then awareness comes in, there's a choice and then a decision comes and that decision is it's just no willpower it's just a decision I'd rather be still than not be thinking and once you know that then you can take your attention into the inner energy field of the body that's your choice instead of giving more attention to your thinking you just take your attention into the inner energy field of the body and suddenly you feel the aliveness that pervades the entire body and so you have taken consciousness away from the mind and put it in here and you can't think that much anymore you can't feel the body and be engaged in a lot of thinking and if you really fully experience the aliveness in the inner body the mind stops and so that is a becomes an anchor for awareness an anchor for presence even if you just even if you cannot feel the entire body it would be enough to just go into your hands with your attention just take consciousness into your hands and feel the aliveness in your hands that alone can take attention away from useless thinking and can you continue to feel because that is part of experiencing the present moment which actually feels quite good it feels good to be alive that's an amazing realization so inner body or even just a part of the body, the totality of the body is best if you can it's not that difficult, you start with one part, hands and can I feel my feet also, yeah I can feel hands and feet can I feel my legs, a little bit less and then the totality of oh okay I got it you might also notice that you are breathing then which is the other way it can be combined with body awareness but breathing is the other way of taking attention away from the mind the most ancient meditation method is breath awareness because breath awareness takes attention away from thinking but keeps you alert and breath happens all the time and breath is virtually formless so it's easier to get in touch with a formless consciousness by placing attention on the formless breath other meditation objects are clearly defined in form you can have an object that you focus on you can have a mental object that you focus on you can have a mantra that you focus on those can work too, but they are more clearly defined in form the breath is a kind of where is the breath, you can't say here it is, it's semi formless or formless, so to place attention on that which can also automatically bring you in touch with the body the in-breath it's so beautiful to have attention on your breath and the out-breath and immediately your mind becomes still so you can either be thinking or can have your attention on your breathing but you can't have both the moment you think you're not aware of your breath anymore and that also really applies to the inner body, to have full attention in the inner body, you can't be thinking, so those two things which are really closely linked breath awareness you can make it into a meditation so you can sit in meditation and then you can observe the in-going and out-going breath you can also observe the gaps between the in-going and out-going breath, you breathe out a brief gap of nothingness and then you start breathing in again a brief gap of neither in nor out and the cycle continues I read somewhere that the Buddha said if you're aware of your breath for one hour, I don't know if they even had hours at the time but if you're aware of your breath for one hour you'll be completely enlightened but if you lose it, you have to start from the beginning again just one thought coming in, okay, start all over okay, I can see one or two of you saying, I'm going to do that this mind made sense of self is also much more focused on the negative than the positive, to be free you awaken to who you are beyond your history and your life situation and I trust you're not waiting for me to start the meditation because then you would have missed that it started already and you would think about meditation in terms of doing something but you don't actually do a meditation as long as you're doing a meditation you're not really meditating or the meditation is not fulfilling its purpose meditation, true meditation is not a technique or a mantra it's about becoming aware of the being dimension that's already the essence of who you are and you don't have to do anything to become aware of the being dimension in fact all you have to do is to stop doing and that's not a doing now to stop doing does not necessarily mean stop external activities but it means not to be focused exclusively on doing so that your entire attention is continuously absorbed by the doing dimension which of course all goes back to thinking thinking is doing and then it becomes some external activity which is fine because that is one level of who you are you have to do things in this world and you have to think and it's good doing and thinking is good but if that's all there is in your life then you're missing the deeper dimension and then doing and thinking is continuous absorption in that dimension of form becomes frustrating leads to anxiety or depression burnout a sense of meaninglessness after a while and all those who are not in touch with the deeper dimension the dimension of being which is the essence of who you are which I sometimes call the essence dimension or your essence identity being able to sense and this is why we are here now being able to sense your essence identity in addition to having a form identity which is always connected with some kind of doing and thinking that is liberating so what you're liberated from is an exclusive identification with who you are on the level of form the body the mind and whatever the mind identifies with in the realm of form mental images that arise that the mind identifies with and says that's me that's my body me my possessions my status in society my work, my function my social function my social and economic position, my class social class or background my knowledge that I have accumulated or any other image mental image which may not necessarily be positive, it could be negative me, the victim me, the one who was never given a chance all these are mental images that you derive your sense of self from and usually it's a certain bundle of images which in every image is also a little story and this bundle of images becomes the self, the me or what you refer to when you say I and yes that is one could say who you are on the level of form but even on that level it's certain stories that you believe in that tell you something about who you are in relation to others and your past and your history your successes, failures, achievements these are perspectives on what happened to you or what you did or failed to do what other people did to you one could have other perspectives you could have the perspective I'm a successful wealthy professional and your ex-wife might have a different story about you call you an obnoxious jerk or you can have a negative story about yourself on this dimension of form one could easily have a story I could tell you a story why I am a very unfortunate human being you may not believe it but I could and it would be very convincing and I could tell you a story why I'm one of the greatest there would be stories and every one of you you could have a story about you that proves that you are justified in being miserable or you could have another story that says you are actually very good but they are all just stories so there will be some stories in your mind but is that who you are and the stories of course refer to other people your reflection in the lives of others and so they don't exist in isolation and they are reinforced by others and so on who am I?

so the question is are you what your mind tells you about yourself on the level of form that's one way of looking at who you are but there is a deeper dimension we've just been talking about form identity and what most humans don't know yet because it's not taught at school whereas it should be one of the most important things it's not one of the most the most important thing taught at school there is in you a deeper dimension there is an essence identity that you can sense even while you play whatever your role is or your function is in the world of form and even while you do things and deal with things and speak to people and even think it is possible to sense in the background of your life your essence identity and what is that?

it's this being aware that there is a presence in you which is not the right way of describing it let's put it differently being aware that you are a presence being aware of the presence that you are I am another way of pointing to it being aware quite simply right now that you are aware that you are I am and that has no content it's just a knowing a sensing of a presence and that is who or what you are the one thing that you cannot doubt is that there is a conscious presence here I am that before there is any content to it that is the light of consciousness and then things appear in the light of consciousness or illuminated by the light of consciousness or the light of consciousness becomes those things thoughts sense perceptions but there would be no sense perceptions without the light of consciousness there would be no thoughts without the light of consciousness in other words there would be no world without you because you are the light of consciousness in which the world appears and that's form

the world of form

[Speaker 1] (8:35:10 - 8:41:31)
I sometimes speak of bringing the transcendent dimension into your life without which your life no matter what you achieve is very limited the transcendent dimension is not an achievement it's more like a discovery because it's already here so it's not something you need to get which would imply future but the discovery of something that's already here it's not something but we have to use words and this is about the most important thing no matter who you are or what your function is in this world this is about the most important thing there is so we are here right now so that you can deepen your access to it or for some of you discover for yourself what it is discover it directly so here today see if you can experience yourself as presence rather than as a person when you experience yourself as presence we could also say the presence within you the presence that you are that is the transcendence of the person and the transcendence of the person and the discovery of yourself as presence is here and now when you become so alert so awake to discover that alertness that wakefulness in you that there's no thinking there are spaces in between thinking of simple alert presence and the opening up of those spaces or that one space is the transcendence of the person because as that space opens up you suddenly realize there's a depth to you that you didn't know before but you have to have enough courage to go there because you have to give up everything that you thought you knew all the thoughts that you identified with so you step into the unknown in which one could almost say you become as nothing and I like that English word, you don't have that in other languages the English word nothing consists of no thing thing meaning form, something that has a particular form and you realize the presence of that which has no form and as you experience yourself as presence in which there's no thought just an alert consciousness you don't know who you are anymore

[Speaker 11] (8:41:33 - 8:41:34)
and that

[Speaker 1] (8:41:34 - 8:48:24)
may require some courage to go there some people go there without any spiritual teaching because they just cannot stand who they are anymore the person and the life that that person creates for them can't take anymore of that suffering the unhappiness the conflict the agony the negativity that they generate I can't take anymore that's a good point to reach too at that moment you have a choice you can commit suicide or preferably step into the unknown and discover that presence that's deeper than the person and then live in and through predominantly in and through that presence so when you look at something the presence is looking not the person how do you know whether the presence is looking at something or the person when you don't interpret mentally what you're looking at that's presence but you're very alert or you listen to something but you don't interpret it, there's just the listening and the presence without which there could be no listening listening and then in little situations in your life you discover that it's much more pleasant to be there as the presence rather than as the person you do perhaps simple routine activities as the presence an alert space space without calling things that happen good or bad anymore because when you call things good or bad it's the person the conceptual self the mind made self that includes other people you don't call other people good or bad anymore places situations whenever you fall into good and bad you are again a person you lose transcendence, transcendence is lost covered up no longer realized it's never really lost but it seems to be completely lost and then you're trying to get rid of what you called bad but that doesn't really work so as long as you call certain people bad you will continue to meet even if you run away or eliminate those people you'll meet more bad people and what you focus on mentally grows and situations also so if you can encounter people situations, places as a simple presence without taking a position towards them allow everything to be in this moment as it is now that's the ego doesn't like that the ego is the mind made self that lives on judgment if you relinquish judgment the ego disappears of course it doesn't want to disappear but you realize that life becomes a much more pleasant experience without that person continuously judging everything and everybody the unconditioned dimension of consciousness the unconditioned dimension to who you are you the unconditioned you the unconditioned I which has nothing to do with your past or your physical

body

[Speaker 1] (8:48:26 - 8:51:58)
or your person or personality and the unconditioned dimension is not something that you achieve because it's already here it's something you just something to discover here and now achievement if you think in terms of achievement and associated achievement with spiritual awakening enlightenment realization or achieving the unconditioned consciousness if you use the word achievement or if that's the underlying assumption that it is an achievement there's an implication that it's in the past because you need to achieve it sorry there's an implication that it's in the future because you need to achieve it there's something to achieve you're pushing it away out of the present and so you miss it again because you're trying to achieve it and continuously as long as you're trying to achieve that spiritual realization or whatever you want to call it then it's always one step away from you or a hundred steps or a hundred miles or a million miles it doesn't matter whether it's one step or a million miles it's not here that's the underlying assumption and so you cannot discover it because you think it's something to achieve the thought that there's something to achieve in the future prevents you from discovering what's in the present on other levels of your life achievement is fine it's good to achieve certain things to learn something new to bring something into manifestation to create something even to have goals but when it's about finding out the deepest reality of who you are the very foundation for your life your existence then the idea of

[Speaker 2] (8:51:58 - 8:52:00)
achievement is a hindrance

[Speaker 1] (8:52:26 - 8:52:30)
so the unconditioned dimension of consciousness

[Speaker 2] (8:52:32 - 8:52:43)
is to be discovered it is

[Speaker 1] (8:52:48 - 8:53:15)
one could almost say hiding or concealed covered up behind and in between your thoughts behind and even within all

[Speaker 2] (8:53:15 - 8:53:16)
sense perceptions

[Speaker 1] (8:53:28 - 8:53:39)
and so to discover it you need to find that space

[Speaker 2] (8:53:39 - 8:53:43)
in your consciousness in consciousness

[Speaker 1] (8:53:43 - 8:56:02)
where you are not thinking so to stop thinking may not be the best way of pointing towards it although I might have used that expression a few times to stop thinking again implies that there's some active doing involved it might also make you believe that thinking needs to be forcefully pushed out of your consciousness which is not how it works it's to discover that that space of not thinking is already there between when one thought subsides before the next thought comes there's a space of pure awareness without mind activity you can do it here because this is a live meditation whenever I'm not speaking which is part of the time here be aware that I'm not speaking so we have the gaps between one sentence and another sentence, between one word and another word the moment you become aware of the gap, like now you're not thinking

[Speaker 2] (8:56:09 - 8:56:28)
it's very subtle and very simple, and yet

[Speaker 1] (8:56:28 - 8:56:53)
that's the most important thing in your life to become familiar with that dimension conscious without thought, spacious still but alert not the stillness of moving towards sleep

[Speaker 2] (8:56:54 - 8:56:56)
but alert stillness

[Speaker 1] (8:57:16 - 8:57:24)
so in daily life, become aware of that space, that inner

[Speaker 2] (8:57:24 - 8:57:30)
space of alert stillness as much as you can

[Speaker 1] (8:57:35 - 8:58:33)
initially you may need a crutch so to speak, something that helps you for example alert sense perception especially looking at something like the sky which is spacious without imposing any thought on it but being aware of the one who is looking whatever you look, it might be the sky it could be other things too you look at something at the same time you're aware that you are looking, not when I say you it's not the historical you not the person

[Speaker 2] (8:58:33 - 8:58:36)
but you as the consciousness

[Speaker 1] (8:58:36 - 9:00:24)
so there is a self-awareness behind the sense perception not the personality self the essence self which is formless and because it's formless the Buddha used the expression no self because he associated self with form anything that is has a separate sense of identity that's what Jesus pointed to if nobody understood it at the time or 2000 years afterwards deny thyself there are other translations that would be more suitable look away from the self that what you usually consider yourself look deeper, recognize the ultimate unreality

[Speaker 2] (9:00:25 - 9:00:30)
of the conditioned self

[Speaker 1] (9:00:34 - 9:00:42)
so becoming familiar with awareness of presence, pure awareness pure presence in daily life

[Speaker 2] (9:00:44 - 9:00:46)
of course here especially

[Speaker 1] (9:00:46 - 9:01:06)

becoming familiar with

[Speaker 2] (9:01:07 - 9:01:09)
just being present

[Speaker 1] (9:01:17 - 9:01:28)
as you know we can use your breath awareness to take you also out of thinking become present feel the inner body

[Speaker 2] (9:01:29 - 9:01:31)
also can be

[Speaker 1] (9:01:31 - 9:02:29)
a crutch or a portal into it and then a time comes, maybe now don't wait for it when you can just go step out of thinking without needing anything to help you step out of thinking you can just go okay I'm not thinking now and then you look around wherever you may be whether you are in surroundings that are pleasant, conducive to meditation you could do it there or whether you are in surroundings that are challenging

[Speaker 2] (9:02:29 - 9:02:33)
and you suddenly

[Speaker 1] (9:02:33 - 9:04:04)
discover that the main challenge is not your surroundings or your situation but your thoughts about it and even at that moment you can step out of thinking which implies that you accept that moment completely because the moment you step out of thinking there is nobody there to argue with what is because arguing with what is is thinking, the moment you step out of thinking it implies there is complete alignment with the is-ness of this moment, you are not arguing with it anymore which is totally futile of course which causes suffering unhappiness and suddenly the situation may still be challenging on a practical level but it's no longer challenging on a psychological level in other words it doesn't make you unhappy anymore you are not unhappy not because you pushed unhappiness away suppressed it no it dissolved because it was created and sustained

by thinking

[Speaker 1] (9:04:13 - 9:05:34)
so it's wonderful to discover in challenging situations that you can step out of thinking there too and some people need a challenge to be able to be motivated to take that step out of thinking they can't stand this unhappiness anymore and suddenly realize it's basically my thinking that's making me unhappy and not what's happening and they step out of thinking and for people who go through extreme suffering that's the erosion of the ego that can happen in that way because the ego is identification with thinking when you are not thinking there is no ego and if your life situation is so unpleasant that you can't stand the suffering anymore then the unpleasantness the challenging life situation forces you if you are ready for it forces you out of thinking whether through serious illness

[Speaker 2] (9:05:35 - 9:05:41)
serious loss and so on

[Speaker 1] (9:05:48 - 9:06:00)
but I suggest to you here that you don't wait for life to force you out of thinking but voluntarily step out of thinking it's an evolutionary

[Speaker 2] (9:06:03 - 9:06:15)

leap that step it's you jump out of thinking either because

[Speaker 1] (9:06:15 - 9:06:29)
you can't stand the suffering anymore or if you are advanced enough voluntarily and this is why we are here

[Speaker 2] (9:06:30 - 9:06:31)
what's happening here

[Speaker 1] (9:06:47 - 9:08:08)
and even while you think after a while you can notice that there is not a complete loss of awareness in the background even while you are thinking so at times it's wonderful to have these spaces of no thought and it's vital whether it's 5 seconds or 20 seconds or half a minute doesn't matter that's the evolution of consciousness that's the awakening and gradually you no longer rely on thinking or your sense of identity who you are sense of self which is always a fragile sense of identity

[Speaker 2] (9:08:12 - 9:08:18)
vulnerable always lacking in this or that

[Speaker 1] (9:08:20 - 9:13:33)
never satisfied for long and then sense of self shifts to presence you are essentially the presence awareness no form no past, no future so let's settle into the present moment access the stillness that's already within you even though you might not have realized it even with people who have the most turbulent and chaotic minds there is stillness underneath it and to find that it is vital to find that stillness within because otherwise you are at the mercy of your mind and you are lost in that continuous noise so here it's helpful for you to, as you I'm sure you know already to become aware of the silent spaces between the words rather than just pay attention to the words in fact be more interested so to speak in the silent spaces than the words the silent space on the external level is when I stop speaking so the sound is no longer produced and there is an absence of sound and that's what we call silence maybe not complete silence here because there are some background noises or perhaps you can hear birds and other other noise but when I don't speak there is the absence of noise except for the birds and when you are aware that there is an absence of noise there is a silence which is an external thing simultaneously something happens inside you and that's why it is so wonderful to be aware of external silence you may know this already but whether you've heard this before or not it doesn't matter, the important thing is to

realize it now so

[Speaker 1] (9:13:45 - 9:23:27)
when you pay attention to silence what is it you pay attention to? nothing in particular there is no content to silence when I speak the words, the sounds are the content when I stop speaking there is no content and if you are new to this you might even ask what is it that I pay attention to when I pay attention to silence and the answer is nothing really well, then the question arises how can I pay attention to nothing well you pay attention to that space of no content and then something happens inside you simultaneously you might notice that when you pay attention to just the fact that there is a silence, you can do it when you are alone in a room you can do it in the middle of the night you can do it out in nature, you can do it in a church preferably when it is empty or a temple anywhere where there is some silence you become aware of it don't overlook the silence and don't always look for the noise so what happens inside you when you become aware of that absence of noise thinking subsides and you become still inside the moment you become aware of silence and pay attention to silence you become still inside the ceaseless stream of thinking subsides and what's left is only that alert space you may not be able to sustain it for very long by yourself, it doesn't matter as long as it's there, if it's only for a few seconds, it's good enough to start with and here perhaps you are able to sustain it perhaps during the entire duration of our meditation in other words let go of thinking without falling asleep and just be here present as a presence conscious presence now the words i speak are so simple that you can't really think about them because there's nothing to figure out so to understand what i'm saying you don't need to add some more thought to it so the best way of being here with me is to embrace the state of thoughtless awareness no need to think and you haven't disappeared the essence of who you are is not only still here the essence of who you are has emerged more fully now than you are still and that essence of who you are is not content based it is inner space formless consciousness what the Buddha called emptiness but every term that you use to talk about it is limiting it's emptiness but there's far more to it than emptiness it's consciousness that makes thinking possible that makes sense perception possible that makes feeling possible that makes it possible for you to be here as a person without consciousness there's no person but usually you're not aware of consciousness you're only aware of what arises in consciousness in other words you're aware of the content but not of the space without which the content could not be so right now as you become still inside you can realize that that stillness is your consciousness before anything arises in it and when I say your consciousness it's not absolutely true but that's okay at first you sense it as your consciousness but ultimately it's not your consciousness

it's just

[Speaker 1] (9:23:34 - 9:27:56)
consciousness the one consciousness and it's not produced by your physical brain although there is clearly a correlation between your physical brain and consciousness but I would suggest to you that the physical brain is more like a channel for consciousness than the producer or the generator of consciousness in the same way that the radio does not generate the music and the words that you hear coming out of the radio and yet the radio is necessary for this music, the words, the sounds to be produced but the radio does not produce them it gives them form channels them in the same way your physical brain is a kind of receiver for consciousness and gives that formless consciousness a particular form so that through that particular form the formless consciousness can appear in this dimension as you and as the world so often when people at night look up at the stars they get a feeling of insignificance and you might think compared to that vastness i am nothing or you might think compared to that vastness i am a microbe on the surface of this planet short-lived fleeting existence on a cosmic scale the human life is just like a spark it goes just gone, and it's gone and many other sparks but they all very short-lived one spark after another

[Speaker 2] (9:27:56 - 9:27:58)
so

but that feeling that sense of insignificance that's not all there is, and that's not the entire truth of it in fact it's not the truth of it at all you may be insignificant as regards physical size or the duration of your life but you are highly significant in the universe because through you consciousness enters this dimension and so through you the universe becomes conscious of itself be yourself in the oracle of Delphi in ancient Greece of course had the inscription know yourself but knowing yourself is the same as being yourself exactly the same at that level there's nothing to know you are present but there's no further knowing about presence, there's nothing you can know about presence, you can only be present so to know yourself at a deeper level means to be present and know yourself as presence, there's another level to knowing yourself, there are two levels one is knowing your own ego recognizing your ego when it happens, observe it then you know yourself on that level at a deeper level, knowing yourself is being yourself is the universe telling me that I should stop speaking so to know yourself on the more superficial level is self observation and in self observation the ego dissolves and then knowing yourself at a deeper level is being the presence that's all and so both go together because if you're not the presence then there is not enough presence in you to observe the ego in you so they go together, you need the presence because only the presence needs to be there so that you can recognize your own ego in recognizing the ego it dissolves all the patterns become harmless you're no longer possessed by them let's say you look good and you like to rest nicely there's nothing wrong with that but do you derive your entire or large part of your sense of who you are from that which is you're in the grip of ego or are you simply enjoying looking good do it while you can it won't last why not enjoy if you look nice enjoy it and you can superficially even enjoy being seen by others oh okay you can still, there can be a superficial enjoyment in that as long as you're rooted at a deeper level you can still enjoy certain things on the level of form without being completely trapped in them so that they don't no longer constitute the foundation for your sense of self then you know, well okay I look nice now and I'll make the most of it because I know what's going to happen to the physical form what time will do to it also a possession if you have something that you enjoy why not enjoy it but do you derive your sense of who you are from what you have that's a huge trap so you can enjoy an object that is in your possession without the egoic attachment to it, there's a difference between egoic attachment and enjoyment of something and sometimes you may not know whether you have egoic attachment or simple enjoyment until you lose it if then there's a sense of oh it's gone the car that I loved driving in somebody must have taken it and now you will know whether there was an egoic attachment or just enjoyment if there was egoic attachment you suffer there's a lot of upset and anger and wailing or somebody scratched it, somebody when you get back to your car you just said it washed, shiny and you get back to it you scratch and here's the opportunity of finding out what kind of relationship you had with your car because before you might have told yourself I like this car, I love it but there's no ego in it whatsoever and also when there's not an egoic attachment to things you're not going to accumulate unnecessarily possessions that you don't need, that in the egoic state just have a function of satisfying the permanent sense of lack that is the ego, so then you have to go on shopping expeditions every other weekend and then you come home with these shiny bags and for a moment the ego feels elated and here's a new pair of shoes but the satisfaction doesn't last very long and then the sense of lack comes back

I need some

[Speaker 1] (9:36:20 - 9:39:28)
more and in some people it even develops into an addiction to shopping amazing and that's a clear sign if one or two of you still occasionally experience that, it's a clear sign that oh that's the ego and that there's always something lacking in this part of the egoic identity is a continuous sense of not enough on whatever level and some people try to meet it on the shopping level so the difference between appreciating something nice nothing wrong with that because that's part of our surface reality where there are objects and some objects can be very lovely to hold and you never the sense of this belongs to me is less and less and there can be an appreciation without the sense of this is my thing so whatever you have you look after it for a while as the famous watch advert tells you, it's a very expensive watch and they say you never actually own this watch you only look after it for the next generation that's a that's an ad with a slight spiritual change to it but unfortunately you have to pay at least $20,000 to buy that watch so I my confession is that on the whole I don't get attracted too much to buying things, I never know what to buy or to even clothes, it's hard to buy anything it just doesn't work you might have noticed laughter and that's why when I look into a shop window I sometimes can look at something nice but I never feel the compulsion to actually buy it but as far as objects are concerned one I like mechanical watches so that's my personal thing, watches that tick they go, you wind them up or they are automatic when you move your hand and they go tick tick tick and people have made them, they sat down and meticulously put them together, the watchmaker in the old fashioned way giving it a lot of attention

it's just there, it's just there

[Speaker 1] (9:39:32 - 9:40:28)
and if an object is made with somebody giving it a lot of attention, it doesn't have to be a watch, it can be a little artifact that somebody has spent time making and giving it attention, then once it's finished, it has that sense of quality to it, it's like the consciousness of the maker has become part of the object and really perhaps this is what we mean by real quality that somebody has also, you can do the same with making a meal then also, if you make a meal that has been made by somebody who has given complete attention to the making of it it adds an additional energy field to the meal that you can sense it's done with care and attention

[Speaker 10] (9:40:53 - 9:41:13)
Hi I feel as I become more aware, my pain body becomes more it becomes overactive at times when it does hit me and I'm wondering if there's a way, do we ever dissolve entirely the pain body? Can we ever dissolve it?

[Speaker 1] (9:41:15 - 9:42:36)
Yes, I've quite a few times people have asked that question and it's an important valid question but a more important point is before I answer that question to what extent you still identify with it or get taken over by it because that is where the pain body continuously renews itself to what extent does this old emotion that gets triggered from time to time, to what extent does it truly possess you and rises up into your mind and totally determines while it is active what you think and what you do and how you react to people and situations to what extent does it take you over totally or is there already a gap of awareness where you are able to know that the pain body has become activated and it is not totally using your mind and not totally controlling what you do or say so how does that look in your life?

[Speaker 10] (9:42:36 - 9:43:17)
When I interact with people I feel like I'm more aware of it and able to calm it but I think it's when I'm by myself that it's most penetrating especially after a night or a beautiful day and I go to sleep feeling very at peace and I wake up and it's just there associated with certain kind of mind activity? Not really, just waking up in the morning, lately I wake up and it's boom right there, it's very penetrating I don't know why I would go to sleep one way where do you feel it? In my head very strong force, pressure

[Speaker 1] (9:43:17 - 9:43:23)
yes but not particular kind of thoughts maybe

[Speaker 10] (9:43:23 - 9:43:44)
I guess on some level when I really evaluate it probably just a cycle of lack of success in a certain area of my career or life so it repeats, am I going to start the same day and continue the day as I and not get anywhere with it yes a powerful way to

approach it and ultimately dissolve it is to accept in whatever form the pain body arises accept that's how it is at this moment accept the reality of this moment, in this case it's the inner reality of this moment, it would also apply to the outer reality of this moment and be with it as the aware space for it, so you step back, the way of putting it is you take a step backwards from it into yourself and so here is the feeling and so you go back within so to speak, not literally of course, you step back and you become the awareness that's around it that's always there but it can be you can lose consciousness of that when a strong phenomenon arises either external or internal, a storm can absorb all your attention but be the space for it, always, and that is the most powerful way to dissolve what's there, rather than even wanting to get rid of it wanting to get rid of it very often strengthens it and produces a problem a new level of problems because then by wanting not to have it and get rid of it you not only have the problem of having that, you have the problem of not being able to achieve to get rid of it and so you can get angry about that or upset about that but you are most powerful when you are able to bring acceptance to whatever arises at this moment and that is a gesture that requires a certain alertness, it is not a passive state, it is in one sense it is passive because it says this is what is and that this gesture seems to be a passive gesture, it seems to be a gesture of allowing passivity but that's not all because without the active principle at the same time which is an uncompromising yes to what is which is not that, it's the sort of presence, this is what is and this is what I accept because this is what is that's the other polarity, the two come together in complete acceptance it's a passive principle of allowing and the active principle of cutting through all the nonsense of the human mind with a sort of presence one could say it's a masculine and feminine male and female combined so you have often you see images of Kwan Yin or Mary, like this is the archetypal female spaciousness, space beautiful, and then of course we could also say this is the female and then this is the male and the two have to come together and that is true acceptance, so it's an uncompromising yes which is the sort of presence and it's the seemingly passive embracing what is practice use that as your spiritual practice then any phenomenon that arises whether external or internal in this case it's internal phenomenon can become fuel for the fire of presence anything that arises so rather than pushing it away use it as fuel

[Speaker 10] (9:47:54 - 9:48:13)
for presence why is it I'm getting that but literally at night feeling that and being okay with whatever I wake up with but then it's just you have to let go of the why

[Speaker 1] (9:48:14 - 9:48:42)
because then you start pursuing it the mind of course does that I analyze it way too much because if you pursue the why that leads you to more whys, it leads you to that why and then you would have to go back to past lifetimes and even that's not enough because maybe it all started the bottom of the sea when before life came out of the sea where you got eaten a million times by other fishes

[Speaker 15] (9:48:45 - 9:48:46)
thank you

[Speaker 13] (9:49:04 - 9:49:26)
one aspect of the insanity of this world is we assume infinite growth on a finite planet we are coming up against the limitations of that assumption how do you suggest we accept the suffering that that will entail thank you

[Speaker 1] (9:49:38 - 9:49:53)
okay that was not the answer that was just sound the structures that are in place

[Speaker 15] (9:49:53 - 9:50:00)
the economic structures now are a reflection of a certain status[Speaker 1] (0:00 - 6:32)
Of consciousness, collective state of consciousness in humans, which is largely the egoic state. The ego needs always more because the ego lives in a state of constant insufficiency, a constant sense of neediness and lack. It does not feel it has arrived, it needs more.

So that's the unconscious urge. So if that's in the individual human, and if that mind structure is in millions of individuals, humans, then these individual humans create these external structures, organizations, and so on that reflect the original mind setting. So the companies that sit, the economy needs to grow and grow and it cannot, nothing can grow indefinitely.

It's just not everything grows and then it shrinks or dissolves, and then something new arises. That is a constant cycle. And yes, of course, when something that is ego created dissolves, it leads to suffering.

That's inevitable. And it is this very suffering. I don't know if that's a politically correct statement, but I'd say it anyway, because perhaps the political statement is nobody should have to suffer.

It's a travesty that humans suffer. Nobody should die. Death is a travesty.

I'm against it. Of course, I'm against suffering. Yes, humans shouldn't suffer.

It's just, that's not the reality of it. Humans create out of the unconsciousness. They bring about their own suffering, both on a personal level.

And if you amplify that on a collective level. Now, if on a personal level, you, out of the egoic unconsciousness, you embark on certain causes of action that reflect the egoic unconsciousness, you will encounter self-created suffering. You make others suffer around you and they will make you suffer.

You encounter the unconsciousness and the suffering that's generated by unconsciousness as a person. And the same applies to the collective. When the collective no longer works, because it's the very foundation was delusional, then it creates suffering in humans.

But as in the individual, the suffering, or it is created through unconsciousness, the redeeming feature behind suffering is that it's the very suffering that was created by unconsciousness that has the effect potentially of awakening you and transporting you beyond ego. And when that happens on a larger scale, it still applies. So there will be suffering.

Humans will have to suffer. But ultimately, whether it's a million people who are suffering because a huge company has collapsed, it's always comes, there's always, every one out of these million individuals is one individual. There's your suffering.

This one individual is suffering. And in the suffering of this one individual, there is a potential of awakening. But it is very helpful if as many people as possible come into contact with these teachings that show the possibility that is concealed behind suffering.

And that suffering in a certain stage is inevitable as long as there's unconsciousness. And then the suffering itself has the potential of awakening you. Again, coming back to what we talked about earlier, the cross, the image of suffering, the cross is the image of suffering.

The cross is also symbol for the divine. So it's the self-created suffering, both personal level and collective level, that is actually part of the evolutionary progress, the evolution of human consciousness. And one thing that is also good to remember is that we tend to regard every human being as a completely autonomous entity.

That's list, here's the human and here's the rest of the world. Of course, the ego sees itself like that also. Here's me, the most interesting thing in the universe, and there's the rest of the universe.

That's how the ego perceives me against the universe. That's the ego's perception. Of course, it's a misperception.

And every human being is a temporary expression of the one evolving consciousness, a ray of light, so to speak, from the one source. And so every human being is an expression of that. There is the eternal consciousness that is the eternal in you is gradually awakening.

And it awakens in many cases through the dream, an unpleasant dream, but that's a long story. Don't need to go, it may make sense to you just by giving you a little hint. There's a nightmare.

Sometimes my life had to become a nightmare before the awakening happened. If my life had not become a nightmare in my own mind, there would have been no awakening. So I'm very grateful that it became a nightmare because if you're in a nightmare, you don't want to carry on dreaming.

You say, get me out of here. If you have a relatively pleasant dream, if it's up and downs, oh, I might as well stay here. I'm quite comfortable in this dream because here's another good meal waiting for me.

And I'm going to eat this in my dream. And it tastes so good. I may be dreaming, but it tastes great.

And then you're sick for a little while, but then there's something else. So your question is, how do you cope or how do you explain? Hi.

[Speaker 7] (6:35 - 6:52)
How do you accept the suffering that awaits? Accept. And one small piece, I'm old enough that I will escape a lot of it, but I think about my children who will live in a world in which there will be a lot more limits and limitations.

[Speaker 1] (6:52 - 15:57)
Yes, that may well be the case. So how do I help them? You help them by teaching them what acceptance really means by making them more conscious.

And you do that by being conscious yourself. And occasionally you might, they might be open to hearing something that you say to them occasionally. Then they will be ready then and they will be able to use the suffering.

I mean, I've been, the first half of the 20th century was a dreadful nightmare for millions upon millions of humans when the first and second world war happened, genocide happened on an enormous unimaginary scale. Insanity often, you can't even imagine the insanity of it. And you ask, will we have to go through something like this again?

Maybe, maybe yes. There is, teach them how to suffer and by learning how to suffer, to go beyond suffering. That's what you can teach them.

And then, so before you depart from this dimension, they will know and then they are ready. Is it possible to live without having a relationship with yourself? Neither good nor bad.

Is it possible to be so completely yourself that the mind made image of me dissolves? Yes, this is why we're here. This is the essence of our gathering.

The mind made image is connected to thought, to continuous thinking. It's fueled by, perpetuated by, upheld by the continuous thought processes, many of which are about me and myself. And so I have a, through thought, I have a relationship with a thought made entity.

Which sometimes feels quite comfortable and sometimes feels not pleasant, don't want to have to live with that person. And of course it's true. Many people live with a self that is very unpleasant, that creates a lot of trouble, a lot of problems, a lot of suffering, that continuously criticizes them, that continuously blames them, that continuously tells them they're not enough.

And they live with that entity, mind made, conditioned mind movements, conditioned in such a way that they attack you continuously. And that's the self that they have a relationship with. They would never live with a person like that.

You would run out of the room. You couldn't live with a person for more than a day. If your partner, somebody you live with did that to you, what your self image is doing to you through thought, you would have filed for divorce long ago.

But you can't do that with that because it's on the mind. It walks with you. And there you have this complaining and whining and accusing and, oh, get away.

Get away. And a large part of that is because you're identified with thought. There isn't the ability to step back from thought and watch thought, watch that.

And here, the mind made entity, because that self that you have a relationship with is part of the story-based self, the me. That was the self that I had a very unpleasant relationship with for many years. I had a very, extremely painful relationship with myself.

I couldn't live with myself anymore. And so I somehow said, that's it. I can't live with it anymore.

That's it. But that was so total that I no longer sustained, fueled the self through thought. I didn't know anything about it.

It just happened. So the mind made image dissolved. The self that I couldn't live with, that was so heavy, dissolved.

And what was left was simply I. So the I shifted from, whereas before when I said I, I was referring to myself, the unhappy, dense I, the story-based I, that dissolved. And then the true I emerged, had always been there, presence.

I am nothing in particular anymore, a simple sense of presence or beingness. And for the first time I could walk and be without having a relationship with myself. And that there is something so precious in that I or presence, so it's beyond words.

You could say it's like a diamond. It's something extremely, very, very precious. That's why perhaps Buddhism sometimes has the image of a diamond.

But this is not comparative. It's not a sense of that deepest self, not the mind made self, is so precious that it knows itself to be that in a non-dualistic way without needing to compare itself to others. It has nothing to do with a form or any mind form.

So as presence arises, you don't need self-esteem anymore. You don't depend on that anymore because what dissolves is the mind made entity with which you have a relationship. And it's so self-esteem is an intermediate thing that for a little while makes your life more pleasant.

It's fine. And then after a while you see the unsatisfactory nature even of that, because you cannot uphold continuous self-esteem. It's hard work, all these affirmations.

And then things come into your life that tell you the opposite, inevitably, sooner or later. So then suddenly you don't love yourself anymore, nor do you hate yourself because there's no self to love. There's simply the state of this, which is love.

It emanates.

[Speaker 7] (16:17 - 17:52)
My question is divine inspiration or its close cousin has been called divine intuition. I'm an entrepreneur or otherwise known as an inventor. I work a lot with technology and entertainment.

Like to call myself an inventor as it feels more like a hands-on or old school title. Basically, I'm a child in a man's body who gets paid to play with a big kid's toolbox. I'm the first one to say that I've been blessed all of my life as ideas and solutions flow through me like water.

On a few occasions, I've taken one of these ideas all the way to market. Most of the fun part of the adventure is solving the issues that arise during the build. Designing a new concept feels like you're giving birth and is truly the most fun of the process.

But all things that go up can sometimes go down. How can I know that I am the sole owner of the idea or just another blessed person who is around for the spiritual broadcast to all of this idea? I've taught myself to stick with my intuition and allow nothing or nobody to stop the river of answers that are coming to me.

But then I should have slowed down and done more research to see if the idea was already out there and in production from another blessed person in the one. Do you know of a store like Costco or someplace where I can find a false divine message filter that I can use? Or maybe I can buy a second divine intuition card that will tell me when to chill out and slow down.

Okay. Well, chill out now.

[Speaker 1] (17:55 - 18:55)
Thank you. So from what I gather is that you are very creative. Enormous amount of creativity flows through, which is wonderful.

And the second, there's two other things that you seem to not be happy about. The two things you don't seem to be happy about is that there's too much coming through, is that it? There's too, there's a continuous influx and you are questioning whether that isn't truly yours or a new thing, or whether it already exists.

Can you put in your own words briefly, what exactly, what is it, you're a creative person, which is wonderful, but what is it about it that you find difficult? The downside?

[Speaker 7] (18:56 - 19:28)

Yeah. The downside is that everything is coming so easily that I proceed forward with the project, get very deep into the project, try and find other people that are working on a project like it, then only to find out that it wasn't just me getting the message about building this device. It was other people and I heard it in the now, as opposed to it just being delivered to me.

I was there for sort of a spiritual broadcast where a lot of people heard it and we're all working on the same thing at the same time. Very frustrating.

[Speaker 1] (19:29 - 21:55)
That's often the case because nothing is really yours, nothing that comes. It's something that you, to use a modern expression, I don't, not familiar, you don't usually use computer terminology, but you download, so to speak, and when one original idea comes, there are many examples for that in this 20th century and 19th century, very often it comes to several people at the same time. There's basically, there's only one consciousness.

It operates through the humans, through the human form, and so it's not, it's never your idea. It would be limiting and give you a wrong perspective on it and ultimately could even stop the flow if you ever thought that an idea belonged to you. Now, on a practical level, that's fine.

You can go to the patent office or whatever you do. That's fine, but the behind it, the psychological feeling, that's my idea. You took away my idea.

Well, perhaps it came to several people at the same time, and sometimes it's a race. If you're lucky, you get there first, and the others are just a little bit behind in developing it, so that I don't remember, but if I had a better memory, I could give examples. Perhaps you know them from inventions and so on that were done and somebody just got in and somebody was just behind, it was a little bit too late.

That you just have to accept that that is in the nature of the creative manifestation through humans that especially really new things can very often come through more than one channel, which is a human being. They come through more than one channel. It's something you have to accept, but if you can take practical steps to find out when something comes before you start spending a lot of time on developing it and or getting the finances necessary to develop it, if there's any way you can find out through the interconnectedness that we have through the internet and so on, whether somebody is already approaching the final stage of that particular thing already, in which case it would be pointless for you perhaps to pursue it. What most of us do is hide the fact that we're working on it so you don't see until it's already too late and you've got everything invested.

[Speaker 7] (21:55 - 22:04)

[Speaker 1] (22:04 - 26:18)
That's right. So then all you can do is do what you feel wants to be born through you and enjoy the process at all levels, all stages of the process. And then you may find either you come out first or somebody else does because then something else will come.

If several things come and only one out of several comes to fruition through you, that's fine. It's similar to a business. Spoke, speak occasionally to people who run businesses.

And often I've heard that they try new things. It's not perhaps as creative as you, but they try new things. And often they tell me out of 10 things they try, eight things prove to be failures.

Sometimes nine things prove to be failures. One thing works. And that one thing makes all the difference for the business.

That's right. That's often the case. So you have to accept when it's not, it doesn't reach its final stage because somebody else has gone there before you.

That's just how it is. Then there's no shortage in you of creative input. It'll come again.

And the next time you will be the first. So the main thing is to enjoy the process, not to allow frustration to build up. Do it joyfully.

And there may even be room occasionally for two people creating two things that are very similar, but not absolutely identical. I don't know, just throwing this out. Cetera.

Have fun, to use a somewhat superficial expression, but really means fun to enjoy doing what is the creative process. There's great intensity there. I know that intensity from the writing process.

When I wrote The Power of Now, the first book, occasionally, there was enormous intensity behind the writing process and I enjoyed it enormously. So there was always this. And then occasionally people ask me, what do you do?

I said, I'm writing a book. Yeah, what about? It's about living in the present moment.

And several times I heard, I wouldn't do that if I were you because so many people have written about that already. I said, haven't you read Ram Dass, Be Here Now? And that's old, that's not fashionable anymore anyway.

So present moment is passé. It's terrible. That's a great story.

So if I had listened to them, I would have thought maybe they're right, there are already so many, and there must be so many other people working on the present moment books. I might as well give up because I would have to compete with the 50 other present moment books. So I might as well do something else.

But fortunately, it was so joyful, the intense, the creative process, it wanted and needed to come out. So it wasn't really me saying, I am going to write this book. The book had to be written.

And if it hadn't been me, it would have been, very similar book, would have been somebody else. And if I had not obeyed this impulse to write, then I'm sure I would have fallen ill or died because it was so strong. I would have closed myself and the energy would have destroyed me.

It's like, it gets no outlet. You're not enabling it to manifest through you. And then it goes, gone.

That's right. So enjoy and it will work.

[Speaker 7] (26:19 - 26:22)
Keep planting seeds. Yes. Thank you.

Thank you.

[Speaker 6] (26:55 - 29:14)
First of all, I want to thank you and Eckhart for everything that you've given me and are giving me now. It's so greatly appreciated. I'm not sure if it's a question, but it's some, I need a response from you to clarify.

It's, it deals with a pain body and challenges, overcoming challenges, transcending challenges. And then I heard, I think I heard you say this morning, I heard Eckhart say yesterday, the good news is we don't have to suffer. So five years ago, coming up to five years, my son died.

And I went through, he died suddenly. So it was, and he also was my best friend. So it was, I can't even think about the suffering that I went through at that time.

You know, it's just like, it was, oh, I wailed, I cried. It was, I didn't have, I, for months, I just went there and that suffering, that pain and that broken heart was torn apart. And I remember to the point I was crawling on the ground down, I have a place down by the sea and I was there and he loved that place.

And we spent many wonderful times there together. And I was crawling on the ground and crying. And I heard him say to me, dad, stop that.

And that came to me, a shift happened. It was a change there. Of course, I've transcended it and I've overcome it, not completely, I never will overcome that completely, I don't think.

But what I want clarification from you on is I don't really believe, I don't fully understand that one can transcend, overcome, or have a choice in certain situations concerning that type of suffering. So there's where I'm wondering. When you say we don't have to suffer, we do have a choice.

I'm saying it has not been my experience in that case.

[Speaker 2] (29:17 - 30:13)
You know, as I said earlier, and what Eckhart says is suffering is our greatest teacher. So the suffering is teaching you. And you already know that in order to go beyond that suffering, that that's the evolution of human consciousness through you.

So consciousness is awakening through you. So not to say that, I almost see you and sense that in order to hold on to the memory of your son, that the fear of letting go of the suffering will somehow get you be less connected to your son. Yeah.

And that's not the case, and that's what your son was saying to you, you don't have to.

[Speaker 6] (30:13 - 30:14)
I appreciate that. You don't have to suffer.

[Speaker 2] (30:16 - 30:22)
Because you will be actually more connected to your son without the suffering being there.

[Speaker 6] (30:26 - 30:29)
Yeah, in a way, he tells me that.

[Speaker 2] (30:30 - 30:40)
Yeah. Yeah, he's telling you that. And he's saying to you, Dad, you don't have to suffer.

I'm right here.

[Speaker 6] (30:41 - 30:51)
Well, could you say that again, please? You know what? No, just tell me that I'm going to be more connected with my son by not suffering.

[Speaker 2] (30:52 - 31:46)
Yeah, absolutely. Because the suffering is just getting in the way for that real connection of, not of the form, the form is gone. Every form will pass away, but what is left behind is the essence.

And that true essence lives in you. Your son and you are no different. It's the same essence.

So you're going to be more connected to yourself, which is also your son. And that's the gift through his death that he's leaving you, is that space, that empty space, that void that he's leaving behind for you to go deeper into yourself.

[Speaker 6] (31:46 - 32:10)
Well, you know, it explains, when I go to his grave these days, I don't feel that suffering, I feel peace. So that's a wonderful gift. I know he gives me those gifts, and he's more present in a very positive way, in almost a jovial way, you know?

Because I'm trying to communicate with him. Sometimes he just laughs at my way of making efforts to communicate with him, more or less saying, hmm, I'm right beside you, kind of thing, you know?

[Speaker 2] (32:11 - 32:17)
Yeah, exactly. It's right here, it's all right here.

[Speaker 6] (32:18 - 32:19)
Thank you very much.

[Speaker 2] (32:20 - 38:48)
I have to share this story, this last story, because when Maya, our dog, passed away last September, and a few months before that, my father passed away, and actually, Maya was kind of in that very critical mode, even when my father was passing, and it was like, who's gonna go first? That sort of thing. And it was obvious my father was going first, and I said to my father, you know, Maya's gonna come right after you, soon after.

Will you greet her? And when Maya, she died at home in my arms, and when she was passing away in my arms, I felt my father's presence come. And then I felt them both there, joyful.

It was just like, they were so happy. And it was just like, wow, this is incredible. And it brought such peace and such joy.

There was no, there was just absolutely no fear, nothing. I just felt this incredible sense of joy, and I knew that joy was emanating from the essence of who they were. And it was just absolutely so beautiful, you know?

And they don't, they're still there. I could still feel them. When they passed, and when my father, because my father passed first, I was able to touch into that empty voice, that void of just, I remember being in, you know, getting ready to change, and in my closet, and just like, wow, I miss him, and that emptiness.

And then I went into that emptiness, and suddenly there was this tremendous peace there. And it was just like, wow, that emptiness is God itself. And we are God itself, through the form.

And eventually, all forms, as they always do, leave, and it leaves you with emptiness, which is really your God nature, which is God. You're left with God. And he's saying, you're left with God.

Don't hold onto the suffering anymore, because the suffering and the attachment to the form is keeping you stuck. It's keeping you further away from God. God is all around us, right here, right now, through every living being, nature.

And yet, beyond all of that, beyond the form, it's just here. And the forms pop up. But yet, stillness is here.

God is here. That little space that Eckhart talked about all of a sudden became big. That's how it works.

You take that little space, and you go right into that space, and soon enough, that space just, there is more space in this universe than there are stars in the sky. And how beautiful it is that we get to witness the stars and have the experience of our children, of our parents, even though they can bring us to unconsciousness sometimes. But you know, saying all that, when they're on their deathbed, do you think about that?

Well, sometimes you do, if you're in the grip still, the pain body, but as we begin to awaken, we tap into something else that we begin to see right through their own pain. Because that pain that they feel is no different than our own. And we know if we can transcend the pain within ourselves, so too, when we look then at the other in their pain, we don't see them only as pain, only as their pain body, in other words.

We see the essence of who they are. And the pain body is just a temporary thing. We'll get these gifts, and as we become older and older, the things and the people around us pass on, and we're left with this emptiness.

Yes. And in that emptiness, you can say it's also fullness, because you are one with God. You've merged with the essence of who you are, and you don't feel that emptiness.

You become filled with peace, with love, with joy.

[Speaker 1] (39:04 - 48:04)
Thank you. You realize that even there, one cannot say that you are choosing this. You are the expression of consciousness, and consciousness, one could say, is choosing, and you think you're doing it.

I'm surprised there's nothing on Google about Eckhart and free will, but maybe I haven't said anything about it. So here we go. As you know, it's an eternal ancient philosophical question, and there's never been a definitive answer that everybody would agree with, in that sense.

So is there free will, you mentioned everybody's doing their best because nobody can act beyond their level of consciousness, et cetera, for example. Okay, let's start on one level, and then we go on to the next level. On the level of egoic unconsciousness, where you are a conditioned entity, your mental, emotional makeup, it's totally conditioned by the past, and you are completely identified with the conditioning of your mind, and in that state, spiritually speaking, is the unconscious state, it is obvious that in that state, there is no freedom at all, because you are forced to act out the unconscious conditioning of your mind with which you are completely identified. So most people would probably agree, if you understand that, that on that level, there is no possibility of freedom.

Your actions are determined by your conditioned mind. You are forced to act as you do, because there is no choice, because choice would imply some awareness. So on that level, there's certainly no freedom.

Then, awareness comes in. The human being begins to awaken. Then it appears, I'm not saying it is the case, it appears that then the human, freedom begins to be a possibility, because you can choose to step out of the conditioning of your mind.

You can recognize a conditioned thought, and you're no longer compelled to act it out, because there is an awareness there. You can choose a certain course of action, not from the conditioning of your mind, but from the presence. So you can act, and you have much more freedom than before you could not have.

Freedom comes with awareness. So it's then relative to the unconscious state, there is now freedom to act. But if you look more deeply, even there, even there on that level, you are connected with the totality of consciousness.

You're only an expression of the totality of consciousness. You are not really a separate entity. You are a, like a, who said it, you are, was it Alan Watts who said, you are, in the same way that the wave is something that the ocean is doing, you are something that the whole universe is doing, in the same way.

So the wave is something the ocean is doing, you are something that the universe is doing. So although it appears from a certain, relative to the previous state of unconscious, there is freedom, and relative to that, there is freedom. But then if you look more deeply into that, you realize that even there, one cannot say that you are choosing this, you are the expression of consciousness, and consciousness, one could say, is choosing, and you think you're doing it.

Sometimes people ask me, can you choose to be present? And from one perspective, you can choose to be present. From another perspective, one could say that presence chooses you, it chooses to become present through you, depends how you look at it.

So in ultimate terms, or in relative terms, there is freedom relative to the unconscious state, when you become unconscious. But even there, it's only relative to the unconscious state. Even there, there is not absolute freedom, because you do not exist as an independent entity, you are part of the web of interconnectedness that is the whole universe.

So in that sense, there is no freedom of choice of the individual, because ultimately, there is no individual. Thank you so much, I appreciate it. Just want to add one more thing to that, because you mentioned everybody's doing their best, and so on, and I agreed that nobody can act beyond their level of consciousness.

A question that may arise, though, is responsibility and punishment, because if the criminal or whoever the perpetrator is not responsible, because they are totally in the grip of their conditioning, does that mean then that the perpetrator is not responsible for what they do? And it does seem to be the case, a very unconscious person, in that sense, is not responsible for what they do. Now, does that mean we must not punish this person because he couldn't help it?

Now, that's a difficult point. There is a destiny for human beings. Human beings are meant to move out of the unconscious state, and if they are not moving out of the unconscious state, they create suffering, and they will have to suffer the consequences of their unconsciousness, which eventually awakens them.

So when humans suffer the consequences of their unconsciousness, eventually, this leads to suffering, and then there is a possibility of awakening. So although they may not be conscious of what they do, it doesn't mean that karmic retribution on that level does not operate. Punishment is necessary, and sometimes it could be at the hands of the law or the judicial system.

First of all, other humans need to be protected from them, so they may need to be put away. And although they may not be responsible, but they will have to suffer the consequences of their unconsciousness, and by suffering the consequences of their unconsciousness, there is a possibility of awakening. And so, therefore, I have had contact with quite a few people who are imprisoned, and they have written to me, and they have experienced an awakening in prison.

They suffered the consequences of their unconsciousness, and that led to an awakening. I was actually scheduled to talk in a couple of prisons in California, but I fell ill earlier this year, so I had to be canceled, but hopefully soon, I will be able to talk to prisoners. I have scheduled talks to a women's prison and a man's prison.

[Speaker 12] (48:33 - 48:46)
My heart is pumping. Really hard. Thank you, Edgar, you changed my life dramatically.

Well, thank you for being the vehicle of the higher power.

[Speaker 13] (48:47 - 48:47)
Thank you.

[Speaker 12] (48:50 - 49:38)
This is like very important. It's not important. It's just, nothing's that important.

Do you cry? Because I cry a lot about just good things. Like, when good things are happening, I cry.

When bad things are happening, I don't pay that much attention to them, but I sometimes cry, too, and it's, I mean, I know it's okay, but do you cry? Because I see you as an example of, when I deal with something, I'm always thinking, well, what I could do, you know? I don't know.

I don't know. And you don't have to answer that question, but is it normal to cry? Yes, I do.

Let's see.

[Speaker 1] (49:42 - 53:31)
Well, apart from a movie that I saw recently where I cried, but the other occasion was maybe a year ago or whenever it was, the beauty in nature. Well, that happened to me. It could be anywhere.

It's happened quite a few times. It does happen occasionally when there's intense beauty. And then I was driving along the, in approaching the Big Sur Coastal Highway along the Pacific Ocean in California, and there was the sea, the clouds, the mist, the vegetation, incredible beauty and presence, the aliveness in the energy field.

And as I was driving, I was crying. So beauty is very often that does trigger that. It's a very, very happy crying, a joyful crying.

And then I cried in a movie recently. That happens occasionally. It was about a dog.

And sometimes also I cried when I see human suffering. It could be somebody in the street. Could be even be something on television.

Occasionally it happens. So the, I hadn't actually given it much thought until you asked me. So it's quite lovely.

I enjoy it, crying. It's an, some people cry when they sit here and it touches the emotional field. Although our gathering is not at all emotional.

Because that would be a very different gathering. It would go like, wow, yeah, now let's all jump up and sing. So we, this is not what happens here.

And yet sometimes as presence arises, it can, the emotions can also begin to vibrate with it. And so some people sit here and cry and I know they're quite happy, basically. But they go.

Something resonates, the emotional field is vibrating and perhaps a healing is taking place at that time. Who knows? So it's again, acceptance.

There's another kind of crying, of course, that is more dysfunctional. For example, when you're telling yourself a sad story in your head about your life and you start crying. So you believe in the story that you're telling yourself in your head and how dreadful your life has been.

And you, it's been so awful, it's just. Why, it's just not fair. Life has treated me so badly, it's just not fair.

Wake up. There's just this moment.

[Speaker 12] (53:32 - 53:52)
Don't tell yourself a story and believe in it. So when do you cry? I cry when I watch a movie, when I think about my nieces right now, like I'm not there with them, when I think about my family right now.

I'm just so happy, you know?

[Speaker 1] (54:12 - 1:09:54)
Then you can have mental viruses of a personal nature. You have a certain various thoughts that repeat themselves again and again, and then become so deeply lodged in your mind that like a parasite that gets its teeth into you and it won't let go. And they infect other thoughts around them.

Identifying with a political movement or a religion can be also something that you add to the self-image and you have self-assertion. These days, as we know, there's a talk, a lot of extremism, extremism, religious extremism. You have especially young men, they say they become radicalized and then they do totally evil and crazy things.

Those are extreme forms of ego, but the mechanism behind it is the same, or a more extreme manifestation. The mechanism behind it is the same as normal egos, which are not as extreme. What is the mechanism behind it?

It's a search for a sense of identity. And many humans have a search of identity where there's something huge missing. So they're looking for a deep identity through strengthening their ego.

They don't know it, they're seeking more self-assertion. And if there's a young man living in the West, perhaps even was born in the West, parents came from maybe a Muslim country, and this man doesn't like the society he lives in. Maybe he can even see the emptiness of the society or he doesn't participate fully, he's not given his due ego.

The ego seeks something to identify with, it wants to assert itself. And then it uses religion as an ideology and that becomes, you adopt certain belief system, which are bundles of thoughts, and completely identify with that. It gives you your sense of self.

And you have an enormously strong sense, you can now be so special that the entire society you live in, except those who share your particular belief system is regarded as evil. So you are trapped, and this is not uncommon, it's not only in that area, it can, entire nations are sometimes go through a wave of deep collective unconsciousness, when almost every human being in that nation is infected by a mental virus that takes possession of your entire mind. It happened, for example, in, well, or certain countries like National Socialism in Germany, Soviet Communism, Mao Zedong, the Cultural Revolution.

It's like every human being becomes, is possessed by the same mental virus, which is thought structures that spread in your mind and take possession of almost 100% of all your mental content, very much like a virus on a physical level. I mean, you've all experienced not being able to get a certain tune out of your head, a musical tune, which is a very minor variation of a mental virus that won't go away. And some of you may also have, but of course, after a while, it does go away, and that's a harmless thing.

But then you can have mental viruses of a personal nature. You have a certain, various thoughts that repeat themselves again and again, and then become so deeply lodged in your mind that, like a parasite that gets its teeth into you and won't let go, and they infect other thoughts around them. And so some people go through life with preconceived ideas of what the world is like and what people are like.

And these are very, very structured belief systems, and they interpret reality through the screen of their structured belief system, which may still be a normal thing. You might just have very strong political views or very strong religious views, not religion, the spiritual dimension of religion. Religion without the spiritual dimension is an ideology.

So that can be still considered normal, and then you go take it a little bit further, and then you can see that it's actually a form of insanity. And so it's, for example, normal to have... I had a, I have a relative who I've known since I was 10, since my teenage, early teenage years, and this relative was always very critical of people and very highly critical, and always, even when I was a teenager, I always thought there was always some hidden intention that he or she, I wouldn't want to define, was looking for when after going to some visiting somebody's house, he said this, what did he mean by that? What was his intention?

He had some evil intention, and then it's always looking for, people wanting something from you, wanting something to do to you, wanting to, and that was strange. And this person later developed, this grew and grew, this mental virus, and later had to go to a mental home with paranoid schizophrenia, and which is basically an extreme mental virus that infects your mind that says that the world is full of people whose main function is to destroy you or to follow you or to do something to you, and you see these enemies everywhere. And it is also a way of unconscious self-assertion because you are so important that all these people are after you.

So you make yourself really very special, but it's an unconscious process. So many normal egoic traits, when you take them to amplify them a little, then you can actually see it's a form of mental illness. So thought can be very much seen as little entities.

Thoughts are energetic entities. Every thought is an energetic entity, and some thoughts are short-lived. Other thoughts get lodged in your mind and to take up their abode in your mind, and you can't get rid of them, and they become who you think you are.

That's living through thought. And that's why what the spiritual path is about is to not one by one take these thoughts out or figure out where they came from, but just pay attention to that which is beyond thought, first as little gaps, and then as being aware that there is a dimension of stillness in you. And that's the only place where true sanity arises.

And it's the only place where then, once you have that connectedness, then the mind is no longer insane. Then the mind can be a wonderful and helpful tool. And then you no longer seek yourself in the mind.

You no longer have an identity that's based on a narrative in your mind or a mental image. And then you can use Facebook without becoming more unconscious through it. And you can actually present a true version of yourself on Facebook.

It doesn't have to be the happy selfies necessarily. Anymore, although when you are happy, that's fine. Now, from self-assertion to self-transcendence, that is the way humans go.

Self-transcendence is the awakening of consciousness. And self-transcendence is why we are here. We could, depending on how you use language, you could say we are transcending the self.

This would be a Buddhist terminology, transcending yourself. And the Buddha said there is no self, but that's only one way of putting it. You could say that the formless is the essence of who you are.

Consciousness is the essence of who you are. So that is the self. But it's probably Buddha was very wise not to make it into a mental concept.

His teaching mainly was through stating things in negative terms, not negative in a conventional sense, but denying. So the Buddha never talked about God because he didn't want you to believe in a mental concept of God. He didn't say there is no God, and he didn't say there is a God.

When he was asked about God, he kept noble silence. And that was the answer, of course. But not many people got it.

Is there a God? So there were, and then one or two people got it, in the traditional stories that says he got it. And at that moment, when the Buddha kept noble silence, he became enlightened, the listener.

And the others didn't get it. And then I imagine, and I'm sure it happened, after a few minutes, another monk said, excuse me, did you hear my question? This is a very profound answer, to keep noble silence when you ask, does God exist?

Which is very similar to the wonderful meditation that we're going to do now. It'll only take a few minutes. It's very similar to the meditation, who am I?

Because that also, when you ask yourself who am I, consciousness awakening, at first it's painful. And then, it says, what am I doing here? Not another incarnation.

When you ask yourself, who am I? The important thing is to realize that you won't be able to answer that question. So anything the mind comes up with is wrong, no matter what you say.

And even if you say, who am I? And even if you say, ah, I've got it, I'm consciousness. Wrong, because it's a concept.

Who you are is not believing in a concept. It's just a concept. So who am I?

This was recommended by Ramana Maharshi and other spiritual sages as a profound meditation. Who am I? That question, you can ask it yourself with eyes open or eyes closed.

And then wait for the answer, which is not going to come as an actual answer that you could identify. It's not going to come as a thought or a word or anything you can talk about or think. The answer is the space after the question.

Who am I? You become more interested in that little space around it than in the condition. So you give more attention to that, the spaciousness that comes with the acceptance of what is, and you can sense that space a bit more.

[Speaker 10] (1:10:00 - 1:10:45)
It feels sometimes that the yearning for getting back to the source is very undeniable and very strong. But in equal strength is the resistance, which seems to me to be almost, it almost sort of manifests as a physical energy, which I feel is a sense of sorrow and loss, which has nothing to do with this lifetime and nothing that I can understand or put my finger on, but it seems to get stronger, not any less strong. And it sort of seems to be almost a sense that if one drops into that space, there's something almost unbearable has to be born.

[Speaker 1] (1:10:46 - 1:10:54)
Can you just talk a little bit more about how you experience the resistance? How does it manifest?

[Speaker 10] (1:10:57 - 1:11:23)
Sometimes it's almost a physical, I can feel it as a physical resistance in the body. I can almost feel like there's a physical energy that I can't get underneath. And I guess, even in meditation, when it feels like maybe the mind is stilling a bit, it just doesn't go there.

It's just avoiding something.

[Speaker 1] (1:11:24 - 1:11:41)
Are you able to step out of thinking when you choose to, like taking your attention, as we said earlier, to take a conscious breath or place your attention in something else? In the body, you're able to do that?

[Speaker 10] (1:11:41 - 1:12:01)
I can do that in moments of Qigong or meditation, but I- In everyday life? Yeah, moments, but not as much as I'd like. But I think that has almost got worse.

I think the games that the mind is playing have almost got worse as this energy's got stronger of late.

[Speaker 1] (1:12:01 - 1:12:16)
Yes. And the yearning, how do you experience that? For stillness or peace?

[Speaker 10] (1:12:20 - 1:12:28)
Both of those, but also a sense of sorrow, strangely. If that makes sense.

[Speaker 1] (1:12:28 - 2:23:05)
Yes, well, I'm trying to feel myself into your reality as it is, as the moment. And a very, a powerful transformation can happen when you, and this is one way of approaching it, which may be helpful to you, is not to desire anything within you to be different from the way it is now. So that would mean complete acceptance of whatever it is that you experience at any given moment.

At the moment, there are these energies in you, but you don't really want them. So there's a conflict between what you want and what you have. Now, if you approach it in a different way, instead of having what you want, perhaps you want stillness, you want peace.

You want that deeper sense of aliveness. Perhaps that's the yearning. You want to be fully yourself.

And what you have is you perhaps, you feel contraction in the body. You feel excessive mind activity. You feel an almost semi-physical energy field blocking you.

So you have the two. You have what you want and you have what you have. Now, as a practice, I would suggest, and next time we meet, you can tell me how it went.

I suggest that you do away with a conflict between what you have and what you want, and you want what you have instead, which means whatever your inner reality or outer reality, but we're talking mainly about inner now. Whatever your inner reality is right now, as it's always now, of course, it's not a big thing. It's only the reality now.

Accept it totally. This is what it is. And so bring that.

Acceptance is a strange thing when you really can say, well, that's what it is. You might as well accept it because it is a reality of this moment. So if you bring that acceptance, no matter, even if it feels not pleasant, if it might be a contraction in the body or my mind is just so active, okay, let my mind be active.

Bring the allowing to it. And that strange thing happens, you may find, when you do it, you already have a little bit of space around the condition that you dislike, but now you accept. And so you accept the condition that you previously disliked, but now you say, well, that's what it is.

So I allow it to be. And what you then can sense if you're inside of you, a little bit of space around the condition, to not much at first, just a little bit. So let's say you have a contraction here and say, that's what it is.

And this acceptance brings space. So here's a contraction, then here you have a little bit of, that's what it is. And then it may grow a little bit, the space around it.

And then you find you become more interested in that little space around it than in the condition. So you give more attention to that, the spaciousness that around it comes with the acceptance of what is, and you can sense that space a bit more. And then it's, what I'm saying is not literally true, but I'm just saying it grows.

It seems to grow, and then there's a bit more, the condition is still the same, but it has receded somewhat. It's no longer the center of your attention. You're more aware of the space.

You become the space for it. Don't argue with me because you need to try it first. Thank you.

But you can argue next time we meet, if it didn't work, we'll talk again. Because any arguing would be the mind saying, no, no, it's not going to work. How do I deal with being impatient with myself?

Because after having a spiritually unconscious episode, I realized that with all the tools you have given us, I should know better by now. Interesting uses the word tools, so and I use the word key. Well, a spiritually unconscious episode, and then when it's over, you suddenly realize, oh, I forgot to apply the tool, or let's use the word key again.

I left the key in my pocket again. Well, at least you know it now that you left the key. And at that moment, you've taken the key out because you've taken the key of awareness out of your pocket, that suddenly you realize you had lost it.

You had lost the awareness, or not lost it, but you didn't remember that you had the key in your pocket. And then it's over this, oh, oh yeah, that's this. And then again, you lose the key when the thought arises, you should know better by now, shouldn't you?

What's the point? You can't do it, you see? Even after years, you can't do it.

What's the point? These are the thoughts that go through the head, which means the key is left in your pocket again. Then you take it out again and realize, okay, at least I'm present now.

Whoever you are judging through your mind is a fiction anyway. It's unconscious pattern that has arisen in you and you make it into some kind of me identity. It's a fiction.

Of course, that only happens when you again put the key back in your pocket. So you continue to apply the key and then it's okay, at least now, there's awareness now, that's enough. It's always enough for now.

All you ever need to be responsible for is the present moment and that's all you need. And then you don't make it into another problem. The fact that you had lost it or not used it doesn't become a problem, which is another episode of unawareness if you make a problem out of it.

There's no, your identity is not there. Your identity is present and it's present now. Your identity, you are here awake now.

And then next time, perhaps it happens again. And then real progress is there when in the middle of it, you realize you lost it in an old mind reaction and negative reaction. And then you can choose to take the key out of your pocket and apply it, open the door to awareness and the shift happens and you're no longer reactive.

So I recommend that you are very alert to see what kind of energy you're putting out into the world. Is it tinged with negativity? In which case you are mind identified, ego identified.

And once you notice it, then you can apply the key. So all self-condemnation is not helpful. It's part of the unconscious patterns.

Impatient with yourself. We are dealing with collective. These are not personal problems of yours.

We are dealing with collective mind patterns that have been around for thousands of years that each individual inherits. So it is a monumental thing that's happening now that more and more humans are able to evolve beyond the inherited collective mind patterns, but they're still very strong. They have an enormous pull still.

It would be silly to deny that. The pull is still very strong. So it's not a personal problem of yours.

It's an evolutionary transition, misperceived as a personal problem. When these thoughts come, instead of being drawn into those clouds, and then the clouds get bigger and bigger, you remain the sky and allow the clouds to pass and then to pass away. Well, that's a good question.

What do I want? I'm 34 years old and have a good job, a good home. I'm married to a wonderful man.

I have bad anxiety, and I have no idea what I want from my life. I have low self-esteem and get defensive easily. I'm rarely content or grateful.

My thinking is so negative. I need approval from others. This doesn't seem to be a question, but...

But maybe there's a question hiding in there. Now, first I'd like to congratulate the questioner on her, yes, her, probably, her self-knowledge, because the questioner is aware that she's anxious. Not everybody who is anxious know that they are anxious.

They're just taken over by anxiety and it's virtually their normal state. And if you ask them, are you anxious? They say, no, I'm not anxious.

I have no idea what I want from my life. It looks like the beginning of the place of not knowing, which is good. I have low self-esteem.

Well, but you have the awareness to know that you have low self-esteem and I get defensive easily. Again, yes, but you don't just get defensive. You know that you get defensive.

The question is, do you know in the moment of getting defensive that you are defensive or do you know it afterwards? You can look into that. I'm rarely content or grateful.

That's interesting. That's very good self-observation too. I'm not content at this moment.

I'm not content. My thinking is so negative. Another good piece of knowledge.

My thinking is negative at this moment. What are the thoughts that are going through my head? So if you apply the awareness that is already there hiding behind all these things, if you apply the awareness to the present moment when these things arise, defensiveness.

What is low self-esteem? It's something that you tell yourself about yourself in your mind. It's certain repetitive thoughts that the voice in the head tells you.

Those are, this is low self-esteem. There might be certain emotions that go with it. Emotions that are, ooh, ooh, ooh.

But really, the basis for low self-esteem is something you tell yourself about your low worth. It's thoughts. Now, the questioner already knows that she has low self-esteem.

And if she can know that she has low self-esteem in the moment of the low self-esteem arising as thoughts, she can recognize them as thoughts and not necessarily true thoughts arising, repetitive thoughts that condition thoughts, perhaps this low self-esteem might have started in childhood. It often happens to people whose parents are very critical or parents tell them you're never good enough. This can be one reason.

So it might have started there. It's a conditioned way of thinking, conditioned thoughts. Now, the awareness that's already there in the questioner would need to be there in the moment of those things arising.

And then you can see when these thoughts arise, you recognize them as thoughts that are arising and you're no longer completely trapped in what these thoughts are saying. In other words, to use an analogy that we used not long ago, your sense of being is not in the thought anymore. It's in the awareness of the thought.

In other words, if you look at the sky, the vast sky, daytime, at this time, let's look at a daytime sky, the vastness of that huge expansiveness of the sky is awareness in this analogy and clouds that come are thoughts. So when the clouds come, why can I never do anything right? Why are other people more successful than me?

Or I'm no good at this? When these thoughts come, instead of being drawn into those clouds and then the clouds get bigger and bigger, you remain the sky and allow the clouds to pass and then to pass away. And that means you begin to no longer, you're no longer feeding conditioned thinking and you are separating who you are.

You're taking your identity out of thinking. Thinking for a while has still a momentum. Old patterns will come again and again, but you're no longer renewing them.

You're no longer feeding them by, how do you feed them? By identifying with every thought that comes. There's a self in it.

So you separate, you are the awareness behind the thought. Same applies to any kind of negative thinking. You recognize it as automatic.

It arises and it's a thought. So, but you are the awareness that knows that this is a negative thought pattern. And if that can grow, because it's already there to some extent, if that grows, which means deepens, then those conditioned patterns will diminish.

They get transmuted. So another one point here mentioned, I get defensive easily. Defensive can happen, happens very, very quickly in human interactions.

The defensiveness can come up so quickly. It's an automatic pattern. And you may only know it afterwards.

Oh, that was defensiveness again. And defensiveness is, of course, these are all ego, ways of the ego to protect itself. Ego being the mind made self.

Defensiveness will just come up with any lie just to keep its ego identity intact. So it'll come up with anything just to keep, it's automatic. So you can, of course, in miracles has a lovely saying, which is whenever you become defensive about anything, know that you have identified with an illusion.

You have identified yourself with an illusion. That's interesting. Is that true?

Let's say you say that the distance from here to the moon is 300, I think in kilometers is like 350,000 or so kilometers. And that the light takes just over one second to travel from the moon to the earth. And you know that for a fact.

Well, I know that. I haven't verified it myself, but it seems to be true. And somebody else says, no, that's completely untrue.

It actually takes one minute. It does. Now this is just a difference of opinion or viewpoint.

And of course, you know very well that the other person is wrong. Now, if you say, no, that's not right. Is that defensiveness?

Well, it depends how you say it. The question is, are you identified with your mind, which has this position, which happens to be true, but are you identified with that mental position? In other words, do you derive your sense of self from thought?

If you identified with, you will get angry and defensive about the other person who is so completely wrong. And you might say things like, well, if you know that person well, you always doubt me. Why do you always doubt me?

You never believe what I say, do you? That's called defensiveness. And that's the ego trying to protect itself.

And then the cause and miracle thing applies. Know that when you become defensive about anything, know that you've identified with yourself with an illusion. The illusion is not that it takes one second for the light from the moon to travel to the earth.

That's not what the illusion is. The illusion is that you identified with a thought, with a mind pattern. And so you are strengthening an illusory identity by identifying, by strengthening the mental position of me, my mental position that's unconscious.

So this is how just a difference of opinion can degenerate into huge conflict. Just a small difference of opinion because the ego becomes defensive. So that requires alertness on your part so that you know when it arises.

Oh, so whenever you become defensive. So without ego, the same conversation would go, no, it takes one minute. I know that for a fact.

The other person says, it takes one second. The other takes a minute. Well, no, you're wrong.

It takes one second. Okay, well, we leave it at that then. I think it's a second and you think it's a minute.

End of the story. That would be without defensiveness or ego. Okay, and then you can go on where everybody goes on the internet and that would definitely solve it.

And in extreme forms of egoic unconsciousness, you will say what it says in Wikipedia is wrong. It's wrong. They didn't get it right.

That may bring me to another question. Oh, just to end on this question. The key is your awareness so that that deepens then all those patterns that you mentioned will weaken.

And there's already a considerable amount of awareness in this person, the questioner. The awareness, of course, isn't the person, but it's deeper than the person. The thing is to apply the awareness to the present moment when things arise, not in some abstract way.

I am a defensive person. Will I ever become a person who is not negative? I can't get rid of my negative patterns.

I'm so negative. So it doesn't matter. This moment is what matters.

So just apply your awareness to this moment. You can't change things into mental constructs. How can I change myself?

I don't want to be that kind of a person anymore. Look at it. This moment, this is where you apply presence.

I sometimes call it, I haven't used that expression in a while, the sword of presence that cuts through time and you go, and then you apply it to this. Usually you can recognize that it is an ideology by the fact that they are not peaceful human beings. And by the fact that they have enemies.

The question is specifically about focusing on Christian religion, but the answer, I suppose, I don't know what the answer is going to be, but it's going to be probably also referred to other religions or religions in general. Is religion necessary? It depends who you are on the level of the form.

For some people, it can be necessary or helpful for two reasons. It can provide the more superficial reason. It can give your life a certain amount of structure, which for some people can be helpful.

Regular practice gives you a feeling of comfort. Some people have too little structure in their lives and others have too much already. If you have too little structure in your life, then religion can provide that.

More importantly, on another level, religion can either obscure the spiritual dimension within yourself, and often it does, or if used rightly, if approached rightly, if understood on a deeper level, it can help you access and stay in connectedness with that deeper level of yourself or the transcendent dimension of consciousness. Whether or not you need it, only you can know. Whether you find it either helpful or a hindrance, it can be either, depends on you as a person, your past, what function it had in your past, and so on.

It is a hindrance if religion becomes an ideology. Then it operates only on the level of the mind and is very similar to any other kind of ideology that you may believe in, whether it's communism as an ideology or any political theory or anything that explains the universe. It could be a metaphysical system that you completely believe in, philosophical system, and so on.

So an ideology is something that takes possession of your mind and exerts a controlling function, and it can influence almost your entire mental functioning if it becomes something of overwhelming power in your mind. It's a little thought that grows into a huge thing in your mind, and the tentacles reach into every aspect of your mind, and there are religious people like that. Usually you can recognize that it is an ideology by the fact that they are not peaceful human beings, and by the fact that they have enemies, enemies, either even within their own religion or another religion.

Anybody who does not agree with their ideology becomes an enemy. In the same way, the people who were not nowadays that many were deeply believing in communism, which was a wonderful idea to start with, of course. The road to hell is paved with good intentions.

It was a beautiful idea of equality, everybody the same, that is wonderful. No personal possessions, sounds wonderful, too. And the only mistake was it was imposed from outside by people who themselves have not gone beyond the egoic state of consciousness.

They just played it in their minds. That's a good idea. And then it was imposed on other people who also were not in that state of consciousness.

But most importantly, those who imposed the idea on others, forced them to live it out, the ideal became contaminated with ego. So when these people came to power, their egos became inflated to an enormous degree, almost to absurdity, and without realizing it, they reenacted the same evils, in some cases worse than those that they were fighting against. Like in Russia, they saw the injustices associated with the Tsar regime and so on.

And they truly saw that, and they truly wanted to remove that, and that seemed a good thing. But they had overlooked their own state of consciousness. And the great challenge is for people, power, you can have that very meek person that seems, oh, this is what a lovely person.

He seems to have no ego, or very little. He's so, give that person power. Then the latent ego, which was there in a, let's say a person's very poor, has no power at all.

Give that poor person power, then the latent ego will no longer be latent. It will suddenly come to life. And that happens, is repeated, and has been repeated many, many times in countries where frequently the government is overthrown.

And then the previous rulers are accused of corruption. And the new people who overthrow the previous, they truly believe that now they have a just, more just society is going to arrive, because they, again, they don't know themselves. They have not observed themselves.

And the moment they achieve power, they are seduced by that, and their ego suddenly grows. And they reenact the same thing again. So ideology, religion can turn into, and often does turn into ideology.

You can recognize it, as I said, by the fact that these people are not peaceful. They will condemn other people, or other groups of people as evil. They may verbally, even physically, attack others.

And if it's not that extreme, it might be that they simply are extremely intolerant towards anybody who does not share their belief system, their ideology. And so that's a clear sign that that kind of religion is a hindrance to the spiritual dimension, to knowing who you are, to being a peaceful human being. It's in the service of the ego.

It's an egoic creation. The ego can take scriptures that are beautiful and point to the truth, and can corrupt them, completely misread and misinterpret them. And then they're used in the service of the ego.

So that's how religion can become a huge hindrance. But religion can also become an opening into the spiritual dimension. So a religious practice, or a religious reading, a reading of a sacred text, an ancient spiritual text, can be a wonderful thing.

The questioner mentions Jesus, following in the steps of Jesus, is that, or is only presence important? When you use it in a deeper sense, following in the steps of Jesus means becoming present. How?

First of all, Jesus taught presence in quite a few of his utterances, starting from the flower, that you said you should really look at a flower and see how it lives in the present moment without worry and anxiety. He taught egolessness, deny thyself, which means recognize the unreality of yourself. He spoke of the I am as the foundation, and which is misinterpreted.

We have, let's just for a moment, in Christianity, we have a historical person, probably, Jesus, and we have Christ. Now, Christ was not his actual name. It was a title given later.

And that's already mentioned in the more enlightened parts of the New Testament, that Christ is a dimension of consciousness. And I believe he's saying, Paul, who says, I must diminish and Christ in me must grow. This is a mystical, deeper interpretation of Jesus, who was an historical person who realized his kinship with the transcendent dimension, the divine, whatever you want to call it.

He realized his connectedness, his kinship, his oneness with that. And as he realized that, he became, the transcendent dimension emerged in him, as it does in you. It emerged in him, and then the historical person, Jesus, became the Christ.

Therefore, we have in mystical Christianity, the term Christ consciousness, which is the transcendent consciousness that emerges, where before there was only the person. And we have in certain Buddhist traditions, the term Buddha nature, that says that every human being and everything that's alive has at the core of their being is Buddha nature or the Buddha, as the reality of who you are. That's the teaching in some Buddhist traditions.

And it's a beautiful teaching, that your true nature is Buddha nature. And you just have to realize your true nature is Buddha nature. Isn't that what we've been talking about?

It's just a different name attached to it. In mystical Christianity, it's Christ consciousness. And so Jesus was a precursor who showed the way to Christ consciousness.

And if we're focusing on the historical figure of Jesus and realizing that he embodies both the person and the Christ can become a vehicle for you, if that is suitable for you. And if you still feel drawn to Christianity or any other religion, that is the way for you to go deepen that rather than think you have to move into something else. But if that doesn't work for you, then fine.

Then walk away and find Christ consciousness somewhere else. And some people don't need any religious structure anymore. This is for the first time, perhaps in the evolution of humanity, there's spirituality that exists outside of formalized religions.

And that's an amazing thing. So many of you may not need the formalized religion anymore and others may need it. And that is a beautiful thing.

You can deepen the way in which you live, practice and understand your religion so that it becomes an opening into the transcendent dimension within yourself. If you are a Christian and want to deepen certain readings, I would highly recommend there were certain teachers who expressed the truth of Christianity from a deeper level than the conventional church Christianity. The most, in the past, Meister Eckhart, who lived in the early middle ages.

The most wonderful, his writings are superb and in fantastic depth to them. And he uses Christianity to take you very, very deep into the core of it all. The core of all things into yourself.

The desired outcome. If the desired outcome occupies a place in your mind that's overwhelming or you desperately need to go to arrive at that place, then in the meantime, all the things that you do are then simply a means to an end. Perhaps we can start with a few, before we go on to questions, a few additional remarks about the important subject of being and doing.

Being, that's what we started with in the last session. And finding a balance. And before finding a balance, being able to enter to access the being dimension.

That's already a good start. And then at first, what tends to happen, but also not invariably, is you enter the being dimension or access it when you're in a place that is conducive to a stillness or a serenity. Or here, a protected space.

Or perhaps at home in your room or here in your room or in nature. And at first, the being dimension is associated with cessation of doing. That's how you first realize it.

It's when you're not doing anything and you can just be, consciously be, which implies a, no matter how brief, says a cessation of the primary doing, which is the thinking doing. Without a, no matter, a brief cessation in the stream of thinking, it's hard to find the being dimension. But later on, as you become consciously rooted in the being dimension, thinking and being can come together.

They are not irreconcilable. And in fact, that is one of your tasks, is to, when you do think, not to be totally identified with a stream of thinking. In other words, there's some attention in the background.

Some, there's an awareness, a field of, or a space of awareness in the background, even while you're engaged in thinking, as it is now, as I'm speaking. Of course, the mind is operating, but I can sense, and perhaps you can, in the background, behind the words, beyond the words, in between the words, there's that space of stillness, beingness, whatever you want to call it. And if you can sense it, you might believe, if you sense it's coming from here, if you can sense it, it's in you.

Because only being can be aware of being, not the mind. If you believe being emanates from me, I suppose it does, but at that moment, you, there's the recognition of being can only happen through accessing that dimension within yourself. Only being can recognize being, not the mind.

The mind, however, may come in when you, let's say you recognize the being dimension that emanates from this thing, that's the body or whatever it is. It emanates, and you sense it. The moment you sense it, it's in you also, consciously.

Now, it's possible that the mind may come in and misinterpret what's going on. And the mind may confuse the form of the spiritual teacher or whoever it happens to be, the form identity with the being dimension. And then suddenly the teacher is regarded as a being, a supernatural being or a kind of God-like figure or some great guru or whatever, because you confuse that which transcends the form, for which the form is only an opening, you confuse that with the form.

And then you make that person through whom being shines you make that person very special. This can happen easily. It's a misinterpretation, but at least you recognize being.

But what you overlooked is, because not everybody will recognize it in the being dimension in a human being. If it shines through strongly, not everybody will recognize. Some people say, what's this all about?

Why are these people all listening to this guy for two hours? And he's not special. He doesn't even jump up and down the stage.

He's just boring, isn't he? He's boring. So that's a danger.

That is also a danger as far as the spiritual teacher is concerned. Because there may be remnants of ego left in him or her. And if the teacher is bombarded with continuous projections of specialness, he or she may begin to believe.

In other words, the ego comes back through the back door and regains ascendancy and the ego comes back and the teacher begins to think, to feel a specialness in the person, the form. And then this teacher, it's happened many times, the teacher makes statements such as, I'm certainly the greatest teacher alive on the planet at the present moment. And, or it may go so far as to say, I'm the greatest that has ever lived.

All the others were precursors. I have arrived. There is something incredibly special coming through, but it is not, it is nobody's possession.

It's nobody's achievement. It does not belong to the form dimension, but the form dimension can be an opening, just like a window. In a way, one could say, this body and this mind is the window frame.

What you see is a window frame, but what the most important thing about the window is the light that comes through the window. That's the opening. And this may also happen to you when you, as presence arises, you will, if it's not happened already, for many of you probably has happened already, you come into contact with people who are helped by your presence.

Even if you don't feel that you know what to do, because it doesn't work like that. They're helped and they're drawn to you. They're helped by your presence.

There's a kind of transmission. It can awaken the presence in the other, that dimension, the being dimension in the other. And then you can find, they may then become attached to you because they feel so good in your presence and they can't let go.

And again, the danger already arises then that you feel, I, I have done this. There's a, one could call that healing in a deeper sense, not just physical healing, but the true healing is the reconnection with the being dimension. That's the true healing.

And there's a phrase in this book called the Course in Miracles. It says, the healer does not heal. He lets healing be.

He does not heal. He lets healing be. So when you are with people who are seeking help, then you don't need to go into your mind and say, how can I help this person?

It has to go, the person is talking to you and you already think, well, perhaps I could say that. I can say that. Doesn't work like that.

You're just present. At some point, you may say something from some sort of deeper place, or you may not even say anything. And there's just an answer that may suddenly appear in the other person.

And it's only, oh, and you never said or did anything. You just sat there. So at first, the being dimension, you find it as separate from external activity or thinking.

And then that's a good beginning. And then gradually you learn that it can, it is not irreconcilable with external activities. It's a presence through movement is a good practice because it shows you do not need to sit still to find stillness, which is another word for it, which people believe initially.

Stillness also has kind of two meanings in English. There's on the one hand, stillness means the absence of noise. But there's another meaning of stillness is the absence of movement.

When you say sit still, it's the absence of noise. He stood still, he sat. So it's stillness points in English to the absence of either noise or movement.

So when we talk about stillness, you might think you have to, you can't move in order to be, to consciously sense the being dimension, you can't, you mustn't move. And then you learn you can actually move. And in fact, it can be helpful.

You begin with that, and then you can perform certain tasks and still being that connectedness with being instead of completely losing yourself in the activity. You can have goals to pursue, which is in the realm of doing. It's good to have goals, although there may be periods in your life when you don't need any goals.

Certainly, if you reach a certain age, it becomes increasingly pointless to pursue goals, at least at the latest by the age of 95. You don't need to pursue any more goals unless for some reason you have to. But even before then, there may be time periods in your life when the pursuit of goals is not necessary and you can become more deeply immersed, just be engaged in ordinary everyday activity without pursuing any particular big goal, big or small, working towards something.

But on the whole, it's good to have goals. But again, goals belong to the realm of doing, and that's fine. The problem arises if the goal absorbs so much of your attention, meaning the desired outcome, the place you want to arrive at, whatever that may be, passing an exam, achieving a certain position, acquiring mastery in some activity, whatever it may be, the desired outcome.

If the desired outcome occupies a place in your mind that's overwhelming, or you desperately need to go to arrive at that place, then in the meantime, all the things that you do, the steps you take, the activities you undertake in order to arrive at your goal, are then simply a means to an end. They are not enjoyable because you desperately want to have arrived already. To summarize the question, of course, as you mentioned at the beginning, adversity can either, it can strengthen the ego, or it can gradually, or in some cases, suddenly, dissolve the ego, or at least diminish it.

It can go either way. And I must agree with you, I don't know whether you literally said it, in perhaps still in the majority of cases, it strengthens the ego because nobody knows, people don't know the opportunity that every adversity represents. So why does it happen?

How does it strengthen the ego? You can see it sometimes with people who are sick, or people who are disabled. Let's say I've met disabled people, people with physical disabilities, for example.

And in some cases, they are very, really angry with the world and bitter because look at what happened to me. They say, why do I can't move anymore? I've been afflicted with this.

What have I done to deserve this? And these are questions that are justifiable questions. The question, what have I done to deserve?

Why has the world, or whatever they say, God, the world, the universe, or whoever they've done this to me, and then they become bitter and angry, and the ego becomes more and more rigid and hardened. And that is one way it could go. And then I have met people with disabilities who through their disability, at some point, whether through a spiritual teaching, and in some cases, never coming to contact with any spiritual teaching, it just happened that at some moment, they realized intuitively that all the suffering was generated through resistance.

And then the resistance to the isness of their life, this moment, they were able to let go because perhaps the suffering was getting too much. Something happened, something clicked inside, or even if it didn't happen completely, they were able to have moments of inner peace, an inner peace that is not caused by an external condition, an inner peace that seems to be in contradiction to an external condition, so that they would say, how could a person who is suffering this feel so peaceful? And so also that applies to people who are approaching the end of their lifespan because they have some illness and they have been to the doctor, and the doctor says you have six months or one year, and suddenly something in them opens up, and all that remains is that the person already dies, there's no more future, and all that remains is the present moment and the aware space.

So I've had the privilege of working with, when I was still seeing individuals with two or three people to whom that happened, and they became luminous beings in the last few weeks or months of their lives, and became just, there was no, I couldn't see that there was any person left, there was only a space of conscious presence left, just wonderful, as if they had just come into this world. So they came, and then they came to me, and then still asking questions, very profound questions, wanting to understand what happened, and it's beautiful. So this can happen, it can happen collectively to people who have, who go through warfare in countries or become refugees, they lose everything, and again, it can go either way.

Whenever there's any great loss in your life, that again, an opportunity opens up. If you resist, and you resist the resistance origin, the origin of the resistance is a narrative that forms in your mind, that says something about the situation and about your life and about other people. So the narrative forms in your mind, and the narrative is an unhappy one, and then there's continuous resistance, a non-alignment with the isness of the present moment.

Now, one could ask, well, how could somebody who has lost their home, perhaps even lost loved ones, and then they don't know where to go, how could this person be in a state of alignment with the present moment? Isn't that, how can somebody accept the unacceptable, accept that which in conventional terms would be regarded as unacceptable? How is that possible?

But that's precisely it. If you can accept the unacceptable, that is the sudden, the opening, and then you realize the unacceptable is actually not unacceptable, it is acceptable. And the, I was homeless for a certain period in my life with not knowing what to live on the, next day or the next week, and I had already gone into a state of acceptance, so it was a very pleasant experience, but potentially would have been extremely unpleasant.

So not having a home was for me already something that was not experienced as something bad, but I knew I had to take some action eventually to get a home, and so gradually something happened. I don't want to talk too much about that. I also mentioned in the New Earth, I believe, when I was at university, there was the Stephen Hawkins, the physicist who was confined to a wheelchair, passed away a couple of years ago, and there it was.

He would always, he wasn't famous at that time, only famous locally in the university. We would always be in the same dining room, having lunch, but not the same table. I never met him, wasn't introduced to him.

Observed him many times, sitting at a neighboring table, and then I, one moment when I held open the door for him, he was coming through on his wheelchair, and I looked into his eyes, and I could see there was no unhappiness. Of course, everybody here suffers from a fatal affliction. It's called time, and eventually it's going to kill you.

But before it kills you, unless it does that very quickly and suddenly, and if it doesn't do it very quickly and suddenly, before it kills you, it does things to you. You notice those things that it does to you when you look in the mirror in the morning, and especially if you compare it to a photo taken 20, 30, 40 years ago, you notice the effect of time on you. You may not need to get ugly because the less you're identified with your external self, and as you grow old, the opportunity is there for you to identify more and more with the presence, and the presence shines through the fading form, and when the presence shines through the fading form, it's actually very, very beautiful.

It's different from the kind of beauty that's there when you're 20 years old, and it's like the apple that's just been, just fallen from the tree, and it's still not totally fresh, and you have that biological, might have maybe beauty, and this. So that's nice too, but it doesn't last. There's a deeper beauty that can shine through, and it happens to those humans who are connected with the presence that they are, and then you don't turn ugly.

In the absence of that, if you're only identified with your physical form, then I must admit, it could happen that you turn ugly. Irrelevant is another word the questioner uses. In our civilization, old age is not valued, so people who grow old have the feeling that they are irrelevant, or they are regarded as irrelevant.

Old age is not associated with wisdom. In our civilization, because our civilization doesn't even know what wisdom is. It's not highly valued.

Cleverness, yes. High IQ, yes. And whatever else, but not wisdom.

How do you measure it? What is that? But that is going to change.

We already have, in traditional cultures, ancient, older cultures, the elders are the most important people. And in the Western societies, the elders are the, well, to be charitable, they are called the elderly, and they are somewhere in a home, and you visit them. Once or twice a month.

And then they sit in their chairs, watching TV, not realizing the opportunity of old age, because nobody has told them. So you can appreciate your appearance if it happens to be good, and you're still relatively young, and your body looks good, or your face looks good. You can appreciate that in the same way you appreciate other things, lovely things.

There's nothing wrong with that. But it would be important, when you look in the mirror, to also feel your presence, so that you don't get excessively attached to the external form. You can appreciate it, but there's no need to be attached to it, because you can only not be attached to it if you can sense the underlying presence.

So when you look in the mirror, maybe you even apply makeup. They apply makeup to my face before I come on, because it looks too oily otherwise, apparently. And I noticed last night it actually does, because last night I didn't have makeup.

I saw myself on the little screen.

[Speaker 13] (2:23:05 - 2:23:06)
I said, I'm very shiny.

[Speaker 1] (2:23:12 - 2:48:00)
And it wasn't the inner emanation of presence that was coming through. It was a different kind of shininess. Yes.

So before I go on camera, they apply makeup to the face. Does it mean I'm vain because I don't want to be shiny? Maybe.

So you may apply makeup, especially if you are a woman. Men, I don't know, some men might do it too, I don't know. And there's no reason to think, oh, should I really, or shouldn't I, or there's something wrong with me if I do it.

That must be ego if I apply makeup. Don't complicate life too much. If you want to apply makeup, apply makeup.

But while you apply makeup, feel the underlying presence. And while you look in the mirror, sense the presence of yourself, the presence of presence, the stillness. And then it's not a problem when suddenly you look in the mirror again and you realize that 25 years have passed.

And you see, oh, the apple doesn't look the same anymore. It's wrinkly. Time is a strange thing.

I described it just now as one way of looking at it, as something that is ultimately going to destroy you. And it does that to everything. But you never catch time.

You only catch the evidence it leaves. So it's a criminal. That criminal commits all kinds of terrible crimes, murderous sprees, and you can never find the criminal, because all you can ever find is the evidence left behind by the criminal, which is dead bodies.

But they all appear in the present moment. There's only ever the present moment. Nobody can experience time as such.

So time exists and doesn't exist. It exists on the surface of things, but does not exist in the depths of yourself. Nobody is evil, but they manifest extreme unconsciousness, which we can call, in many cases, evil.

Do people start becoming nicer as you become more aware, or is it just that you no longer get consumed by the anger that arises when in the company of not so nice people? Well, I would say both. When you become more aware, you're not reactive anymore towards people.

You don't personalize things anymore, make everything personal, and are always looking out for some kind of hidden insult, or look at what his real intention behind what he's saying, what does he really want. You're just, there's an openness and a non-judgmental attitude towards others that non-reactive relationships then generate already more consciousness in the other, because unconsciousness is too unconscious people to strengthen each other's unconsciousness. So if somebody says or does something that may be unconscious and I don't react to it, it does not become amplified through my reaction.

If somebody says or does something unconscious and I react to it, condemn it, even if it's just in my mind, I actually amplify it, and I myself become part of that unconsciousness through my judgment. If I can be non-reactive, I can allow other humans their behavior, because that's their present stage of consciousness. They behave as they have to behave at this moment.

So I allow them to behave, to do what they do. I accept it. And then suddenly there's a different energy there.

So I don't amplify that. And those people then, I don't condemn them. I don't equate their unconscious behavior with who they are.

That's why it's so important not to judge others. It doesn't mean you kind of go through life saying, oh, they're all, everything is fine, that you don't see unconscious behavior. You see what they do, you know what they do, but you don't equate that with who they are.

You know it is an overlay on, it is human unconsciousness, they're expressing that. It's not who they are in their essence. If you confuse the unconscious behavior with who they are in their essence, then that's called judgment.

If you see that somebody is doing something extremely unconscious, that's not judgment because you don't equate it with who that person is. And so you don't say he is evil. That statement would be wrong of anybody because in essence, nobody is evil, but they manifest extreme unconsciousness, which we can call in many cases evil.

So that's important then not to strengthen that and to get trapped in illusion because when we believe in our own judgments, we get trapped, it's not only we trap others in the judgments, we ourselves get trapped in the judgments. Also, people become nicer, which is true, what the questioner says. People become nicer when you're present and aware because they can feel the absence of judgment in you.

Even if they don't, they may not be able to tell you, but I can feel the absence of judgment. They only feel it as a certain goodwill flowing out from you towards them or an acceptance flowing out from you towards them. And humans can feel that.

Even unconscious humans, unconscious, they can feel that. And everybody's grateful for that. Underneath all their madness, they feel grateful because somehow in that acceptance, in that goodwill that kind of flows out in that space, through that space of acceptance, they feel a little bit more themselves than they usually are.

So, and when a human feels a little bit more at ease in themselves, when they come to you, they like you and they are very nice to you. They don't know why. And their usual ego patterns, not all of them are operating anymore.

Some may still come up, of course. So the ego is less, the ego doesn't feel threatened. It feels, oh, there's no need to be that defensive here.

The ego feels it can kind of relax a little bit. Of course, it's still there in the background, where you're just like a little, like a dog. But it's not at its usual state, like the Rottweiler.

So it's just, okay, can relax a little now. And then they like you. So you become a nice person to them.

That's perhaps all they know. When they ask him, oh, he's such a nice guy. Like to see him, like to go to him, and that's a nice, okay, so yes, you do experience that.

So partly simply because presence, acceptance is there and is recognized. And partly because there's the absence of reaction. When somebody suddenly blames you, for example, says, you left that door open, you shouldn't.

And say, oh, I did? Yeah. The usual ego thing, of course, is to say, no, I didn't.

Whether you did or not, because it's regarded as an in, as the ego feels diminished when somebody blames you. You did that. No, I didn't do that.

You did. And it starts from there and then escalates. Why do you always blame me?

Look what you did yesterday. That's called reaction, defensiveness. And that's not there.

So then it's just, you're stating the facts. You left that door open again. No, I didn't.

And then there's no further arguing. Yes, you did. Well, maybe, if that's what you believe.

Or say, yes, you're right, I did that again, sorry. You don't feel diminished when you were wrong. The ego feels diminished.

Just to admit that you've been wrong is a dreadful thing. So the ego can't do that. It's like a little desk.

To say that you've been wrong is a little, and if somebody proves to you that you've been wrong, it makes things even worse. And then some people will start hitting you. That's how the ego can, an ego can easily do.

If it's so obvious that you've been wrong and somebody proves it, then you start hitting them. That's a big argument. And if you knock him out, the ego still wins.

Yes, there is a general improvement in relationships, of course, with presence. The deepest prayers, they're no longer prayers as such. They are when you adopt a listening attitude rather than a saying words.

Perhaps you can upgrade your prayers from petitionary prayers, please make this happen, the petitionary prayers, to what little just mental pointers towards peace, for example, little mental pointers that still use concepts, because every prayer is some kind of, it consists of words, and concepts, in other words, to use a concept to point, to help you go beyond concepts. You could say, for example, an affirmation, the one we talked about earlier, which really what Jesus said, I am the light of the world, is an affirmation. And it's a concept, it points to a deeper reality that is deeper, that far deeper than the words.

You can say, please let me know if you still want some petition, please let me know that I am the light of the world. Duality is implied usually in the usual prayer, it implies that there is God and he is me asking God. The ultimate, of course, is that that duality is ultimately an illusion, because you are an expression of God.

You and God merge, and the deepest prayers then are no longer prayers as such, they are when you adopt a listening attitude rather than a saying words. So if prayers gradually become from saying, as long as you enjoy it, that's fine, but gradually get away from asking somebody to do something for you, because that keeps you stuck in duality. But if you can realize that this, affirmations are, if they are done rightly, can be very beautiful substitutes for prayers.

I'm healed and whole and at peace. And after that, let there be a space. And really the power is in that space.

In the space you experience that you are already whole. The outward form might tell you something different. I'm holy, because in miracles says, I am holy, for example, that's, again, you are.

And so it's simply an affirmation of how this is how it is. Or if you're healing for somebody else, you're either with that person, or that person comes into your mind, you're thinking about that person, and that person may be ill. And then the most powerful healing I find is to be, to hold the image of that person, and then go deeper into yourself where the wholeness of life lies.

Where nothing is needed, nothing is needed to be added. And there you find the wholeness also of that person. They're already healed at that deepest level.

Beyond form, they're already healed. So you go from form, and then into formlessness. That is the healing that was practiced by Joel Goldsmith.

He has a little, a lovely book called The Art of Spiritual Healing. And that is really to, not to dwell at all on the condition that needs to be healed, but to focus on the essential reality of that human being, which is one with your essential reality, and go into deep stillness where nothing is needed. So he would often get phone calls, sometimes in the middle of the night, somebody desperately needs healing, and they would say, that's the name of the person, and that's what he or she is suffering from, is this and that.

And what he would then do is immediately put the phone down and go into absolutely no thought. For a moment, he heard the name of the person. He heard what was wrong with the person, and immediately let go of that, and immediately, just for two or three minutes, went into no thought, just absolute presence.

And in that, there's absolute perfection in that realm of the formless. And that is the essence of that person that needed healing. So you take the form into the formless, where the form is no longer, no condition to be treated, nothing is needed, just go into that.

And that was his way of healing. He was quite a powerful healer. That is the ultimate form of healing.

And that really is the non-dual kind of prayer. It's no longer, it's going beyond prayer, where you say, please, God, heal. You go to the very source itself that is inseparable from who you are, and is inseparable from who that person is.

And so that's the, listening, if healing, if prayer can gradually, as I said, become listening, listening to God rather than talking to God. What does listening mean? Listening means there's a field of bare, pure attention.

And listening doesn't mean that you're waiting for some answer, then you're not really listening. In listening, you're not waiting for anything. There's just a field of just pure attention.

And that is a much deeper prayer than any words. That's the attitude of, that's true prayer, is that where prayer also becomes meditation, you could say. Not even wanting an answer, it's enough to be in the silence.

And sometimes an answer comes, or the thing becomes resolved. Sometimes, suddenly, listen. Any trouble in this world, any disturbance, and they happen all the time.

People around you, maybe even a disturbance in your mind, go into just pure, aware, bare, listening presence. Because presence and listening are very, just listening is a way of speaking about presence. You can say, when you're present, it is as if you were in a state of listening.

Now, listening usually is associated with the auditory sense perception. But this listening goes beyond the auditory sense perception. It's the state of consciousness that underlies the auditory sense perception.

Everybody knows what that is like, because when you're really listening for some faint sound, what is the state of consciousness that underlies this listening to the faintest sounds? It's a state of absolute relaxed alertness. So when we say listening, listening is a helpful thing because everybody knows what listening means, but I'm now just pointing out that it's not the external sense perception that's the essence in listening.

The essence in listening is the underlying state of consciousness, of alert, absolute receptivity and alert presence. This is why I believe that Jesus had those parables about the servant and the staying awake, because the master doesn't know when the master is going to come home. So the servant needs to stay awake to know when the master is coming home, otherwise he'll be asleep.

And I think what he really was talking about, because many of the things have come down in a somewhat distorted way because it got transmitted verbally and verbally again, and finally written down, and in the process, some things got turned around and missing. I think he was talking about the attitude of that absolute, he was talking about the state of consciousness, this servant waiting just to hear the master come home, just waiting in a totally different sense from the normal thing that we call waiting, which is the mind saying when it is going to happen, why isn't it happening yet? He uses waiting in a totally different sense.

So there are quite a few, many times Jesus talked about, obviously about staying awake. That's an important part of, very important part of his teaching. Stay awake.

Don't go to sleep. Stay present. That's, so any words you use in prayer, use them as pointers towards that.

You could say, I'm listening. So paths come, go, but it's still predominantly really awareness. It's so much nicer than thinking.

[Speaker 11] (2:48:06 - 2:49:04)
So I had the opportunity to interview you once before Eckhart about 10 years ago. And one of the things you reported to me then was that after this awakening, you experienced an 80% reduction in mental activity. And I'm curious in your life, what it's like for you in terms of your relationship to thoughts, meaning do you sometimes have hours go by where there literally are no thoughts or are there thoughts coming, but they just float by and there's no attention is given to them.

So what's it actually like? And I'm sure it's different. Obviously, if you're in the middle of a airport doing something than if you're just relaxing at home, but I'm curious to know more about the interior of your experience.

[Speaker 1] (2:49:05 - 2:55:05)
Well, there are long stretches of no thought and I can still function in that state. For example, you talk about airport. I can perfectly check in or walk to the, go through security check.

And then onto whatever the lounge without any thought. And this would not be uncommon that I would do something or go from where I get into the car and drive to the store to buy something. And again, virtually no thought is not uncommon.

So, and all it does make occasionally little fragments may come up like little puffs of clouds and then they're gone. So it's, there can be, or let's say I'm sitting at home not doing much and occasional thoughts can drift in and out of awareness like clouds, like the sky is blue, but little puffy clouds come from time to time and they go, the thoughts have no, I don't follow them and they don't even try anymore to get my attention as is the case with people who are still very strongly identified with thought. Every thought pulls you.

Every thought pulls you where it wants you to go. And thoughts don't really have that pull anymore. They just, when they appear, there's a blue sky and the clouds appear and disappear, appear and disappear.

And there could even occasionally be a stream of thoughts in certain situations, or maybe not even connected to anything happening outside of me. There can be times when there are certain streams of thoughts, but again, they are harmless. They are not the thoughts that have this gravitational pull that just, and you have to follow them with your entire attention.

But it's a thought that, yes, from time to time, there may even be more clouds than blue sky, but these clouds are not, no longer the heavy weather clouds that I had in the distant past and that other people perhaps recognize in their own lives. They are more like innocent little puffy clouds with thoughts, but no thought matters that much. And then it disappears.

It's not amplified by following it up and identifying with it and then becomes a heavy thing that takes possession of you. So it never feels as if any thought were taking possession of me. So yes, then to summarize, I think if anybody entered my inner state, they would be surprised how little thinking there actually is compared to probably what I still, is still for most people normal, almost continuous.

How relatively little there is. Yes, there is some, and that which there is, is doesn't have the heaviness anymore that it has when you're identified with the thoughts and they have a gravitational pull and they develop into streams and proliferate and develop into streams and you lose yourself completely in it. So that doesn't happen.

So I, I'm most, the not thinking is almost, would say predominates unless there's something specific to think about. But then occasionally, yes, clouds come and go and so on, but there's always an awareness of the sky also. It's, and it doesn't really matter whether I'm in, out in nature, in the, walking in the forest, looking around.

Let's just describe, let's just describe perhaps one minute of let me walking in the forest, walking, looking, looking, the dog, trees, no thought, just looking at the trees, the plants, the aliveness of it, sensing the energy field. And then a thought may come and says, oh, when I get home, I need to, I need to do this or that. I forgot to do that.

I need to, when I get home, I still need to do that. Or I need to buy some, I need to buy some bananas later. Okay, and then it's gone.

And then, and then some other thought comes of something, maybe could be anything.

A person that tried to contact me the other day, didn't. And then it's gone again and back.

So puffs come, go, predominantly really awareness. It's so much nicer than thinking.

[Speaker 11] (2:55:07 - 2:55:25)
So just to be sure that I fully hear you correctly, it never happens that one of these puffs kind of has a little hook that comes down that catches you by the neck or something like that. And, you know, just a little hook that comes in like I forgot to do something.

[Speaker 1] (2:55:27 - 2:55:51)
Good question. I have experienced in the past, not for some time now, occasionally some thought coming in and hook is a good word. I experienced in the past sometimes, and I can't remember when the last time was, occasionally some thought coming in and wanting more of me than just appear and disappear.

[Speaker 11] (2:55:51 - 2:55:52)
Yes.

[Speaker 1] (2:55:52 - 2:55:56)
It goes, I perceive it, it goes like this. It pulls your sleeve.

[Speaker 11] (2:55:57 - 2:55:58)
Yeah, yeah.

[Speaker 1] (2:56:01 - 2:56:16)
And so that's, usually I notice it and then there's an intensification of presence. There's a conscious choice at that moment to be more intensely present.

[Speaker 11] (2:56:16 - 2:56:17)
Interesting.

[Speaker 1] (2:56:17 - 2:57:40)
Yeah. The same thing happens when a challenge comes in everyday life, something goes wrong, whatever it may be, and a challenge comes in and what otherwise could easily develop into some kind of minor drama. And again, at that time, usually it's not even so much a conscious choice.

It almost happens naturally that immediately there's an intensification of presence. So that's something that I hadn't mentioned before. There is the normal level of presence is the taking over of the normal level.

When a challenge comes in, there is, I call it sometimes the dimmer switch, is turned up and there's more intense presence when the challenge comes because only more intense presence can burn the thoughts that want to arise there. And so there's then a hard to describe what a heightening of present is, but if I could act it out.

[Speaker 11] (2:57:40 - 2:57:41)
Please. Ha ha.

[Speaker 1] (2:57:43 - 2:59:18)
It's like normal presence is, and more intense presence is, and back to normal, more intense. The more intense presence is, this presence becomes a sharp sword, as I sometimes compare it to that in intense presence, which if you're surrounded by pandemonium, ha ha, could happen, then that is required. And so there's the, or if there's a very strong pull by some thought, there's come this way.

I will lead you to a wonderful place. It's called drama and unhappiness. Just follow me.

You will love it. And then you have to go. You can't fight that thing.

You can't say, no, go away. You give it more power. You just go.

You have to have that fierceness then. The presence becomes fierce presence, whereas before, presence was gentle, gentle presence.

[Speaker 5] (2:59:21 - 3:00:39)
Thank you. I have a question about stages that we go. I read the first one, Power of Now, changed my life.

And then I came to a new earth. Thank you for paradise. And so the stages, the truck, you get stuck, you either accept, and then the next one is you enjoy.

And so I already went to enthusiasm. So I found my enthusiasm when I thought, but then it felt like the ego. So is there a way to know which one is which?

It's like, okay, so am I enthusiastic because this is what the universe is pushing me to do? Or is it just me trying to be, you know, oh, I'm the enlightened one. I'm the spiritual one or so on.

[Speaker 1] (3:00:40 - 3:05:01)
Okay, I understand. Yes, thanks. So that goes back to, in the new earth, I think I wrote that the three modalities of being, if you're not one of the three modalities, you are in a state that is not harmonious and egoic or dysfunctional.

The three modalities, acceptance, you either, whatever you need to do or whatever the situation is, you accept it. If you cannot enjoy it, there's some things you can't enjoy, but you can accept that this is what is. Acceptance, then, is that important.

Others, enjoyment comes in. Enjoy the work, see if you can enjoy it rather than just accept that this, if you really, anything you do with resentment is a dysfunctional state, causing suffering. Without knowing it, you're causing it to yourself in any state of resentment.

What you're doing it, but you resent doing it. You are somewhere, but you really don't want to be there, but you are there. So these are states of dysfunctional states that actually cause suffering.

You cause it unnecessarily to yourself without knowing it. So acceptance, enjoyment, there's a flow in what you do. You are present in what you know where you're going, but you're fully present in the process of moving towards there.

The movement is more important than where you want to get to. And then the enthusiasm is the stage that I describe as happening during the creative process. When a new thing, when you are giving birth to something new in whatever form, there can be an enormous influx of energy that I call enthusiasm, which is the ancients believed that there was a higher spirit moving through you at that time, because I mean, literally enthusiasm means in God.

So enthusiasm is the stage of creativity. Now your question is correct. It can sometimes, there can be egoic, excited egoic states masquerading as enthusiasm.

And sometimes at first sight, not easy to tell the difference because you're on a high, you're on an egoic high. Now there are, but there are some signs by which you can recognize whether or not it's the ego or whether there's a deeper creative process, consciousness wanting to create something through you. One thing you can recognize the ego by is when you encounter obstacles to whatever your action is in that state of either enthusiasm or egoic excitement, when you encounter obstacles, the ego, if it's the ego, you will quickly fall into negative states the moment you encounter obstacles to what you're doing.

If it's true enthusiasm, you do not fall into negative states when obstacles arise and obstacles will arise in any creative endeavor. It's something that doesn't mean you're supposed to stop when an obstacle arises. Then you look at an obstacle and see either you can use it and transform it and incorporate it into what you do, or you can bypass it.

That's how true enthusiasm, but the ego gets resentful when an obstacle comes. It takes it as a personal insult. So that's a good sign that it's egoic or not.

And another sign of course is always, but that is more when you're getting towards the end of the achievement, when you have achieved something and it does not satisfy you soon after achieving it, then you know it was the ego too. So you always know the ego. There's a satisfaction, but not short-lived when it's ego.

So the Course in Miracles actually tells you, you can always recognize an egoic goal when you achieve it by realizing that it hasn't satisfied you.

[Speaker 5] (3:05:03 - 3:05:46)
That makes, thank you, of course it makes sense. Because at the moment when I do get creative, I write and I write the stages and it just makes sense. And I know I'm not writing it.

It has to do with autism, with my child. And I'm like, but this makes sense. How come nobody has thought of this?

And when I show it to people, they say, oh, well, yeah, this is great. So I know that this is where I'm going. And I know it's not me.

It's not this form doing it. So that's how I know. And then I find obstacles.

And then it teaches me about me because now the pain body comes and says, well, but I have to be nice. Now I have to be nice. But that's not this form.

This form is not nice.

[Speaker 1] (3:05:46 - 3:05:46)
Yes.

[Speaker 5] (3:05:46 - 3:05:49)
Sorry. This form has to be.

[Speaker 1] (3:05:50 - 3:05:52)
Yeah, I know what you mean. We know what you mean.

[Speaker 5] (3:05:52 - 3:05:53)
I really know what you mean. Oh my God.

[Speaker 1] (3:05:54 - 3:05:58)
The form is nice too. But there's something nicer even than that.

[Speaker 5] (3:05:59 - 3:06:10)

Yes, because that's what you have to do. Like, I heard like sometimes the universe wants to, you know, kick someone. That is what you have to do.

It's not violent, but that is what.

[Speaker 1] (3:06:11 - 3:07:05)
Yes. Now, another thing, the ego, of course, also whenever there's an ego endeavor with that kind of excitement that sometimes goes with ego, I just mentioned the obstacle that when an obstacle arises, there will be resentment and negativity. And also you recognize the ego when it, there's always an excessive focus on the end result that it wants to achieve.

So it's very excited about the end result that it wants to get to. In all the doing is a means to getting to the end result. And yes, it is excited about getting there.

It imagines getting there. But in the meantime, the state of consciousness that underlies your action or your activity is not the highest. If there's a lot, there can be a lot of stress arising with it and.

[Speaker 5] (3:07:06 - 3:07:45)
Yes, but it's not really stress because I don't know what the end result is. I don't know. And that's what teaching is like.

This is not me because I don't know. I don't know what the end result and it doesn't matter. It's not like it doesn't matter, but it's a different, it doesn't matter.

It's like, it's okay either or, but it's the process that when I'm going is, should I stop now? Will I stop because I have to be nice and well, that's just how it is. But that doesn't, this feeling doesn't let me, it just pushes me.

It's like, no, you have to keep going. I was like, why can't I just be nice? Why can't I just stay here and then do yoga?

But no, that this form is meant for something else.

[Speaker 1] (3:07:45 - 3:12:15)
Thank you. Thank you. So if you discover within yourself that a lot of the time you're in a state of lack, of insufficiency, of not enough, and you feel that the answer to the remedy is to be active in this world and achieve and do as much as possible, then you'll probably find that ultimately that is not the answer to your state of lack in order to transcend, to go beyond your state of lack, of neediness, of not enough.

Spiritual practice and spiritual realization is necessary. Focus on the realization of being. It's only there that you can go beyond that state of lack, which is ego.

Go within and discover who or what you are beyond. The person. Does presence require us not to be too excited about something?

Is presence serious? Don't laugh. I see being too excited about something as weakness and I feel presence should be strong.

Please explain the relationship between the two. No, well, presence does not require you to be not to be excited about something. It doesn't require anything.

Well, there are certain requirements for presence to arise. And that is, for example, finding the gap between two thoughts. Once presence has arisen, presence doesn't have requirements and doesn't say, now you must be serious.

There's a related question, but I don't know where it is. Sometimes it's nice to answer two questions in one answer. It could be anywhere.

Well, I'm sure you have seen the, there's a little symbol symbolizing the theater, which the origin of this symbol, which has two images and it goes back to ancient Greece where theater first started. The actors in ancient Greece wore masks and there was a mask for, a smiling mask. And there was also, there might've been others too.

And there was the sad or miserable mask. And traditionally to symbolize, you can even see it at the entrance to some theaters. You have the two masks, a smiling masks and next to it, a miserable looking mask.

And, and that is symbolizes comedy and tragedy. And so the excitement that you mentioned here would be the smiling mask. Oh, it's all going so well.

[Speaker 6] (3:12:16 - 3:12:18)
It's great, I got it, I got it, I got it.

[Speaker 1] (3:12:19 - 3:23:13)
Are you excited about going to Costa Rica? Somebody asked me and I said, no. And that person didn't understand how one could be not be excited about going to Costa Rica.

So that's the positive excitement. And then there's the negative excitement of, I'm in Costa Rica and I got stung by mosquitoes and I've got diarrhea. And it's too hot.

And there's the drama, that's also an excitement, the negative excitement of drama. Oh, what he did to me, what you do, I won't forget that. So it's not that presence requires you not to be excited.

There's a natural thing that comes as presence arises more in your life. You still, you take pleasure in the good things and you have a, you would rather have something nice than something not good. So when something sad happens, something might make you sad, you go, oh.

But there's no longer these extremes that is an overvaluation of conditions, circumstances, an overvaluation of circumstances in your life, either on the positive or on the negative. Now I'd like to think you have a third image because we have the smiling and we have the miserable mask. And that is the good Buddha images.

And you might have seen some on the good Buddha statues or paintings. And as you may remember, I mentioned what that really represents is not a person who lived 2,500 years ago. It represents a state of consciousness.

And on the good paintings and the high quality inspired statues, the Buddha always has a slight smile on his face. It's not the big smile of the happy mask, but it's a hint of a smile. And then you get some not so good Buddha images where the Buddha looks deadly serious, almost scary.

So that's that hint of a smile of the Buddha points to another state that is neither the positive excitement nor the negative excitement of drama. It's something deeper that again, we come back to the vertical dimension. The Buddha, Buddha is a state of consciousness, the awakened state.

The word itself means to be awake, the awakened one, the one who is awake. And that's you. So the vertical state is the state of depth.

And when you're rooted in the vertical, you're not swayed so much anymore by either when something good happens, you go, and when something bad happens, you go, you still appreciate the good. And when the bad comes, you accept what is, and you can enjoy the good, and you can accept the so-called bad. And it's not even good and bad anymore if your mind doesn't label what happens in your life.

It is, this moment is as it is. And so I can enjoy going to Costa Rica and being here, and even to some extent, look forward to going there a little bit. And at the same time, or more fundamentally, be rooted in that deeper sense of presence.

And out of that arises that strange thing or no thing that produces, that causes the Buddha to smile. And that's a kind of flow of joyful aliveness. That has nothing to do whether or not you're going to Costa Rica, whether your trip is canceled.

And even diarrhea won't affect it too much. Although on the surface, it doesn't feel good. And so if you're rooted in the vertical, then the extremes excitements just naturally don't occur anymore because the overvaluation of circumstances doesn't happen anymore.

If you overvalue circumstances, then you've always very quickly experienced the other polarity. What makes you happy today makes you unhappy tomorrow. Or what makes you happy today doesn't make you happy anymore tomorrow because you got used to it.

Or it's very often the case, a mental projection of what is going to make you happy when you achieve it doesn't work. Or if it works, it works for just a short time. Of course, in miracles mentioned somewhere that you can always recognize an egoically motivated goal in you by the fact that when you reach it, it doesn't satisfy you.

Even if, as I said, even if your body is strong and beautiful and you identify with that, you have moved towards suffering. And if your body is not, you're not happy with it, you're suffering already. So hold your form identity loosely and don't let it get in the way of your happiness.

Because obviously everybody has a form identity. It consists of many different things. It depends what importance you give certain aspects of your particular physical, psychological form.

Obviously you have a form identity. It always starts with the body because to some extent you can't get away from that. This form identity begins with the body.

As you may remember, when I talk about form identity, you have to differentiate between form identity, which is physical form and psychological form, and essence identity, which is who or what you are beyond the physical and beyond the psychological, you as the consciousness, the transcendent consciousness, which is there the moment you become still and you're still awake, you haven't fallen asleep, stillness remains.

That is the beginning of realizing your form identity, but your essence identity. But your form identity, yes, it varies from person to person. What importance could you give certain aspects of your form?

As I said, it begins with the physical body. And for some people, that's already a huge chunk of their form identity is their physical appearance. And in some cases, it's a source of pride.

So it makes you feel special, because relative to others, your body's better looking or stronger. Or for many others, it's a source of suffering and shame because the body isn't good enough. It doesn't look good enough.

It's not, when you compare the ego, always comparative in its, it compares its identity with others. So, and then you look at other, many people, some people are made temporarily happy by their bodies, identifying with it, and others are made unhappy by their bodies. But in either case, it's egoic identity.

You might think that if you have a beautiful or strong body, obviously only for a few years, then you begin to, if you are really identified with the beauty or strength of your body, then you're in for a lot of suffering. When that beauty or strength diminishes, then you begin to really suffer. Your sense of identity begins to crumble.

No matter how hard you try to repair the decaying form, you can't really, well, you can spend a lot of money trying to patch up the things, but you can't go on forever. And then eventually, as sometimes it happens with some very beautiful actors, actresses, actors, when they get really old and even the repair jobs don't work anymore, then you never see them again. They live in hiding.

[Speaker 6] (3:23:13 - 3:23:14)
It's very sad.

[Speaker 1] (3:23:15 - 3:50:12)
They live withdrawn, don't want to be seen by anybody anymore. It's a very sad end to their lives. So the identification, you know, you might think it's particularly egoic if you have to take pride in your, by the way, there's nothing wrong with being very happy if you have a strong and beautiful body.

Enjoy it while you can is my recommendation. But it's not to be despised. It's lovely, wonderful.

It's not essentially who you are, obviously. So find who you are beyond that as soon as possible before it starts to decay. Find who you are beyond that.

That's important. So, but it's not only the ego. It's not only amplified by identification with a strong or beautiful body.

It's equally, the ego is equally amplified if you have a shame or unhappiness attached to what you consider to be an undesirable looking body that's also of strong egoic thought form. It's just as strong as the one that takes pride in your appearance. Sometimes people think ego always refers to somebody who feel better and bigger than others.

Big ego seems to be like a triumphant sense of identity. That can be the case. But the ego is equally strong in the opposite of that, regarding yourself as inferior and suffering because of that, comparing yourself unfavorably with other people on whatever level, seeing yourself as a victim of life that's an equally strong egoic identity, a thought form.

So it's not just the ego. It's not necessarily and always a triumphant sense of identity. It can be just as strong as the opposite of that.

So identification with the body, which can ultimately, it will bring you suffering. Even if, as I said, even if your body is strong and beautiful and you identify with that, you will move towards suffering. And if your body is not, you're not happy with it, you're suffering already.

So in either case, go deeper, go deeper. Don't, and then that's one identification. The other identification may be other external things to your body.

Now, obviously, to some extent, the things that you put on your body become an extension of the body. So you look for, if you want to create a certain image or to reinforce the image that you have already created for yourself, the way you dress becomes an extension of, you identify with that as much as you identify with the actual physical body. It becomes an extension of the physical body.

So that can become important too. What you put on becomes part of your identity and all the advertisers, the manufacturers of clothes and brands, they all know that, that ultimately, you're not buying a piece of clothing, but you're buying an identity. And they all know that.

And that's what they advertise. They advertise an enhanced sense of identity. And again, it does not mean there's anything wrong with enjoying something beautiful to put on your body.

The question is, does that give you your sense of identity? Or is it simply something that you enjoy? Very big difference.

In the same way with a possession. There's no need to let go of all possessions because if you radically, as some spiritual people have done and still do in the past, sometimes it may work, but the danger is, let's say you're so spiritual that you say, I don't want any more possessions, nothing. And that still exists in some countries.

In India, there's an unbroken tradition going back thousands of years of humans who have done that. And some still do it. So they walk, some of them are actually totally naked.

Some were just in loincloths. They live on, they are supported because it is valued there. As to relinquish all attachments completely in your attempt to find the deeper dimension where you, the being of you, that is where you are connected with the divine, with God's source.

The danger is when you do that, that you create a substitute identity for yourself as a thought form of me, the one who has let go of everything. Therefore, the me that is superior to all those who are still attached to all those things. And that's the spiritual ego.

And that's very subtle. It can be very deceptive. You can spend the rest of your life, if you let go of everything, and then you have this huge spiritual ego walking around and you don't know it.

It's much more helpful, except in some exceptional cases, if that is your calling to relinquish everything, if you very strongly feel that is your calling, then that's why you have to go. But be careful that you don't create another identity for yourself, a mind-made identity out of that. Then you're trapped again without knowing it.

But if you do, my recommendation is, first of all, don't, because you probably have to let go of most of your clothes, too. Don't go and live in North Dakota or Canada. Move to Florida or here.

Then at least your body's relatively comfortable. But even then, you would still encounter problems. So my first recommendation would be to move to India.

And there you will be looked after by people who kind of recognize that there's a spiritual seeker there. India is still many of these people. Unfortunately, a significant percentage of them, the renunciates, the sadhus, some are genuine, wonderful beings, and others do it for a living.

It's great, you don't have to work. People give you food. You can just sit around all day and be respected.

So you have, for some, it's genuine, and others are fake. So identity, then, for some people, gender is an identity. Traditionally, being either a man or a woman was always an important part of your sense of self.

How important varies from person to person. In some countries where genders are still clearly defined and separated, your gender identity can make up an important part of your sense of who you are. For example, in some countries, if you're a man, it gives you some, you immediately have a certain superiority over the other 50% of humanity, or the women, that, I'm a man.

And then the woman is also pushed into identification with their role, and so there was, I'm a woman. And so, and you're trapped in that kind of identification. I'm not going into gender, that's a big topic these days, but is the, are you seeking some ultimate identity?

No matter what you, what gender you are, there's all these things these days, LGBTQ, et cetera, et cetera. Okay, that's fine, but are you seeking some ultimate identity in that? That's an illusion again.

Anything in form, you're seeking some kind of ultimate completion of yourself that only the essence identity can give you. It does not mean that you cannot honor your form identity. It could also be racial, what color is my skin?

Fine, you can be happy with it, or whatever, you can honor that, but not making that into your main identity, then you're trapped in the surface of life. So there's a difference between honoring your form identity and being trapped in your form identity. And also the importance is mistaking your form identity with the essence of who you are.

Mistaking that for the essence of who you are, that is a delusion. How can I free myself from my enormous desire and longing for a spiritual love relationship with a man? Although I do understand my desire for such a relationship after 25 lonely and painful years of marriage during which I could not give myself nor my ex-husband the love and acceptance that we were both longing for, I feel at the same time that this desire is the biggest trigger of my pain body.

Even during this beautiful retreat, my pain body is sometimes active for this reason. I'm aware of that. Since a long, long time, I feel a huge attraction towards a man.

I hardly talked with him. I feel a strong attraction towards a man. I hardly talked with him because this attraction freezes me and makes me feel uncomfortable because it feels almost unspiritual to have this earthly longing.

Anyhow, these are the moments which keep me away from the now. Help needed. In brackets, ha-ha.

I'm very grateful to be with you. Thank you. That longing is in everyone.

And as I mentioned earlier, it's to do with being this incomplete, form, and this form wants to unite with the other half to complete itself. So you, as this physical form, may never be quite free of that longing. But as you go beyond identification with a physical form and the psychological form of me, that longing becomes an almost peripheral manifestation in your life.

No longer makes you unhappy if it is not fulfilled. The psychological me uses that longing as a substitute for surrender. The belief that through some relationship, I can complete myself.

That the psychological sense of self, which also is not complete, the physical is not complete because the physical is one half of the whole. The psychological is not complete because it can never be. In its essence, it exists in a state of lack, of not enough, of insufficiency, of needing to add more.

And the one thing that the self, the psychological self believes often will make me complete is the relationship with the other half. Partner, the ideal, the one. And that can keep you going.

That search can keep you going for a long time for the one human being who is going to complete me. On the physical, that pull remains. On the psychological, that longing for completeness is transcended, is gone beyond as you no longer identify with a mental image of me, as you step out of identification with the mind-made self, which is always incomplete and will project its incompleteness in many cases onto that one thing that says, if I only had a partner, I would feel saved, totally myself, complete myself through him or through her.

And if you should find a partner for a while, that may work. And then you find you cannot complete yourself through any form whatsoever. So what leaves you through surrender to what is, and which in your case might mean the feeling of great lack, the feeling of aloneness, the longing for him, you may not know who, and there's this great lack at the center of your being, and what do you do with that?

That feeling of loneliness? If you're not vigilant, it becomes mind movements. It adds more to the story of the incomplete me who needs, and you can think about it, project, imagine, and that only strengthens that.

But if you allow what you feel to be there, let's say it's called loneliness, feel it, don't resist it. Let, you may not even label it anymore. Simply be attentive, look at it.

No analysis, just bringing presence to it. That feeling that you never wanted, that you want to get away from, that otherwise would continuously turn into thinking. Now you're saying, there it is.

And it has a certain feeling quality to it. And you give it, you can give it so much attention that you're not even labeling it anymore as loneliness. Your attention that you give that feeling is just complete.

And your acceptance of that feeling is complete because it is now. It is the form that this moment takes. So you surrender into that, say, all right, embrace it, and see if it kills you.

It won't. It's not going to kill you. It's not going to consume you, but it might consume the ego if you surrender into it.

So, and then suddenly you will see it has turned into something else. You can, I don't want to put any ideas into your head and say, this is what it's going to turn into. You surrender into that, the longing becomes intense aliveness itself.

The longing, if totally accepted, and that is even the longing for God, which says, I want God so much. On the other side of the longing, God is already hiding. It is already, it's a misinterpretation through the mind that says, you don't have it.

It's not here. And the beloved is on the other side of the loneliness. You then go, you suddenly experience a sense of completeness because you've surrendered totally into that feeling.

And then you have gone beyond the need, the psychological need for a relationship to complete you. There may still be a physical need on the level of physical body, on the level of sexuality or emotion that if you're a man wanting close to you, the female energy field, if you're a woman wanting the male energy field, this form may have that, but that is relatively minor. It's a very small movement, but deep down there's already such completion and completeness that that's a very minor surface movement of the form, doesn't make you unhappy anymore.

And then it is quite possible that you meet someone because you don't need him anymore. And then it is more likely that the relationship may work quite well because the need for this person to make you complete which no human being could ever fulfill, it's an impossible task and an impossible demand. Every human being will fail, will not make you complete.

So the need and the demands that this human being should provide that completion for you isn't there anymore. And that is why it is likely that the relationship may work quite well when the need, the psychological, deep-seated psychological need is gone. Then if it happens, you welcome the relationship.

If it doesn't happen, that's fine too, it's beautiful too. It's not everybody's destiny and that's beautiful too, to be alone. Solitude is beautiful, loneliness is not.

Solitude is to be alone and to be surrendered into that aloneness, solitude, beautiful, even sacred. Loneliness is to be alone and hate it and not wanting this. When you surrender into aloneness, it becomes solitude and solitude even becomes more than that.

It becomes the deep sense of connectedness with being itself because you'd really been looking for God through somebody else. And it's only through surrender that you can find God. So this is your spiritual practice to work with that.

Not to find him, that's not your spiritual practice. These are the moments which keep me away from the now because that sense of incompleteness and lack still tends to become mind movements. So it keeps you away from now, but it doesn't have to be like that.

The very feeling that you experience, let it bring you into the now. Now, give it attention, embrace it. No need to run away from it.

You welcome loneliness and then it turns into something else, beautiful. This mind made sense of self is also much more focused on the negative than the positive. To be free, you awaken to who you are beyond your history and your life situation.

The most important element is the human's state of consciousness, state of being with the dog. And you call that calm assertiveness. Yes.

Your work with dogs, a large part of that is actually your work with humans. You need to show humans how to be with dogs.

[Speaker 3] (3:50:12 - 3:50:14)

I train people, I rehabilitate dogs.

[Speaker 1] (3:50:14 - 3:50:14)
Yes.

[Speaker 3] (3:50:19 - 3:50:20)
Nice to meet you all.

[Speaker 1] (3:50:21 - 3:50:28)
Thank you, it's all so good to meet you. I've seen you many times and admired your work so much. Thank you, sir.

[Speaker 3] (3:50:28 - 3:51:22)
There's a lot of wisdom in what you do. My grandfather passed that to me. He did?

I was very little when he said, never work against mother nature. So I was raised in Mexico on a farm, and low income kind of type, but very rich on an instinctual spiritual level. So I always say, I'm an instinctual man and man of faith.

Then I learned to be, to charge. Very good. And then I also learned a man has their own feminine side, which in Mexico is against.

Men will practice feminism. So America pretty much complete me. So the four worlds to me is the instinctual world, intellectual world, emotional world, spiritual world.

So when I came to America, I came with instincts and faith. And so America is my father. Mexico is my mother.

[Speaker 1] (3:51:23 - 3:51:24)
Wonderful, wonderful, yes.

[Speaker 3] (3:51:25 - 3:51:25)
That's me. Yes.

[Speaker 1] (3:51:27 - 3:52:07)
There's a book that by this bestselling writer, Malcolm Gladwell, and that's actually his latest book is called What the Dog Saw. What the Dog Saw, and I didn't realize until I opened it in the bookstore that that's one of the essays in the book is actually about you, What the Dog Saw. And it says a little bit about your life.

Yes. Very interesting. And there he mentions that at first you were not as good with people as you were with dogs, not as present with human beings.

And you learned that. How is that going?

[Speaker 3] (3:52:13 - 3:53:42)
I'll tell you how I learned. I'm a good follower too. I listen to my wife.

So that's the one who opened the door for my wall of distrust. Because animals never hurt me. Yes.

So I don't have a negative experience being with dogs. And I was fortunate to be around packs of dogs. So that was my family outside my family.

And so my relationship with mother nature has no anxiety, no fear, no tension, no nervousness. It's no past or future. It's just in the now.

And it's possibilities. It motivates me. It inspires me.

See, it brings a lot of great stuff about me. And so I can only feel joyful when I'm around dogs. And when I was around human before my awareness and I work on my issues, it was distrust.

So I didn't know how to communicate or integrate with my own kind. Yes. You know, and so that became my journey.

Yes. So I did a lot of introspective conversation. I surrender.

I do follow what I practice, you know. Sometimes you have to be assertive and sometimes you have to be a follower, meaning you surrender to what you need or to what is available to you. Yes.

[Speaker 1] (3:53:43 - 3:54:16)
And I know that in your work with dogs, perhaps the most important element is the human's state of consciousness, state of being with the dog. And you call that, I think one word you use is calm assertiveness. Yes.

Yeah. And that's really, that's something you have, that's your work with dogs. A large part of that is actually your work with humans.

You need to show humans how to be with dogs.

[Speaker 3] (3:54:16 - 3:54:18)
I train people, I rehabilitate dogs.

[Speaker 1] (3:54:18 - 3:55:08)
Yes. That's right. Because in the dog, perhaps with dogs, I know the same applies to humans also, but with dogs I feel, in a dog there's a core of goodness that is so obvious.

And in some dogs, of course, it becomes obscured by bad conditioning because of what happened to them when they were young. And the beautiful thing is when you heal a dog of that dysfunctional behavior, even a vicious dog, and I've seen one or two episodes on your show where you work with very vicious dogs. They were.

Grr, grr, grr, grr, grr, grr.

[Speaker 3] (3:55:08 - 3:55:09)
I remember one. A smile.

[Speaker 1] (3:55:09 - 3:55:09)
Yeah.

[Speaker 3] (3:55:09 - 3:55:12)
Grr, grr, grr, grr. You're gonna break a sunshade.

[Speaker 1] (3:55:14 - 3:55:29)
And of course, some humans are like that too. So the dog went, grr. And after a while that goes, and suddenly the core of goodness shines through.

The essential nature of the dog shines through.

[Speaker 3] (3:55:30 - 3:56:02)
Animals don't fight balance. Yes. Animals' biggest goal is to achieve balance.

Yes. My client's biggest goal is money. my client's biggest goal is to be seen as a lovable person, my client's biggest goal is to have a soul mate and that's a beautiful goals but animal lives in a present and animals follow a calm assertive or calm confident source of energy.

Yes. I haven't met a dog that say I don't want to be balanced.

[Speaker 1] (3:56:02 - 3:56:03)
No.

[Speaker 3] (3:56:03 - 3:56:40)
I don't I'd rather just chew all the walls, I'd rather just lick my nails all day long, they go for a walk and I have met a lot of people who question what's balance and what is that important to me. How does that make me happy? You know money makes me happy.

Yes. People loving me makes me happy. God loving me makes me happy.

So it becomes about me. What I love about dogs is how we how they bring we. Yes.

It's all about the pack for me.

[Speaker 1] (3:56:40 - 3:56:41)
Yes.

[Speaker 3] (3:56:41 - 3:56:45)
My journey is not about the money, money is a byproduct of loving what you do.

[Speaker 1] (3:56:46 - 4:50:28)
Yes. Now also humans the many humans unfortunately they're the only the only opportunity or so they seem to believe where they can actually manifest that connectedness with another being is through their dog for some humans. They can't do it with with people because with people there's the the human mind is always in the way you can you can't sense the goodness in people very often because there's too much stuff going on in their mental emotional field.

With a dog you can sense you can I walk with my dog in the street people often stop and say ah love what's her name what's his name but for a moment there's an outflow of love and perhaps that's the only time on that particular day that they have this outflow of love towards another being. So in the dog doesn't have the the heavy conceptual human mind that in the way of this is why I call dogs guardians of being and when you just look into the eyes of a dog you can there's something that responds deep within to their being so it can it can awaken your own connectedness with being it's being with a dog and that's what why I find this so spiritual to be with them with a dog and that's there's a little book which I'm going to give you or send you a little cartoon book the guardians of being it's all about dogs and I know you feel that very deeply I can see how you can relate to that.

Of course we're not denying pleasurable anticipation there's nothing wrong with pleasurable anticipation as long as it doesn't detract from the way in which you experience the present moment but if the present moment is reduced to something of little value in your mind because your anticipation is has such gravitational pull that it completely takes you out of the present moment in your mind and you into the future and you're expecting some kind of fulfillment there then of course you say I'm looking forward to my vacation there and in the meantime I completely lose awareness of this present moment in my surroundings it's only just peripheral awareness but not really there so that's a different matter if it if the anticipation absorbs so much of your attention that you miss this and that's perhaps we use this as an entry point this meaning here now if you miss this you miss the whole thing because there's never anything but this here and now. That's, some people find that if you really grasp that not just intellectually, intellectually you can say yeah of course it's that's all there's always now but if you really sense the importance of that what is of primary importance here now if you disregard that or always mentally somewhere else only yes sufficiently sufficiently here not to bump into furniture or run over by a car you still have some just a minimum of awareness in the present moment yes okay and but your main occupation is to do with past and future and in the meantime you live here now but you're not really here now because you're looking you're there you're here but you don't want to be here I want to be there you never want to be here and when you finally arrive there perhaps for a very brief moment it's nice I'm there but then the same mind pattern arises again because there when it becomes here turns out not to be all that fulfilling and it's there because the next thing comes up it comes there you cannot you can never deeply penetrate into the here now you are prevented by deeply ingrained mind patterns from really embracing and penetrating into the present moment with your attention and so millions of humans on the planet live almost exclusively through anticipation and memory the older you get the more you live through memory because you get more and more past behind you to remember and you can you can sense you have less and less future so the future is shrinking so you don't think when you reach a certain age maybe you don't think that much anymore you some people still do when I retire then I'll be happy I'm just looking forward to retirement or only another 15 years and then I will have and then I can really enjoy myself in 15 years I will start really living my life and then retirement comes and there you sit on a chair what do I do now who am I now without my job title I'm not important anymore weird what do you look for okay now you go into the past think about it there's a lot to think about so you miss there's always the mind pattern of this and this is the entry point into what we might call the spiritual dimension of life or the transcendent dimension of life it is the entry point into a certain state of consciousness that is quite different from the habitual prevalent egoic state of consciousness that most humans are still trapped in and the egoic state of consciousness needs us it lives through us in future it doesn't know what to do with the present moment or when it faces the present moment it interprets it according to its conditioning in other words it doesn't see it as it is because it sees it through the veil of its conditioning its judgments that has been inherited judgments over many years so the ego has been conditioned to interpret the world every experience in a certain way so when you are seemingly in the present moment because something is happening that requires your attention then of course then you come for more there's a person that says something to you it's challenging or situation is challenging and then even then you are not really in the egoic state you're not really present you are reacting according to the conditioning of your mind so if the past is still interfering even there when you seemingly are facing the present moment it's still facing it through the sometimes very dense way of the past in you so people carry all that around with them their past which becomes their personality becomes the person that makes up who you are or who you think you are so you you carry the past around with you and many elements go into that make up your personality that consists of the accumulated past in your mental emotional field the accumulation of past experiences in your mental emotional field this accumulation is what you usually identify with as you that's me that's what people refer to when they use everybody's favorite pronoun there are all kinds of pronouns these days but everybody's favorite pronoun is I because they use it all the time I I think I know I don't like I like I want I must have I I so what is that I what is it that they refer to each person says I and the I refers to this accumulation of past experiences and past or things that you have that have happened to you things that you have done things that you've experienced acquired and that has left traces in your mind as as memory and forms of conditioning and so that it becomes the person the and that is what humans refer to when they say I now there is a there is a deeper I another I which still most humans except many of you are awakening so you know what I'm talking about there is a deeper I that is that transcends who or what you are as a person welcome and a happy new year to you I wish you success in all your endeavors in the new year do what you can but don't expect ultimate satisfaction through what you do or what you achieve through the doing it can give you temporary satisfaction a feeling of increased aliveness a stronger sense of identity of being somebody a feeling of expansion on the outer level a certain satisfaction which comes with having overcome obstacles generated inner resources that perhaps you didn't know you had until you were faced with these obstacles that's all good but the sense of satisfaction is not a lasting one as long as you know that it's fine because satisfaction ultimately true satisfaction is not arrived at through doing or whatever you achieve through the doing this satisfaction which we could also call happiness joyous aliveness whatever comes from being rather than doing so if you do and do and do but forget to be when you encounter frustrations one after the other but what do I mean when I say forget to be how can you forget to be the forgetfulness of being is to overlook continuously a dimension in you that's always there but in the case of most people never realized so our meditation here of course is all about being going into that dimension within that is formless and timeless that dimension of consciousness where you really step back from thinking because all thinking is also a kind of doing where you step back from thinking another way of putting it rise above thinking and realize beyond all the doing and the successes and failures and conditions and situations of your life and beyond your usual sense of self based on your past there is something else in you and it is that which is continuously overlooked and it's very hard to put it into words because every word is a thought that has become a sound so it's never it you can only know what I'm talking about by realizing that dimension in yourself which is by the way the most important thing in your life to realize that you can only realize it for yourself in the present moment the to know that you are I am consciously to know the beingness that you are and by no I don't mean intellectual or conceptual knowing but a direct realization you don't know the apple by talking about it or describing it or even painting it you can only know the apple by biting into it so in that sense you can only know that in the present moment the realization of beingness becoming aware aware aware of your very being make it conscious it was always there is always there but had been overlooked in all the doing which includes thinking becoming aware of your essential beingness you cannot understand what that means conceptually but only directly so if you understand what I'm talking about then you're there I'm here to take you there so let's step back from thinking don't need it right now and when you don't remember through thinking who you are on that level of mind what is it that remains let's say at this moment if you're not thinking there's a space opens up within you and you don't remember your past because all your past consists of is thoughts and when you're thinking you don't remember your problems because really also problems are thoughts so what is left when that space opens up there is something left but what you cannot really call it anything because it seems to be a nothingness from the point of view of the thinking mind but what is beyond doubt is what's left and that is beyond doubt is that you are there is a presence there and you are that presence and that presence has no form and that's the most amazing realization is that beyond the person that you are more fundamentally you are that underlying presence and in that presence you are nobody in particular you are not something that is defined and that is the source of true satisfaction to know yourself as that which is beyond form and to some people that comes not through a spiritual teaching it can come when the forms of their lives are destroyed life does that periodically it creates and destroys forms when there's loss in your life and sometimes what's left when you lose everything is that sense of beingness of just a conscious presence and then suddenly in amazement you as the conscious presence not as a person are looking at the world and you are amazed how lovely it is when you don't look at the world through the eyes of the person which is thought and past and that is the remembrance of being there was a spiritual teacher in early the early 20th century Gurdjieff who called it self-remembering and he would sometimes interrupt his students when they were doing things talking amongst each other or engaged in this or that kind of doing and he would suddenly shout stop and everybody had to freeze and in that moment they the stop signal was meant for them to remind them of the possibility of remembering that deeper level of who they are where thought subsides and all that's left is the presence that you are it's not a question of living either in that connectedness with being or in the doing that is normal existence in this world it's not either or but both fuse merge together so that even while you do things and even while you think there's still an underlying awareness of presence of that spaciousness within and it is that which brings about the possibility of yes doing if necessary with an intensity of energy but at the same time with a detachment so you do but you are not in the grip of the doing you think but you're not in the grip of thinking you may have emotions but you are not possessed by them there is an awareness of that inner spaciousness beyond the awareness of your presence or presence we could call it it's not yours it's just how we use language there's a presence there and you are that presence and that presence is essentially what is traditionally called divine presence it is the light of the world it is the light of consciousness it is perhaps not perhaps it is not absolutely right to say this is god but it is the light of god because god is absolutely ineffable it god is beyond anything that we could say talk about so that presence is very much like the light of the sun that's why we sometimes use that expression in some sense the light of the sun is the sun the light of the sun is still connected to the sun it's an emanation of the sun but it's not the sun that incredible seemingly inexhaustible energy that gives of itself for billions of years for millions of billions so that's we can compare that of course god is infinitely more than the sun but in our sense perceived universe the closest we can the analogy we can find for god is to call it the sun that's why in some traditional societies there has there was some worshipping of course there's far more to the sun and so then we know that's another story so there's the sun and there's the light of the sun and so the presence is the light of the one the god and you are that if a totally disastrous life brings you to a point of awakening now retrospectively suddenly it fulfilled a purpose suffering in your life if it still arises use it so that the ego gets burned up by the suffering so to speak the ego gets burned up uh in this fire of suffering now we can call this conscious suffering that's a very interesting concept conscious suffering when suffering arises become aware of it and accept that it's there in the form of fear anxiety regret you have self-pity you have unhappy sense of self complaining of your life many forms of suffering you've lost things you don't know things that you had identified with taken away from you who am i now i'm nobody i'm nobody well that's great be nobody more completely realize fully you're nobody list you're nobody mess i don't know who i am anymore i've lost everything all the things i've worked for be gone everything is so pointless or their mind is still talking it's all been for nothing it's all meaningless meaningless this is your mind talking don't believe in the things it says but it continues talking many humans in this world are suffering from what we could call nihilism i don't know if you know that word nihilism nihilism means the belief that everything is absolutely and utterly pointless that's a deep form of suffering nihilism it doesn't make what's the point of it or just this awful life of mine is put the whole world is pointless it's so awful and that's a very deep suffering the total lack of meaning everything is arbitrary random and meaninglessness is a mental disease that is afflicting millions of humans it's it's because everybody the mainstream culture still believes it's and it goes back to the 19th century it goes back to darwin darwin origin of species he said life life evolved which undoubtedly is true but he said life evolved but the evolution of life on this planet is an arbitrary random course of events molecules and atoms at random coming together and forming life forms over millions of years random the idea of randomness in the theory of evolution put forward by darwin and others the idea of randomness means it there is no purpose or intelligence behind it whatsoever it's a random process in other words it's the belief that everything that all life on this planet has no meaning it just is is a meaningless conglomeration of atoms and molecules it's ultimately meaningless that basically is the underlying assumption behind the theory of evolution that many people still believe and it has seeped into mainstream culture and even people never even heard of darwin it has seeped into their belief system that we live in a meaningless universe that's a before that happened we had certain religious beliefs so we had there was some meaning and all those a lot of that perhaps was ideological and ego-driven nevertheless in the ancient religion there is the access to the transcendent is still there here and there so there's still there were still little openings into the transcendent even though many forms of religion developed into ideological belief systems that strengthened the ego nevertheless religion still carried on still carry the the secret of transcendence is still there hiding within the religions and that became inaccessible to many humans so now we have the pandemic of nihilism this is one of the pandemics far worse than any physical pandemic that everything the beef that everything is meaningless so and you can have a meaning in your life that is very limited like for many people have the meaning okay i want to have a career that gives you limited meaning in your personal life i'm working for a career nothing wrong with that i'm working to create a better life for myself and my family that's also wonderful and great i'm working to achieve recognition in this world etc etc that's fine too but at some point a meaning that is purely personal may begin to lose its power so that let's say you've spent two or three decades working for your career which is nothing wrong with it at some point you may arrive at a point where your career doesn't mean anything anymore or you lose it that you lose your career and your status or it is it consumes you so completely that you become ill with stress or in some other way turns into something that's not satisfying at all that actually creates suffering so something can give you limited meaning for a while for years and then suddenly turn out to be ultimately meaningless so and some people suddenly wake up and say all my life some people fall ill seriously ill and then they look back on their life and see all this was so pointless accumulating possessions why did i do that what was the point in that all the things that i was so anxious about when there's now there's let's say they're seriously ill now all the things that i was so anxious about that were created what was that was so unnecessary and pointless all the things that i've been striving for are ultimately pointless that can be an opening suddenly wow the limited personal meaning which was fine it's better than no meaning at all to have a personal meaning in your life better than no meaning at all but ultimately that that's not satisfying in the long term you have to go deeper to a deeper meaning that transcends who you are as a person and that is am i aligned with the purpose of the universe that that is the ultimate true meaning am i aligned with the purpose and what is the purpose of the universe the purpose of the universe is consciousness bringing more consciousness into this dimension that's the purpose of the universe bringing more consciousness into this dimension am i aligned with that that's and it then if that is the case if you're aligned with that you're you're a bringer of consciousness a bringer of light that is the ultimate true purpose and it could be that your personal purpose and the deeper purpose can go together that's fine so you can you can have a career and yet it's not totally ego-dominated while you are active working you bring in the light of consciousness you do things in your work that bring more consciousness into this dimension that's wonderful you can so you can have it is not necessarily a case of either having a career or being aligned with with universal purpose which is you can bring the two together that's perfectly that's that's the balance between the balance between being and doing as i sometimes call it the balance between being and bringing those two together but so the the purpose there's only one true purpose in your life and that you have to discover that and that is am i aligned with the consciousness and am i a bringer of consciousness so that's the end of nihilism is that and it no longer matters your entire past becomes relatively unimportant when you realize the meaning of life is to be a bringer of consciousness let's say your entire past was one disaster after another it happens some people to some people's life is like unfortunately was like that let's say you've you've ended up in prison because you did one wrong and bad thing after another and but then you look back in your so-called life and say my god that was a disaster my entire life was just a disaster and okay but at this moment i realize the consciousness that i am and the i've all the suffering that i have created for myself and others all the suffering i have created for myself and others was part of the egoic dream the delusion the egoic delusion and the conditioning that i came into this world with and then you can you awaken at this moment if a totally disastrous life brings you to a point of awakening now the whole thing was great because it suddenly has a purpose retrospectively all the disasters brought you to this moment of awakening so in retrospect what was totally absurd and meaningless suddenly it fulfilled a purpose the past can suddenly be realized as having fulfilled its purpose by creating the suffering that led to your awakening so there's no regret anymore about the past it all made sense so it's the meaning arises retrospectively it only remains absurd and disastrous if the awakening doesn't happen then you or you're trapped in the dreadful dream continue to be trapped in it wow so be aligned with universal purpose that is the ultimate birth no matter what you do no matter how it expresses itself through you that doesn't matter but realize that as and if you want to look at your life in terms of failure and success as many people do is my life a failure is my life a success how do you what criterion do you use for failure or success do you allow this world to tell you whether you're a failure success to a large extent this world is insane so are you allowing an insane world to tell you whether your last life is a failure or success well no if this world cannot tell you then what is it obviously the only true criterion is whether you are conscious or not in this moment if you're conscious in this moment instead of being totally immersed in the dream of your conditioned unawareness the fictitious person if you are conscious in this moment then that is the greatest and only true success there could be in this life your entire past becomes irrelevant if it has taken you to this point in that sense it is relevant but ultimately it's irrelevant you're awake in this moment you represent the awakened state of consciousness in humanity well that sucks nothing else is success if you even want to use the term success but i would probably recommend even here not to use the term success because that would imply that there's somebody there that says i have achieved consciousness and again you would create a sense of another another conceptual identity in your mind another form of ego that says i am conscious other than these people all these people are not conscious i have achieved something i have achieved awakening that's a delusion again because the eye that claims to have achieved awakening is the ego again but that claims some kind of achievement the true meaning you can only awaken if the ego subsides and you become on in the ego becomes transparent then awakening happens but it's not an achievement there's nobody there to have achieved anything it's something that happened through you the ego in some way created it in a negative sense because the ego created the suffering that led to the awakening in that sense perhaps the ego did achieve it but ultimately to claim i have achieved awakening is a delusion it's an ego delusion so nihilism then is something it's a disease that again a form of suffering that can lead to an awakening it can also lead to suicide it can lead to despair until you die in many cases it does it can lead to bitterness and resentment can lead to drug consume drug to desensitize yourself against the suffering of meaninglessness you take drugs you become addicted and this is an epidemic of drug addiction around these days um there's a desperate very urgent need for the awakening of humanity the awakening of humans there's a great urgency now because we're moving into a critical collectively critical situation on this planet and that is absolutely necessary for awakening nobody awakens in their comfort zone nobody awakens when the conditions are when the your mind might say these are the optimum conditions for awakening nobody disturbs me i get peace and quiet all around me no particular worldly challenges to distract me from my meditation periods excellent food everything pure and clean two massages every day and getting rubbed with essential oils fantastic conditions for spiritual awakening that you're saying in this spa where you pay two thousand dollars per day for to create let's say you've won the lottery so you go to the spa optimum fantastic conditions for awakening and would you awaken there you could become very peaceful it would be just very pleasant very pleasant and and you would be very much like a like a plant that grows from seed in a protected environment like a greenhouse just the right temperature and the plant grows very quickly and blossoms but it's very weak the moment the greenhouse let's say the plant is then put outside immediately it would shrink and collapse it hasn't developed the inner strength to to exist in the real world so for awakening the challenges that you experience in your daily life now are actually your best the optimum way of awakening is to use the challenges you're facing in your daily life instead of believing if i could only find an ideal situation then i would easily awaken spiritually no you wouldn't you would actually after some initial very pleasant experiences in this imaginary spa you would actually your level of consciousness would go down you would gradually go back to you go to sleep it's so pleasant

presence presence only arises when it's necessary when it's necessary

[Speaker 1] (4:50:44 - 5:26:17)
nothing comes unless it's needed it needs there needs to be a call for it uh in other words it there needs to be a gap between the current situation and what is needed to remedy the current situation things need to be difficult otherwise change doesn't happen that forest trail that leads up to this building that would be enough all you need walk it consciously four times a day what else do you need enough walking it consciously means one step at a time it means perceiving without labeling beauty even without labeling it beauty the depths you're walking the depths in which the perception happens and the step you're taking at this moment is not a means to an end if you're walking along the forest trail in order to get here this could happen every step that you take is a means to an end and that's not conscious the end is mind mind projected future i need to get there so it could happen especially if you're late he may be hurrying maybe he started speaking already and i'm missing something important but you're missing that step which definitely is more important than what the speaker is saying at that moment the amazing thing is you can actually walk fast also you don't you're not reduced to walking slowly always now to walk consciously you could even hurry to get somewhere and you're really maybe there is little time you maybe you need to catch a train or whatever it may be and maybe you need to very quickly now you have five minutes to pack your suitcase and that can be very beautiful to still be present even when there's fast movement and enjoy every movement of that the energy movement of it it's an energy dance and there you are going through your drawers picking this and that and not even without when you're present you don't thought is just an interference because all you do in the state of presence is you see you look and in that perception the looking reveals to you what is needed without going through the complicated and complicating process of thinking certain things yes thought may be required but you may be surprised for how many things thought is actually more of a hindrance than a help the ability to just look in that clarity of clear the clear space of awareness you look at any situation in that looking again it's the same kind of looking that we are pointing to here when we speak of looking at a tree looking at a flower but if there's pressure on you due to some external challenge it could be something as simple as needing to get ready it's late or more of a pressure some situation then you may find that the alertness that is there as you look intensifies so facing an imminent danger coming towards you that looking would intensify and out of that action then comes so it could be a simple thing like needing to see what is it that i need to pack i only have five minutes and then see simply look and you take what you know beyond thought what is needed and you take very effective way of handling things if you started to think you would become stressed i only have five minutes and i have to work out what i'm going to pack and you're projecting yourself to the end of the five minutes when you need to be ready it's so much pressure produced but there's only this movement now so any situation clear looking at any situation that may appear complex reveals to you what is needed if anything is needed if any action is needed you will find yourself doing it or you will find yourself not doing anything there are situations that are better left alone in one's life and knowing what situation requires action and what situation is better left alone you could agonize over that if you start thinking for a long time should i or shouldn't i if i do on the other hand but so the ability to come to a situation and simply see that is that there is a space of awareness it is intelligence operating but it is not intelligence as most humans know it it is not the intelligence that does the crossword puzzles the intelligence that is good at solving iq tests although it may come in even there i don't know it hasn't in my case it is an intelligence that works not analytically it doesn't break things down into bits of information because the human mind has certain similarities with a computer it analyzes breaks it down the thinking mind but then there's another there's a depth there also there's a greater intelligence than the personal mind and that is there when awareness arises and becomes part of the perception that is silent intelligence operating unconditioned consciousness operating in your life things get much easier then needing to work things out a lot of that falls away so how it's so important we started with such a simple thing like looking at a tree and allow the perception to arise in this place of awareness and then situations you're not always in such peaceful surroundings as here some people would say it is easier to be present here because you're not being challenged that may be true for some quite a few for others it is true that they become more present when they are challenged some people are drawn into unconsciousness the moment the first talent comes into their lives which could be leaving here and stepping onto the ferry or missing the ferry and so they could be at this peaceful four days five whatever it is here and suddenly a little thing goes not the way it's supposed to go and the reactivity it comes back could do oh my god or it could be that the first challenge comes whatever it may be and you go oh you recognize immediately the isness of that it it's the suchness of that missed the ferry and that moment is good your retreat can last a little longer cooperate with the movement of life internally always great power lies in that behind anything that goes wrong if you cooperate with that movement that the mind calls wrong cooperate internally with that movement that the mind has labeled bad you can be sure that it turns around or something reveals itself that is of a greater good than the good that you seem to have lost in that situation that you call bad there's always hiding something underneath that which the mind had labeled bad when you continue to be trapped in that labeling mind you don't even see that it can't it doesn't reveal most of the time it can then not reveal itself to you you wouldn't even see it because you've already decided that this situation is bad and then the good that's hiding more often than not you would not even see or it cannot even come through so we are going back now to the forest trail where it all starts where you take one step at a time there's such beauty in walking not surprisingly buddhists have developed walking meditation to simply bring awareness into something that otherwise would be reduced to something meaningless a means to an end automatic anything you can bring awareness to that otherwise that is often with you are always with you but usually you wouldn't even know it because it's always there or it's usually an unconscious movement and those are beautiful meditations there's no real technique here you're simply bringing consciousness to what's already there so i recommend for the rest of the time that particularly when you walk here between your room and the beach or on the beach or between here along the trail to be conscious of walking of each step you don't need to change the way you walk when buddhists learn walking meditation it's fine they do it their way you do it very kind of every walk is a kind of very careful movement of the foot the heel goes down the rest of the foot goes down and the heel goes up and then the foot lifts up let's keep it more simple to simply watch that's the way the walking that's taking place now the other one is fine too but here let's just do the normal walk and be conscious of each step the simplicity of each step and the beauty that's in there where does that beauty come from is it in that step well to some extent but it really arises out of the awareness that sense of aliveness that sense of beingness of presence that is there with every step it's not the step in itself it is because awareness arises and the step happens within that spaciousness of awareness and that awareness is beauty beyond form that awareness is sacred then every step is sacred that you take there is a there's something that you cannot describe that is there in there is a quality in every step an aliveness and that's only walking and of course as you walk you also perceive there's that and you watch it's the end of believing that all you are is a person an exclusively personalized sense of self a walking to use the expression of that writer one could almost say you're just a walking narrative a story with your memories and heavy and so you're walking as consciousness a field of consciousness perceiving you are a field of consciousness it is a lessening this is why we are here as you spend time here there's a lessening of the personal dimension of your life not that you lose it completely if you lost it completely all at once it would be very disconcerting so that doesn't usually happen it happened to some people but probably not to you and it's not necessary there is a lessening of deriving your sense of self from your personal life and having to carry that around with you and remember it all the time me and my story and it hasn't worked out yet it hasn't quite completed yet so the future constantly hanging over your head is a threat oh god what is going to happen to me if you walk around like that it's a burden just to be alive and you could you can walk in the forest with a threat over your head of your future of course it can come in when you fall back into mind you realize the future is uncertain oh my god maybe i'm not going to get what i need to complete my life or maybe what i have now might be lost and so on so the that exclusively personal me there's a becomes transparent as awareness arises and more and more you go through life and you go into situations not just when everything is fine you will find it arising arising also in when situations are difficult and you may find that whereas before any challenge or difficulty in your life and the world is full of that you go back into the world and before you know it it will face you in one day with five challenges ten challenges often in the form of people occasionally it's some missed some missed ferry but it's in the form of people more often than not and the challenges come and you may find what before you the challenge pulled you back into reactivity and the miracle is when a certain level of presence has been reached within yourself there comes a point when it is less likely that a challenge will pull you back into unconscious reactivity then you you complain you are a personal self complaining that the the world is not complying with your wants and desires complaining in your head or out aloud the world is not doing what you want it to do basically that's the challenges are it's not going the way it's supposed to go and so there's the complaining and that's the reactivity of the egoic sense of self and fear and when a certain level of presence has been reached which may be the case with most of you you will find a change happening and that change is that the challenge could still pull you into yes occasionally it still pulls you into unconsciousness but there's a different tendency now and that is for the challenge to intensify the alertness that is that state of spacious presence that is the non-reactive state and so there now there's the ability to look at the challenge of the situation in that clarity of awareness and you have accessed an intelligence that is greater than the accumulated intelligence and that intelligence is not confined to your head that intelligence is connected to the totality so it can even operate and seemingly come in as an external factor once you have accessed it it not just operates from within you that intelligence it also operates from without and that often happens as just the right thing happening for that situation such as is the case in synchronistic events and so on or just simply at the right moment what is needed is suddenly suddenly it appears and sometimes almost it won't fall down from the sky but it's sometimes you see how could that have happened so just where did that come from and the intelligence operates both ways this is the the beauty of that intelligence you have accessed the totality you are no longer cutting yourself off by tying yourself into a little knot within the web of the whole the little knot claiming an independent existence for itself and it's called me and the rest of the web of the interconnectedness of all things that's the world the rest of the world welcome to our live meditation i'm in sao paulo brazil at the moment i gave a talk here last night it's seven o'clock in the evening here and the sun is going to set maybe quite soon you may have heard the story about that somebody coming to a zen master and asking him to explain what zen is all about and the zen master said come and have a cup of tea and he prepared the cup of tea and poured the hot water in the pot and then he served tea to his guest who wanted to know about zen and he poured the tea into his cup and he didn't stop pouring until the cup was overflowing and the guest thought that the zen master might have been absent-minded and said stop stop the cup is overflowing can't you see and the zen master said like this cup your mind is full of ideas viewpoints knowledge and all kinds of stuff it's overflowing with stuff how can i teach you zen or how can i show you zen unless you first empty your cup now of course that means having an open mind one could say but how do you have an open mind your mind is already cluttered with knowledge real knowledge pseudo knowledge most knowledge is perspectives but how can you empty your mind of all knowledge is that even a good thing well all that's needed is in this present moment to become so aligned with this moment and accept it the way it is so deeply that the mind comes to a stop cessation of thinking doesn't mean you lost your knowledge it's still somewhere you haven't lost your memory and yet you have all the space that contains all that memory you've become aware of the space which is consciousness itself so when you become aware of stillness you can become aware of the space of consciousness the space of consciousness becomes aware of itself and that's the deeper meaning of the now first people think that the now is what happens in the now but the true meaning is that the now is the space in which it happens that's why the now itself cannot change its consciousness itself and you are that and of course space is just a word there isn't really a word that can adequately adequately describe that they're just pointers pointer to the city that way says that way it is it's not the city or as the buddhists say the pointer to the finger pointing to the moon is not the moon we use space which isn't something that we seem to perceive in the external world to describe an inner something inner so if you were a room and somebody asked you who are you it's a strange analogy i know but so if you were if you were this room or that if the room were had consciousness the room would talk about itself who are you well well i'm this is the wall and the ceiling and the floor and the furniture in the room that seems to me what the room is it's so easy to forget what the essence of the room is and that is the space so we can use that analogy to point to something within you you are also filled with furniture the ceiling the floor the walls maybe that could be your physical body and all the your mental content would be the furniture in the room and most people people's mind is cluttered so it's a room that's full of clutter some useful things and many useless things you may also notice if you are that room that sight time comes when little cracks appear in the wall and ceiling as the room gets older

um hello um i would like to ask about um physical pain um your expression of ease of being it really speaks to me and um relaxed awareness but i feel something that always pushes me out of that is the physical pain i find inside just too much most of the time what are you what do you experience what kind of physical pain are you experiencing um stomach pain bubbles and a lot of time a lot of the time just my whole body your whole body aches yes and while i'm here um there is an immense inner body feeling it's like like eckhart says having the socket just put in is that painful it's so intense that it's sometimes too much but i can still rest in it but then the physical pain is so strong at the same time are you in pain right now in this moment when i'm speaking a little bit when i'm sitting down much more um i've tried to shake it out it seems to help a little bit but i wonder are there things i can do or just being with it i see there is a lot of resistance too and then watching the resistance makes the resistance just stronger i stiffen up and you stiffen up when the pain happens you mean no the pain is there before but trying to watch the pain makes it worse and watching the pain makes it worse yes is that what you said yeah and the tensing up of the whole body gets worse and yeah um because you don't want to feel it right yeah there's it remains you want it gone right i want it to be over i'm aware of that but i just can't avoid the thought of wanting to be it to be way it's it's just a circle and the whole body goes into a stress reaction and yeah yeah how to be with that i mean i know there is resistance i see it but i can't stop it either it's okay so if you can't stop the resistance

can you accept resistance sometimes a split second okay no can you stop resistance

again accept it i mean if the resistance is there then you got to accept resistance if you can't surrender to the pain surrender to the sensations if we drop the label pain see immediately when we feel a sensation in our body and it's painful our minds goes pain no i don't want it and then we contract more and then the pain is even greater if we let go of the label pain and just accept and feel the sensation because all it is it's sensation the moment we label it it's almost like we make it a solid form does that make sense does that make sense it's like when you are looking at some flowers and you go that's a rose well it isn't a rose it's a concept rose it's a name we call it rose but it's not a rose it's like we we stop the flow the natural flow and the connection of this beauty right here so the pain that's happening inside of you and my guess is you know how our emotions are so connected to our body and our thoughts are so connected to our body there's probably something in your conditioned self and habit forming of thoughts maybe some negativity as well and that accumulates the energy stays stuck in the body and eventually does lead to pain and maybe eventually it leads to some sort of illness so accepting what accepting means you accept the present moment you accept the form of the present moment as if it would last for eternity that's accepting the sensation of pain the pain that you have or anything that you have true acceptance means that you are willing to feel this emotion this pain in your body forever the new earth this i'm writing

[Speaker 1] (5:33:19 - 5:35:51)
a little bit more these days and that may turn into a book it seems the provisional title is a new earth but it's only a provisional title a new earth of course the words come from the bible they appear in the book of revelations which also called the apocalypse which tells you about everything collapsing the whole man-made order of things collapsing that's what it is about symbolically and then when it's all collapsed the writer says and i saw a new heaven and a new earth out of the collapsed world rises a new world so that's in a way where the title comes from a new earth and i saw a new heaven and a new earth that's what it says and the way i see that is a new heaven is a new consciousness that is arising this is causal in humans it's the transformation of human consciousness it's the inner heaven is the inner world the new earth is the outer manifestation of the transformed consciousness so the question and what of the new earth the answer to that is we don't need to be concerned about the new earth all we need to be concerned about is the new heaven and that's why we are here because heaven is the inner the inner transformation of consciousness the outer the externalization of that as a different world that humans create once the shift has happened that is obvious that politically economically socially in every respect the structures the man-made structures and even the buildings and the cities and so on will be very different from that which the egoic consciousness creates so our gathering here is the arising of a new heaven the inner the rest comes automatically

[Speaker 9] (5:36:05 - 5:36:39)
um i'm wondering if you can talk about um how to tell um the difference between limitations that we're perceiving with our mind and limitations that life is presenting to us and um um and also about um discerning needs needs that we're imagining and needs that are

really being called for real needs or imaginary needs and uh limitations that we are creating with our minds or real meditation uh limitations yes like um where surrender may be yeah yeah well the needs are really the true needs are not that many the true needs are for survival of the body air light some food shelter clothing um some heat in depending what climate you live in uh heating water uh those are true needs what goes beyond that is probably not a true need not a need but something else let's just briefly look at limitations if i if i say i'm going to train for the next olympics because i want to get a gold medal in 100 meters am i it and my mind says no you're wrong is that a true limitation or am i imagining

it it's it is of course a true limitation some extreme new age people might say if you really wanted it you could do it but i'm telling you no so there are certainly real limitations in your life and the example i just gave it's relatively easy to see the difference between what to recognize a true limitation in other cases it may not be so easy to see whether it's a limitation that you just believe in i can't do it because you've been conditioned not to believe in yourself or your power the power that can come through you that you need to look carefully into your life to see which one applies now the answer always becomes more interesting when there's a the question if you can perhaps explain if whether this or in what way the question might apply to your life in a concrete way

[Speaker 9] (5:40:16 - 5:40:55)
um well i have had some challenges with illness yes and i'm starting to understand that there's a story underlying that yes so um sometimes i get a little bit confused about whether i'm just perceiving what's arising and um giving an energy or um if it's actually real uh so there's a physical an illness or um i've had some challenges like neurological and

[Speaker 1] (5:40:56 - 5:41:01)
and and you discovered something in your mind that may be connected to that

[Speaker 9] (5:41:03 - 5:41:38)
um i think so like um there's definitely intensity that happens when i start thinking about it seems to generate um a lot more constriction yes it makes it worse yes whatever i'm perceiving um but sometimes i i'll sort of observe that i'm thinking about it and then react to that with a kind of a like it'll be a harsh reaction don't think that which doesn't help

[Speaker 1] (5:41:43 - 5:44:50)
well with illness then uh the most helpful approach is to accept whatever it is that you experience at this moment it's always this moment by the way you might have noticed to accept whatever you experience at this moment which some people believe means to accept your illness no because illness is already is a concept in the mind the reality of the illness is only whatever you experience at this moment that's the reality the term illness is already a mind-created concept if you focus on that that mind-created concept proliferates and grows and then the the mental image of illness or i am ill or i am a sufferer of this illness grows the more you focus on that so when i say accept what is some people misinterpret it and they believe that they need to accept their illness that's not the case you don't need to accept your illness because the very idea of illness is an idea in the mind because there is no illness there's only there's what you experience at this moment is the reality of the illness even if the doctor tells you it's this or it's called this or that and it doesn't look good it's still the case that the reality of it is this moment and that's what you accept internally that's what is and that can always be reduced to discomfort or pain or some form of disability that's about your weakness that's that's what that's what and that's what you stay with and then you can go from there treatment is a different matter you may seek conventional treatment you may seek alternative treatment or if you're a christian scientist you will seek a totally different kind of treatment that's not there at all but i'm not recommending anything that's all up to you i'm not saying this is wrong or this is right the important thing is not to create a mental image of illness to relinquish that as much as possible so that you don't focus on that stay with the present moment stay with what is and stay with the presence with the the attention the the field of presence that is who you are beyond the person so and then allow the challenge of the illness to push you into the present moment more

[Speaker 8] (5:45:22 - 5:45:45)
when i had been in my darkest moment i happened to read the power of now what eckhart tolle had to say about happiness had been the impetus to go on this journey

i was in vancouver to meet him so you were there on a park bench for two years and you you slept on the park bench

[Speaker 1] (5:45:46 - 5:48:33)
rarely but i did spend most of the days on park benches in parks different parks in london did you eat three meals a day no no one meal a day if i was lucky oh as you sit here is it possible for you to simply watch what's happening around you without adding any interpretation to it to just be present with what is and you get a taste of what it's like to be on a park bench and with nothing further needing to be added to this moment the sounds sights people sound of the water the light just allow it to be as it is with that comes peace you don't get continuously drawn into events and thoughts and emotions and reactions you're the wider space in which all these things happen you're the awareness behind it without which none of this would be here to just be atoms and molecules in space you are the awareness that enables this entire world to be and so knowing that that is who you truly are not through a concept but through the actual realization of stepping back and allowing the phenomenal world to be as it is at this moment allowing this moment to be as it is that takes you deeper into yourself and you may not be notice there's a certain peace in the background that happens an alertness is required for this you need to stay alert to what is to sense perceptions and the energy behind sense perceptions which is the consciousness the alertness it's there without the alertness you will drift off into thinking and then you think about the next what's going to happen to me tomorrow there is a place for making plans but not right here on the park bench this isn't the place for thinking about tomorrow because you miss all this beauty and aliveness around you

[Speaker 2] (5:48:36 - 5:48:42)
and then you're cold not even think about it as a cold no it just is the sensation of it

[Speaker 1] (5:48:42 - 5:54:38)
you don't even need to call it cold and then that's okay too it's okay there's no the reactivity goes out of life against always against something of wanting to clutch at something what about the search for meaning now you notice that just a moment ago you were in that state of alert presence and it never takes long for another thought to come in and ask a question because thought cannot tolerate the state of presence so it will always come in and say yeah but what about i don't quite understand yet can you tell me what does it all mean oh so it wants to add something it wants to control in some way by understanding what this all means now if you can let go just for a moment not for the rest of your life just for this moment let go of the need to understand anything so that you're truly present in this moment so you don't need to do it for the next hour or the next 10 minutes just right now just what is but don't forget yourself because you are the consciousness behind it you are the space the presence can you feel that your body is alive yeah so stay with that feeling and then perceive it's easier to perceive without interpretation when you can feel that your body is alive you feel the inner aliveness throughout your body so some attention some of your attention is there the rest is on the outside world that roots you in the present moment it anchors you in the present moment and if a thought comes into your mind you can watch that also just the same way as you watch a dog walking past you can watch a thought arising in your mind and you don't have to follow it to where it wants to go so you simply watch the thought that arises in your mind and let it go in the same way that the dog walks past you or if you choose to you can follow the thought and then you can say i just thought of another question can that do that too but you see the possibility that also in the same way that you observe the outer world here as you sit on the bench you can also observe the inner world the world of thoughts and emotions thoughts want to arise continuously and that's fine that's what they do but there's no need to get drawn into each thought that arises and immediately go with it to where it wants to go otherwise you're just you're always following every thought like like a dog following the scent does it matter which no it doesn't matter you can experiment you can experiment with thought you can follow some thoughts and you can watch other thoughts you find out for yourself you can play you can see that you are bigger than your thoughts you don't have to be dominated by your thoughts because thoughts create a lot of lots of problems too unnecessary problems and they can obscure the aliveness of life at this moment there are many people walking around here who are thinking about other things they're thinking about the next one they're thinking about tomorrow but this is not the place for that there is a place for planning and thinking about tomorrow but why spoil the beauty of this and the aliveness of this we're thinking about the next moment is that going to be better than this one what this is it it's not going to get that much better this is what could could be more beautiful than this it's the awakening of something within you that is deeper than thought that's really the main thing and that's already there you just didn't know it why didn't i know this it's a deep-seated habit of being totally identified with thinking it's the human condition which could be described as lost in thought because up to now evolution has been unconscious it was automatic but now evolution is consciously chosen by a species and that's a revolutionary thing and you are part of that which i can still make movies i can still have a girlfriend oh yes even if i'm

[Speaker 1] (5:54:51 - 5:55:05)
yes it's beautiful it's a playground you play around with the world you can you can you take action you relate but you're not lost in it most humans are

[Speaker 8] (5:55:05 - 5:55:16)
lost in it what about pain i mean physical pain or emotional pain of losing someone most of the

[Speaker 1] (5:55:16 - 6:03:20)
human pain is psychologically created there's an enormous amount of psychological pain suffering i call that when suffering goes and there's a possibility for humans now to live without suffering that is the possibility there may still be some physical pain it may be that you get tooth or bodily pains from time to time suffering is another level that lies on top of the pain suffering implies a story a little me that is unhappy a mentally constructed entity a little me that has an unhappy story that is its identity and that creates an enormous amount of suffering not only do you make yourself suffer you make people around you suffer to be at one with life is to be at one with the present moment because that's the only place where life can be found you cannot leave the space of now that stays with you whatever you're doing wherever you go your life has never been not now and will never be not now are you making the present moment into an enemy some way internally through thinking about some something which is nothing nothing to do with now i need to figure something out well first of all be here fully and then whatever is needed in your life comes it comes out of the power that dwells in the present moment that most people overlook there's an enormous power here which is the power of life itself and most people look for something and ignore this and the power of life itself is inseparable from who you are in the depth of your being many times you will forget but the moment you realize that you forgot there's a possibility of saying ah yes i lost the present moment and there's a possibility of choosing to re-enter the present moment the first thing that happens when you re-enter the present moment you become more aware of sense perceptions you suddenly there's a greater alertness and then you become more aware of the aliveness in your body you feel the life within it's like the entire vibrational frequency of your body shifts when you become present it's a different state of consciousness more alert more alive and many times you will lose it and then you remember and that's good enough now they don't believe the mind when it tells you oh you can't do it now you've got too much on your mind you can't be bothered with the present moment

those are just thoughts there's no need for you to follow those thoughts just watch them they are thoughts that the mind throws up you don't need to believe in them because they're not true when the mind tells you you can't be present now because you've got too much on your mind then okay you can say okay let's see if that's true then you feel there's an aliveness in my hand there's an aliveness in my body there's beauty all around and you become present again alertness the alertness returns and when when there is time to think then you think then you sit down and say okay let's think uh what plane am i going to catch tomorrow what time do i have to go to the airport what do i have to do now pick up the phone make a phone call fine that's beautiful you're not losing yourself in future it's practical matters and once you've done the practical matters you've thought about you've planned your next week then you come back to the now the inner transformation is not really about finding lots of answers to your questions but finding a new relationship to thought where not every thought so seduces you anymore and if a beautiful girl runs past and you find yourself following her you don't have to think oh i shouldn't be watching this girl because i'm spiritual now no if you can let go just for a of your life just for this moment let go of the need to understand anything so that you're truly present in this moment it's just right now just what is but don't forget yourself because you are the consciousness behind it you are the space the presence life wants to support you but first you need to be open to life so you've probably come here with lots of questions but let's start off with me asking you just one question and then you can ask yours okay you may ask how old you are yes i'm 24 and if not that it matters just so 24 means you've already had quite a few life experiences you've been to school you've fallen in love i think so fallen out of love i think so and have had all kinds of experiences perhaps in different places meeting different people different circumstances the body probably has been well most of the time but you've also experienced maybe one or two illnesses now is there in all those things that you have experienced so far which is a constant continuously changing flux of things is there any ingredient in there that was always not the same that didn't change i'd just like to ask you to see if you can find any ingredient in all the things that you have experienced so far that's always been the same let's we could start perhaps by asking could it be the things around you obviously not because the things around you change continuously could it be your thoughts no because the thoughts that go through your mind also change continuously could it be your feelings or your emotions no you pro as you know they also change all the time so what is it if anything that hasn't changed it doesn't change is there one ingredient in all your experiences good or bad up or down that's always been there

[Speaker 8] (6:03:24 - 6:03:32)
well i think i've been in in here i've been inside now when you say i what does that mean

[Speaker 1] (6:03:32 - 6:04:14)
what what is that i now because we've already seen it can't be your thoughts because they change all the time your feelings or emotions they change all the time your sense experiences things that you perceive around you change all the time so wherever we look there's change so when you say i and point to the eye as that which doesn't change it cannot be what happens to you it cannot be the thoughts that go through your mind it cannot be the emotions the feelings that you experience so what is the nature of that i what does that word mean or point to

[Speaker 8] (6:04:16 - 6:04:23)
so listening that's what here is what's behind

[Speaker 1] (6:04:23 - 6:39:30)
and what's behind the thoughts what's behind the sense perceptions what's behind all the experiences and the feelings and so on so the question that i'm asking does not really require an abstract answer but i want you to actually feel or sense

inside yourself that which doesn't change no matter where you go no matter what you do or who you're with or whether the body is well or unwell when i ask you said it's i and i've asked what's the nature of that i and now you may be stuck for words but you said one word and that was listening now in when you're truly listening there is a certain alert spaciousness because otherwise you're not truly listening and so if that had to be expressed through a gesture it could be you could raise a finger gently and say listen so i say i say to you listen and you listen there's a moment of spacious awareness and there's no thought in it so when you said listening you are actually getting very close to the nature of who you truly are underneath all the circumstances of your life and circumstances includes thoughts and emotions if you don't find that who or what you are underneath all the circumstances no matter how many questions you ask and how many good answers you get won't help you very much and there will be no end to the questioning because every answer generates further questions so we are talking about yeah becoming familiar with a different state of consciousness not that that has never been there it's always been there because it's the eye but it's always been overlooked because the circumstances things that happen to you and your thinking and your emotions have such overwhelming pulling force that they always pull your attention in completely and so attention is that which is there when you're truly listening and in the moment of attention there's no thinking but there is an aware presence so the answer that you gave is absolutely right not everybody would have put it this way but listening points to who you truly are underneath all the things that continuously change now i'd like you to as we speak this is not an intellectual discussion because if if this were intellectual you should have gone to a professor of philosophy or some intellectual at a university and ultimately you get many answers but all those answers will always make you end up with more questions because they don't get you to the core of who you are so let's start off with that and what we are pointing to is a sense of i of beingness that is deeper than anything that happens in your life that's always there has always been there right now and that is closely related to the state of attentive listening to get in touch with that to sense it underneath it all there is a timeless presence even in 50 years time in 60 years time when this body is getting old and this body the cells it won't be the same body the cells of the body will have been renewed many times there's not there won't be a single cell materially there won't be a single thing that's left in 50 years even though you may still be alive there won't be a single thing that's left materially that's here now every cell will have been renewed and so the body will have grown older and yet something timeless deep within will still be exactly the same as it is now untouched by time i i before it becomes this or that because the moment you say i am american i am this or that i am a professional or i am a jobless person or i am a millionaire or i'm a homeless person those all form identifications with changing circumstances and so people look for something there to provide permanency in their lives they want to identify with something that they finally can say there that's it i found it what they really want to say is i found myself finally so they look for themselves through external possessions through acquired knowledge through an accumulation of experiences or sexual encounters some people derive their sense of self from that the more women you can conquer or seduce or have sex with the more you feel i'm i'm getting somewhere of course after a few years you realize it's not getting you anywhere not if you are nothing will get you anywhere which is means to yourself if you're looking for yourself in any experience and that's the fallacy of most people they look for themselves in changing circumstances they look for themselves in their thought processes they identified with their thoughts and opinions and their judgments and this and that and it changes your opinions may change you may be a democrat now and in 50 years time when you become a solid citizen you may become a republican you have totally completely different set of opinions it's just different set of opinions and then you feel the thoughts have changed but the the underlying i hasn't changed so can you go through life being in touch with that being in touch with that in different situations different circumstances different places so that you're not completely lost in the things i sometimes call it the thingness of life one thing after another there's nothing wrong with that but if you haven't found yourself yet you have don't know what that i is then you're looking for the i in things and things include your thinking because every thought is also a formation it's a it has a certain form a thought form it comes and then it goes every emotion it comes it's an energy field inside you it comes has a certain lifespan and then it subsides and then another one comes that's all the thingness of life it's forms that come and go all the time the only thing that doesn't come and go is i that which underlies all that and that's not an intellectual thing that i'm trying to convince you of because that would not be helpful the question is at this moment can i sense the presence that i am that is prior to anything that happens to me or has ever happened or can ever happen can i sense that right now yes you can because if you couldn't you wouldn't have said listening because listening you already knew it came from that deeper place of alert attention that in itself has no content the content comes when things happen but in itself the i that you are one could describe it as space it's not lifeless it's full of life all of life comes out of that but in itself it it is spacious buddha called it emptiness and is completely misunderstood by people because the university professors look at the word emptiness and then say the buddha was buddhist teachings us life denying the total opposite is true because jesus called the same space the fullness of life because at the same time it is life in its fullness to be able to sense that at first it's very subtle in the background but as you become familiar with that dimension it's always there somewhere no matter what you do even when you meet a beautiful girl and you're talking to her and you can from from there you can you can listen to yourself talking and it's fine you're not totally lost in your experiences there's always an a sense of aliveness and peace in the background and that influences how you live your life that sense the i the timeless i because on the surface you have the the time-bound i that that grows older it's identified with thinking and emotions and things happen to it and so on but underneath it is the timeless i now the word i is probably the most frequently used word in the language whenever you listen to people say how what's the most the words they use most frequently when you listen to a probably you'll find it's the word i now what they refer to is not the timeless because they haven't found that they refer to a superficial sense of i identification with things with thinking with emotions i am angry i am american i am this i am that identification with something so that i is the greatest delusion because there's no substance there nothing permanent so if i'm not something am i nothing yes i would pronounce that differently though i would say you are no thing now there's a difference between no thing and nothing nothing is simply denial but no thing means there is a presence there but it has no form nothing that you can grasp it has no shape and no form and no name the ancient chinese call it the dao which cannot be named there's a beautiful it's three thousand years old chinese book of wisdom the dao de jing i recommend it to everybody and the first line in it is the dao that can be named or spoken of is not the true dao and so that there is the presence that you sense a presence that has no form in ancient language christian hebrew there's the word spirit but i don't use that word because it's been used for hundreds of years and misunderstood so if i used spirit people would immediately have some image of what it is some form or call it the holy spirit and there's hundreds of years of misconceptions of what spirit is so we forget about the word spirit but in its original true meaning that's what spirit points to the essence of who you are is formless now we could use the word consciousness is the essence of who you are and you can sense it but you can never grasp it and you cannot really know it you can only know something that is not you an object anything that becomes an object of consciousness i look at this plant and i know it by looking at it and by having a thought for a name for it i say i know this plant this plant is an object that arises in consciousness and i look at you i see a shape and a form and obviously what i see nobody knows whether what you see out there is actually there because the image that you have in your mind of your surrounding environment is there's an optical the eye are like a camera lens they send a picture to the into the brain that the the picture is translating to nerve impulses and chemicals that reach the brain and the brain decodes what i see and then reassembles a picture and then suddenly i see you nobody knows what's actually out there but let's just leave it here we have looking at you this is an object that arises in consciousness in the space that i am then i look away and another object arises in the space that i am or i listen to something that arises in the space that i am a thought comes that arises in the space that i am the presence that i am but the presence itself you can't know it in the way that you know a plant or you know a person or you know a sound or you know a thought because it has to it would have to reflect back on itself you cannot make it into an object so you cannot make yourself into an object of knowledge you can only be that presence but you can't know it because you would externalize it and this is the mistake that humans have made over thousands of years they made themselves into an object and they talk about me and my story i'm sure you have one the story of me and so when you make yourself into an object you live with yourself some people love themselves one day and they hate themselves the next day and the following day they're not quite sure and then you have some other and then you have feeling guilty people have relationships with an image that they have in their mind of themselves me people talk to themselves in their mind well that wasn't very good you didn't do a good thing shouldn't have done that who is talking to whom there's a voice in the head that talks to yourself the mind has split itself in two and is talking to itself and out of that continuous talking comes the story of me and identification with that and the questions that you are going to ask probably have a lot to do with the story of me to find out more about it about my life because after all that's what everybody is most interested in you are here because you are the main character in the story of yourself and the main character in that story has quite a few things that it feels he feels puzzled about and doesn't understand and wants questions and the story in some ways it's worked and in other ways it hasn't worked and so the character in the story has come here and wants to know how to make the story work better isn't that so yes now whatever answers anybody can give you of how to make the story work better there are things you can make the story work better but all that doesn't really help unless you get to the bottom behind the story the eye behind the story then if you are in touch with that throughout your life the story will unfold with much greater ease because there is a deeper dimension that is there but if there's only the story nothing will ever satisfy the main character in that story you if the main character in that story you has never known the deeper eye the timeless presence that is the consciousness that you are the attentive spacious can you feel that your body is alive because when you feel the aliveness inside your body i call it inner body the usually hyperactive mind slows down now the hyperactive mind is extremely repetitive you might have noticed that 90 probably 99 percent of your thoughts you've had them before they are repetitive so new thoughts are relatively rare when there's only the hyperactive mind it's just the old same old things going through your mind again and again the moment you feel the inner body in order to be able to feel the aliveness here some of your attention has to go from the head within into the body so you're removing some attention away from thinking it doesn't necessarily mean that thinking stops totally but it subsides slows down there may even be little spaces in between one thought and the next thought so thinking slows down because part of your attention is in the inner energy field the aliveness that most people never feel because they're so absorbed in their thoughts they cannot they don't even feel that they are alive anymore so thinking subsides and then or even little spaces in between thoughts and then it's much more likely that thoughts that come then are new thoughts sometimes they are insights there are new ways of looking at things sudden realizations they can only come if you are able to calm the mind but not as something that you feel i need to calm my mind but simply by diverting attention away from it not by making some effort to calm your mind all you do is you take attention away from it and so then there is more spaciousness not just one thought after another and then your thinking actually improves which means it's more life more original you have it's more powerful you have better ideas and the way in which you interact with people has more is more real because the real comes not from the accumulated stuff in your mind that's all the roles that you play not just you everybody everybody plays their roles then they've been conditioned to play certain roles you have an image of who you are when you meet a beautiful woman you play a certain role you want to have the best possible image you present present the best possible image and she does the same you can observe it when two young people are attracted to each other they meet the first few days and weeks there they look different from the way they usually look because they present an image like that wants to attract the other and it's unconscious it's a role that they play it's only after the honeymoon when everyday life begins that gradually the image and you believe that that image that you see in her is who she is and she believes that you don't know that you're both playing roles and but you cannot keep up the roles indefinitely so after the honeymoon gradually they wear down the roles and then that comes becomes um some discontent arises and suddenly the mask slips the role is you can't play your continuously the role of me the attractive one so that's to get out of the role playing that otherwise you're stuck with for the rest of your life you have a certain role for your partner for a while you have another role for your work situation you have another role for wherever you go you slip into the subtle differences in the way in which you behave when you talk to the chairman of the board or the Dalai Lama you will you will behave in a certain way and then you might notice when you talk to the plumber there will be subtle differences in the way in which you talk you play a different role you think oh this is not appropriate here right it's only when you stop playing roles when you observe the Dalai Lama how he behaves now you might have thought well the Dalai Lama probably plays the role of the Dalai Lama but he doesn't there's such simplicity openness and genuineness in him he talks the same way to everybody whether he meets the plumber or the pope makes no difference because he doesn't play conditioned roles anymore and that is only possible when you access a dimension within yourself that is deeper than the mind and we just did it or we are still doing it simply by taking attention away from thought and direct it into the aliveness of the body that means suddenly there's some space between thoughts and then you can relate to other human beings more genuinely and you don't need to prepare things that you're going to say next you don't say things in order to manipulate that person you don't say things in order to create an effect they simply spontaneity comes out of that place the spontaneity doesn't come out of the accumulated stuff in your mind the spontaneity comes only to the extent that you can access the dimension that is deeper than mind which we may call the the deeper eye which we may call alert stillness that is always there alert spaciousness access that so mind subsides then you live differently the more you access now at the moment these are only glimpses for you but that's good enough a glimpse later becomes a wider space of that so that is something to remember not as a memory but to remember to do in your daily life as much as possible wherever you are whatever you're doing whoever you are talking to or even when you're alone go within sometimes and feel that the body is alive there's life in my hands you're not imagining anything you actually feel that there is an aliveness here and then once you can feel the hands you can feel the arms the feet the legs you are inhabiting the body and the body loves that it loves your attention if most people don't give their body attention even if they look after the body extreme like you go to a gym every day or you use all kinds of stuff to put on your body you might think that these people are looking after their body but all they're looking after is the the external of the body they are not necessarily present within they cannot feel the aliveness some maybe they can but most not they're only concerned with the external body here we are concerned with the inner so it and it doesn't matter the inner body has nothing to do with the what the external body looks like whether you're 80 years old or 20 years old whether you have a young body or an old body the sensation of the inner body is always the same it's alive and the body loves your attention it's a bit like a when you don't give enough attention to a child after a while the child cries because it wants to attract your attention the baby does it and then finally you give because attention is an is energy it's enormous energy now most attention attention is consciousness most attention for for most people is continuously absorbed by thinking so you can see it when you talk to them they're not there really they're thinking they're looking at you but they're thinking about the next thought they're going to ask as you sit there maybe you're thinking about okay i have what's my next question yeah and that's normal it's not a personal fault of yours it's normal to lose yourself and then you lose that means you're not really present when you're thinking about the next thing so it's normal so you don't have to beat yourself up for that it's normal but there is another way to live and that's the way of to be present to give attention not just to your thoughts to give attention to your body if you don't give enough attention to a child of course a child can also become addicted to attention but that's a different matter there needs to be a balance but a child does need attention from it's vital not an excessive amount but enough because attention is energy and the body loves it as much as a child it wants to be noticed it wants your attention and if it doesn't it cries it might become ill that's a crying of the body you're neglecting it the infant you're not you're not you're not inhabiting it you're inhabiting the uppermost loft in your house you're in a big house and you live always in the under the roof you never go downstairs there are lots of floors you have no idea what's going on there so that's a vital thing and it is a way of also accessing the space within that is the the eye that has no form that is the consciousness that is also intelligence we think of intelligence as the mind's ability to accumulate knowledge and to solve problems that's probably what we consider in to be intelligence but that's an extremely narrow view of what intelligence is what people can measure in iq tests is an extremely narrow view of intelligence i cannot solve the most the simplest of iq tests so i've never done a total test but i'm sure my iq would be extremely low because that is not how this mind works solving little puzzles i've never been able to do that but intelligence is a much vaster thing than the ability to accumulate information and so and then regurgitate it or analyze it or cut it into smaller and smaller pieces what they do at universities research projects the pieces are getting smaller and smaller and smaller the phd subjects are getting more and more and more specialized because you so many people are working on things and then you have to brought your tiny piece that okay i take this piece in my phd about that you can cut that up a hundred times and then once you've written your phd somebody else comes and takes a tiny piece out of that and says i can cut this up even further and that's considered intelligence but true intelligence the true intelligence resides in that dimension of alert stillness if you have access to that that's where the original intelligence resides so anybody who is creative and there are not that many human beings in this world who are truly creative anybody who's created has some access perhaps only in the little area of their field of expertise where they have some access to that dimension this the stillness einstein had it he was very slow he was not considered intelligent at school because he was too slow they said not suitable to for mathematics they said and physics because his thinking was very slow now what does it mean it means there were lots of spaces in between the thoughts he didn't he wasn't at school like one of the the so-called intelligent children who always when the teacher asks a question the hand goes up immediately i know i know that's very superficial occasionally that may be okay but there are some children and that is not recognized by our society who are very deeply intelligent but not in the way that we consider what we consider intelligence and they tend to be slower they don't immediately have an answer because they know it's superficial to have a true answer you have to go deeper within but if you allowed those children to go deeper then you would see how original their thinking actually is so when we just went into the you went into the body already you noticed some new thoughts came not the old thoughts it only requires a tiny space for something new to arise not that you're doing it in order to have new thoughts you're doing it because it feels good to feel the aliveness within you and the more familiar you become with that with inhabiting your body the more strongly you can feel that aliveness it's almost as if you could feel every cell of the body vibrating slightly so and it's a beautiful feeling just an aliveness there and that is an enormously healing thing to do for the body i really want to know about

[Speaker 8] (6:39:33 - 6:40:02)
guilt i feel guilty you know all the time for little things i'm doing or that i'm not doing and there are things that i know i did that were mistakes to other people so i know that you're supposed to be free and liberated in the now but shouldn't i feel bad about this stuff i mean and what's going to keep me if i'm free and liberated in the now from like doing bad things to people

[Speaker 1] (6:40:02 - 6:53:11)
so human beings act out of their conditioning so every human being is conditioned by their upbringing by the surrounding culture by many factors conditioned to think and feel and behave in certain ways and so people do all kinds of things to other people and even to themselves without knowing what they are doing they're simply acting out the conditioning of their mind and jesus knew that because he said on the cross forgive them for they know not what they do so humans create an enormous amount of suffering for themselves and others but they don't know that this is what they are doing people act out of conditioning so when you suddenly see that something that you did in the past created suffering for yourself or others or both when you see that that's the seeing of it it does not come out of the conditioning of your mind when you when you become aware of certain behavior or thought patterns in you the awareness the presence the deeper presence that you are has come in and from there you can see what you did was very limited it created suffering for yourself or somebody else or other people and you didn't even know it so what was acting at that time if you say that was me and therefore i must be bad you are equating the conditioned mind your conditioned mind the conditioning of your mind with who you are if you say i did that therefore i'm bad or and continuously think about it you're equating who you are with what we could call unconsciousness unconsciousness means to be totally identified with the conditioning of the mind so you just have to act it out now there's still millions of humans on the planet who live in that way because the dimension of awareness hasn't arisen yet so they never know what they are doing they continue to inflict suffering on themselves and others to act unconsciously but they don't know that this is what they're doing they cannot do otherwise so the moment you realize this is what i did who you are is the awareness that sees that who you are is not what you did what you did was the conditioning of your mind playing itself out so you you become you trap yourself in an illusory identity if you feel that i did that no who i who is speaking who is i are you the condition patterns of your mind or are you the awareness that sees that's the spaciousness within the deeper eye that sees what the mind is doing it sees what the mind created in the past it even sees what the mind is creating at this very moment if you are aware of the things these thoughts that go through your head how you speak to another human being you may be acting out a role and suddenly there's an awareness that you know that you are acting out a role and then there comes the possibility of instead of being the role being the awareness and then act in a truly genuine way with enhanced intelligence so the unconscious action was unintelligent action because it was action created by the conditioning of your mind which has nothing to do with who you are so there's a tendency for the mind to personalize the conditioning and say i did that and that creates guilt and that keeps you trapped in a very narrow sense of self because you have equated who you consider to be yourself with conditioned patterns that you acted out at the time it wasn't you it was unconscious human unconsciousness no more and now you see it so you see it and at this moment you would not act in this way because the awareness is there maybe the awareness will stay and this will never happen again it is also possible that the awareness becomes obscured again and the same behavior pattern happens again and you don't know it except afterwards when the awareness comes again oh i did it again and this is happened can happen quite frequently so it's important it's good to be aware afterwards if you do not misuse the mind don't allow the mind to misuse the awareness and make some identity manufacture some identity out of that for yourself and say that was me it wasn't me that's the main thing who are you you are the awareness anything else is forms that arise thought forms emotional forms behavior patterns so your destiny and your purpose in life is to increasingly be the awareness rather than the conditioned pattern but as long as the conditioned pattern is there it's there it's good if you if the moment the the moment of transformation comes if the awareness is there while the pattern plays itself out that's the beginning of the end of the conditioned pattern so if it's if it's a certain kind of behavior perhaps with women you do this essentially the same kind of thing um and it happens again and again and the awareness comes afterwards and one day the awareness comes in the middle of doing it in the middle of it you you see what you're doing there's a seeing of it and that's the beginning of the end of the pattern then it may just one or two more times the pattern may come up in a weaker form and it will then collapse so in other words you are making what was unconscious conscious and that changes it so you do not have to manipulate yourself and try to engineer inner change i have to make myself into a better person that doesn't usually work that just creates conflict because you have one image of yourself as the the the good person that you want to be or that you would like to think of yourself as that or you'd like others to think of you as a good person and then you have unconscious behavior patterns that completely contradict that image of a good person and then for the rest of your life you live in that conflict you have and you the good person can talk to the bad one in your head it's just two thought patterns so that doesn't work what works is to be the awareness to see it to be awake enough alert enough and that where the present moment comes in to see are you present in this moment to what happens in this moment not only externally but internally also and are you allowing it don't reject anything if you feel a thought comes in an emotion comes in and maybe it's not a good thought maybe your mind says after the thought has come in your mind says oh that wasn't a good thought i shouldn't have thought that but they are both just thoughts the so-called bad thought was just a thought and the next thought that said that wasn't a good thought was just another thought now it's possible that the bad thought made you do something bad that's possible but the good thought cannot prevent that well the only thing that can prevent that is to be conscious so that the thought does not control you the conditioned mind doesn't control you be there as the witness to your thoughts just don't reject anything so don't go wrong there i know you're concerned about your mind and certain thoughts that go through your mind and you would rather be a good person and have good thoughts all the time but it's not happening and i can assure you it's not happening to anybody somebody is just having good thoughts because the human mind is the human mind it has polarities of good and bad and high and low so don't try to bring about on that level the perfect me it doesn't exist allow yourself the imperfections allow your thoughts to be there they come if you fight them you make them stronger people have the worst problems with thoughts are people who are spiritual so to speak they see themselves or are seen by others as spiritual they have to live the role for example the vicar the priest they have to live the role of a spiritual person and they cannot admit to themselves that they have bad thoughts so they suppress and they have may have bad emotions anger resentment and they and they say no i'm not having bad emotions i'm a good christian they can't even admit to themselves and that makes it even worse and then suddenly very bad behavior comes out of them and they don't know where it came from so on all you have to with thought all you need to be concerned about is to be the awareness allow the thoughts then they actually have less power over you because you are not don't look for yourself in any thought that comes into your head it's not who you are they're just thoughts it's not who you are if you have bad thoughts for two hours it doesn't make you into a bad person it just means that so-called bad thoughts are going through your head and then you watch it and as you allow them there is a deeper space the eye from there you watch thoughts are like clouds passing you don't have to follow every thought and then thoughts can become very tedious they can think you can have one repetitive thought pattern going on in your mind for hours or even days you don't have to follow every thought when you're aware you watch the thought there it comes what you're going to do this to this obnoxious person i'm going to kill this obnoxious person comes the thought and then the thought drifts out of and the awareness remains and then it's lost power already it's nothing so you find a spacious relationship with your thoughts that's you are not you are nothing that arises in that beautiful space of who you are the consciousness that you are which is spacious intelligence none of that is who you they are forms they come and go so thought is not a problem be there as the witness to what goes on inside you then change happens by itself the mind will always have good and bad up and down it has polarities but that's not who you are and you don't have to act on it increasingly you act from the state of aware presence action can come from the limited mind and it's not usually skillful action or action can arise out of the state of aware presence so that's the end of guilt

what's the test i mean how do you know how do you know that this is out of the awareness after the fact if you could go back and look at your actions going yeah that was out of awareness

[Speaker 1] (6:53:23 - 6:56:35)
no but that wasn't how would you know well you know awareness doesn't create suffering for yourself or others when it comes out of awareness so you know when you look at action it has a totally different quality to it it's not self-serving the action did not happen because you needed something from that person awareness is not needy when action arises out of awareness you do not need to use the other human being for some purpose ulterior motive but when you act out of the conditioned mind the egoic mind you're always trying to not you're not only trying to use the present moment because you're hoping to get to some better moment you make the present moment into a means to an end you also make other human beings into a means to an end because you want something through them so that's where the you want to be with a beautiful this beautiful woman you because you want to be seen with her or you want to conquer her and so enhance your self-image or you want sexual pleasure from her but you want something if you if you're acting out of awareness it's not the acting is not under the law of wanting it's not that you want anything and that's also where loving action can only arise out of that because love does not want anything true love does not want anything so that's where it's it's totally selfless action and when you look back on it you can see very clearly whether there was self in the action you wanted something for yourself to enhance yourself or whether that was truly action totally free of self and that's the most effective and the most powerful action is when the self the image of me the thought structure of me comes goes out of the action and action arises that is totally selfless that action doesn't create problems such the buddhist monk said when he was asked what's the meaning of zen zen buddhism what's the meaning of zen and the monk said oh that's easy no self no problem that's it so you begin to live and act without a mentally constructed self you live from the aware presence but for a while the two are there and the awareness often comes in after something has happened that was unconscious and you see it don't beat yourself up it's only the human condition but whenever you see unconsciousness has just happened or happened the other day and now you see it or you see it in the middle of it it's good to see it the more you see it the more awake you become don't personalize it it's nothing it's not who you are that's the

[Speaker 8] (6:56:35 - 6:56:47)
main thing so can the now make me rich powerful free happy smarter more loving more loved

[Speaker 1] (6:56:47 - 7:08:36)
yes all of those things rich yes let's start with rich and then we'll look at the next one can the now make me rich yes now what does it mean to be rich rich means it's not what people think it is it's not to have lots of possessions that may be one aspect of being rich but rich means to be in touch with the fullness of life and the only place where you can find the fullness of life the intense aliveness that you sense when you are present to now is here when you are open to the present moment what comes in is a gratitude for what is no matter what it's a little plant the air you're breathing the light that's coming through the window the sound of the bird whatever is there's a goodness to it and even if it looks bad even if it's a dead animal or dead human when you're totally aligned with the present moment there's a peace that comes into your perceptions and with that peace comes a gratitude that is very deep and so you're experiencing really life for the first time when you become present and so to be in a state of gratitude for what is is really what being wealthy means the present moment is always enough and so the definition of wealthy real is to be to have enough to feel already the fullness of life an expression that jesus used he said i want you to have the fullness of life and people didn't quite understand what he meant was jesus talking about shopping malls that you have hundred five hundred shops in one huge shopping mall and you have thousands of things to choose from was he predicting the arrival of shopping malls is that the fullness of life you can walk around and buy and have lots of money and credit cards and you can buy anything you like now there are people who can do that they are not happy so then he's not talking about many many things when he talks about the fullness of life it's not he's talking about the one thing it's to feel the intensity of being alive and you can only feel that intensity of aliveness when you're in the present moment with your attention one way of being in the present moment as you know is to feel the inner aliveness of the body to feel the aliveness that is in every cell of the body it's alive and the more you go there the stronger that feeling becomes and once you are connected with that you feel that the world around you is intensely alive too it was alive before but you didn't see it because there was too much thought stuff going through your mind continuously the world became dead because everything was immediately labeled mentally that's a tree that's a dog the moment you label it and you don't look anymore it's not alive anymore everything gets dead and through mental abstraction when you go around the voice in your head immediately calling things calling things names giving things names so when you become more present there's this alert attention with which you meet your surroundings once you know the fullness of life that is already here now and then gratitude arises for what is no matter what it is then living in this way eventually that fullness that in essence is an inner realization rather than outer that's so that's the foundation for wealth is to feel the fullness of life within and then if you live in that way in connectedness with that eventually the fullness of life will also manifest for you externally in various ways meaningful activity is a form of wealth to know that what you're doing is helping other human beings brings an external fullness also into your life which is a form of wealth and wealth may also come in the form of things coming to you more conventional things home or car or whatever it may be those things also come much more easily when basically you already feel the fullness even long before it comes externally so basically you feel already wealthy when you live fully in the present moment you never feel really poor i perhaps spent 10 years of my life at least living what people would say below the poverty line and i never felt poor i always felt rich although for a long time i had nothing no external possessions but life was it was so fulfilling to live every moment fully present to the moment that life it felt i felt wealthy abundant and much much later did actually external abundance come into my life to some extent and that didn't make me feel better i feel just when now i have a car during those years i used a bicycle mostly or the bus and i don't feel better now because i have a nice car i feel exactly the same but just i it's nice to have a nice comfortable car with air conditioning in the summer and so but it makes the fullness hasn't changed it hasn't done anything to change that so to already the foundation is to be fully alive in the present moment and then it is much more likely that external wealth will also come to you as an outer manifestation of an inner reality if you feel wealthy already but if you feel poor and feel that you really you need to make money now even if you achieve it you'll be unhappy with your wealth because it comes out of the unhappiness so there are many people who are creating wealth these days they build up a big business on enterprise but it comes out of a deep dissatisfaction with what is it comes out of an enormous neediness to show to the world that you are somebody or to prove to yourself or the world how good you are and that that is not conducive to true happiness the wealth there are many wealthy people who are unhappy in their wealth so that's and they're not really wealthy and they they are basically still deprived they are deprived of the fullness of life and they have perhaps five or ten houses in different places cars yacht and yet they're deprived of the fullness and so they need more and more and it doesn't help so here we have living in the present moment brings you into the fullness of life now and then eventually it will also manifest in different ways externally for you power was the other thing will it bring me power yes but not power to the ego it will make your life more empowered than what you do much greater power flows into what you do because because what you are doing the action that you are performing whatever it is in the present moment the only place where you can do anything the action that you are performing in the present moment is not a means to an end for most people they are active but we are active because they want to get there to that point in the future they want to the end result their eyes are on the end result so they may be busy building up a business because they want to become wealthy but they reduce the quality and aliveness of the present moment because here they are reducing the present moment to a means to an end they give it inferior inferior status in their minds the future is more important because that's where they're going to be wealthy but then the pattern remains inside them and even when they have the money they still have the same basic psychological pattern which means they need the next moment and always they reduce the present moment to a means to an end so the action is not of high quality it does not contribute to happiness they don't make themselves happy and they don't make others happy with what they do so that's not truly empowered and it is low quality action high quality action comes when you don't reduce the present moment to a means to an end that's truly empowered action and only when you no longer reduce this moment to a means to an end can you give your full attention to whatever it is that you are doing now some great artists do it sportsmen do it when they perform they are totally present it's not a means to an end they're totally in the now and so high quality action comes out of that and this is empowered action so living in the now brings power into your life true power not the pseudo power of the ego and then whatever comes out of it out of that action will be good in one way or another it will not be one could say i call it it's not karmic action which means karmic action it's an eastern term karma karmic action creates more unhappiness it comes out of unhappiness and creates more unhappiness for yourself and others but out of presence alignment with now comes non-karmic action it does not create more suffering on the planet because so many people are very very active but a lot of that activity ultimately creates more suffering on the planet so that's the power what's the next thing that the now will bring you

what was the question i really want to know about um guilt um i feel guilty you know all the time for little things i'm doing or that i'm not doing and there are things that i know i did that were mistakes to other people so i know that you're supposed to be free and liberated in the now but shouldn't i feel bad about this stuff i mean and what's going to keep me if i'm free and liberated in the now from like doing bad things to people because i'm that's a fear i think

[Speaker 1] (7:09:17 - 7:24:13)
the only place where you can be free of the conditioning of your mind because freedom is not an external thing it's an internal thing you can be in prison and you can be free people have written to me from prison and they've read the power of now and they said they now feel free what does that mean true freedom is freedom from your mind from the conditioned all the conditioned thoughts and emotions that otherwise otherwise control you freedom is the freedom to step back from the conditioning into the deeper i the awareness that you are it's freedom from thought ultimately so that not every thought controls you so that's it's the freedom from conditioning and basically it's the freedom from the past so you're no longer determined your behavior and your thinking is no longer determined by your past

it's also freedom from future because most people have a desperate need for the next moment it's i call it psychological future they need the fulfillment that they think the future will bring them it won't so this is something for you to be aware enough because i know that pattern also still operates in you believing that something in the future will bring you greater fulfillment than you have now but it won't if you don't have it now you won't have it then you have to access the power of now regardless of your external circumstances you can have that now you can't wait for the future because once you're in the waiting mode you'll always be waiting for the next moment even when you become a famous actor it won't feel quite right maybe you're already famous i don't know but it won't feel quite right and and you will there will be many things when you're very famous i've met one or two famous actors and they come to this teaching why do they come what don't they have everything no they've realized they don't have what really matters and suddenly they discover the spiritual dimension because they've achieved everything else on the worldly dimension so go deeply into the present moment become deeply aligned and at one with the only thing there ever is in your life the present moment and that is that is where true power resides and that is the only place where you can be truly free what's the next thing that you want happiness can happiness come in the future when i achieve this or that then i'll be happy when i make it but every situation that you go into will have a downside there is not if you're expecting circumstances to make you happy they can do that for a while and then you find oh it's not quite what i expected and there's always another side to it and very often the very thing that makes you happy if you have an external thing that makes you happy that very thing will also make you unhappy an example a woman comes into your life who makes you happy one two three years later the same woman makes you unhappy the same thing or you're a job a great job is offered to you and it creates so much stress that you make yourself ill it makes you happy first and it makes you unhappy you become famous and then you see the downside of fame you can't go out in the street alone anymore there's a riot the moment people see you you're a prisoner of your house you can't go out without two or three bodyguards is that freedom and you thought you would be free when you become famous i've met one or two famous people who they can't go out alone it's too dangerous and and people stop them all the time and they gather around them they have to stay inside everything has to be organized they have to jump in the car with tinted windows and bodyguards is that freedom are they happy because of their fame no they have experienced the downside of fame it doesn't mean that you should not pursue goals there's nothing wrong with being famous but don't expect it to make you happy the true happiness has to be found it comes from being aligned with life internally and where is that now here a complete openness and yes to the present moment that takes you deep into the present moment that is true happiness comes out of that and then you can go on and do things and see if you can become famous why not experience that experience as much as you can without hoping that some experience or when you have accumulated enough experiences you will finally feel fulfilled and fully yourself that won't happen there's no end to accumulating experiences and achieving this or that you cannot find yourself there you can only find yourself in the present moment the only for everything else you need time to achieve success in your career to learn to play the piano to learn a foreign language even to if you want to meet a woman it takes time you have to walk somewhere where the beautiful women hang out and then you have to it takes time everything takes time and so the mind thinks okay finding myself who i truly am will also take time it thinks when i've added enough to who i think i am maybe recognition from other people fame possessions put all these things in the back my back and when i have enough things accumulated then i will be full and that moment will come at some point in the future it doesn't because the back no matter how much you put in it'll never feel full besides from the fact that also often things fall out of the back you put something in here and then something else falls out you suddenly get wells and then you're unhappy in your marriage or you're happy in your marriage and suddenly the job doesn't work anymore or you're it's always there's nothing stability isn't to be found in the external world it's in constant flux this universe is not stable people have this absurd illusion that they're living in a stable universe and that they can achieve some kind of stability in their lives they are shocked when suddenly big disasters happen and you realize how unstable really everything is so if you looked and that doesn't mean it's to be rejected play in the world and enjoy the play play as much as you can but don't expect anything out there to truly make you happy or fulfill you happiness is to be found directly within yourself it comes from being connected with who you are to this comes as brings us back to where we started to be in touch to feel the deeper I and there's enormous joy in simply feeling the beingness that you are to feel the I am that is deeper than this or that I am the very life that you are to feel that to feel alive that's out of that comes true happiness and then you can play around in the world and you acquire things and then you lose things and you acquire some more and then you lose some more and then you in the end you lose everything that everybody does you lose the body in the end it's form dissolves sooner or later but it's finding something that is deeper than any form inside yourself that's true happiness love also come true love comes only out of the true I true love cannot cannot come out of the pseudo I that says I the actor I the good-looking actor I the famous actor I the American I the poor one or I the wealthy one or I who is good with women the true love doesn't come out of that I that's a pseudo I that's what most people refer to when they use that word that's so common I but the true love comes out when you're connected with the deeper I the I that has no form the one thing that never leaves you the one ingredient that's always there no matter where you are what you do what you experience that never changes the I the consciousness that you are when you live in connectedness with that aligned with that that's where true love comes because when you meet another human being you can sense in them also there's the depths of the same I that is your identity you recognize yourself in the other and the other as yourself and you feel a deep connectedness much deeper than anything that you can say or think with the other human being and that's true love love is to feel that you're ultimately not separate you're one that can only come out of the spaciousness that is part of the now the now is space what happens in the now is form don't confuse the two the reason why people think there are many many moments in every day in every in your lifetime in every hour because what happens changes continuously the forms around you change continuously the thoughts that go through your head change the emotions that you feel change the people around you change so people think every time it's a new moment this moment and another moment and another moment if you look more deeply you see it's not another moment it's always now but the form that appears in the now changes continuously but it's always now and ultimately now is who you are the space of now is the space of I and then things happen in it and they change continuously so there are two ways of saying when they ask you what is it that never changes what is it that's always there in your life no matter where you go and what you do you can say it's always I the deepest I not the superficial I that changes the thoughts the emotions who you are in the world but the deeper I is always that's always the same and so another way of looking at it is to say it's always now the now never changes and then you find the miraculous thing they are actually one the space of now and who you are in the depth of your being is consciousness itself before it becomes something the very foundation out of which all life comes you could say god god dwells in the depth of your being not as some entity but as the formless one life itself that is the deepest meaning of what now is and that's why the now can never leave you so I am the now in essence I am not what happens I am the space in which everything happens that's your true identity and when you live one with that knowing that your life will be fruitful and a great and wonderful adventure when you don't know who you are then no matter what you do what you achieve where you go who you meet it won't satisfy you that's how simple it is so the purpose of the work I do is to address the root cause of human suffering which is in the human mind whenever a human being is confronted with a huge challenge it is also a huge potentially a huge opening into the spiritual dimension yes yes Eckhart let me interrupt here

[Speaker 5] (7:24:13 - 7:24:26)

because one of the greatest lessons I learned and I think I learned this in a new earth is that stress is wanting the present moment to be something that it's not and all suffering

[Speaker 1] (7:24:26 - 7:24:40)
comes from that I would recommend that you ask yourself the question how would I experience this moment if I did not add these thoughts to it a few months ago after

[Speaker 7] (7:24:40 - 7:24:51)
knowing Eckhart Tolle for a while and studying the books I woke up and I suddenly got it

[Speaker 13] (7:24:55 - 7:25:37)
the Eckhart Tolle foundation is dedicated to accelerating the awakening of human consciousness to create a more peaceful and harmonious world the foundation focuses primarily on awakening human consciousness as well as alleviating and ultimately ending the suffering created by the dysfunction of the egoic human mind we accomplish this through making Eckhart Tolle's teachings available to communities in need and by funding and collaborating with like-minded organizations especially those who work with youth and students incarcerated people hospice patients the elderly and animals

[Speaker 14] (7:25:39 - 7:25:48)
well first I just think you guys are making an incredible impact and I think you know the thing that you are showing that you guys are doing really well is inviting other people into the

[Speaker 3] (7:25:48 - 7:26:18)
conversation it's been my lifelong passion to help not only myself but other people understand that we all have the power inside of ourselves to find our own love and our own connection to wisdom and nobody personifies that quite like Eckhart does yes this we are all together in the same boat now to try to build together a better world so I'm very grateful for the foundation's work in that area and I hope that you will be able to reach as many people as possible

[Speaker 2] (7:26:21 - 7:26:36)
ultimate vision one day there will be no need to have this kind of foundation to help awaken human beings the consciousness on this planet because we will be awakened

[Speaker 9] (7:26:42 - 7:27:02)
it wasn't until I started reading the books and thinking about the concepts and then applying them to my own life did I realize how life-changing and extraordinary his teachings are and and that really made me passionate about sharing them with people around me and then hopefully people even beyond that I'm so glad to be part of this

[Speaker 8] (7:27:02 - 7:27:09)
Eckhart Tolle foundation because right now is the time that the world most needs awakening

[Speaker 1] (7:27:09 - 7:27:36)
and presence the main focus of the foundation is to change the consciousness to bring about the awakening my hope is that the foundation will be able to get the message and the teaching into those places where it's needed the most and where the potential is often greater for

[Speaker 13] (7:27:36 - 7:27:43)
spiritual awakening on behalf of the Eckhart Tolle foundation we are so grateful for your support

[Speaker 1] (7:27:44 - 7:33:37)
together we can change the world from within so there's something that is much more important than anything in your life situation and that's the ability to be still that's one way of putting it hmm and in that you realize that the depth is a depth to who you are a presence that shows to you without any doubt that whatever happens in your life situation out there is of secondary importance and when things are not satisfying in your life situation whether it's to do with money work relationships living situation health it is often precisely at those moments when things don't work in one or one or several of these areas that there's an opportunity for you to go deeper within yourself and find that realm of stillness or spaciousness or presence whatever you want to call it so you become to some extent free from external conditions because the conditions of your life including the physical body even that's still external no longer have the ability to make you really unhappy really upset and frustrated and fearful and anxious on the other side this may sound like bad news but it's not all these external things also lose their ability to make you really happy wow yeah god no no you can still feel enthusiastic and enjoy life tremendously whatever life gives you in the world of form but there's always something there's something transcendent in you from where you observe and enjoy the beautiful things that come into your life there is an enjoyment there but you don't give them an importance that they don't have you don't attach yourself to them you allow them to be maybe a possession that comes to you and it's lovely you look after it whatever it is a house an object you appreciate it it's lovely you look after it without that strong sense of attachment of mine um and when things come into your life that are not pleasant perhaps physically not pleasant you get stranded out in the cold or whatever it is

[Speaker 12] (7:33:38 - 7:33:39)
again

[Speaker 1] (7:33:44 - 8:05:23)
we can't say that you particularly like that that you enjoy that but you're in touch with the transcendent dimension so your aversion to whatever arises does not consume you it just is there on the surface you know you have some action you need to take some action to get out of the situation and then you do it so you just take a very simple example the weather of course you enjoy a beautiful sunny day and then the next day is gray and rainy as it is here today and yet there's a transcendent dimension in you where that makes absolutely no difference so when it's rainy say oh it's rainy and perhaps the mindset would have been nice if it had been sunny today we could have gone out for a long walk gone to the beach walk in the forest they had a picnic whatever and yet at a deeper level does it really matter whether you have a picnic or not today or go to the beach or stay in the source of real enjoyment is never really in out there what happens out there it's it arises out of the stillness within you conditions do not need to be any particular in a way for you to be connected with the stillness to be the stillness did you hear that it was a news flash on an ipad what's happening have to look so we are um speaking of and hopefully realize experientially what we could call a transcendent dimension to who you are where there may still be on the surface of your life some happiness and unhappiness if you even want to call it that and yet those things no longer touch the deeper the dimension of who you are there's a transcendent dimension that's not you can't really call it i know some spiritual teachers talk of happiness but like ramana maharshi but what he really means is is the transcendent state so i don't use those words because the way i use happiness and unhappiness they refer to surface reality and surface experiences the experience of being unhappy or happy there is a transcendent state of presence on inner peace that is beyond happiness or unhappiness and but it's very alive you don't become dead inside in the absence of this ability to become still to be connected with the stillness to be the stillness if you don't have that then it's better to experience happiness and unhappiness rather than deaden yourself completely and say i don't want to feel anything anymore but who wants to be trapped in that continuous ups and downs of your life almost and the downs for many people are more frequent than the ups and react to everything that every little thing that doesn't go as it's supposed to go this this reactive me to dreadful way to live so stillness your best friend always there for you don't get attached to those words of course it's much deeper than your friend because stillness essentially is one with who you are but as we approach it i might occasionally use words just as temporary pointers and as you begin to have glimpses of stillness for a little while it may be helpful to regard it as your best friend and then you let go of that and please don't believe that stillness needs to be outside of you in so that you can become still inside in the midst of noise you can be still external noise and as you probably know the quickest way to become still in the midst of things noisy things surrounding you is to accept the present moment completely as it is just this moment it already is people are screaming around you whatever they do this is what is traffic building up okay whatever whatever situation this moment already is as it is so by completely accepting that this is what is right now which doesn't prevent you from taking action action needs to be taken but what is is and by completely accepting what is even if it's noisy or whatever it opens you up to the stillness so when you if you if you do meditate and you sit down and you close your eyes and maybe you have a technique or you don't have a technique anymore and you just sit and be still and if then a disturbing noise happens somewhere around you um sometimes you say oh i can't meditate with noise like that of course that's a thought that arises you don't need to believe that thought don't believe every thought that comes into your head i can't meditate now what's true it's precisely at that moment if you can completely accept whatever arises at this moment and it sometimes can be a great opportunity to go deep enough where the stillness is when something outside does not seem to be conducive to stillness and yet you completely accept this present moment and oh there it is despite the noise that is so spiritual awakening more often comes in spite of something seemingly that did not look conducive to spiritual awakening it more often comes that way than because of something because of would be a beautiful experience and you would think oh and these i have nothing to worry about i have security lovely surroundings now i have time for spiritual awakening do you maybe could be but more likely not so here you are let's say one day you are in a beautiful spa in a warm climate it's sunny you're getting massage with lovely oils exquisite food gentle music or sound of water in the background everything is absolutely perfect a few weeks later you get home somebody falsely accuses you of something you get put in prison and there you are extremely unpleasant noisy surroundings bad food bad company which situation is more likely to bring about spiritual awakening which means takes you to a deeper level within yourself to the stillness i'm not going to answer that i'll leave you with those two situations be still be at peace be at one with the present moment it rains one day and they go oh what a miserable day next day it's sunny oh it's sunny that means you are under the situation you're not above the situation you're under it the situation controls you and i've given them the simplest possible example but even that happens very commonly so especially if you live in london or seattle or vancouver where it rains quite a lot then if you are dependent to some extent even on the weather for feeling good or not good then that's what happens but you will notice when you look out of the window the real pain comes with saying what a miserable day it's the rain is nothing in itself it just is but you call it something and it's not just a middle but it's another miserable day and the moment you have used about the thought miserable it connects to other things in your life that you can also call miserable and there we go that's the beginning of a day and that's the beginning of a story line in your head so for 46 years i've been constantly criticized capitals letters by my mother for everything i always felt fear in her presence trying to fulfill her expectations i couldn't handle her criticism anymore and three years ago i decided to stop any contact but i suffer painful fear guilt and hatred i'm exhausted please help yes so you've gone from one unpleasantness into another kind of unpleasantness um if you see that your mother what whatever your mother says is totally conditioned by her mind she's playing the same old record cd it's not records anymore but nowadays what do you play the old download what yeah so to realize whatever comes out of her mouth is her mind regurgitating the conditioning throughout her lifetime and perhaps being conditioned by her mother and so on in that way so perhaps you've been thinking all those 46 years or whatever it was that there was some meaning or significance to what your mother said but basically it was just the noise of her mind and she believed in it she believed that whatever her mind repeated and repeated was the truth there were certain patterns she could never get beyond being the mother she knew better of course when you were four or five but she didn't couldn't let go of the belief that she knew better when you grew up she couldn't let go of the role of mother it continues to play in her and so can you see that what she is doing is simply a replay of her mind without believing that it has any significance and so approach her in a state of compassion because she's completely at the mercy of her conditioned mind and you don't have to buy into what she says because of course many people think i really i need my parents to understand me i want my mother to understand me and they feel very unhappy if they're not being understood and it may be beyond the capability of your mother to understand you and and it certainly is beyond the present capability of your mother to understand you so she is limited you have to recognize her limitations in this lifetime maybe before she dies she will go beyond before death is possible but for the time being she is very limited in her state of consciousness and that is not to look down upon her but to see it with compassion that what she does is extremely repetitive and not to believe your own mind when it tells you that she needs to understand you i need my mother to understand me do you yes okay what happens if your mother's understood you the mother says now i really understand you how you live oh thank you and now what it's just another same present moment or before the mother says what you do is all wrong you shouldn't have done this why didn't you do that okay same thing it really makes no difference she understands you doesn't understand except that your mind is telling you that it does make a difference you visit your mother you have a cup of tea with her she understands you you go off and you look at the sky and you take a breath and it's the present moment and then you remember oh my mother understands me or you go and have a cup of tea with her and she continues with her old patterns and say goodbye and go off and you look at the sky and take a breath and you say oh she's still in her old patterns well that's how it is makes no difference unless you believe your mind when it tells you that it's dreadfully important that your mother should understand you and that happens when you believe every thought that comes into your head and then the thought can make you unhappy my mother doesn't understand me and you feel something huge is missing in your life because your mother doesn't understand you but that's because you believed in the thought that says that this should be when it isn't and so you you feel this enormous burden which is not really created by your mother it's created by your own by your own mind so it's your mother is not to blame you have to see that your own mind is creating this enormous burden and when you see that you can actually you can let go and allow your mother to be who she is in that particular conditioned form right now and allow her her limitations i had a similar experience with my mother although not as extreme as your experience probably my mother did not continuously criticize me but she made it very clear that she was unhappy with the choices i made in life and sometimes she implied it she said oh well you could have done so much you had so many chances didn't you and with your intelligence you could have done so much and i was already 45 and she said but you threw it away oh well let's not talk about it and so allowing her her limitations with not as i said not looking down on her and say you are so limited but compassionately allowing her that's that's how she that's her her mind mental conditioning she thinks in terms of a man needs a career he needs to make money he needs to get married and have children and he needs to show that he's successful and all those things and that didn't happen with her son and she wasn't happy about that so she couldn't go beyond the conditioning of her mind because that was conditioned by the particular culture she grew up in and i could see that and it was fine now we earlier little earlier we talked about likes and dislikes i had love for my mother because i could occasionally one could actually glimpse beyond her conditioned mind and occasionally you could see her being shining through her eyes when she stopped talking and and that was just wonderful to see that that aliveness in her eyes and the beingness in her and even when she was talking i could still sense it in the background so i didn't have to react to her words i can allow the words to pass through me like like some sound of leaves in the wind without any particular meaning or significance and that was fine and yet talking about likes and dislikes i didn't like being staying with her for more than a few days because it got too much although i loved her my preference was after five or six days to say okay i have to go now and she got used to that and it was fine i would come once a year sometimes twice a year and visit for a few days and that was surrender to that my choice was not to say okay i'm going to now spend three months at my mom's place but if that had been inevitable if i had been forced for some external reasons to do that would have been fine too i would have surrendered to it but it's a few days was usually fine was enough as you know ramdas tells us tells you that as the great test whether you're enlightened if you think you're enlightened spend two weeks with your parents and that's the great that's the test this mind made sense of self is also much more focused on the negative than the positive to be free you awaken to who you are beyond your history and your life situation how do we get into the state of presence first of all step one let's so to speak almost inevitably when you choose to be present and it is a choice but not everybody is capable of that choice if there's a sufficient sufficient degree of awareness in you you are capable of taking your attention into the present moment and the first thing then that is you notice is you become more aware of sense perceptions of the world around you that you absorb through your sensory perceptions you will also notice a heightened degree of alertness because that's why it's called awakening it's another part of the awakening a heightened degree of alertness but not an alertness where there's any tension there's no tension it's not an alertness it goes like no there's no tension in it it is a relaxed alertness that's part of presence so you decide to come into the present moment you decide to step out of the problem making mind because you have recognized that a lot of your mind activity is completely unnecessary and even harmful not all for some things the mind is a great tool but a lot of the time it creates it does not solve the problems of life it creates the problems of life so you take your attention out of the stream of thinking and bring it into the present moment so it could begin with sensory perceptions suddenly you are there's an alertness that wasn't there before why wasn't it there before because your consciousness was being absorbed by thoughts your consciousness continuously incarnated which means took form as thought your consciousness incarnated into thought forms continuously and there was you were not you were not aware of consciousness because consciousness always always assumed a thought form incarnation you see why buddhists want to become free of the wheel of continuous incarnations but many of them don't realize this is the moment when you can become free of incarnation because the most foundational the most basic incarnation is the incarnation into thoughts the primordial forms social

and emotions that go with thoughts

[Speaker 1] (8:05:29 - 8:05:56)
and here goes another incarnation and another so you come to the end of consciousness you are able to take consciousness out of that and then become aware well that's before we go there you become aware of sense perceptions alertness right this this alertness is consciousness itself

[Speaker 14] (8:05:57 - 8:06:02)
without having incarnated and then it you observe

[Speaker 1] (8:06:05 - 8:09:43)

if you find it difficult to immediately become aware of sense perceptions because the mind is still trying to get in there another helpful entry point into presence present moment that has been used for thousands of years is quite simply your breath your breathing simply become aware that you're breathing right now even without wanting to do any particular type of breathing become aware that your body is breathing become aware means you can sense that the breathing is happening that is a perhaps the most immediate entry point into the present moment awareness of your breath already recommended by the buddha might even be older than the buddha as a meditation method but not just as a formal meditation method as a simple entry point into presence become aware that you are breathing now being aware is not could be misunderstood the person might think become aware for your breathing looks like oh yes i'm breathing what's next that's not awareness awareness of your breathing is to be able to with your attention follow the breath as it enters the body and as it leaves the body so your attention moves with the breath now what it does is quite simply it removes effortlessly it removes thinking you can't do both you can't be aware of your breathing and think at the same time occasional fragments of thoughts may come in but they immediately dissolve again you can verify for yourself are you breathing just checking are you breathing are you aware that you're breathing right now sometimes the the awareness can sometimes have the effect of lengthening your breath almost without wanting to so when you become aware of your breathing that's a wonderful entry point into presence you are aware of your breathing and thinking subsides okay next thing that could happen is you're not only aware of your breathing you're also aware of the energy field in your body not the physical body but that which and the animating presence that which animates the body the life within the body not the physical body and you can sense that your breath can put you in touch with that as your breath moves into the body you feel it going into the abdomen and then spreading out the rest you can feel the body is alive you can sense if i call it the inner body you can sense the

[Speaker 14] (8:09:48 - 8:10:07)
energy behind the physical manifestation of body and thinking subsides and then it's easy to take the next step well let's okay let's uh breathing

[Speaker 1] (8:10:13 - 8:10:48)
beginning to feel to some extent there's an energy field behind the physical body within the physical body sense perceptions now you're able to look around and to listen and to hear let's just talk about the two predominant sense perceptions seeing and hearing and you're able to and this is an important part of it you're able to perceive without labeling without interpretation this room flower

[Speaker 14] (8:10:51 - 8:10:55)
man sitting on a chair and you just see it

[Speaker 1] (8:10:57 - 9:36:00)
but you don't you don't interpret it you don't label it in any way you just allow it again allowing it just to be as it is what is there to interpret you can perceive it without thought just through awareness instead of through the veil of thinking perceiving through awareness rather than always perceiving through the veil of thinking sometimes thinking is helpful and you need it but a lot of the time it's a prison it imprisons you so you become free by discovery discovering your ability to to to perceive without needing to interpret what you're perceiving and you but and you know what you're perceiving but this knowing is not conceptual anymore when you look at another human being in that state of perception of non-conceptual perception you in a way you know that you're looking that there's another human being but not conceptually so you discover a deeper way of knowing that humans have kind of they have in the past perhaps they had it a bit more than they have now you can know something there's a knowing through concepts but there's a deeper knowing the concepts are not needed what you do really is secondary some may do great things others may do things that look on the surface not so

significant but how you do it is primary when the how means the consciousness that flows into what you do on ettv we can have some stillness on normal tv that would be dreadful often people ask questions about about manifesting or the power of not the power of now the power of intention and how does that relate to the power of now and about wanting one person asked a question about what's the difference between wanting continuous wanting that i write about in a new earth always wanting or needing the next thing and what's the difference between wanting and intention intending to create something and what is the importance of manifesting things in your life or creating or is that counterproductive somebody asks maybe we should focus on something else not on manifesting or creating now there are many exciting books these days about creating and manifesting the secret teachings of abraham channeled teachings and so on and so often people ask well how does that relate to stillness and inner peace and acceptance of what is and surrender to the present moment and living in alignment with now is there a conflict is one wrong or misleading or leading you into illusion and so they ask and then expect me to answer so this is an important question for almost everybody unless you've reached the age of 95 and then you can be almost sure that you're not really into manifesting anymore when it's you've done that been there done that and some people don't have to reach 95 before they have a feeling that my life is not does not need to be focused anymore on creating or manifesting so it may have something to do with the stage not necessarily chronological age there's some there's something to do with where you are at in your own life but really your own life is a microcosm of the microcosm so if you look at the universe the first thing you see that it likes to create and it likes to manifest but on this planet alone the universe is continuously creating and manifesting countless life forms millions millions of life forms and then outer space we can only assume we don't know what exactly is there but there's a vastness of life out there that's for sure and probably many more life forms than we have on this planet which is more than we can count and the life forms both in the sea and on land including humans they seem to enjoy a dance of coming into being and destruction they eat each other up if you're born in the sea you go around and it's a transformational process and this entity becomes you and then suddenly something comes up from behind and gets you and you become that entity continuous dance and also if you observe life on this planet the universe also seems to manifest conflict and sometimes people say i don't want conflict but if there were no conflict at all in your life challenges and so on what would that be like imagine going to a movie that has no conflict in it would that be interesting maybe i doubt it but a movie in which nothing goes wrong everybody's perfectly fine all the time no challenging people everybody is so conscious and nothing happens it's well since couldn't try that maybe that's an idea for a script writer or maybe there the script wouldn't be very long how many people would come and watch that movie don't know so you have that you just by just looking not having a theory about life but just looking you see that the universe loves to manifest and also it seems to be the case that life forms over periods of time become more differentiated many more come and even the human societies become more complex we've had ancient civilizations that were quite complex but probably our present civilization if we can call it that is the most complex which of course includes problem ridden also that goes with complexity it's full of and every individual who is part of this civilization has a life that is full of problems because you live in a very complex civilization so it produces complexity i mean computers just getting in i i can't get into that anymore maybe i've gone beyond that age it's so complex i can't i cannot learn all this stuff that you need to know on computers boys can do it six year olds to me it's too complex and the differentiation of the the analytical mind science cutting every phenomenon up into little pieces and then you have little pieces and then each piece is cut up into further pieces and the microscopes get bigger and bigger now let's examine that and everybody's specialization gets narrower and narrower because you have to be because there's thousands of people writing phds about your subject so you have to have only a little corner then you have to take that out and then examine that and then spend three years examining that complexity of course complexity cannot go on forever and on some level complexity at some point if a tree grows too many branches eventually suddenly a winter storm comes and most of it collapses so the universe likes to create to manifest to experience the play of form that's one movement and you can see it in yourself on some level you enjoy that or you enjoyed it or you still do enjoy it and then there's something else in humans you can only really see that perhaps in yourself an inner phenomenon the universe also wants something else it wants not only to experience that manifested life it also wants to experience peace and something that is not touched by the continuously fluctuating forms it wants to know itself deeply directly in its essence and that really is the root of spirituality is that the universe not only wants the outward movement it also wants the inward the return movement to the one and so every human being also embodies these two movements and that seems you are torn sometimes between the outward movement into form and the inward return movement to the source where it all started but the source that was never really lost that is still there because it's timeless the source of all life is timeless and it's in you and you feel drawn back to that and that is the pull towards spirituality peace stillness being rather than doing and then you wake up the next day and you look in a shop window and say oh that looks nice i need to get that i'd like to do this get that achieve that and then you get okay but on the other hand i want peace also it's the two exemplified by perhaps eckhart tolle exemplifies the return movement mostly and you have tony robbins goes it's that and not one or the other is right or wrong it's only perhaps few you can totally lose yourself in one or the other maybe that's not quite it unless you live in a cave somewhere and you can lose yourself in being can is it possible and perhaps this is a challenge of the universe here on this planet and perhaps on other planets is the challenge to reconcile the two movements rather than have them separate either one or the other is it possible to reconcile the inner movement towards stillness and being and the outer it wants action and doing and i would say that it is and that is our challenge at this time um traditionally let's talk about human doing and action first traditionally it's been very unconscious what humans have manifested in this world to a large extent has been unconscious they have been identified with doing and identified with form because form is about the outer the creation of form and your own form and creating more forms and so that has been going on ever since anybody can remember recorded history and beyond this identification with form and identification with doing and we call that ego now what happens then is that the the one consciousness that underlies everything timeless formless the one consciousness moves into form assumes forms and enjoys the play of form but it's not enough it seems for the one consciousness to enjoy the play of forms it needs to completely believe in it to really make it real it's not real but to make it seem real you need to lose yourself in that dream of form the play of form and this has happened to humans so identified with the form that you believe yourself to be a separate entity you have you have a life of your own there is no such thing but you can't a life of my own doesn't exist there's only life and you are an aspect of that one life but humans believe that i have a life of my own and then others have their life and of course that's if i have a life then of course one day i could lose i'm going to lose my life oh god i'm losing my life i lose my life who are you and who is life you must be separate from life if you can lose your life so who is saying i is not life who is that i what is that i that says my life consciousness on the unmanifested timeless one life so the every human then believes that they have a life of their own and become that means they identified with the form of life that particular form of life this particular physical body this particular psychological life form the thoughts accumulation of thoughts your past your history your viewpoints and the emotions that go with these thoughts feelings it's all becomes all part of that form identity form identity that's me encapsulated form identity and so consciousness is trapped or believes to be trapped in that so we could say that in that state the universe or the consciousness has entered a dream-like state it wants to do that it must enjoy that dream up to a point it consciousness has entered that dream-like state where it is completely identified with form and doesn't realize that every other form is an aspect of itself every other form um and of course then you are just an isolated entity it's a becomes quite unpleasant after a while so you have to get together with other entities and instead of having an i form you have a we form us and that becomes encapsulated it starts with a tribe of big family or tribe us and all the others are totally weird and and evil people just beyond the mountains in another valley you go they're all dreadful that was quite common and in some places still is when people didn't get around that much to the greeks or also the romans everybody beyond were barbarians the word barbarian comes from trying to imitate the foreign language that those barbarians speak so there comes then and for a while that universe seems to be okay with that to have consciousness identified completely with form and then the movie goes on you read history world history and that's the the movie of what happens when consciousness is identified totally with form and then comes a point when it's time for another stage to arise where the dream of form is no longer your no longer consciousness is beginning to awaken from complete identification with form and that is happening to many humans and this is why human beings are drawn to these two spiritual teachings with the awakening from the dream of form so who am i what does it mean i what is identity what does it mean when i say i what does it feel like what is i what am i now most people yet if you ask them what is who are you they will define when the word i in terms of form they will say well obviously this body that's i this comes maybe first and then there comes the mind with its accumulations its accumulated its thought habitual thought movements its memories they come the emotions that go with the thought movements the psychological form of i so they say well i am this this body then there's a name which of course is just a sound you say john i am john and and many people say they think that's already a big part of who they are when they can say their name oh okay and then they add a little something else i'm a an architect oh okay we're getting even closer to who you are and i'm a father which okay good and your age okay something that's no okay we're almost there now just just need a few more details and then we know who you are and and so you can put it on a piece of paper a summary of it or if you want a detailed account of who you are you can write down your life history in a book and it becomes your autobiography oh that's interesting now we know who you are and if that's not enough and if you think there may be hidden parts of me then you can go to psychoanalysis for 10 years and then all these hidden memories and hidden desires and feelings that you had when you were four and a half years old towards your mother and your father and your grandmother and what they all readily they all come up and then you can add that and then okay now i've got it i've got my autobiography and i got that's i i'm me i'm complete now and then you look 50 years later which is not much on a universal scale 50 years is very little i know that now i thought when i was 20 50 years was a lot i'm a lot older than 50 by the way by that the body the 50 years pass and what's left of the body and the psychological me that entity in the head with its history what's left nothing well maybe there's a one or two copies left of your autobiography and maybe one person finds a copy in an in a secondhand bookshop this is somebody's autobiography and your grandchildren or their descendants well after my mother my mother passed away three years ago and i realized a few recently that that i'm virtually the only person now who remembers her because all her friends died before she did and her family and all the other people who knew her only knew tiny fragments at least that oh she was a little bit of an eccentric and she was outspoken and and so on they had little fragments but the person who really remembers her more than a fragment is me and when i go nothing nobody remembers and then all is left is photos and a generation later nobody will know who this person on the photo is but this is strange how an identity evaporates that seemed so solid and real and so form we are talking about form identity that is when you when you're asked who are you or you ask yourself who am i okay now is that is that all there is to who you are is that what can be defined and through form what can be that which is form thought forms emotional forms physical forms a conglomeration of that to get put together for a while becomes what you think is i is that really your i your identity or is this is there something else well perhaps we can just at this moment see as you sit here right at this moment you don't remember your past you don't have to let's pretend you don't have one you have no past there is no past let's say there is no past which by the way is the truth ultimately there is no past there's only the now so and okay and no future let's pretend there's no future well there is no future anyway but there's only this so you can't remind yourself you don't even unless there's a thought in your head that says i am such and such even that you don't know right now let's say you don't know anything about who you are nothing that you can formulate conceptualize call something you don't what is left is there what is lost nothing is lost in fact when you encounter this which cannot be named which is a formless presence aliveness that's the you've touched your that which is beyond form consciousness itself and that is identity that is where your sense of i comes from and so you are more truly yourself when you don't remember your past than when you do remember your past and you are more truly yourself when there's not a single thought in your head than when you are full of thinking thinking about me and my problems and whenever you feel this sense of i this the light of consciousness which you can you can know directly in the stillness that is always there available to you as the essence your essence identity your essence identity timeless that's always there and that is one with universal consciousness it's just coming through this form it's never lost when this form dissolves the consciousness goes out like a little tentacle being so let's stay with this for a moment here you have no past or there is no past no fear what is lost nothing essential is lost you get a stronger sense of who you are in your essence when you are not telling yourself in your mind who you are this is why i said in stillness speaks i believe you are never more truly yourself than when you are still and still means of course the mind is become still it's an inner doesn't whether there's noise outside or not doesn't matter you're never more truly yourself than when you are still then you can sense the essence of who you are and that does not depend on the age of the body whether you're 20 or 90 it's the same stillness that frees you then from the suffering that comes if you have identified with form which then sooner or later will leave you you suffer if you identify with a strong or beautiful body and that body eventually grows old you begin to suffer because you seem to dissolve you haven't realized who you are and so we have you have form identity and essence identity identity and suffering arises through knowing yourself only as form identity my history my story my body my past my this my that my that my my my let's whatever you identify within the world of form if you know yourself only as that that's the state of unconsciousness the dreamlike state consciousness is dreaming the dream of form and then it acts attempting to become free of its inner state of incompleteness dissatisfaction and fear which is inevitable when all you know is your form identity there's always underneath the surface or even very much on the surface there is dissatisfaction fear unease discomfort fear i am not enough this is not enough this is not the right place where i am now this is not the right people i'm with this is not the right thing that i'm doing right now there comes the need to go out and search for more forms that i can identify with so that i can feel more complete but the only way you can actually reach the state of being at home in being rooted in in yourself without the dissatisfaction that always comes again and again and again and without the fear the only way is encountering that which is beyond form to and it's so it's so much it's right here it's closer it's it's god realization it's another word for it but let's not go there the god within the the timeless within and so the universe then has all the people who are into creating traditionally have been very unconscious because those who were most identified with form had the strongest desire to manifest and create more things out there and conquer an empire or accumulate more and more possessions or have more power so they got driven so all the powerful people the people who created human history if you read the history books they were deeply identified with form and they're all unhappy of course very unhappy hoping by achieving this that or the other and conquering this that or the other the other tribe or whatever to become free of their state of unhappiness and of incompleteness and never getting there and that's been so traditionally the the doers there were always some people who were not into doing but in many traditional societies they that wasn't much of a place for them later monasteries came into being so they could become monks long story but so we still associate going out and doing with unconsciousness i believe there's a line by t.s elliott in a poem where he says the best lack all conviction and the worst are full of passionate intensity talking about contemporary humanity early 20th century the best like all convictions means that they don't know what to do they get because they are torn between there's some inkling of inside them of their essence so they they're not the desire to to do to to is not as overpowering as in those who are totally identified with their form identity so that's an interesting that with where we are at as humanity as a whole is a realization that there is an essence that has nothing to do with the form and only if we are rooted if some of our attention is in that formless essence can we do things in this world without creating more havoc and suffering for others and ourselves if we only go into doing without the rootedness in the eternal dimension which is stillness which is here now always now inseparable from now if you whatever you do when you lose yourself in the doing identified again with form and creating some new problem so the foundation for all doing is conscious being so that's the important realization about what about manifesting that's good but before we talk about manifesting before we build some some new building or structure get the foundation first do you have the foundation don't start building a house without any foundation let's manifest this great business empire this is going to change the world yes but have you laid the foundation what foundation being being the formless the eternal no we haven't thought about that no of course you haven't you can't think about it the foundation is being rooted realizing what that means what is what being is not intellectually not by trying to understand because as you may have noticed there's nothing much to understand about being you can't being can you explain a bit more please being stillness i don't understand stillness can you explain stillness no because there's nothing in it to explain you can't look it up like it under a microscope or dissect it aspects of stillness phd so the the human being needs to find it's his or her timeless and formless essence essence identity that's the foundation if you haven't if you haven't that forget about manifesting or creating you just create more trouble that's okay then you're at the stage where the universe still like to create trouble that's okay and i'm not saying you you you you find that which is so close closer to you than hands and feet the stillness that the formless consciousness itself without which there would be no sense perception and no thought and no feeling that it's the light in which everything appears that which the life within the form and that's always there as your s right here it knows itself here it's not that i know it it is i i am it i and it are one i know myself sounds like two again but that's because we're using language i know myself i know i i the eye knows itself and so this is the end of all differentiation and complexity because you're going back to the unmanifested source of all life there's no complexity in that at all depths yes infinite depths the vastness as vast or vaster than the outer space it's it's inner space the vastness of that inner spaciousness so what you thought of as i is a tiny tiny bit and underneath there's the vastness that is as vast although not an extension as outer space which is an externalization of who you are within the vastness of inner space people don't know how to what extent they have reduced their own reality to this little entity that runs around the surface of the planet for a few years and then evaporates and of course that's the form but what is it that animates that form the foundation and is not something that you find say okay i've got it now and then you forget it again and then you start getting bored about the next thing you have to do and identify it with every thought that comes again and reacting and you lost not this the secret is to stay connected with the being while you do and then whatever you do is conscious doing not unconscious move unconscious creation of form the but conscious creation and maybe you'll do much less than you would have done before but it's it's more powerful very different kind of doing conscious doing and conscious manifesting if that's what happens through this form foundation comes first and remains primary being needs to remain in your life whether or not you are engaged in a lot of doing or not being is primary if you lose touch with being you lose yourself in your mind and you lose yourself in doing and you don't want to any good for anybody really and it may well be that the universal consciousness may use you and you do something that is then in alignment with this new stage that is arising on the planet and that is conscious creation co-creation before the universe created unconsciously and now through the human form there's a possibility that the universe can create consciously in that sense all those books and teachings are quite exciting that tell you that there is a an important relationship between your your thoughts and so on and the outer reality and that thought creates form yes this is true thought creates form and it's exciting that if humans can fully realize that and then fully realize their power of their creative power which is vast and as unlimited eventually they'll know that as the universal creative power because humans and the universe are not separate you are an aspect of the universe you are the universe expressing itself as this form so it's wonderful creative power is there but it's not the wanting power that is the to to answer the question that somebody asked what about this wanting needing comes from a state of dissatisfaction and insufficiency now buddha called it desire and the buddha of course said become free of desire and then that's the end of suffering he looked at humans and he saw that there was this unconscious reaching out continuously for wanting he called it desire i call wanting is a more direct term that you can actually feel i want i need i must have now this is still very much in many humans there the identification with form that results in continuous wanting and it keeps a lot of our economic system going advertising depends on humans who are identified with form it does not mean that when you are when you know your essence you cannot enjoy form anymore that you will say no more maybe some some humans might do that but again there's a possibility of living in balance with form you can enjoy all the forms around you and even create new forms without any sense that this is mine or any sense of attachment or any identification with the form and only then can there be true enjoyment of forms and beauty but then the compulsive nature of your relationship with form will go the compulsive running to shopping malls the day before christmas and then running to shopping malls again the day after christmas because they've reduced the prices even more or whatever it's amazing before christmas they're running and then after christmas it's even cheaper i need i must have that's not the true enjoyment of form you can enjoy form by looking at a shop window and say oh beautiful well what do you want to buy it no or you might buy it and then it's in your house beautiful beautiful and then maybe the next day you arrive and a burglar has been there and it's it's gone and some it may only be in that moment that you know whether you were attached or not because you might have had it in your home and said i'm not attached at all but when you get home the next day and the burglar has taken it then you'll know whether or not this was true what you thought that you were not attached that's a good test so we need to then doing and stillness need to be in balance now it does not mean that you separate your life into one part of your life as you sit still and in the other part of your life you run around that's not the balance the balance is when the two are fused together and even while you're walking around the shopping mall not running around the shopping mall walking you can be in stillness as you look around you may perhaps you go with the convention of buying christmas presents or maybe you don't doesn't matter if you do okay and see what i can find still bring this bring the stillness into the shopping mall let it come with you into the shopping mall just to give one example in the north american context or the bazaar or whatever if you're somewhere else and see if you can even while your attention flows out have some attention within to feel the background of aliveness or stillness as i always point out the beginning of that is feeling the inner body the aliveness within the body that's the doorway into the formless you're already moving into the formless feel the alive you're the body is alive now it's alive it must be alive but can you feel that it is alive and that's that's life energy it's the bridge between formless and form and there it is and then if you can walk around a city well here you don't walk but you drive around if you drive around the city can you drive with not too much thinking just presence or walk around to the shopping mall and just look there's you bring a stillness in wherever you go and then when you have to think you think you can pick up the phone and say oh i found something nice maybe he what should i get this for for my mom or dad whatever to bring always the two dimensions that's the most vital thing and then you can also look into manifesting but then the question is what is it that wants to manifest through this form it's no longer this is what i want the surface i what is it that wants to manifest through this form very different and you may you may not know that immediately there may be a time period when you don't know exactly what to do with your so-called life which is not yours just a conventional way of speaking there may be for a while you don't know what to do with your life and so you just just there being as still as possible do your whatever activity you're already doing and but bring stillness into it presence into it and then at some point either the realization of what it is that you need to do that wants to be done through you comes from the outside somebody tells you something ah or you wake up one morning and ah this is what i have to do and then you start taking action always making sure you're not so attached to the outcome that you think you're it's more important than the present moment and an action can become egoic when you lose yourself it becomes egoic when you lose yourself in the doing and a good sign or good criterion is whether when something happens to that is against your seems to be an obstacle a person or situation say i want to do this or achieve that and suddenly somebody says no you can't do that no they won't allow you to do that no for some or situation becomes a challenge it's difficult it's blocked you want to go somebody says no you you're not qualified to do that you shouldn't do that it's not allowed whatever you need this and that you don't have to achieve obstacles come all the time if you get upset that means the ego is back in the doing when obstacles come if you're not upset you're still present and you look at whatever the obstacle is and you look at it with this penetrating gaze of presence which is stillness also you look at whatever this the obstacle arises you bring this penetrating stillness to it and that is like a light shines on it and then that dissolves the obstacle or it shows you a way around it that's the power of consciousness it always happens either it shows you how to get around it or it shows you how to use the very force of the obstacle and you turn it around if the obstacle is going to go this way and you go with it for i'm just demonstrating now something counteracts what you want to do it's coming this way you want to go that way but you don't meet it head on and start complaining saying no this shouldn't be happening no perhaps you go with it for a little while and you go and then you turn it around and the very power that was against you then works for you and you achieve your goal through that it happens and this is the wisdom that comes with non-resistance so whenever you go into this conscious doing resistance always pulls you back into unconscious doing can easily happen because it's an old habit pattern unconscious doing inner resistance to whatever arises in the present moment pulls you back inner resistance is some form of negativity some form of complaining some form of fear aggression anger and this is important because whenever you complain about what somebody else does that you're already beginning to fall into that trap of unconsciousness and of course you yes you meet lots of people who are still trapped in ego and they may not like what you do but just no judgment just look at what the city they say this they want that you want that and they don't say oh they're dreadful i know what he wants he wants to deceive me and he always does that he wants to go just no just clear this is the city this is what he says he wants this is where i want to go and see okay never no never any judgment of a personal situation just clear seeing clear facing this is the power it's like a light beam of consciousness it falls onto illuminates that that that situation that moment that that person that's the power of consciousness no resistance jesus already talked about the power of non-resistance and that the moment resistance comes you're drawn back into identification with form protection resistance fighting it's it's a are you going to succeed all the time in this no it's a it's a shift from a way of doing that has been with us for thousands of years and a new way of doing that is only arising now so you are transitional beings between the old consciousness and the new and don't judge yourself if you fall back occasionally into the old consciousness but you will quickly know it how will you know it you begin to suffer you get upset you get upset about situations you get upset about people you get upset about what somebody said you get upset about what somebody should have said but didn't you get upset about what somebody did or failed to do oh there's a sign that you've fallen back beautiful line in the course in miracles i am never upset for the reason i think now upset is a generic term could be any any any in any way that you're out of alignment with isness there's a disagreement with the isness of the present moment and then you become upset now many people are upset a lot of the time but they don't realize they are upset and if you talk to them and say why are you upset they say i'm not upset i'm just bloody angry or i'm not upset i'm deeply hurt because he didn't invite me to his birthday party deeply hurt not upset i'm never upset for the reason i think now the deeper meaning of this of course is you are upset because you have lost awareness of being your essence identity and the reason you think is superficial if it's not if when you lose connectedness with being you just wait a few minutes and something or somebody will upset you i'm and so if we believe that that which seems to cause the upset is the actual cause this is not the case these are interchangeable could be anything and it will so you'll be upset many times every day by other people by situations by the slightest things or the biggest things upset upset upset by the entire world is so frustrating i'm never so that's a little sign then if you're upset you want to go somewhere but but people are not cooperative situations are not cooperative and you can talk to yourself so that's a good sign then you can use also shows you to what extent the ego is active in you because what's upset is not you it's the ego in you the ego is the erroneous identification with form a false sense of i which wanted something to make itself feel more at ease or bigger or more important or whatever and is frustrated in its aims well well that's a good then it's like a little if you had a little it's almost like having a little technical device on your arm that sells you whenever your ego comes back it goes beep you don't need that well if you if somebody here is a technical wizard and is going to invent it it's fine but you don't need that because all you need is to know if you're upset or not in everyday life now for many walking egos upset is their normal state they might not even know it anymore because they're upset virtually all the time and just waiting for some other thing to happen to explain why they are upset again but of course there's the underlying dissatisfaction is always there the foundation then is stillness that's the return journey so can we be then simultaneously in the return journey to the source of all life spiritual dimension god stillness and still be active in this world and then if we are that what we then do in this world becomes empowered by the intelligence that emanates from the source and then the source creates through you no longer the power of the source is then no longer distorted by the ego and its power greatly diminished to a trickle so the source is like light you can say sunlight wanting to shine through fully but for a long time it's become reduced to tiny little hole there's a little bit of light coming through just to keep you going and now it can come through and use you when we use language we always create duality so when i say it uses you it's not quite true because you are it but language does that it uses let's then once we know that it's okay we can use those words it uses you then now what exactly it wants i don't know perhaps it simply wants to create beauty or forms that are alive and joyful and enjoy that it's enjoyed the drama of of for thousands hundreds of thousands of years it's enjoyed the drama of people cutting each other to pieces and eating each other up it's enjoyed the drama the movie is changing now and perhaps it's creating a much more pleasant movie and who knows what is in store for us i've never i cannot predict the future i'm not particularly interested this the present moment is wonderful enough but something is there's a change happening and of course there comes a comes a point in your life when you may not this the source may become much more important than whatever you do so you reach a time when you say well i've done this and that and it's been wonderful and then all you are is you're just still and you emanate that stillness and even then you affect the world around you without any doing if you just be there and whoever you come into contact with there's some almost one could say transmission even if they don't notice it you can do that and some humans perhaps will mostly live in that way how much doing you do how much varies from form to form person to person some will be very active and conscious into conscious doing and create and and enjoy the creation and others may do relatively little or may just continue to do what they're doing already but whatever they are doing will be a vehicle for consciousness or stillness that flows into this power this beautiful energy that flows it could be even a person who just gives information let's say you work at an airport and you give information to people and maybe you stay there and then everybody who comes to ask where's gate number 16 you say well you go that way and it's only about a three minute walk and there were not only the words there was a transmission of stillness with the words not in the sense that I am going to transmit stillness no it it happens because you let go of the sense of doing of I do it happens and the person this one traditional word for it is blessing the person goes away being blessed with that energy and so beautiful so so what you do really is secondary some may do great things others may do things that look on the surface not so significant and ultimately what you do is secondary but how you do it is primary when the how means the consciousness that flows into what you do or if you're working with your hands again can also happen that how do you put together this piece of wood and this piece of wood there can be a presence that flows into the doing and that's beautiful and that expresses itself in the final product if somebody something is made in the state of presence then it it contains energetically it contains quality quality now there are perhaps quite a few things in this world that are not at all conducive to presence maybe it could be certain things that are extremely repetitive if you even that perhaps is possible but let's say you're in a factory and all you do every day is uh well probably the by this time you probably have been replaced by machine anyway but there are certain things or you live in an office environment that is so insane that when you bring stillness into it there is an incompetent incompatibility with your surroundings that will result in your dismissal or will result in your walking out but if there is even the slightest compatibility if it's not a hundred percent insane the environment if it's only 90 insane then there may be a possibility that if you bring stillness to it this alert stillness you walk into the office and you listen and you're alert and you answer the phone and you go to the committee meetings where everybody's and you sit there and listen to everybody you don't say oh everybody's insane you know they're insane but you don't say it mentally they're not insane in their essence that is on the surface and you are there as the still point it doesn't mean you can't speak anymore but you embody the being rootedness in being and then it is possible if it's only 90 percent the environment is only 90 insane some change is possible and perhaps the one or two people will be changed by their interaction with you and a shift happens in them or if it's a meeting suddenly there's a change in energy in the room or suddenly you are the only person who says something meaningful and suddenly everybody listens oh or your silence is enough to bring some harmony to the surroundings many ways in which this can affect the outer world and even if you if you stay at home and all you do every day is water the plants in the garden and make a cup of tea and look around at the beauty like a little child but with a depth that is perhaps not yet there in the child a depth of non-conceptual knowing then at this you have you are a point where the universe is contemplating its own creation and knowing its own beauty and its sacredness and its aliveness through you and that's enough for a fulfilled life isn't it that's enough the mind is in yes but i should be doing something meaningful that is meaningful and for some people that is how they contribute to the shift in consciousness by being a point of consciousness through which the universe sees its own sacredness its own beauty where the flower recognizes its own beauty because the flower doesn't know it's beautiful it needs you to perceive it and respond to it and go not call it anything but go really there is no ultimately separation between you and the flower it's a single field so when you contemplate the flower the flower becomes conscious of itself through because one consciousness and so if you provide that that's a wonder that's the universe waking up through this form to its own sacredness and beauty and aliveness and depths and you all you do is walk around the garden every day and make a cup of tea it's wonderful and and if occasional thoughts come you maybe thoughts that come will say wow i made all that you become like god who says and god saw it is he rested on the seventh day and he saw that it was it was good or something like that every at the end of may he saw that it was good see the the goodness of all that and so it varies you maybe i call one word i have for that which i used in a new earth um a person who is not called to do very much is frequency holder because what what you do is not a doing you hold the frequency of that consciousness of presence by and you don't have to do anything you just hold the frequency by embodying it by embodying presence yes that's a fulfilled life every moment is fulfilled and who knows it could be that you you do that for two years and one morning you wake up and suddenly say suddenly something wants to be done and suddenly you start doing something and you pick up the phone and said we're going to have do this a huge enterprise where everybody can come and to experience beauty and healing and so on i'm going to transform my garden into into a healing center and i'm going to maybe maybe not one person asked the question is connected with this somebody who is fully awake would they still have a personal identity and of course we know the answer by now you are in touch with your essence identity and the person can still operate you have the two they're the two dimensions you have their personal identity but you are not lost in your personal identity you know that it's only it is not ultimately who you are it is only temporarily who you are on the surface but not who you are in your essence and so in that sense no you still have a personality but you are not possessed by your personality it still operates and you can function normally you don't need to look weird but if you do that's fine also you certainly have no desire to stand out and say i am special of course then you would have fallen back into some form identity there is something to be careful of which is called the spiritual ego one could say and that is the identification with form coming back even sometimes to people who are able to periodically go into the stillness and feel the power and be that and then they come out again and then the old ego pattern reasserts itself and it remembers the beauty of stillness and the power of stillness and then it says oh i am very special more special than you well it may not say that in words because the ego at that stage can be very subtle so it doesn't say more special than you but there's just a sense of superiority that can creep in easily the sense of me and again one needs to be careful any kind of conceptual identity that you really believe in is another trap being trapped in form ultimately you're only you're only yourself fully when you have virtually no concept in your head of who you actually are now that doesn't mean when somebody asks me when i go somewhere whatever to cross a border somewhere somebody says well what's your what do you do what's your profession or what do you do i don't complicate things by saying i don't do i be i just be and so it's good if you have a little concept that you can give to a person if the situation requires it you can say i'm such and such and then they they believe you don't say i'm a spiritual teacher when you cross a border

teacher

teacher is okay spiritual teacher and of course you're not a spiritual teacher and i'm not a spiritual teacher because that's another form identity if then you believe i am a spiritual that's who i am okay i'm and then the next moment when i go do my shopping i'm no longer a space of a large presence in the supermarket but i'm i carry around the identity of here's a spiritual teacher is walking around the aisle very subtle traps can happen now that doesn't mean that at this moment this form spiritual teaching happens through this form so i could say at this moment i'm a spiritual teacher but when i get up i'm no longer a spiritual teacher it's only a function it's temporary in the same way that i could do somebody's accounts well i couldn't but and i would be an accountant but if i carry accountant around with me in my head i'm a walking accountant when that's a terrible trap yeah it's only if these are only functions they're not who you are or whatever it is any identification with that brings you back into form and so to be free and that's a continuous practice in daily life to be as or to one can express it negatively it's not negative but it sounds sometimes negative to walk around as nobody in particular not be anybody in particular just be as a presence but nobody in particular just just an alive presence you don't need to be anybody in particular except when you conform to the conventions when you talk about yourself it's fine you observe the conventions of this world and say i'm a doctor i'm an accountant i'm this i'm that not a spiritual teacher but whatever but not to be anybody in particular this is these to be free of carrying around with you a defined identity which is either in many cases it either take puts you into position of superiority towards others or an inferiority towards others because then if you have some defined identity you always look to then you give everybody else an identity too that's a dreadful thing it's not only you create the present for yourself everybody else well once you look at the world through your defined identity then you give everybody else a form identity first you do it to yourself once you've done it to yourself you do it to others and then you reduce every other being to a form and then usually because all this is part of ego usually then you will try to locate where this other being is in this form as either superior or inferior to you so it's an unconscious process where does this person fit in the ego is always looking to where inferior or superior am i inferior and if the ego feels inferior it's uneasy and then tries to get something to reduce the other so that you can feel if only make negative comments or whatever or say or if somebody on a very simple level the other woman wears a very nice dress and you feel diminished by her beautiful and expensive dress you say oh that that dress would look good on your sister or something so the ego loves to do these unconscious things because it by by diminishing somebody it it believes that it has grown a little bigger itself amazing delusions it's a whole delusional system operating gossip by by talking negatively about others every time you say something negative others who are not there it was this quite a common thing you feel a little bit superior because you have judged the other as not good enough certainly you have put yourself in a position of judging the other which implies that you are superior morally or whatever you know what she did she did that and then she said and then how dare she and then she's always wrong of course amazing silliness but for many people it's their life that's how they live so be nobody so to speak be a presence don't define yourself except when absolutely necessary when you have some interaction with somebody who do who says what's your name and so on of course name and you nothing wrong with your name as long as you don't believe that that's who you are and so on you're but the practice is to gradually shed the the belief that you're here as a person and just let the person become transparent to the light of consciousness and then you have the two that's the form and but essentially you are that which animates the form the underlying deeper consciousness and that by living in connected in conscious connection with that you live in conscious connection with an intelligence that is far greater than whatever your mind could manufacture or that may use your mind but it will then inspire your mind with creative insights creative ideas and so on it it it can use your mind or it may bypass your mind and will simply emanate throughout every cell of your body you emanate a beautiful alive peaceful presence if your mind is not highly developed it may not say the universal consciousness may say well this mind is not that way i'm not going to use this mind but i'm going to use the body to emanate peace and aliveness and presence and healing for the world it uses whatever is is there or if you're an artist then suddenly your artistic creations become inspired empowered beautiful in my case that doesn't happen because i can't draw and paint it just doesn't happen so this the consciousness is not going to flow into my arm in my hand and suddenly i'm going to produce a masterpiece and that's not going to happen nor am i going to produce the unified field theory that einstein couldn't find because my mind doesn't work in that way physics and mathematics it just so the consciousness is not going to use my mind and bring up make me into another einstein the consciousness uses what is there and empowers that and there's always everybody has something that the consciousness will use and flow into if only every cell of your body that's more than enough and then there's nobody to claim credit when something has been produced created it you just step back it's not i did that or the way people go yeah yeah no you just because you know it's not and not i didn't i did it

yes but not i it's the one eye the center of your attention always bring back into the present because it's first of all because it's all there ever is well that's a good reason because it's life itself your life situation yes it exists in time there's a past and a future as far as your life situation is concerned but it's not your life i wrote about that a long time ago but it's so important you can people confuse their life situation with something more fundamental more real more immediate deeper which is called life life situation is circumstances and events in your life and most of your life situation is an experience in your mind and then life situation is relationships work situation financial situation living situation all kinds of problem often problematic situations it's very rare that all of these situations are working smoothly and perfectly relationships family professional work financial uh environments living situation health situation all working in harmony and perfectly it can happen for short periods but usually something somewhere goes wrong it has to periodically and frequently that's normal and it's good but your so your life situation always has this element of uncertainty instability too although you might not recognize that when you look at seemingly solid things and your life is the experience of this moment the only thing there ever is and if you neglect that you miss[Speaker 1] (0:00 - 8:53)
The whole thing, and then you reach a retirement age, or old age, and you say, was that it? And you perhaps you spent your whole life trying to arrive at some point, and the points change that you want to arrive at, but you always want to arrive at some other point. So when your attention is in the present, yes, you're more alert, which is helpful.

You notice things that before you didn't notice, people, objects, all kinds of things around you, natural things, and it's quite, everything is a manifestation of life all around you. And the deeper aspect of being present is not just being aware of your surroundings, although that's fine. You're aware of yourself as the aware presence, and that is the secret, that is the key, that is not something that one can easily explain.

You can only experience it, what it means to be aware of yourself, not as an ego self, like having a relationship with this conceptual identity, that's me. I don't like me, or I love me. I'm in love with me.

That's happened to Narcissus, and things after that didn't go well for him. Although you hear that quite often in certain people. I love, I love me.

Well, it's a little strange. No, who are you, and who or what is a me? Oh, I hadn't thought about that.

I love myself. I hate myself. Oh, that's worse, even.

That's the, that's not uncommon either. I'm not happy with myself. But who is that I that constantly says these things?

Who is that I? That has a relationship with an, ultimately an imagined entity, mind-made conceptual entity. And this happened to me one night, as I talk briefly in the power of now, when my mind said, I can't live with myself anymore, because the, I was unhappy, and I couldn't stand the unhappiness anymore.

So I couldn't, I can't live with myself anymore. And this sentence suddenly, I looked at it, and I realized it was a very strange statement. I cannot live with myself.

At that point, I realized that there's, there must be two of me here. I, and the self that I cannot live with. That's an incredible, that was an incredible realization.

There's two of me. There's the unhappy me that I cannot live with. Who am I, and who is that unhappy me?

This is almost like a koan, like a Zen riddle that you can't, hard to answer, or impossible to answer conceptually, but I actually can answer it conceptually. I couldn't at the time. It took years before I realized what all this meant.

And that moment, the consciousness that I am that was trapped in the movement of thought and continuously absorbed by the movement of thought, this movement of thought created the entity, to the person, the unhappy person, the entity, the unhappy entity, the mind-made entity. And it was so active that it absorbed all of my consciousness, was always trapped in the movement of self-identified thoughts. So it was trapped in there, and when this strange statement arose in my mind, what it, and I looked at it, and looking at the statements, a sudden separation happened between the consciousness that was trapped in the movement of thought, and suddenly was able to release itself, to extricate itself from the, being held in the movement of thought, and stood back, and there was I, as the consciousness, looking at the unhappy thought movement. So it was a separation of, consciousness was withdrawing from the dimension of things and thinking, and then, very quickly, thinking subsided, it was no longer fueled, without the consciousness, there can be no thinking, because thinking is not possible without consciousness, but a thought is consciousness that has taken form, whereas the realization of I as consciousness is consciousness that is prior to form, or unconditioned. So I became aware of myself as consciousness, as the I, and the thought then began to dissolve. Consciousness had been, without consciousness, it's nothing.

Thought is consciousness that has taken form, and it dissolved, and then I was kind of, felt like falling into some hole, but it wasn't fear, not fearful. The next morning I woke up, and I was at peace, like a new person, or no person, I was just contemplating things around me, and everything was lovely, and I didn't know why I was at peace, and then I went around the city, on the buses, on the bus, still at peace, the hustle and bustle of London, where I was living, I was at peace, why I was at peace, I couldn't understand it, of course now, the peace that passed is all understanding, I suppose that's, several years it took me to understand why, that's very weird. I did not realize that I was at peace for one reason, and the reason was that I wasn't thinking that much anymore, especially there's no, the whole movement of thought that is imbued with a sense of self, self-referential thought wasn't happening anymore, occasional thoughts, yes, but a lot of the time, there was just awareness, but I didn't have a word for it, I just called it peace, and so what happened then was the consciousness had withdrawn from its, until then, it had been imprisoned in the movement of thought, and continuously absorbed by thought, and then it stepped out,

[Speaker 6] (8:54 - 8:59)

[Speaker 2] (9:19 - 9:21)
and now on to joy,

[Speaker 1] (9:27 - 10:57)
now joy, what piece of music do you think comes to mind? Yes, the ode to joy, which is, has been around for 200 years or so, or something like that, a Beethoven, the Ninth Symphony, the last movement, and it's called the Ode to Joy. Most of you will know what I'm talking about, and those of you who are not familiar with classical music, if I sing it, then you will know what it is.

Unfortunately, I'm very bad at singing, but it goes like, Freude, schöner Götterfunken, Tochter aus Elysium. And now I can't stop. Wir betreten Feuer, Ertrunken Himmlische, dein Heiligtum.

Deine Zauber binden wieder, Was die Mode streng geteilt. Alle Menschen werden Brüder, Wo dein sanfter Flügel weilt.

[Speaker 7] (10:58 - 11:09)
No. No. No.

No. No. No.

[Speaker 1] (11:09 - 18:07)
I'm better at it than I thought. Now, I'd like to give you the translation, because many people are familiar with the tune and the song, but perhaps not so many people know what it actually means. Now, the words Beethoven took from the poet Schiller, who wrote this poem, Ode to Joy, which is a praise of joy.

So I'll just give you the beginning of what I just sang, or if you can call it singing. The translation of this reads, joy, beautiful, divine spark. Now, joy, the poet personifies the state of joy.

So he speaks of joy as if joy were a person. Joy, beautiful, divine spark. Daughter from Elysium.

Elysium is a celestial realm in Greek mythology. So joy is the daughter comes, in other words, comes from the celestial realm. It is something divine.

We enter your sanctuary, burning with fervor. O heavenly being, still addressing joy. O heavenly being, your magic brings together what custom or convention has sternly divided.

So it reunites what human custom has divided. All men shall become brothers. Of course, that includes sisters.

All men shall be, and that includes women, it's humans. All humans shall become brothers and sisters where your gentle wings hover. The gentle wings of joy.

That is the translation of the beginning of the ode to joy. So it brings you back to the state of connectedness with all other humans. And therefore, there is something divine in the state of joy.

That is the essence of this poem that Beethoven liked so much that he put it to music. It goes on later. There are more lines, which we don't need now, but towards the end, it has this beautiful line.

Be embraced, millions. This kiss to the whole world. That is towards the end when it says.

Seid umschlungen, Millionen. Diesen Kuss der ganzen Welt. And then there's the celestial voices of the choir.

Beautiful piece. It's absolutely divine, especially the message that it contains. Now, I'm not going to just play the whole piece here.

There's a particular version of it that I discovered that is called the flash mob version of it. Now, I love flash mobs. I don't know if everybody is familiar with that term.

It means when a group of people come together and do something very strange or unusual unexpectedly. Now, flash mobs are not spontaneous because they need to be planned beforehand, but they disrupt the normal workings of routine everyday life or existence. So, for example, you get flash mobs when people, like 200 people in a public place, suddenly freeze for five minutes in whatever position they happen to be in.

And then all the people who don't know what's going on, they go, what happened? And in a way, you could say it has no particular purpose, but perhaps there is a purpose, and often it awakens people out of their habitual slumber. And sometimes flash mobs is music that suddenly a group of people begin to perform a piece of music.

It looks totally spontaneous, but of course they all plan to do it. But all the people who experience that are transported into a state of astonishment. And this is the piece here, which has been around the internet, and some of you may know it.

Some people say, oh, I don't like this because it was financed by a bank and it's used as a commercial in the same way that our first piece that we saw this evening is a commercial. But if that is a commercial, it doesn't say you need to use our bank in order to be in a state of joy. No, they just financed it, and here it is.

So there's no link between the bank and I have no objection to it whatsoever. If they spend their money and sell something beautiful like that that brings joy to people, why object to that? Now, where this happened was in Spain in a small city near Barcelona, Sabadell.

And the piece is called Sabadell Flesh Mob. The musicians are professional musicians. Now, the most beautiful thing apart from the music, and this is a short version of it, just five minutes or so, the most moving thing apart from the music itself is the reaction of the people who don't know what's going on and how they become transformed from their habitual state into suddenly and feeling, experiencing joy or astonishment.

They are stopped in their track, their mind stopped, and they go. So all the different reactions of people are very moving, very touching. So let's watch it now.

The Sabadell Flesh Mob. Here we go.

[Speaker 7] (18:09 - 18:09)
Hi.

[Speaker 1] (23:54 - 40:11)
Welcome, all of you on YouTube, Facebook, live for the first time. We've had a few technical difficulties. So I'm a little bit late.

That was a great opportunity for, of course, for you to be present in the moment. And let's continue that before we start and perhaps look at a few questions concerning conscious manifestation. Let's just take a moment and become aware of the present moment.

Vitally important in any endeavor that you undertake, no matter what it is, is not to lose your connectedness with the present moment. So before you start a new enterprise, a new activity, always go to take a moment for awareness. Basically, that's what it is.

Sometimes people ask, well, what is the present moment? How do you, where is it? What does it even mean to become aware of the present moment?

And the first thing, of course, is that you become aware of whatever surrounds you. That's the entry point into the present moment, a very easy entry point into present moment awareness. Some people may call it mindfulness.

Mindfulness is to become more aware of whatever surrounds you here and now. Sense perceptions, just be with what is. Give it attention, some attention, the room you're sitting in.

Maybe there's a window, you can look out of the window. You can see trees behind me. I can't see them, I know they're there.

This is, you enter the present moment by becoming more aware of sense perceptions, auditory, visual, and perhaps others. And of course, what that does, you might notice, is there's less mental noise. The voice in the head that speaks and speaks, that talks to you, that you have a dialogue with, a monologue, that comments and interprets and takes positions, mental positions, identifies with likes, dislikes, says no, never stops talking.

That's the mind, the voice in the head that most people are completely identified with, and that means they are not present. So the first step is take some attention away from that by simply becoming aware of sense perceptions. And if you can look at something natural, that's even better because a natural thing, a tree, a flower, a plant, the sky, a natural thing lends itself to a present moment awareness more than a man-made, human-made thing.

So anything natural that you can look at for a moment, focus on, and give it attention, acknowledge it. You don't need to think about it. So it's just become aware of the present moment through sensory perception.

And already, if you can do that, if perhaps a few minutes before you were very much immersed in the problem-making mind, it wasn't actually solving any problem because this continuous mind activity actually creates more problem than it solves. If it's not focused, it's unconscious. So already, suddenly, there's a certain amount of peace that descends upon this, your world.

It becomes a bit more peaceful. You become aware of the aliveness of things. And then the next step for present moment awareness is you become aware of yourself.

Now, that's very important too because that's the foundation for the entire world, whatever the world that you experience, you experience it through yourself. So, and whatever you manifest in this world, you manifest through yourself. Now, what does it mean to become aware of yourself?

Now, you might be tempted to think that you start thinking about your life, you and your life. And of course, that's very problematic, your past, your future. Or you can think about things that you identify with, the huge problems the world is facing.

But that's not becoming aware of yourself. Becoming aware of yourself is something more vital, something deeper than being aware of your historical self, all your memories, all your expectations for the future. So none of that is really becoming aware of yourself because those are thoughts.

You become aware of the simple fact that you are here as a conscious presence. That's very much inextricably linked with what we call the present moment. Now, this may seem strange at first, you becoming aware of yourself as a conscious presence.

No need to remember who you are beyond the fact that you are. Becoming aware of the I am-ness of yourself. For those of you who haven't never heard of this, it might seem a little strange.

Become aware that even if you do not remember your past at all, who you are as a historical person, what is left of you if you do not remember who you are as a historical person? If you don't think about yourself, what's left is a certain inner spaciousness opens up that replaces the usual activity of continuous mental noise, thinking. A spacious awareness opens up and you cannot say much about it.

You can't analyze it. You're simply aware that you are. That there is a presence that is inseparable from who you are.

There's also a stillness there that's part of that presence, but it's not an asleep stillness and it's not the stillness that you find when you're getting tired. It's an alert stillness. And that is the core of what we call present moment awareness.

So you're not really aware of the present moment because the awareness is the present moment. Beyond sense perceptions, that was a starting point. And then you go deeper and you simply become aware of yourself as consciousness, a still alert presence.

There's a lot more one could say about it, but this is just our starting point for today. The important thing is once you have had even a glimpse of it, as much as possible, reconnect with that as you go about your daily life, as you are engaged in activities, as you speak to people, interact with people, as you interact with people on media, social media, et cetera as much as possible, reconnect and have find these moments of alert stillness, alert still presence. And that becomes then the foundation for everything you do.

And that's that another word for that is spiritual awakening. You're now, you're spiritually awakened begins with little, just a glimpse of awareness of yourself. The awareness that there's something deeper in you than the person with its history.

That awareness is a direct realization. It is not something that is conceptual that frees you from what we call the ego which is all the conditioning of your mental, emotional field, all the things you identify with. And then you derive your sense of who you are from a deeper place within.

And that's an enormous liberation. And then you can operate in this world in a much more effective way. And you can operate in this world in a way that is much more beneficial for yourself and humanity.

You can then from that foundation, we can talk about manifestation. If you manifest from that foundation rather than manifest from the usual sense of identity that is exclusively derived from the ego which is the thinking mind, the narrative that most people identify with as me. That's me.

And the narrative of me is partly personal and partly collective. These are energy streams that what we call short are energy formations that are invisible. And these energy formations are like, could be compared to ripples on the surface of being.

That's the thought activity. And humans who have no awareness of this deeper dimension, they are trapped on the level of the surface level of the movement of energy forms that we call thoughts and emotions. So that's your mind is, and whatever happens in your mind is conditioned by your surroundings and by your past, so-called past.

So humans are literally possessed in the absence of awareness. They are literally possessed by the thought forms that go through their mind. And so they can, they're partly, as I said, partly personal, partly collective.

And sometimes they are relatively harmless and at other times they can be like a viral infection on a mental level. And you don't even know what's happening to you. When violent mass movements happen, human unconsciousness expressing itself collectively through violence, that means humans are at the mercy, completely possessed by these energy formations that have taken possession of them.

And they don't even know it. Sometimes you know it in the past, perhaps all know, perhaps even from your own experience, how sometimes one thought can take possession of your mind and it refuses to go away and it proliferates. It creates other related thoughts in your mind and you suddenly become obsessive with something.

And some people live like that. They have, they are possessed by one particular mind form and they interpret the entire world through the screen of that mind form. And everything, suddenly they have an explanation for everything because everything is interpreted through that screen.

Sometimes it's a mental illness. It gets close to mental illness when you feel paranoid and so on. And everybody suddenly becomes your enemy.

So you free yourself from that. Ultimately without awareness, thinking can, even good things in your mind can very quickly turn, become amplified and turn it into something very unconscious and destructive. So always returning to that deeper dimension.

Let's start with the first question.

[Speaker 2] (40:17 - 40:17)
Let's see.

[Speaker 1] (40:28 - 1:08:17)
When it comes to conscious manifestation, my interest at this point is not in manifesting anything for myself personally, but in wanting to help manifest a world that is more peaceful and just for everyone. Can how you teach conscious manifestation help with that? Good question.

Relevant. Manifesting a world that is more just. I think that was the word.

More peaceful and just for everyone. Well, that would be a good aim. Now, ultimately, of course, what you experience as the world is intrinsically one with your consciousness.

The only place where you experience the world is in your consciousness. Philosophers have even questioned whether there actually is a world out there independent of conscious perception. We don't need to go there, but there's no doubt that the entire world happens inside you, one could say.

You don't know what you see, what the eyes transmit, the senses transmit, becomes nerve impulses that are sent to the brain, and that's just on the physical level. And then these nerve impulses are decoded, and then some kind of word appears within you. But to what extent that corresponds to a world out there, we don't even know.

So to change the world, so as you look at the world, to some, in some way, you could almost say, go as far as to say, what you're actually looking at is a reflection in the external, in the world of form, of your state of consciousness, you could say. It's an interesting way to look at it. And the state of consciousness is partly your, there is your personal world, and there is a collective world.

So the two, they are connected, but they're not the same, because first of all, there is what you experience as a world in your personal life, or the people you habitually interact with, where you live, your surroundings. It starts with simple things, like even the objects that surround you habitually, where you live. So the, your world is your personal, your relationships with humans that you live with, your relationships with other humans that you meet every day casually, the, where you work, the people you work with.

So all these things, your personal life, so-called life is one sphere that you move in. And the important thing is not to neglect that in search of a better collective world. The two are related, but to disregard, this is a mistake that is often made, to disregard your personal sphere, but the world that is immediately accessible to you as you and your life, the people in your life, where you live, all that, your work.

To neglect that, it's very seductive to think there's so much wrong with the world out there, the collective. That's really what I should be concerned with, because there's so much wrong out there. You can see it.

You just have to turn on the, you turn on some kind of device, whether it's television or that brings you the news and the commentaries, continuous stream. And then of course, that is already, that is the collective world that then enters your living room or wherever you are. And then they get mixed up.

They can obliterate, the collective can obliterate your personal life. And you think your personal life is quite irrelevant now, because what really matters, the world needs to change. It's so dreadful.

Well, yes, the world needs to change and the world is changing because humanity is a work in progress. Humanity is slowly evolving, fits and starts and regressive periods. It takes a few steps forward and then a few steps, four steps forward, three steps back.

Then a few more forward. There's a gradual evolution of humanity and to focus only on what is going wrong within that process, that evolutionary process is also very misleading because that's what you see when you watch the media and so on. It focuses not on what's going right or what has gone right.

It focuses on what's going wrong. Then you give that more and more attention. By giving attention to something, you amplify it.

So whatever you give, now, I'm not saying to completely ignore the world, no, but to give it an excessive amount of attention and only continuously think about what's wrong with the world, then you forget what's right with the world and that then diminishes. So we have the external world coming into your living room, for example, through the media. And it can be, as I said, you can sometimes believe that your personal world, the immediate sphere of influence is irrelevant, but that's not the case.

So the starting point with changing the world is to become aware of how you operate in this world. The starting point is how do you relate to the humans in your life? How do you, what is your mind, what is your mind doing?

What is your predominant state of consciousness? What are your predominant emotions? What are the predominant thoughts that go through your mind?

It's vitally important to become aware of that. If you're not aware of what the predominant emotions are, that the predominant thoughts are, plus accompanying emotions that go through your mind, you are unaware. And the emotions that, the thoughts and emotions that arise continuously within you are a form of conditioning.

And so they take possession of you. So it's vitally important as the starting point for changing the world is to become aware of your world. How do you operate in this world?

How are your relationships? Is there a lot of antagonism? Is there grievances and a lot of conflict?

Are there many people that you hate? Are there more people that you like or love? Is there love, compassion, or not so much?

How do you relate to people? How do you relate to strangers that you meet in a shop, in a store? How do you relate to somebody you meet in an elevator?

All these things are part of what you manifest as your world. So it's how do you, what is the predominant energy that you manifest in your life that affects other humans? This is a very important starting point that of course is expressed in the famous saying, be the change that you want to see in this world.

Nobody knows who actually said that. Some people say Gandhi said it. Well, he could have said it, but he probably said something similar.

I don't think he said that literally, but it doesn't matter. It's a very important pointer, a very important thought, be the change that you want to see in the world. So change starts with you.

And that means your consciousness, your state of consciousness. What is become aware of your mind? What is, how much complaining do you do?

Useless complaining, not a sort of complaining that can actually bring about change, but useless complaining about other people and groups of people and pronouncing half of humanity to be evil, whatever it is, be aware of your mind, vitally important. What kinds of thoughts are there? And once you, the ability to become aware of your mind, what kinds of thoughts your mind is producing, once that grows, that means there's more awareness in you.

There's more presence in you. Another dimension of consciousness has arisen. So be conscious.

How do you, what do you bring into this world on a daily basis? Do you bring more loving kindness, compassion, other humans, empathy, a friendly, a kind word, even to strangers to do the, do you acknowledge every other human being that you meet, even if you meet them only casually, do you acknowledge the being of that human beyond what role this human plays within that brief interaction? Somebody sells you something, you're asking somebody for information, whatever it may be.

So are you, do you acknowledge the beings of the other, if only for a few seconds, giving it attention, see there is beyond the personality, there's something deeper. Do you briefly, do you, can you sense the being, ultimately it means the sacredness of every human, no matter what their personality displays. Next question is, observe, are you at the mercy of how other people behave around you?

Do you react or are you at the mercy also of situations or circumstances? Now, what do I mean when I say at the mercy of, it means that somebody is angry at you, somebody is, the world is full of people who are very angry and frustrated. They may perhaps, they are justified in being angry because life is difficult.

So one can always justify anger and frustration and grievances, of course. Every, on a conventional level, often these things are justified, but what now, what do you, you meet somebody who's angry, says something angry at you, driving, for example. Somebody shouts at you, what, how do you, are you aware enough not to be drawn into the same energy that the other person manifests?

Are you able to simply stay clear and present? Not easy. So how do you, but you can only change the world is by not reacting in the same way in which the world impinges upon you or treats you through humans.

So you have to be more aware than that. And so that's your, the world changes when your state of consciousness is no longer determined by other people's state of consciousness that you may meet or, you know, that's, that really is a big change already. If your state of, your mental emotional state is no longer determined by somebody else's mental emotional state, that's a huge awakening.

And there, because as long as your emotional state, mental emotional state is determined by other, somebody else's mental emotional state, that in Eastern terms, it means it's a perpetuation of karma. So there's no freedom in that. So you can, if somebody is nice to you, you're nice to him or her, okay.

But if somebody is not nice to you, what happens? Jesus was talking about something similar. It's easy to be nice to someone.

Jesus said, this is a big paraphrase because I don't remember literal passages from the Bible. He said, it's easy to be nice to others who are nice to you, but what about those that are not nice to you? That's what really matters.

It doesn't mean, of course, that you become a doormat or you don't have nothing to do with that. In fact, there's a great inner power and strength that arises when you're no longer continuously reactive. That is really weakness.

So if you become angry, when somebody is angry at you, the ego regards this as power. You have compensated for feeling of having been diminished by somebody's attack, verbal attack or criticism. The ego feels diminished.

To me, sometimes it happens when I drive because I'm relatively slow most of the time. And sometimes people shout at me and say, you idiot. Okay, that's, and then I look at them.

Now they're expecting me to shout back, but I don't do that anymore. It's happened too often. So it's too unpleasant.

I don't need it. I don't feel diminished by somebody saying, you idiot. It's just that his or her state of consciousness manifesting through words at the moment.

That's a fine. And then I just look at them and sometimes they become even more disconcerted because there's a lack of reaction. Or they might think I'm completely deaf.

Maybe I'm deaf. I can't hear what they're saying. Just a little example.

But it's amazing, for example, how traffic, it's a simple thing, can make people unconscious. So the moment they get behind the wheel, they become reactive and unconscious and take everything personally. So it can be funny.

It's good sometimes if you can laugh at the ego, but if you want to change the world, you have to start with yourself. What is it that you emanate? It's not only what you emanate through words and actions, it's even what you emanate energetically.

Every human being, if you're a little bit sensitive, then you can sense that every human being has a certain energy emanation. That's part of manifesting the world that you experience because you see it through the lens or the veil of all the conditioning within you, the mental, emotional, and even energetic conditioning within you. So you meet people who are, you can sense that they are in a state of unhappiness.

It's a generic term that could mean many things. They are in a state of ultimately suffering because even a person who is angry is really suffering. They don't know they're suffering, but it's an unpleasant state and it affects the body.

That kind of stress that anger represents affects the harmonious function of the body, the immune system, the heart, blood circulation, everything. So it's not only ultimately not pleasant, it's harmful. First, it's harmful to your body.

It's harmful to other human beings unless they are immune. And so if they are immune to a negative emanation from another human being, now you can't do that through a vaccine. That's the kind of immunity that can alter.

That immunity is awareness, presence. So you're not at the mercy of other humans. You are free.

You may not succeed every time because humans can be very difficult. Not you, just other humans. So humans can be really difficult.

And you might have noticed when you are interacting with humans and you have discussions, another interesting fact you might notice that you are always right and the others are always wrong. It's a very strange fact. And if that's the case in your life, you have to wonder for a moment, isn't that strange?

I'm always right. Wow, I must be Superman or Superwoman. Or you're very unconscious.

It's one or the other. So self-knowledge is the most difficult knowledge. Jesus was already talking about that.

He said, it's easy to see the splinter that is in somebody else's eye and says, look at the splinter in your eye. Let me remove it for you. But you can't see the beam that is in your own eye.

That's a huge thing in you, but you see what's wrong with the other. That's easy. And wrong means unconscious, but to see your own patterns, that's a challenge.

But if you don't, you cannot manifest because that is a starting point for manifesting a better world. And then it spreads out from there. So the essence of what I'm saying here is become conscious of the fact that often you are at the mercy of other people or situations and your state of mind or your emotional state is completely controlled and reactive.

So I mentioned human beings that you react to. When you know, it's also situations. You find yourself in a situation that is suddenly regarded as undesirable.

And that is nowadays very common thing because many people for months have been trapped at home and can't interact with people anymore except through the technology. So many, many limitations have arisen in people's lives of collective kind. Millions of people experiencing the same limitations.

Of course, some are affected much more than others. But yes, to also not just reacting to humans, but reacting to situations that regard it as illimiting, frustrating, and so on. Can you rise above situations also and become free of that reactivity that, for example, the continuous complaining in your mind about what's wrong with the world.

Some people continuously claim what's wrong with the world. Others complain more of what's wrong with their life. And that's a very seductive thing because the ego likes that.

It inflates the ego. If you complain about other people, you experience an ego inflation. Why?

Because the ego feels itself to be superior when it can complain about others. It's implied. You are a judge of the other and you pronounce the other as delinquent, insufficient, not good enough or bad, wanting in the old sense of the word.

Very seductive to experience ego inflation. And all that, as you awaken spiritually, become more free of this reactivity. Then what the words you speak, the actions you take in your immediate surroundings make the world a better place.

And you break the karmic chain, which is action, reaction, action, reaction. Some people who come into this world, into a very dysfunctional family environment, and there are millions of people who are born into a very dysfunctional family environment. And it's a huge, huge challenge.

Because if you're not given enough love or attention, you're not encouraged as a child. If that is missing in your early years, it is a huge, a huge burden or dysfunction that you carry in many cases for the rest of your life. And in many cases, you inflict the same thing on your children that your parents have inflicted on you.

There has not been enough consciousness to break the pattern. So these things are, those patterns that we inherit, it's only through waking up, to becoming aware that these patterns can be transcended. That is our task here.

And that's how you make the world a better place. You have to, the dysfunctional patterns in your own life, you have to look at them. And I know many people who've had very dysfunctional upbringing and then have suffered enormously because they were forced to, because of their unconsciousness, not enough awareness, they were forced to reenact the same patterns that they experienced.

And that you bring more suffering into this world. Are you bringing more suffering into this world or are you bringing healing into this world? Healing is not weakness, healing is power.

So you have to seriously ask yourself, next question in your world, what do you do with the internet when you social media? What is the quality of the nature of your interactions with other humans that you, most cases have never met? So you don't need, you don't know them as humans.

They are just abstract symbols on the screen. They have expressed an opinion. And what, how do you, they've expressed an opinion that seems to conflict with your opinion.

And suddenly this unconscious reactivity, this human whom you don't know, have never met, you only know him or her through certain statements on Twitter. And suddenly this, you treat this other human being as some kind of demon. It's, and it gets, it's happened millions of times.

Is that creating a better world? And the Twitter world is showing increasing signs of insanity. So it's an externalization of the human mind.

You see it, oh, there it is. There's, it's good, it's wonderful. You can see it before it was all in here.

Now you can actually see it on your screen. There's the craziness of the human mind. Well, that's helpful.

It's good to be able to see it. It's an externalization of the collective mind. Before we invented this technology, all humans could do is what they can shout at somebody in the street, but you can only reach one or two or three people.

Or you could, well, maybe you could stand on a soapbox in Hyde Park Corner in London and give a speech. But even then you only had a few people listening to you. But now even the most unconscious person will have an audience.

He or she will attract similarly unconscious people on Twitter and other platforms. And so, as you know, one wrong tweet can destroy your entire career.

[Speaker 7] (1:08:17 - 1:08:18)
Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (1:08:22 - 1:43:46)
So this is the certain, every age, in every age, time period, human unconsciousness manifests in somewhat different ways. And it's easier when you look back on a past age, we can see, oh, weren't they crazy to do something like that? How could humans do something like that?

It's more difficult to become aware of the craziness in your own time period because you're in the middle of it. Retrospectively, it's easier to see the craziness. So you make sure to create a better world that do not participate in the craziness of this world.

To be very, don't be at the mercy of others as far as your state of consciousness is concerned. And you can only do that by being present more and more, always connecting with that alertness, a very key word. Be alert so that you know what's going on in your mind and in your emotion.

Don't repress anything, just know. And that will gradually dissolve dysfunctional patterns. And you still feel drawn back in, that's fine.

So this is the beginning of changing the world on your personal sphere. And then if you can then interact through the media, various internet platforms, you can put out something that is more beneficial. Then you already begin to affect a larger sphere.

You have a lot, everybody has a sphere of influence through these platforms here. And what is it? What do you put out through your sphere of influence?

So there's a great opportunity for something that in many, many cases is quite insane, but it is also a great opportunity for actually help to elevate human consciousness. So that is your great opportunity, no matter how you do it. And then we come to the larger sphere, political, social institutions and so on.

How do you change that? How do you diminish the suffering of so many humans on the planet? Well, you continue to no longer contribute to the suffering of others.

So to some extent, you have to allow humans to evolve. Humanity is evolving. The consciousness of humanity is evolving.

And it's vitally important to bring healing and compassion and so on to all your interactions, whether at home or online or wherever you go. And if you want to participate in political discourse, maybe you want to run for office somewhere, who knows? You need to be really conscious if you decide to do that.

And you may feel called upon to do that. And then it becomes, you've already, in your own past in life, you're already practicing not being reactive, not being at the mercy of other people's state of consciousness. And then you can bring that into the, that wider, greater sphere of political structures and so on, if that's what you choose to do.

But you also need to realize that humanity is, as I said before, is a work in progress. So humans are slowly evolving towards more consciousness. The entire universe is engaged in an awakening process.

And you are part of the awakening process of the universe. You can see it on the planet, how gradually from very simple life forms, gradually grew, became more complex. Then they were destroyed.

There were many, five was five extinctions already. Then they were destroyed. Then new life forms arose from, where did they arise from?

From an underlying field of vast intelligence that then manifests through physical forms, gradually manifests more fully, gradually manifests in more complex life forms that have more, greater share of consciousness, but it's always the one consciousness moving through. So have compassion with humans. A lot of the suffering that humans experience is created by other humans.

Just read history, history book, and you see how dreadful suffering humans have inflicted on other humans throughout history, 20th century alone. We've now become very much the last few, present time, very much conscious of racial suffering that humans have suffered from, tremendous suffering that humans inflicted on other humans. And it's great that we've become aware of it now instead of before just the, it was just, nobody could talk about it.

It was so not, throughout history, slavery was an accepted fact that nobody seemed to question it. Consciousness had not yet developed enough, but now consciousness is developing and we become aware of it, and it's a wonderful thing. As long as the, what arises doesn't, isn't, it's there.

There's sometimes a danger that even realizations can be hijacked by the ego, so to speak. And when you know that something has been hijacked by the ego is when you demonize others for example, because the ego loves to demonize others. So be very careful with, it's very, so that you don't, you get dragged into the gravitational pull of the ego, drags you back into unconsciousness.

We're living at a time that's very challenging, but also a time of opportunity. Nobody can predict right now whether we're going to experience a regression in state of consciousness. Every regression in the evolution of consciousness is actually part of the evolution of consciousness.

Or if we can go from here straight to a more conscious society, more conscious world. But humans have to go through this evolutionary process and not every human is at the same stage of evolutionary development. You have to be compassionate with people who are not yet evolving.

And that could be your parents. If you become compassionate with, when you go to your, visit your parents and they're trapped in the same patterns that they were already 20 years ago. And the same, they criticize you in the same way they always do.

And you realize they are trapped in their patterns and you have compassion and you allow humans to go through their patterns. And if in some cases you even have to allow humans who insist to go through their own self-created suffering, you do as much as you can to help to bring more awareness into this world, to bring love ultimately, not conventional love, but the deeper, the love that recognizes every other human as inseparable from who you are, to recognize the other as ultimately not separate from you as that is true love. Love, that is that nothing else will redeem the world and create a better world. We need humans to be able to access the dimension from which love can flow.

And love means what the Dalai Lama calls kindness. It's the same thing. What he really is talking about is love.

So Dalai Lama said, he didn't say strangely, my religion is Buddhism. The Dalai Lama said, my religion is kindness. So he's really pointing to the essence of what we transform.

And that kindness manifests as compassion and love, empathy, and also manifests as wisdom. Wisdom is very important, it's not just intelligence, it's wisdom, it's something deeper that sees the totality of things that doesn't attack one problem and then create three more problems. The solution to one problem creates three big, even bigger problems that apply only the intellectual analysis or conventional intelligence.

Wisdom sees the totality and then takes action on the basis of that. Let's see another question. Is there some type of discipline that is needed to be successful with conscious manifestation?

If so, can you describe what the discipline is that is needed? Well, basically, I have already described the discipline that's needed in your daily life. To be aware of yourself and of your own state of consciousness.

Also, an important factor, perhaps, that is implied in what we've been saying, but it's worth pointing it out explicitly, is the importance of what is conventionally called gratitude. But there could be other words. Gratitude is a very powerful transformational tool and also one of the most powerful tools for manifesting better things in your life.

Now, what does that mean? The gratitude is to acknowledge the good in your life now. And it's surprising how many people don't do that, who can only see the bad in their lives or only complain, but it's extremely powerful to acknowledge the good that's in your life now.

Now, let's talk about this for a moment. This does not mean that you have a conceptual idea of what your life is and then you compare it to somebody else's life. And you say, oh, really, I should be happy because I have it so much better than look at these people.

Their life is worse than mine, so I really should be grateful for my life. That's not it. That's not real gratitude.

You're moving within the conceptual realm and your feeling of wellbeing is dependent on somebody else who has less than you or is suffering more than you. So gratitude is not if you compare yourself because that's a misconception, very common misconception of gratitude is you compare yourself to somebody else or even a whole group of people. You say, look at people in the third world.

I really should be grateful. We are so much better off, even though I may be poor, but I'm still better off than, so let's be grateful. No, that's not real gratitude.

You're depending on others to be worse off than you, but you can feel gratitude. It's crazy. It feeds the ego.

No, gratitude is to acknowledge the good that's in your life now, now, this moment. Okay, so it's not the good in your life situation. I'm fine because I have achieved this or that or whatever.

No, at this moment. And that's simple things. It really comes down to simple things.

What can I be grateful for at this moment? Wow, there's so much I can be grateful for. Now, what is it?

To be grateful is to acknowledge something, to give it attention and to appreciate it. I have this, you can't see it, but I have a nice round table here. And it's lovely.

I touch it. It's made of wood. And it's lovely.

It's not spectacular. It doesn't need to be spectacular, but it has a presence and a beingness. There's light coming through the window there and from behind me.

I often sit here. I'm lucky to have these trees here. And I often sit here.

There's a little screen to, otherwise there's too much glare. But I often sit here. I look at the trees for 10, 15 minutes.

And there's a continuous feeling of goodness because, and we could call that gratitude, but I don't say in my mind, I'm so grateful for these trees. I simply appreciate the wonder and aliveness, the beingness of these trees. So I acknowledge the good in this moment by appreciating the wonder, the miracle of these trees.

It's just, you can look at the sky here today, happens to be completely overcast, but very, and that's fine too, because there's light filtering through. There's more light in the way today than when the sky is blue because the light is dispersed by the cloud. It's everywhere.

It comes from the sun. It filters through the clouds. Now you appreciate that.

You look at a potted plant. You become, you're grateful for that. You're grateful for all the little things.

You hear a bird. You drink a glass of water, acknowledging all your breathing. So that's gratitude.

The gratitude is the appreciation of life that's around you. So you can say the gratitude for being alive, for to feel that you're alive in your entire body, the inner body, the invisible presence that inhabits the body, to feel that. So all my, all the little things, gratitude is best applied to all the small things that continuously surround you in life.

And then you see the goodness of it all, or you can just, let's say you have little or no money. So, and you're looking for abundance. So how do you bring abundance into your life?

You have to discover, to acknowledge the abundance that is already everywhere around you. You walk past this, you go, you're walking in the street and there's a flower store. There's flowers on display and potted plants outside.

If you live in a city, an abundance of life, the flowers are just amazing. There's abundance and you can look everywhere and see abundant life. Jesus used that term.

He said, I want you to have abundant life. In other translations, he says the same term translated in a different way. I want you to have the fullness of life.

Jesus promises the fullness of life or abundant life. Now, true abundance, which many people are looking for and they think abundance is to do with having many things. It could be that quite a few things come to you when you access the source of all abundance, which of course is within you.

It's the feeling of the fullness of life. Now, once you get this feeling in the present moment, then this is the, perhaps the very core of gratitude is to feel the aliveness of life within yourself. So when Jesus talks about the fullness of life or abundant life, he's not talking about, he's not, it is not a prophecy of the arising of shopping malls 2000 years later.

He wasn't talking about the abundance that you find when you walk through a shopping mall and you say, oh, look, oh, I must have that. Oh, I must, all these things, I must have that, I must have that, that comes from a place of lack, the egoic place of lack. I must fill up the sense of lack with this and that and that, this kind of addictive thing around.

If you might've noticed when you go to the shopping mall and you feel very tired, well, I do. I walk around for 10 minutes and, ah, that's enough. So this, Jesus wasn't talking about lots of things.

He's talking about the core of life, the fullness that you, that is inseparable from what, when we started today, we started with getting in touch with the consciousness within you to realize that you are conscious, that the essence of who you are is the awareness, not your history. The essence of who you are is the awareness. And the awareness of that awareness is the realization of that which is prior to all forms, that can become forms, but that the, that which is prior to all manifestations is the unmanifested life, the one, the consciousness, the one life that underlies the entire universe.

And because you are only a microscopic version of the entire universe, you can discover virtually all the secrets of the universe by going within, because you are inseparable from the universe. You discover the most incredible, deepest realizations, not factual things, you may not know how many, how many planets have life, intelligent life in our galaxy, nobody knows, not those things, but the deeper laws and movements that underlie the manifestation of the universe, you can find that within yourself by going within. So the abundance is the aliveness that is within you, and it's the awareness of that aliveness, but the awareness of that aliveness and the aliveness are a single thing, it's duality arises when we talk about it.

Then they can say, oh, I'm aware of consciousness, but you're not, you can't be aware of consciousness because the awareness is a consciousness, the consciousness is the awareness. So consciousness is becoming self-aware. And what is that consciousness?

It's not yours, it's the consciousness of the universe manifesting through this little form. So you are part of the awakening process of the universe. So all manifestation that you do in your life must be aligned with the awakening universe and the universe is moving towards greater consciousness.

But where does it come from? It comes from an unmanifested source of all life that is traditionally has been called God. The source of all life emanates into this universe, but it has no location in space or time, it is beyond that.

But to realize that the essence of who you are is inseparable from that, that is when the ripple on the surface of the ocean suddenly realizes that it is the ocean. Yes, it's also a ripple, not for long, for a little while, it's also the ripple, but in essence, the ripple is the ocean. And when the ripple becomes aware of its true nature, then that means the ocean has become aware of its true nature and the totality of life has become aware, has woken up.

That is our, so everything that we do in our, what we want to manifest, let's make sure that it is part of the evolving consciousness. So even the simplest things, let's say you want to manifest a, let's, you're a hairdresser and now you want to manifest, now that you can, salons are open again. Okay, I'm going to have a hairdressing salon.

Okay, I'm going to focus on that. And I can feel that I already have it because I can feel the fullness of life already. And it does bring in the image of this hairdressing salon and it bring it into this sense of fullness, which means you're already feeling that it's there.

And when it comes on, it's secondary now. That's the, you become a more, very powerful manifester if you do not depend on some future outcome, you're already experiencing the fullness of life. But you also know that this hairdressing salon is a place where people will, when they go there, they not only get a good haircut or hairdo, they also get your presence.

They also get your attention. They also get the energy that you emanate there. And they will feel better while you're cutting their hair.

I'm just giving one example. I could give thousands of examples. They feel, in that moment, you listen to them.

You acknowledge that they're not just a client. You acknowledge their beingness. I always say the human being has a two dimension.

The human is the conditioned with a history. The being is the unconditioned. So that's the consciousness that you are.

That is the transcendent dimension. If you don't know that, your life is the most frustrating experience. You might've noticed that without that realization of the deeper dimension of who you are, all your experience is one damn thing after another.

It's always, oh my God, not another thing. So the hairdresser, now everybody who comes into that, yes, they're getting a good haircut. Let's presume you're a good hairdresser.

That's important too on the human level. But there's something else that you provide. And that is the love one can say to acknowledge the beingness of every human.

And perhaps some hairdressers after a few years become very good counselors because they've listened to so many stories. And suddenly they can actually give good advice. It doesn't matter what the form is that your manifestation take, but make sure that it is aligned in some way with the evolving consciousness.

So you bring something good into this world. You make a contribution. You bring more goodness into this world in one way or another.

Even if you, whatever it is, you make, if you're very good at something, let's say you're good at sports or something, and then people like to watch you. Why do people, I sometimes ask, why do people watch a tennis match? It's always the same thing.

They just knock, there's a ball, and then it goes on for hours. But it can be very, very, why are they so excited by this? Well, on the one hand, yes, they have a favorite.

They either favor one or the other. And that is an egoic thing. But I believe they also find it fascinating because the people who are, if they are masters in tennis playing, they are in a state of absolute presence while they play.

And somehow it's lovely to watch people who are in that field or the zone of mastery. And because something almost transmits itself, it doesn't mean that these tennis players are necessarily more conscious than others in the rest of their lives. We don't know.

But while they're engaged in the activities that they have mastered absolutely, you can somehow absorb a little bit of that presence. It's great to watch. So I occasionally watch, but not very often, tennis, and I can sense why people, there's the two reasons why people watch it.

One, they want their favorite to win, but there's a deeper reason. That is, there's something almost transmits itself. This presence can be contagious almost.

And again, here we come to an important point. When you are present, that also affects many, many others that you come into contact with. It's contagious in a positive sense.

It transmits, there's a transmission of presence, and there can even be a transmissions of presence in some miraculous way through the screen right now. How is that possible? These are just, well, it's possible because the screen is in your consciousness.

Who knows where there's actually a screen out there, but the screen is something that arises in your consciousness. So even there, it can work. So whatever it is you want to manifest in this life, go ahead, but realize the foundation for manifestation is, I call it the vertical dimension, that's the cross.

Life has the two dimensions, the vertical, which is the present moment, which is the depths of who you are in the essence of a being that is, and who you are in the essence of your being is already complete. You don't need to become a better person in the essence of your being. You just need to manifest into this horizontal world more of the essence of your being.

So on the deepest level, this you cannot improve upon anything or who you are, but on the horizontal, they have the cross, the two dimensions. On the horizontal, there's a lot you can do, but it is not ultimately beneficial in the absence of the vertical. But if the vertical is there, then that more and more from there, which is consciousness, can flow into the horizontal dimension.

And that's how you create a better world. That is a miracle, and that is the secret. And that is your task in this world.

What else could be? That's the purpose of your life. I mean, that doesn't matter what form it takes.

It could be the simplest things. May you acknowledge the good that's already there. And if you are not, if you feel there's much more that you could do on the horizontal, yes, there probably is.

But in the meantime, let's say you deliver, we had a meal delivered yesterday to DoorDash. So DoorDash, there was a brief interaction. I opened the door and some, before they just left it at the door, it's the virus thing.

But I opened the door and for five seconds, I interacted with the dasher, they call them. We will work for DoorDash. They bring food from restaurants in case you don't know.

We interacted for, there was a moment of interaction and I could sense a connectedness. He loved interacting with me for these few seconds. And I loved it.

He wasn't a DoorDasher. He was, there was a being behind it and I acknowledged his being. And through that, he found me, he felt very good just looking at me, nothing to do with me as a person at all.

And it was a lovely, lovely encounter for a few seconds. So, and if you're a DoorDasher for a while, why not practice that? Now, most, many people that you deliver food to will not be, probably not acknowledge your being, but that doesn't mean you cannot acknowledge their being.

So for as long as you do that, even there you can bring more consciousness into this world, no matter where you are and what you're at, instead of complaining that you really should be doing something more interesting. Yes, perhaps you will be doing something more interesting, but a starting point is acknowledge the good that's here now, then you're much more likely to evolve. The situation is much more likely to evolve from there.

But if you are in a continuous state of resistance to what is now, you're much more likely to be stuck for a long time, if not forever. As you know, the famous saying goes, what you resist persists, which is of course very true. So alignment with universal purpose.

Universal purpose is consciousness, bring more of that. And this consciousness manifests as an emanation of kindness, love, compassion, a sense of deep connectedness. And it also manifests as wisdom when you use your mind so that it's not just the conditioned mind that's operating, there's actually an awareness behind it.

And the conditioned mind is then inspired by the deeper consciousness that's behind it, of which it is an inseparable part. It's inspired then by the deeper... And then the mind is a lovely tool too.

You can create through the mind, but you can only create if you have access to real creativity, you need access to the deeper dimension that is transcendent to the mind, not separate from it. The analogy I used again is the thinking mind could be like the ripple on the surface. And then there's the ocean of which the ripple is only a temporary expression.

It's so that life is... Once you realize that, then any situation is fine for the time being, any situation that you're in. And the more you are aligned with the present moment, the more likely it is that the situation will evolve and change to reflect your growing consciousness.

That's a miracle of being alive. And that's why you're here.

[Speaker 2] (1:44:00 - 1:44:05)
So the picture is not stuck.

[Speaker 1] (1:44:05 - 1:47:08)
I just stopped talking. I just wanted to make sure you know. I have probably said enough.

The rest is up to you. Many of these things I said you already knew. And if you didn't know them in your conscious mind, there was a kind of recognition.

It suddenly made, you know, that makes sense. Somehow you knew that already. So the truth is always recognized.

It's not something new that you learn. Perhaps you hadn't realized it. So truth is realized, recognized.

And then there may be others who are not yet ready for it. That's fine. There may be some people who said, or somebody said to a friend, perhaps, oh, you must listen to this guy Eckhart.

He might have something important to say. And then the friend looks, what the hell is he talking about? So it's fine.

Not everybody's yet ready for the next step in evolution. Usually it means they need to suffer a little bit more, mostly self-created, unconsciously. That's also part of the evolutionary process of the universe.

So the rest is up to you. It is a wonderful adventure. You don't need to seek for satisfaction on the personal level.

This comes as a by-product quite often. The satisfaction on the personal level comes on the horizontal level, comes as the icing on the cake or the by-product of something that something deeper than that, something that happens through you, that you can't claim I did that. It happens through you.

And then the person, the personal sense of self, they might feel, oh, it's nice to have. But if it claims possessions as I did that, you fall back into illusion as a separate self. You cannot do anything as a separate self.

As Jesus said, I of my own self can do nothing. It is the father that does it through me. What's the father?

The consciousness that emanates from the source of all life that is called God. Thank you. I will see you again, perhaps.

Soon, but always in the present moment.

[Speaker 4] (1:47:34 - 1:51:03)
I've known all the things that you've talked about in many of your books and, well, there's two books, but the books I've read. I've experienced this presence through music. So, and it's a very profound sense of grace that I feel when I know I'm being played.

In a sense, I'm an instrument. And in a way, what we call instruments are voices. So I've been very taken with this description and imagery I've had from what you've discussed about being near the void, because that's what it feels like.

It's something comes up. I know there's something in there. We've been talking about dogs a lot.

It's like I smell it inside. It's like, and it can become obsessive because it's such a beautiful presence. But I mean, I think of Stravinsky.

He said, the Rite of Spring. He said, I did not write the Rite of Spring. I transcribed it.

Some artists get these things and the clarity is there. What I experience is mostly an inference or something that needs to be embodied and brought forth. And that which is actually, my experience is more of knowing what it isn't.

I just play it. As it moves through me, I can sense that grace, especially when I know, when I don't feel my hands. I don't feel anything.

I just feel this presence, this music that's just as surprising to me as anyone else. And I'm really fortunate because I never took lessons and never got trained or anything. So my mind doesn't really get that involved.

Don't ask me to play Happy Birthday, though. I don't know how to do that. So I guess my question was about this connection to the creative and, in a sense, the artifacts that come.

I use the word inform. And when I was thinking, does art and music inform the ego of presence? That was really what it was.

And so how does one be part of that manifestation but not get too, let's see, involved? To keep the distance so one doesn't become too obsessed with that process. So the balance of the two, that's what I'm looking for.

[Speaker 1] (1:51:03 - 2:06:24)
Thank you. Well, of course, on the one hand, you have the creative process of music or art. And then you have the finished product.

And then you have the piece of music is being played and somebody listens to it. Or the work of art is there and somebody contemplates it. When you ask, can art or music inform the ego of presence?

Well, first of all, the ego doesn't know anything about presence, so it can't do that. And there needs to be some opening in the ego in order to be receptive to the power that is latent in music or art that was created from that deep place. There's a lot of music and art that's not necessarily created from that deep place, but the ego is trying to be clever.

And so it tries to come up with something clever and then that's fine. But let's talk about some piece of music or work of art that has come out of connectedness with the stillness or the presence. So some of that then, to some extent, the work of art or the piece of music still carries that energy field.

So it can put the listener in touch or the person who contemplates the work of art can put that person in touch with the deeper dimension within, as long as there's even a little bit of opening is required. If there's only the density of the ego, then the transformational possibilities of art or music are not realized. So a little bit of opening is required in the viewer or the listener, and then it can be quite a wonderful thing to listen to music or to contemplate a work of art and be transported, if only for a moment, into that alert stillness out of which it originally came.

That's a beautiful thing. Another aspect of your question is, I believe, losing oneself, perhaps going too deep, almost losing yourself in the ground out of which creativity comes in the creative process. There's always a balance that is needed so that you don't lose yourself in being.

It could happen to an artist. It can happen to some people who awaken spiritually and they suddenly plunge so deeply into being that they lose all interest in doing. So that happened to some spiritual masters who spent several years in being without doing anything, for example, Ramana Maharshi in India, who had to be fed for several years because he wouldn't even pick up food.

He was so deeply immersed in being, he just sat there and people recognized something extraordinary about him, which they wouldn't have done in the West. In the West, he would have been a medical problem. They recognized something extraordinary and they put food in his mouth.

But there was a loss of balance, certainly, between in this, he could no longer function in this world. This, of course, to such an extreme, this does not happen to you. You're still here.

And then gradually, after a few years, he gradually was beginning to function again in this world and then gradually was able to regain a balance between dealing with things out here and connectedness with being. To a slightly, in a slightly minor way, it happened to me when I lost interest completely in doing and drifted around for two years. It wasn't a problem to me.

It was only a problem to people who were watching me or who knew me. So there was a loss of balance for a while, but then gradually the balance reestablished itself. I didn't have a teacher as such, so it had to be a natural process.

So not to go so deep that you, as long as there's the, there's the, you have to go within and then take, give form to that which was resting in the formless, be used by it so that through you, it can come into this world of form. Don't stay down there and lose yourself in it. Not necessary.

So bringing, do you, what do you compose music? Yes, yes. Well, that's a wonderful way of getting in touch with the stillness within any creative process.

Anybody who is, I don't, unfortunately. The world has not given me that gift of being able to either play music or have some kind of art to bring into this world for a reason, because the world also needs direct spiritual teaching and so, I love some listening to certain kinds of music. For the viewer, it's important not to become dependent, however, on anything external to enter the state of presence.

So whereas music can be a help, there too needs to be a balance. If the only place you can become still is when you listen to certain kinds of music, then that's not quite it because you're becoming dependent on something external to get in touch with that. So use it as a help, and this is the same as a spiritual teacher or spiritual teaching.

It can be a great help to listen to a tape or to see a video or whatever, a great help. But if you become totally dependent on that or on a group, also a group can be a great help to sit with a group of people in an energy field of presence can be a great help, but not becoming dependent on the group either, not becoming dependent on one teacher, any external teacher. And every good teacher will tell you when the time comes, enough is enough.

The true teacher is within you. And what you see in me, that which you find so precious in me must be in you, otherwise you wouldn't see it. So the good teacher will always direct you back into yourself, will not foster any kind of dependency.

So knowing what is a help, using it, any of the things that can be helpful, but not becoming dependent, eventually it is necessary for you to go there without any help, still being able to appreciate even teachers and teachings. I love listening to other spiritual teachers. If they come from a deep place, I have great joy when I listen, wow, this is so wonderful.

Or reading a spiritual book that comes from the deepest place, there's still great joy in that. I don't, it's nothing to do with need, it's enjoying a slightly different expression of the same deep truth. Just wonderful.

And so, and then also you can see it wherever it is, no matter in what form it's hiding, you can see the truth shining through wherever it is hiding. It might be hiding in some ancient religion, hiding very deeply. And there you see it shining through some, there may be a lot of mythology around it, there may be a lot of cultural beliefs around it, and yet deep down there you can still see, oh, this is about, this is the truth shining through all the mythology around it and so on.

So once it's in there, you see it everywhere, but primarily it is who you are. So I wish you well and be thankful that you have this wonderful gift. So how to reconcile accepting what arises in the present moment, and at the same time, perhaps holding in your mind an image of what you want to manifest in your life or using affirmations.

Now that's the, perhaps that's the most important part of manifesting, living in this world, is to bring the two together, accepting whatever arises in the present moment without losing the ability to, in your day-to-day life, in your personal and professional life, without losing the ability to have goals, for example, and move towards goals or to have certain aims. When you practice manifestation techniques, it might, you might do it as set aside a few minutes every day, maybe twice a day, and maybe in the morning and in the evening. When you focus on something that you want to manifest, the rest of the time you live your life without continuously thinking about something that is other than what arises in the present moment.

So it's important, the very foundation for successful living, but also the very foundation for manifesting things is to be deeply accepting of whatever the present moment brings to face it in that state of acceptance. If you're not in a state of acceptance, it's a state of acceptance that takes you deeper into the vertical dimension, which is beyond ego. The state of non-acceptance keeps you trapped in very limited egoic consciousness.

So when you are in opposition to the present moment, in whatever form it arises, and that's very easy to fall back into that, even for spiritual practitioners, so to speak, it's fall back into this deep seated habit of being in opposition to what arises in the present moment. So it's vital to recognize that something that is the case now cannot be otherwise in this moment. This is beyond any doubt.

It is because that's how it is. You cannot wish it away or say it shouldn't be. It is whatever is arising now is.

It's dysfunctional to argue with it or to create some kind of mental, emotional resistance to it. It does not mean that change cannot take place. It does not mean that you cannot take action in order to manifest something that you would prefer.

But the important thing is at this moment, there's no division, no, there's no antagonism between you and what you experience as your reality. That's very important, not to have an antagonistic relationship with whatever arises in the present moment.

[Speaker 6] (2:06:28 - 2:06:32)
Millions of humans still, that's all they ever know.

[Speaker 1] (2:06:35 - 2:42:03)
All they ever identify with is the personality conditioned by the past, problematic, problem-making. You perceive the world and judge it through the veil of your mental conditioning. You don't see anything clearly.

Some people hate themselves. I don't like my body, I don't like who I am, I don't like this, I don't, what an awful way to live, I hate myself. It's much better to love yourself.

So in new age teachings, you learn to love yourself. Let go of this dysfunctional relationship with yourself. And then this is a good thing.

It's much better to love yourself than to hate yourself. But you have to achieve that transition, not easy if the hating yourself has been deeply ingrained. You may have to put little stickers on your bathroom mirror.

I love myself. Oh yes, and everywhere. You are lovable.

Oh, thank you, thank you, yes. And again, this is fine. It's a transitional stage.

It's not the final stage. Sometimes in new age things, it's a final stage. It's a lovely transitional stage, but really it's the stage of awakening is that you begin to let go of having a relationship with yourself so that you can just be yourself.

And you have to be in the present moment in order to be yourself. And that is, you can sometimes learn by looking at an animal. The animal is at a pre-egoic stage.

What we are moving towards or into is a post-egoic stage. Now, the animal, like your dog, is pre-egoic. The dog has consciousness, but not conceptual consciousness.

The dog does not operate through mental concepts. In other words, the dog does not have an opinion about you. Isn't that, that's why you love the dog so much.

And also, the dog does not have a relationship with himself or herself. Humans have, but I have not met a single dog that has a problem with self-esteem, for example. I have not met a single dog that has a problem with body image.

Even the ugliest dog is okay. Because the split hasn't happened yet, the split into me and myself. So the dog, this is why the dog is often joyful.

The slightest thing, sometimes you go, if you have a dog, you go away for 10 minutes and you come back home. The dog acts if you have been away for 10 years. He's so happy.

And the happy is contagious a little bit, the happiness of the wagging tail of the dog. Why is the dog so happy? Because the dog does not have a self.

The dog is him, her, itself. The dog is, and then the tail goes, life is good. If the dog could say something, it would say, life is good.

In the present moment, just give me my food and then it's even better. So the humans, they love to be with their animals because it gives them a little bit of, a little glimpse of self-transcendence because when they look into the eyes of the dog, they are not being judged. And that feels good.

And you can sense, by looking at the eyes, you can sense the being of the dog. Wow, now, the dog, what you really love in, just an example, dog, cat, what you really love in the dog is not the outer surface of the dog. Although it's lovely to the touch and all that, yes, but you know there is something that you cannot see that you relate to when you look into the eyes of a dog.

That is the essence of the dog. What you love is actually the consciousness of the dog, which has no ego in it. It exists at a pre-egoic state.

You love the consciousness of the dog. And when you look in the eyes of it, you feel a little bit, you connect a little bit to that in yourself for a few seconds. When you're not, you don't need any defense mechanism or anything like that when you relate to a dog.

Although there are some humans with huge egos, I have observed a few, who relate to their pet through their ego, but that's another story. And that's a sad story. They have an ego relationship.

I knew a woman who would, in the evenings, she would put food out for her cat, would go out, the cat would be in the garden, and she had the window open. That was a neighbor of mine years ago. And she would put the food out.

And this woman had a very accomplished person, but it was a gigantic ego. She would, she put the food of her cat out. And then if the cat didn't come, well, because cats have many things to do out in the garden.

And it was dinner time for the cat, and she put the plate there, and she was sitting there waiting for the cat to come. And 15 minutes passed, and then she said, okay. Then she would close the window, said, if she doesn't want to see me, I don't want to see her.

Oh my God. She has an ego relationship with her cat. So a relationship with yourself, that eventually is transcended, so that you can simply be in the present moment, not, and let's go deeper now, so that in the present moment, which is a portal into the awakened state, in this present moment, let's see who or what are you in the present moment without reference to any thought, without reference to any thought about who you are.

That's an interesting pointer. In other words, what does it feel like to be yourself without remembering your past or thinking about the future, just in this moment? You don't need to remember your email address or anything.

It's not necessary now, or what you ate yesterday. Without reference to past and future, what does it, do you disappear, or what is left of you without the memory, the narrative that usually you describe as my life? Without that memory of that you need to revive continuously, without that, what does it feel like to be you?

And I cannot answer that. I can only give it to you as a pointer and slow down a little bit as I talk so that you can perhaps inquire, investigate internally what it feels like. What is the most essential thing about your identity?

Is, are you still there when you don't think about your life, like now? Are you still there? And what is that?

I'm not going to answer it, and I don't expect a conceptual answer. So the, that's me. There was a spiritual teacher in India whose favorite meditation was asking his disciples to ask themselves, who am I?

You can also ask yourself, what am I? Who or what? What am I?

What am I? But don't answer it verbally, but feel or sense what it means to be alive or to be you. What am I?

There's a, there's a gap in the stream of thinking. Then what, what is there when there's a gap in the stream of thinking, like now? And in that gap, there's a, there's a stillness, yes?

There's also a sense of, there's something there, but it's hard to describe. There's a sense of presence, of beingness. And in that sense of presence, of beingness, you know that you are.

You know, you can say, I am. You know that without adding any qualifiers to it, without adding anything to the I am, it's a pure sense of being, which is I am. It's very peaceful.

You need an alertness to sustain it just for a little bit. Without the alertness, you will immediately fall back into the stream of thinking, but it's not, you don't use willpower to stop your thinking mind. That doesn't really work.

So you don't hold your breath in order to stop thinking. That does, it might work for a little while, but then you think even more. It's like a boiling kettle, hold the lid on a boiling kettle.

Just alertness. And so Jesus said, as I said at the beginning, and what I say to you, I say to all, stay awake. In some translations, it's translated as stay alert.

What I say to you, I say to all, stay alert. That alertness is consciousness without thought. It seems at first just to be an absence.

It seems at first like, okay, stillness, one could say it's the absence of noise, in a stillness, an absence. It might seem at first as a kind of nothingness. And yet, if you stay with it for a little bit, just a few more seconds, stay alert, then you can sense it's not just the absence of something, it's also the presence of something.

But not so much the presence of something, but the sense of presence itself. Not of something. And so that is dimension of consciousness, that is the fourth dimension of consciousness, awareness or presence.

And you encounter that in between two thoughts or, for example, if you find it hard to stop thinking, don't use your willpower, use a little device, use a little bit of help, for example, become aware that you're breathing. You become aware of, you're aware of the inflowing and outflowing breath. And your attention moves with the breath into the body and out of the body.

And again, your attention is there. And again, your attention follows the breath into the body. Stop for a second and out of the body.

You might, it's helpful if you can breathe as deep as the abdomen, although the air doesn't actually reach it, but your attention reaches it. And now you may realize that when you become aware of your breath, which is a very ancient meditation method, when you become aware of your breath, you cannot be thinking at the same time. That's why the Buddha recommended this meditation, which is called Anapanasati, which is the awareness of your breath stops your mind, the thinking mind, automatically.

The moment you start thinking, you lose awareness of your breath. So the Buddha said, his main teaching, I would say, would be aware of your breathing. He didn't say, stop thinking, because that seems too difficult, but awareness of your breath is possible and automatically thinking subsides.

What remains is a sense of alert presence. That is the awakened consciousness. And that is inseparable from what I call the vertical dimension of life.

It is the presence in the now. There's no time in this sense of beingness, stillness, alertness. There is no time, and yet that is essentially who or what you are.

That gets usually mixed up with content, a bit like diluted. So this is the consciousness that is in its pure form. When you start thinking, it's still consciousness, but it takes on a form, a thought form.

When you perceive things, it's consciousness perceiving. The perception is a form in your mind. Consciousness has taken on a form, takes on many forms continuously.

And there is a bundle of thought forms in your mind that make up the main part of your sense of identity. And that is the, when you identify with that, and you don't know yourself more deeply in the vertical dimension, then that's the ego. But when you know yourself more deeply in the vertical dimension of the present moment, then all that is is that which makes up your personality.

Of course, it's still there. Your story, the narrative of you, unchanged, it's still there. The difference, however, is you no longer look to it for your ultimate sense of self.

You don't derive your true and ultimate identity from the narrative of your life that you tell yourself in your mind. Of course, it's still there, but you don't look to it for liberation or fulfillment or some future self. You don't even look to that for liberation or fulfillment because all that is the horizontal dimension of life.

That is time, what time operates. And for millions of humans still, that's all they ever know. All they ever identify with is the personality conditioned by the past, problematic, problem-making, continuously, often very dysfunctional, coloring everything that you see and perceive.

It's like through this veil of conditioning, you perceive the world and judge it through the veil of your mental conditioning. You don't see anything clearly. So this is the awakening into that Turiya, the fourth state of consciousness, the awakened state that all the ancient teachings already pointed to as a possibility.

And it's here now, and it's more important now. It's not just something for very few humans to realize, but something that becomes available to more and more humans, especially now that we are being confronted collectively with various manifestations of adversity. And it's not the end yet, fortunately.

It's not the end yet. There's more to come. So, and that is, this gives you this dimension, the awakened dimension.

This is where the resilience you find for living in troubled times. This is where you are rooted in this ultimately deep and unshakable rooted consciousness of being, you are, you realize who or what you are beyond the personality. It's not, they're not ultimately two.

The analogy I often use is the ocean and the ripple on the surface of the ocean. You are a ripple on the surface of the ocean as a personality, surrounded by other ripples on this horizontal dimension. Some ripples you like, many others you don't like.

Some ripples are very unpleasant. A few others are great, you like them. And yet you're only a ripple and it's uneasy and it's never quite enough.

And others are bigger ripples and even waves come occasionally. Who is that guy? It's a wave.

And life becomes unsatisfying. And at some point you meet another ripple who says, have you not realized who or what you are beyond your ripple existence? And you say, no, no, I haven't.

Okay, then can you sense, if you stop thinking for a moment, can you sense the depths of you? Can you sense that there's more to you than this surface appearance? And the ripple goes, no, no, okay.

And finally the tension goes deep as the vertical dimension opens up and the ripple goes, oh. And then of course the ripple won't know what to say, doesn't know what it is, but it senses something. It senses that it's connectedness to something vast, infinite.

It's the ocean. And it's not only senses it connectedness, it senses its oneness with that. And then that is self-transcendence of the ripple.

And in this analogy, of course, you are the ripple. And this is the essence of all spirituality is to sense that in yourself, in the vertical dimension of yourself, to sense it as yourself. And the moment we talk about it, it sounds as if it were something that you perceive, this sense, but it's only because we use language and then every sentence has a subject and an object.

So you could say, I am aware of myself. Yes, it's true, but ultimately that's not how it is because the moment you have said that, you've created a duality, I and myself. But when you sense the essence of who you are, there's no duality.

The awareness of yourself is the awareness. So it's not aware, being aware of something, but being aware of awareness itself, so to speak. You can, you sense your own consciousness as consciousness.

You know you are, that's an amazing thing. It sounds almost, it sounds so simple that it's impossible to realize, to know that you are, not as a particular this or that, it's pure beingness. You know that you are, and you can sense that you are.

That is such a liberation and such a wonderful, and then you realize there's a depth to who you are that far transcends who you are as a personality. That's, and that is, in some spiritual traditions, that is called liberation, and you can see why it liberates you from yourself. Jesus also used the term salvation.

You can use salvation, you can use liberation. So this is the, once you have a glimpse, it's your mission to invite that dimension into your life more and more. Not just doing a, meditation is good.

If you have a meditation practice, if you meditate rightly, and many people don't meditate rightly, the mistake that can easily creep into meditation is you meditate in order to achieve a particular goal, or you have a future self of an awakened master, and you want to achieve that. And therefore, you have the idea that you are doing a meditation in order to get somewhere. That's always very hard to get rid of this mind pattern because everywhere else it operates.

You always do something in order to achieve something, and in order to achieve something through your doing, you need time. For everything, you need time. Even make a cup of tea, you need time.

And this doing idea can easily come into the idea of meditating, so you're doing it in order to get somewhere. So you bring future time into your meditation unconsciously without knowing it. Whereas meditation, true meditation, is not a doing, but it's the realization of being, and there's no time in being.

Do people start becoming nicer as you become more aware, or is it just that you no longer get consumed by the anger that arises when in the company of not so nice people? Well, I would say both. When you become more aware, you're not reactive anymore towards people.

You don't personalize things anymore, make everything personal, and are always looking out for some kind of hidden insult or look at what's his real intention behind what he's saying. What does he really want? You're just, there's an openness and a non-judgmental attitude towards others that non-reactive relationships then generate already more consciousness in the other, because unconsciousness is two unconscious people to strengthen each other's unconsciousness.

So if somebody says or does something that may be unconscious and I don't react to it, it does not become amplified through my reaction. If somebody says or does something unconscious and I react to it, condemn it, even if it's just in my mind, I actually amplify it, and I myself become part of that unconsciousness through my judgment. If I can be non-reactive, I can allow other humans their behavior because that's their present stage of consciousness or they behave as they have to behave at this moment.

And so I allow them to behave, to do what they do. I accept it. And then suddenly there's a different energy there.

And so I don't amplify that. And those people then, I don't condemn them. I don't equate their unconscious behavior with who they are.

That's why it's so important not to judge others. It doesn't mean you kind of go through life saying, oh, they're all, everything is fine, that you don't see unconscious behavior. You see what they do.

You know what they do, but you don't equate that with who they are. You know it is an overlay on, it is human unconsciousness. They're expressing that.

It's not who they are in their essence. If you confuse the unconscious behavior with who they are in their essence, then that's called judgment. If you see that somebody is doing something extremely unconscious, that's not judgment because you don't equate it with who that person is.

And so you don't say he is evil. That statement would be wrong of anybody because in essence, nobody is evil, but they manifest extreme unconsciousness, which we can call in many cases evil. So that's important then not to strengthen that and to get trapped in illusion because when we believe in our own judgments, it's not only we trap others in the judgments, we ourselves get trapped in the judgments.

Also people become nicer, which is true, what the questioner says, people become nicer when you're present and aware because they can feel the absence of judgment in you. Even if they don't, they may not be able to tell you, but I can feel the absence of judgment. They only feel it as a certain goodwill flowing out from you towards them or an acceptance flowing out from you towards them.

And humans can feel that, even unconscious humans, unconscious they can feel that. And everybody's grateful for that underneath all their madness. They feel grateful because somehow in that acceptance, in that goodwill that kind of flows out in that space, through that space of acceptance, they feel a little bit more themselves than they usually are.

So, and when a human feels a little bit more at ease in themselves, when they come to you, they like you and they are very nice to you. They don't know why. And their usual ego patterns, not all of them are operating anymore.

Some may still come up, of course. So the ego is less, the ego doesn't feel threatened. It feels, oh, there's no need to be that defensive here.

The ego feels it can kind of relax a little bit. It's cause it's still there in the background. We're just like a little, like a dog.

But it's not at its usual state, like the Rottweiler. So it just, okay, can relax a little now. And then they like you.

So you become a nice person to them. That's perhaps all they know. When they ask him, oh, he's such a nice guy.

Like to see him, like to go to him and touch a nice, okay. So yes, you do experience that. So partly simply because presence, acceptance is there and is recognized.

And partly because there's the absence of reaction when somebody suddenly blames you, for example, says, you left that door open. You shouldn't. And say, oh, I did?

Yeah. The usual ego thing, of course, is to say, no, I didn't. Whether you did or not, because it's regarded as the ego feels diminished when somebody blames you.

You did that. No, I didn't do that. You did.

And it starts from there and then escalates. Why do you always blame me? Look what you did yesterday.

That's called reaction, defensiveness. And that's not there. So then it's just you're stating the facts.

You left that door open again. No, I didn't. And then there's no further arguing.

Yes, you did. Well, maybe if that's what you believe. Or say, yes, well, you're right, I did that again, sorry.

You don't feel diminished when you were wrong. The ego feels diminished. Just to admit that you've been wrong is a dreadful thing.

So the ego can't do that. It's like a little desk. To say that you've been wrong is a little, and if somebody proves to you that you've been wrong, it's even worse.

And then some people will start hitting you. That's how the ego can, an ego can easily do. If it's so obvious that you've been wrong and somebody proves it, then you start hitting them.

That's a big argument. And if you knock him out, the ego still wins.

[Speaker 2] (2:42:14 - 2:42:19)
Yes, there is a general improvement in relationships, of course, with presence.

[Speaker 4] (2:42:42 - 2:43:21)
My question is about confirming consciousness. If you look at the world, a world of form, as all illusory and impermanent, and yet we can confirm that by witnessing its constant change or its constant impermanence or the cycles that it goes through, and yet true reality is consciousness, the background or the substratum of all of the true existence that is out there, how do we confirm that consciousness is there and that it is unchanging and that it is choiceless? Thank you.

[Speaker 7] (2:43:22 - 2:43:22)
Thank you.

[Speaker 1] (2:43:35 - 2:53:48)
I have a strange feeling that somehow you know the answer deep down, but are you conscious at this moment? Yes. Perception is happening.

Now, if I ask you how do you know that you are conscious, I don't think you would be able to answer that question because how? You just know that you are conscious. There is no how.

It's direct knowing, but it's a very different kind of knowing from how you would know something in the external world, subject, object, knowledge. Do you know that you are alive? Deep down, there is an aliveness.

There is something there, even if the entire world is a dream, which you can either say it is a dream or you can say it's not a dream, what is beyond doubt that the sense-perceived world has a lot in common with the dreamlike state in the sense that it evaporates fairly quickly. It forms, come and go, even yesterday's dinner. Was that a dream or did you actually have it?

It's not that different from dreaming that you had a dinner and that you're actually having a dinner. It is dissolved into what we call the past. It is no longer there.

This is why many philosophers have compared ordinary existence with a dream because of the fact of impermanence, everything dissolving so fast, everything being in flux. We don't need to come to some kind of conclusion as to whether this reality is actually real or unreal because that's only a mental position. It's only a conceptual thing to say, well, to me, it's unreal, or you read some Indian philosophers who speak from a very deep place of connectedness with something vitally alive, and then they say this world is unreal, and then somebody reads what they said and they take it as a belief and say, okay, and then next time you talk to your friends and you tell them, well, you know the news, this is all unreal, and then your friend says, you must be joking, and then you start arguing.

I am telling you, it's unreal. It's so unreal that you're getting angry. So when people have said the world is unreal, it came from a deep realization of a place that is felt to be far more vitally alive than the phenomena of this world, and out of that, the words came unreal.

They could have used different words. They could have said it's dreamlike. They could have said all forms are passing and some did say that.

So if it's a dream or whether it's a dream or whether it is unreal, the fact is that there is something there to whom or to which this dream happens. Otherwise, the dream could not exist. Its existence depends on the being.

Existence is a form. Being is a formless. So for anything to exist, let's say it is a dream.

Okay, who is dreaming? I am. There must be a consciousness in which the dream appears.

Otherwise, there would be no dream. Everything may be unreal except the thing that is having the dream, and it's not a thing. The dream appears in that space that you are, and that space could be equated with the now, and that's why no matter, you can look back on your life.

It was always whatever, anything that ever happened in your life, anything that you ever experienced in your life happened in the space of now. It was always now. It is always now.

Even to say it was now is somehow a paradox. There is no was. Life is always now.

For anything to be experienced, to be thought, to be felt, can only occur in the now, the space of now. And the space of now doesn't change. Why not?

Because there's no content in it. It is spaciousness itself. It cannot change because if there's nothing in it, there's no change.

Like the space in this room, because outer space is an externalization of inner space of consciousness. We perceive it as space on the outside, and the space in this room cannot change. You can't do anything to it.

No matter what you do, you can shout and punch it. There's nothing to punch, but it allows you to go like that. So space is unchangeable, external space.

And of course it doesn't, space doesn't even exist in itself outside. It's a projection of something else inside us. It's a weird thing, space and movement.

Imagine that you are traveling as a point of awareness through the vast space of the universe at the speed of, let's say, if it were possible, Einstein said it isn't possible. Let's say you're traveling at 10 times the speed of light through the universe, and you see all planets and suns like you see in the movie, Star Trek, next generation, you see the flashes of planets go past. And so you know there's enormous speed, and at that moment, let's say, everything from the universe disappears.

All planets miraculously, all suns and planets and galaxies miraculously dissolve. What's your speed now? And how vast is the universe?

It has, you're just, there's just a nothingness. And suddenly there's no speed anymore. There never was any speed.

You never went anywhere. It was just a delusion. So nobody ever goes anywhere.

I believe it was the Greek philosopher Parmenides who had that insight already. So ultimately nothing ever moves. All these things are delusions, but it's fine.

But you are the space, in essence, for all that. So that's all you need to know. And one possible approach to that is to say you are, you are the now, in which it's one way you can approach it, because the now is the space.

The now is not what happens. The now is usually confused by people with what happens in the now. But the now is always the space in which everything happens.

Otherwise there would be many nows. But only if you equate the present moment with what happens in the present moment, then there are many moments every day and every hour. But if you know that your life is always the now and whatever appears in it, appears in that unchanging space, then you're getting closer to who you are, because you are the now.

That insight hadn't come to me yet when I was writing The Power of Now. I never actually wrote that you are the now. A couple of years later I was giving a talk and suddenly I said, you are the now.

Yes, of course. That's an even better approach than anything else, to realize you are that. Sometimes it takes a while before the inner realization reaches the outer levels and becomes verbalized as a teaching.

So that's also the very fact that you're able to see the impermanent nature of all forms implies that there's something from where the impermanent nature of all forms can be recognized. Because it's only through that you can recognize if the entire world were painted green or blue, there would be no green or blue. You wouldn't be able to recognize it.

So there is something from where the changing, continuously changing nature of things is seen and that is not changing and that is who you are. And it's the present moment and it's space, inner space. And it's consciousness.

Any more pointers?

[Speaker 7] (2:53:49 - 2:53:52)
Thank you. Thank you.

[Speaker 2] (2:54:11 - 2:54:29)
So in addition to visualization or affirmation in the being dimension, you may need to address also the doing dimension.

[Speaker 1] (2:54:30 - 3:01:30)
And again, bring the two together. Enjoy the doing. Don't use it, don't treat the doing as a stressful thing because you need to achieve this or that.

No, you enjoy the doing of it. That's the power, the power of presence has to flow into the doing. The doing is not just a means to an end, it's an end in itself.

That is very, very important realization so that the doing does not become stressful. If stressful, if it's stressful, it means you're excessively attached to the outcome, which means you want to be there, but you are here. And that gap between there and here creates stress.

And that's, and then you, as far as manifestation is concerned, that is disempowering. Now, some people who work very hard with that mindset of stress, they exercise willpower to achieve this. And sometimes they actually do achieve what they, occasionally it happens, but it doesn't make them happy.

It makes them, when they achieve, they are still unhappy. And in the meantime, anybody else they had contact with in whatever work they were doing, they are made unhappy too. So it's, if that is your underlying mindset, I will achieve through sheer willpower.

And of course it's stressful. You create stress for yourself, you create unhappiness for yourself, and whoever you're in contact with, you make them unhappy too. Some companies operate like that.

Everybody's stressed and unhappy. So if you work in a company like that, my recommendation would be to depart. So if your environment is dysfunctional, that can be a considerable hindrance to your power of manifestation if you're trapped in a dysfunctional environment.

So look out for any sign of stress when you're moving towards your goal and you're active in whatever area. Look for any kind of stress that arises, like something not right, if stress arises. Now, this is not to be confused with a kind of feeling low energy activity.

There can be, when you're engaged in something that is meaningful, there's intense energy behind what you do. But this intensity of energy is not stress. There is an enjoyment behind it.

So yes, you may be very intensely engaged, but as you're intensely engaged in whatever it is, let's say, let's come back to this person who wants to be a famous YouTuber, just right now. At this moment, then he or she is learning how to edit videos, how to do that, okay? And again, enjoy the learning process, trying this out and that, asking questions, what can I do here, there?

And then there's the next thing to master, and you enjoy the doing of that in order, rather than, oh, why am I not a famous YouTuber already? I want to, I need to get there to feel happy. No, you're happy in the doing.

And then even if you don't become a famous YouTuber, you'll still be happy. Maybe you reach only 1,000 people, or 5,000, or 10,000, or 200, and even out of those 200 that you reach, some people may contact you, and something else will arise out of that. If you can't, many things arise, you have to be always open to new possibilities that you hadn't even thought of.

So not everything that you achieve in this life comes through wanting to manifest this, so that often it's a good starting point, but sometimes, and quite often, the best things may come that you never even thought of to manifest. But if you hadn't started with this particular manifestation, the other things that you never thought of would never have arisen. So sometimes the universe, so to speak, may have greater plans for you than you could even think of.

But you have to take the first steps, and sometimes the first steps is, I want to manifest this now, and then you practice. You go into being, rooted in the fullness of being, then you visualize, or you affirm this or that, and in doing that, you feel it's already there, in the unseen. And then, in addition, you may have to go into the doing dimension.

And in the doing dimension, don't lose touch with being, because if you lose touch with being, you're lost in doing, and you're stressed, and you're not effective anymore.

[Speaker 2] (3:01:30 - 3:01:42)
And even if you achieve what you wanted to achieve through sheer willpower and hard work and stress, it'll make you unhappy, and make others unhappy. It's pointless.

[Speaker 3] (3:01:52 - 3:02:19)
I can walk into a room and feel other people's pain, and when I was younger, I identified with that, and thought there was something wrong with me. Now that I'm older and have more experience, I realize that it's not me, so I've disidentified with it. But I still have to deal with it.

So, any advice?

[Speaker 1] (3:02:21 - 3:08:50)
Thank you. Well, the vital thing, you're already doing that, the disidentification, and as presence grows, you are less affected by it. It takes a little longer for a woman, because there's more sensitivity to energy fields in the female form than it is in the male form.

So, for a woman, it takes a little longer to, need, a woman would need more presence, because there's such sensitivity in many women to energy fields. The feminine has that sensitivity, and so you can feel it more than a man can, generally speaking. The main thing is already, you're practicing already, which is the disidentification from it, so that there is awareness and it.

You haven't become it. You are the awareness, and there's it. It is allowed to be in the field or the space of awareness.

No longer that problematic, because it is not who you are. And so, negativity, of course, is contagious, highly contagious. The immunity gradually has become more present.

The immunity is there, because intense presence is no longer susceptible to that illness, the negativity. And so, when you feel a negative energy field, you touch, as you said, a room that you go into. There are also other energy fields in this, even when there's a full moon, for some reason, it seems to influence some people's behavior.

Lunatic, that comes from the word lunar, the moon. And when we were in Chicago two years ago, with Oprah, one day, there was a full moon. And I read in the Chicago paper that on that night, there were something like 15 murders on that night.

And all kinds of energy fields impinged upon us, but there needs to be something in us also that resonates with it. So as your pain body gradually shrinks, also you'll find there's less in you that resonates with negativity. Pain body, of course, takes a while to dissolve.

It dissolves through presence. But as long as there's some pain body there, there may well be something that resonates with certain forms of negativity. And then you feel it.

It's nothing personal. Even the pain body is not personal. Nothing is really personal.

And then as the pain body dissolves, then you find you're free. You can go into a negative energy field and you're fine. It's just not that you build up, presence doesn't build up a barrier around yourself.

It's not like that. It's just, it passes through. It's a different frequency.

It can't hang on to anything inside you anymore. So it goes through you. I haven't studied astrology, but it sometimes seems to me that there may be some truth in some of that.

And the less presence there is in you, the more it applies to you. And the same applies to the full moon. The less presence there is in you, the more you are susceptible to these energy fields.

And the moment you think a negative thought, especially if you think more than one negative thought, it goes on for a few minutes and then leads to another and another, you connect to negativity and a million other people in the same city, kind of, and then you're in it. Nothing personal. And then people are surprised if they can't get out.

It's not just yours. You have connected with the whole city or beyond. That's why it's so important to keep yourself as clear as possible through presence.

The less you carry inside, the less likely it is that it'll affect you. Well, now you may still be able to feel it, but it does not impinge upon you. Especially if you're a woman, you probably are still able to feel the negativity, but then you no longer need to...

There's nothing in you where it gets stuck. So it passes through. You know it's passing through, there it is, but it has nothing in you to hang on to.

It can't attach itself to anything. And the same applies when people are negative, their dialogue is negative, what they speak to you is negative. And again, if you are in the state of alert attention, there's no negative thought in you that this can connect to.

And so you're immune, so to speak. The mental negativity can't hang on, can't lodge itself in your mind. If there's nothing, there's no frequency in there that it corresponds to.

[Speaker 3] (3:08:54 - 3:09:12)
I've been told by some spiritual teachers that there's something in my system that is trying to take this on from other people to rid them of it. But I mean, it's nothing I do consciously, and I don't even know if that's true, but I...

[Speaker 1] (3:09:13 - 4:11:16)
Well, to some extent, presence does that, but presence doesn't take it on, it dissolves it, not only for yourself, but wherever you go, you go there as a field of presence into an energy field. To some extent, something happens, it dissolves through presence. And so, yes, that's a beautiful thing.

You don't take it on. You don't need to suffer for others, but you can let go of suffering for others. So you let go of suffering.

The same thing you do, for example, when you sit with a person who is in suffering, it is your job to relinquish resistance. And if they can't do it, you can do it for them. Enter the state of surrender.

Do it when you're with somebody who is dying, when you're with somebody who is seriously ill, or has had some other kind of disaster, or is just completely unhappy. So be with that person and become very still and very alert, and that means you surrender for them. And very often that has an effect, it affects them.

It burns up some of the suffering. It invites them also into that space. Sometimes they're able to join you in that space, but even if they are not, it does burn up suffering.

That's the most beautiful gift you can give is your presence. And so you bring that undiluted presence, just that. A good starting point is perhaps the famous statement by Martin Luther King, who said that he was looking forward to the day when people would be judged not by the color of their skin, but by the content of their character.

And we take that as a starting point. We need to ask ourselves, what is the content of a person's character? What does that mean?

He's pointing to that in each human being that is actually invisible to the senses. The most important part of every human being is invisible to the senses. That begins with simple things like the thoughts that go through your mind, the emotions that you feel.

Those things are already the invisible part of who you are. You might be able to see certain ways in which the invisible manifests externally. It can manifest through words, through facial expressions.

It manifests through actions. But very important realization is that what Martin Luther King calls the character is the invisible dimension of who the human being is. And perhaps the most important realization for any human being, which is a spiritual realization, is the realization that they are essentially invisible.

What you see on the surface is a relatively superficial phenomenon. You see the physical body. So if you are able to sense, this is perhaps a good starting point, sense within yourself that invisible being that you are, which ultimately is a consciousness and the various ways in which the consciousness takes on form as thoughts and emotion.

But essentially you are the consciousness and the consciousness is invisible. You can open up the brain and examine every cell of the human brain and you will still not find, open up my brain, you won't find me. You will not find who that human being is.

You will not find the character of that human being. So he refers to the inner being. You can only get a glimpse of that inner being that you are beyond even the conditioned entity that is, yes, also the conditioned entity, which is the ego is invisible.

But beyond the conditioned entity, there is the unconditioned being or consciousness that you are. And the starting point as a very foundation for what I'm going to talk about is it might even be a glimpse to sense within yourself that invisible presence, even beyond thoughts and emotions or the thoughts and emotions are a manifestation of that. Also they are formations of the consciousness takes on form as an emotion or as a thought.

But before it takes on form, it is the unconditioned consciousness. You are essentially that. So let's, if you can even just get a glimpse of what it is that I'm talking about and sense this essential, this essence within yourself, this presence, this aware presence.

Then you step beyond ego within yourself. And it's only then that you can look at another human being and look beyond the external appearance of that human being and sense also their innermost essence. Now, most humans are not able yet to do that.

Anybody who has not yet awakened spiritually or even had a glimpse of spiritual awakening, that human being will have certain mind forms, certain thoughts in their mind with which they judge other human beings. They're not able to truly relate to other human beings because they are, one could almost say possessed by their conditioned mind, by the thoughts that go through their mind. So you cannot meet another human being, you're meeting the judgments that your mind has formed about the other human being.

So there is a complete sense of separation and that is how the ego works. The ego is a mind-made sense of self and this mind-made sense of self that consists of identifications with externals, with your body, with possessions, with abilities, with knowledge, with things that have happened to you, things that you have achieved, failures also. All these things become part of the human ego and you are not able to sense anything deeper within yourself than the ego of who you are, which is the conditioned entity, the conditioned self.

Then every human you meet is immediately labeled in some way, you attach certain labels to human beings and you need to realize that the ego in humans in order to assert its sense of identity is always looking for some kind of superiority. So the ego is comparative. When you meet another human being, the egoic sense of self will feel it's seeking superiority and it fears inferiority.

So when you meet another, there's an unconscious attempt by the ego to feel superior to another human being, but the other human being, you're not actually meeting the other human being, you're meeting a mental veil. Now, in the case of race, your mind may have been conditioned by the surrounding culture to have certain thoughts about another race, especially in the case where the other race is a minority. So if there's a majority, that is what in our Western world, it's the white race in the majority, then the most obvious thing for the egoic sense of self is to judge another human who is different, whose external appearance is different, whose skin color is different, to seek that out in an attempt to assert their superiority.

And it's an egoic fallacy, but it's a very common thing to happen that you would lose the ability to actually connect with, to actually see truly that human being, because all you see is the judgments and the labels that your mind has formed, partly due to the conditioning of the culture and ultimately the conditioning of the egoic mind. So when Martin Luther King talks about character, that's already, you're not able to meet this human being because this human being for you, as an ego, is completely obscured by the mind form that is the veil, the mental conditioning. You are judging this human being as the ego is judging this human being as inferior in an attempt to assert its superiority.

And one of the most obvious things when there is minorities in the culture is to latch onto that for the ego, which might not have much else to identify with. Perhaps you haven't achieved anything. You don't possess much that is more than others.

You might be actually of very low intelligence in conventional terms, but then you can seek out the one thing that would make the ego feel superior. And then you go on, you see there's another race and I'm superior to that race. It's satisfying to the ego.

And there are people in whose main, in whom a substantial part of their sense of identity is built around their race and the superiority of their race. And that is the definition of racist is someone whose sense of identity is predominantly based on race as opposed to another. And it's perceived as superior in the search, the egoic search to assert its superiority in order to feel a stronger sense of self.

So it's a complete inability. You meet a human of another race, but you're not really meeting that other human. All you're meeting is your own mental conditioning as a veil.

And there's complete sense of separation. And this is how the ego operates. The ego actually likes to emphasize that sense of separation.

It likes to emphasize the otherness of other humans. And the other is usually, but when the ego emphasizes the otherness of others, the other must be inferior so that it works so that the ego can feel strengthened in its sense of identity. It's of course a fictitious sense of identity.

So when Martin Luther King talks about character, of course, first he's talking about the unseen part that when you react to the color of a person's skin through the veil of your conditioning, you cannot see the invisible human being that is behind the external appearance. You're completely disconnected from the human being. And character, of course, in the first instance means who that person is on a psychological level.

The person might be a wonderful, enlightened human being, might be a human being that has certain forms of conditioning, which may be good or bad. Character is all the various things in which the human being becomes conditioned. And you can't even see that because you've already formulated a mental image, a conceptual sense of self for the other.

And character, of course, is deeper than that. I would, beyond character, I would define character as the way in which a human being has been conditioned to function in this world, the mental emotional conditioning. Beyond character, in every human being, there's a deeper essence.

And that deeper essence, of course, is totally invisible to you. You cannot sense the humanity of the other beyond their conditioning because you have already dehumanized the other by imposing a conceptual identity on the other. And enormous amount of suffering is inflicted by humans on others because they have dehumanized the other.

They have completely conceptualized the other. And then you attach labels to the other person. Once you've done that, if you're very unconscious, you can even inflict violence because you have already dehumanized the other.

So it's an inability to go beyond the other way in which your mind has been conditioned to even have a glimpse of the other, of the human being that you're meeting. It's a veil you move. And now imagine that, well, you don't need to imagine.

It's the case if a majority of humans in a particular culture if a significant percentage of humans are trapped in that egoic dysfunction, then this will become translated into externals. It will become translated into institutions, all the structures that humans create, economic structures, social structures, political structures. Those will become contaminated by the basic egoic dysfunction in humans.

And this to some extent has happened in the Western world and in the United States. It's very important to see that the root of racism is in the human mind. And the root of racism, ultimately, yes, you can.

I differentiate between the unconsciousness that is in humans, that is the egoic sense of self and the effects of that unconsciousness in the external world. So that state of unconsciousness creates certain structures in the external world. And you can, to some extent, undo the injustices and discriminatory practices and so on in the external world.

We should, to some extent, attempt to undo as much as possible those structures which are the effect of an underlying dysfunction in the collective mind. So it's important to realize, yes, we can and should do as much as possible to undo the effects of that unconsciousness in the world. But realize that the ultimate liberation from racism is in the human mind.

So my work concerns primarily what I consider to be the foundation for everything else, which is the human consciousness. No human individual being and no human society can ultimately act beyond their level of consciousness. You cannot expect an unconscious person, but you should be more conscious, he or she cannot.

He or she is trapped in the unconscious patterns. And so while it is very important to be active in this world in order to undo as much as possible the effects of human unconsciousness, I still, I consider it of primary importance to realize that the ultimate, what we could call transcendence of the ego is inseparable from the awakening of human consciousness so that people are able to go beyond the egoic sense of self so that they do not perpetuate those patterns.

Because even if you dissolve one, if you undo one of the institutions or whatever it is that the unconscious pattern have created, they will create something else. So it is obvious that in this world there's some glaring injustices, for example, in America, even to me as an outsider, it is obvious that the glaring injustices of the incarceration of hundreds of thousands of humans, in many cases, black men were incarcerated for non-violent offenses, often simply for the possession of dried leaves of a plant that they carried in their pockets. It makes them feel good when they ingest it.

They've been in prison for years, their whole lives destroyed, incarcerated. I believe 45% or almost half are in prison for drug offenses and trapped in there for years, terribly misguided, deeply misguided policies. So if that, of course, anybody to become active, that is something that many, many people should be aware of.

And whatever steps they take, they should undo that particular effect of human unconsciousness. And then there are many others. I rarely tell people, I almost never tell people what to do because that's not my function.

Because all doing arises out of a certain state of consciousness. So my main focus is always the state of consciousness out of which any activity or doing arises. My main focus is, I call that the causal realm, the realm of cause.

Everything else is the realm of effect. Now, we need to emphasize the realm of effect. We cannot say, I'm not going to do anything about the external things because I'm only concerned with awakening, spiritual awakening.

But there's nothing we can do until humans have awakened spiritually. That is not quite true. There are many things you can do without having fully awakened.

You don't need to wait for some kind of awakening in order for the world to change. So for example, we have our foundation, Eckhart Tolle Foundation. I got together with the board members of the board.

We talked about what action can be taken now. We can't wait until everybody's enlightened to take some action now. So we selected some organizations that do great work with black people in the United States to help them on various levels.

And so we've donated a quarter million dollars to those foundations in order to alleviate the effects of human, as I call it, the effects of human unconsciousness. So action is taken and we are here to interact with the world, to take action, to bring about a better world, but we need to be careful that the action does not become, so to speak, hijacked by the ego in ourselves. So as we take action to remedy certain situations, to change certain structures, that's very important, we're actually acting against unconsciousness.

We're acting against the effects of human unconsciousness. And yes, action is necessary, but we need to have some awareness while we act. We don't need to be fully enlightened, but in order not to see our actions reflect the unconsciousness that we are fighting, we need to be aware.

We need to have some degree of awareness in our actions. There's a famous saying by Nietzsche. He said, if you're fighting monsters, beware that you do not become a monster, that you do not turn into a monster.

So whenever you fight human unconsciousness, you need to stay aware, you need to have some awareness, because then without the awareness, if you address the unconsciousness in other human beings, it's very easy for this to draw you into unconsciousness yourself. I've been saying for years, not with reference to this particular topic, racism, but more generally, I've been saying for years, you cannot fight the ego. You cannot fight the ego in yourself, and you cannot fight the ego in others.

As I said, you can, to some extent, alleviate the negative effects of what the ego has created, but you cannot fight the ego itself, neither in yourself, nor in others. If you fight the ego in yourself, you create an enormous amount of inner tension, and you create a split within yourself. You have an inner enemy that you're fighting against that would keep you trapped in a terrible state of dysfunction.

So as anybody who takes action in order to change things in the externals needs to have some awareness so that they do not, you can take effective action without increasing the divisiveness and antagonism in this world. So that is very important. You always need to see what is your contribution, even on a simple level of interacting, many people on social media, what is your contribution to the discourse that people are engaged in?

Are you attacking other human beings and call them evil? Or are you actually addressing something and pointing certain things out, disseminate information so that you can help people to become more aware and to awaken? So it's in any action that you take, stay aware so that your action does not become contaminated with ego, because if otherwise, that which you are fighting, you will amplify.

Many things when we fight things, the fight against drugs, we haven't addressed the root cause of taking drugs. We've said we need to fight, we're talking about the war against drugs, the fight against drugs. Now, where has that led us?

The fight, has it been successful? Not at all. If anything, it's made things worse.

So it requires a certain amount of wisdom to be an effective agent for change in this world. And that wisdom can only arise in you if you have a little bit of access within yourself to the unconditioned being, the unconditioned consciousness. These are very, very huge challenge for humans to stay conscious at this time, but that is your challenge to take action, but stay conscious while you take action.

It's vitally important. Then the action actually much more empowered. So it's very easy when you fight unconsciousness, as I said, unconsciousness in other humans to be drawn into unconsciousness yourself.

Very subtle thing. Nietzsche added when he said, be careful when you fight monsters. Monsters means, as I interpret it, egoic dysfunction, human unconsciousness, which creates all kinds of dreadful evils in this world.

If you fight that and you're not careful, he said, be careful. It doesn't mean necessarily if you're not aware, that's my addition, you yourself become unconscious. And he added, if you gaze for long enough into the abyss, you will find that the abyss gazes back into you.

So this is the abyss of human unconsciousness. It's for example, to take an example of policing in the United States, it's a big subject, which has in time, and obviously changes are necessary in the way policing is done. It's a moment, there's a lot of brutality, especially directed towards black people.

Not every policeman, of course, but some, and those are the ones that stand out. And the entire system needs to be changed, needs to be looked at. It's understandable to feel anger when you look at what's been happening there.

It's totally understandable to feel that. And there's nothing wrong with that. It is a normal human reaction.

But when there's lack of awareness, the danger is that the anger takes possession of you. Then you lose consciousness. When anger takes complete possession of you, it leads you to do things that are not ultimately not helpful.

It's completely understandable to feel the anger, but there's a huge difference between feeling the anger and being aware of it and accept it, that is a normal human reaction. Or not to be aware of the anger so that the force of the anger takes complete possession of you. That means awareness disappears and you then become the anger.

That means the anger has become incorporated into your egoic sense of self. And so, and then the ego, once this has happened, so ego is always when you identify with something, complete identification with something becomes part of your ego, egoic sense of self. Identify, you derive your identity from.

So in the absence of awareness, it's very easy for this to happen that the anger, which is a natural thing that many humans feel when they contemplate what's happening. But in the absence of awareness, the anger can easily possess you, take you over and completely control your thinking. In other words, as I said, it becomes incorporated into your, it becomes part of your ego.

Then you're, and the actions that you then take are no longer ultimately not helpful. You are, in Eastern terms, you create more karma for yourself and others. Karma is action and reaction, action and reaction.

So anger, the energy of anger can actually be transmuted and transformed when awareness is there. The energy of anger can actually, instead of taking possession of you and becoming you, the energy of it can be transmuted and it can become conscious action that you take. It's a transmutation of anger into conscious action.

The energy of it becomes transmuted when awareness is there. The anger is accepted. It's allowed to be there, but it does not take possession of you.

You remain aware that there is anger. Then there's a possibility for the anger to be transformed into action. But then it will be action that is not, that does not amplify the human unconsciousness in this world, very different kind of action.

So if you take action that amplifies human unconsciousness and there's just no end, then the abyss is gazing back into you and draws you in. So this, I hope it can be helpful. It requires a certain vigilance in you.

There's no need to say, I shouldn't be angry. Of course you should be angry, be angry, but don't be possessed by the anger. Know that the anger is arising, know when in the face of injustice, you feel it and that's fine.

You allow it to be there and you can feel the energy of it, but awareness remains and then it can actually empower action, the energy becomes transformed. That's can be, I highly recommend that so that I cannot emphasize enough to be careful so that you are not taken over by something like that. Because if you are, you strengthen, not only that which you are fighting against, you amplify the unconsciousness out there, you also strengthen your own unconsciousness.

You're really trapped. So it's a very, very subtle, subtle difference. The key remains is awareness, awareness, awareness, presence, what's going on inside me right now.

What's to be aware of that. And the picture is not entirely negative when I look at the United States. There's a lot still that needs to happen, but quite a lot, I'm an external observer, but it does seem to me I have spent time in the United States since Martin Luther King, since the 60s, we have already come a long way, not to even to mention the time period before that, needs to acknowledge there is also, there is a lot of goodwill in the country of all.

There's a lot of goodwill and a willingness to change that is certainly there. So that is the positive aspect. The awareness of race that we have now would have been unthinkable in the 50s, just completely impossible.

So there is a gradual growth of awareness and a gradual transformation happening, but it needs to continue. The, and it seems to be continuing. The one obstacle I need to mention again, be careful that you're not being taken over by certain forms of reactivity like anger and lose yourself in that.

That's the, then what is now a great possibility for increasing awareness that we have now, we can go either way now. The awareness that had arisen is great. There's possibility of further awakening gradually also collective awakening of consciousness.

And if, but if we don't, if we are not careful, it could lead to a regressive movement. What was so promising at first to see that happening can lead to a regressive movement if we are not careful. But even if it were the case, ultimately every regression, when it results in a further step forward, eventually human consciousness evolves, not in a straight upward line, but in cycles, regressive cycles and step forward, back, forward, back.

It's a, it's a, it, the whole, it's a great, huge subject, but ultimately comes down to very simple, very simple, very simple foundation. It is stay conscious. And so the, so that you are a force for good in this world.

And continue to realize that your state of consciousness is the primordial reality. Everything comes out of that. There was a 19th or 18th century French philosopher who said, every nation has the government it deserves.

Interesting saying. So what that means, the way I see it is whatever nation has the government, it's not only the government or the institutions and so on that are created by this particular nation, it has the government it deserves, which means is there's a collective consciousness produces the external structures. So if the collective consciousness is deeply trapped in egoic, collective ego, it creates structures that reflect the ego, the collective ego.

And if there's some awakening in the collective, then the tractors will become transformed. Either they dissolve because they know that people realize they don't function anymore, or they, whatever happens to them, people take action in order to say this, we don't want that anymore. But there's a deep truth in saying that every nation has a government you have to think, oh, what do we have?

And it's not just the government, it's other institutions too. So this again, what I said at the beginning, no human being can manifest beyond their level of consciousness. Whatever action they manifest is a reflection of their level of consciousness that applies to the collective also.

So there is a change in the collective here. So let's, I feel there's a good chance that it will lead to a change in the externals, because more and more humans are awakening. I sometimes get the wrong impression because most people that I'm in contact with are awakening.

So, and sometimes when I turn on the, well, not look at the news and I say, oh no, this is so many are not awakening yet. I'm sometimes shocked. All the people I'm in contact with all seem to be awakening.

So it's slightly distorted view, but I do know that more and more people are in the process of awakening. Now, the important thing is it's not to confuse the dysfunction that many humans still manifest, egoic dysfunction, to recognize it as egoic dysfunction, but not to confuse that with who these human beings ultimately are. Because if you confuse that, that which the dysfunction, which is just, these humans are manifestation of a particular stage in the evolution of consciousness on the planet.

And they are not yet at a very advanced stage in the evolution of consciousness on the planet. So what they manifest is the egoic part, the egoic phase of the evolution of consciousness on the planet. These are patterns that operate in these humans.

The danger is, and the fallacy is to take that to be the ultimate identity of these humans and not recognize that these humans are in the grip of unconsciousness or of egoic dysfunction. That's important because, and that's all expressed, for example, in Jesus on the cross, the final words, forgive them for they know not what they do. If they had, if he had spoken in the present age, he probably would have said, forgive them for they are completely unconscious.

Now, forgive them means, the way I interpret it, do not confuse their unconsciousness with who they actually are in the essence of their being. Because if you confuse that, you create enemies. And this means the moment you do that, you get trapped in egoic unconsciousness yourself.

So the forgiveness is to look beyond, to recognize it for what it is. It's like one could almost say they are ill. It's a mental illness.

There's a huge amount of mental illness still in human beings, in the collective. And yes, of course, if a mentally ill person comes running towards you to kill you, you might have to do something. You obviously, you would take action in those extreme cases, yes.

But the important thing is not to confuse the unconscious patterns that operate in those humans, not to construct an identity for them out of that. That is also, by the way, you can also do it for yourself, because sometimes people come and say, I've often heard people say, I've done something very bad in the past. When I was young, I did this or that, and I feel I just have this terrible burden of guilt in myself and I can't get rid of it.

And again, my answer is, at that time, these patterns operated in you. You were less, you were not conscious at that time. Now you can see that what you did was bad.

But if you had seen it then, you wouldn't have done it, but you were unconscious then. So sometimes you have to forgive yourself when you did something. Sometimes it's parents, they say how I brought up my children was, I can see now why I was so unconscious when I had my children, what have I done?

But again, not to make that into your identity and say, I am this bad person. No, there was unconsciousness in me that operated, because I'm never separate from the totality of humanity. And humanity is an evolving organism.

Humanity is slowly going through an awakening process. It takes time. It's accelerating now because in the past, it took just small transformations could take a thousand years.

But now there is an acceleration of awakening, but it's still, we're at a problematic stage. The awakening process is happening. So just remember not to transform other people's unconsciousness into an identity.

And that really is a deeper meaning of forgiveness, because then you recognize that's not ultimately who they are. There have been people in prison. Some people did the most dreadful, committed the most dreadful crimes.

And I've seen cases of people in prison who completely went through a complete spiritual awakening, having at this past of very, very dreadful crimes. And there was a complete awakening suddenly where the sense of identity completely shifted and came from a much deeper place. And they recognized their past self was like somebody else when they awakened.

Somebody else was, that wasn't, that was me. Can't even, it wasn't, it was certain patterns operating using me. You could look at the ego almost as an entity, yes, an entity that inhabits you.

And it doesn't want to go away. It wants to strengthen itself. It can use anything to strengthen you.

And racism is a great, oh yeah, I'll be a racist. That's, I feel stronger in my fictitious sense of self. So again, important thing, transcendence refers to the egoic unconsciousness and the awakening.

It does not mean that you cannot take action, but be careful so that you stay conscious while you act, which means not be taken over by some dark reactive mode that then operates through you. And then you notice, you can notice this when you see a particular thing, the enemies, you need to attack these enemies, the enemies. Jesus said, love your enemies.

That might be going a bit too far for many people, but there's a deeper meaning behind that. If you see that in isolation, it's hard to say, well, Christians have tried to do that, but not too successfully over 2000 years, but some perhaps managed, but ultimately of course, loving your enemies means have no enemies because if you love your enemy, who is your enemy? But that statement, love your enemies, cannot be looked at in isolation.

It was related to discovering the deeper dimension of who you are, which is the kingdom of heaven within you. And when you do that, then you can see every human being in their essential, not see, but sense every human being in their essential identity. And then you don't have enemies anymore, but you can still see, yes, he or she or they are in the grip of egoic unconsciousness.

They are crazy, ultimately. For a long time, I've been saying, I often say, normal means crazy. And if you look at human history, this, you can verify that, just read the history of the 20th century and what humans have done to other humans, the millions upon millions killed, not only in warfare, but also in killed by their own governments, Holocaust, mass exterminations, come in Russia, China, Europe.

The most dreadful, this is obviously, and these are normal human perpetrated by so-called normal human beings, not criminals or something. Criminals have done relatively little compared to what normal humans in the grip of unconsciousness are capable of doing. It's nothing compared to what so-called criminals are doing.

This is why I often say normal equals insane. But we are awakening. So there is light at the end of the tunnel.

Of course, the light is within you. So in the meantime, it's the question of race or the problem of race is connected with our, it's an aspect of our awakening, something that we need to overcome. And it's also something that we're at a crossroads now, as I mentioned earlier, we could go one way towards increasing awareness and increasing transcendence of ego and the undoing of the external structures that reflect racism.

Or if the other way would be if the, it could increase the divisions in society and divisiveness. So in other words, unconsciousness could take over again, and that would lead to a regressive period in human evolution. And there have been already many regressive periods.

This is not impossible that this might happen, although there's a good chance it will not happen. I can't predict the future, but even if it were to happen, if we went to a regressive period, even leading to internal conflict, even civil war is not impossible if we are not, if we are drawn into unconsciousness, all kinds of even war between nations is still possible. I'm a long-term optimist as far as human evolution is concerned.

I believe even if we did have to go through a regressive period, eventually that also will become part of human awakening. And ultimately the moment will come and race will become completely unimportant. And that is, we're moving towards that.

Some people may still love their race, and that's fine, because race is to do with your form. I call it your form identity, your form identity, as opposed to your essence identity. You have the two dimensions.

Your form identity is the physical body, and your form identity is also the makeup of your mind, mental, emotional field, the conditioning of your mental, emotional field. This is the person that you are. The person that you are is your body and the conditioned mind, that's your form identity.

And your form identity is not to be totally dismissed. You say, you don't need to say, I'm not my body. I don't want to have anything to do with my body or this all illusion.

That's not quite it. It has its place. Your form identity has its place.

So while your body, let's say, has a particular color, you might even say, I like it. I like that color. It's fine.

But you don't derive your sense of identity from it. It's just something that you honor. You can also honor your cultural traditions, whatever it may be.

If you're African-American, you might honor your ancestors, the suffering of your ancestors, the cultural traditions of your ancestors. And so the suffering of your ancestors have led you to this point of awakening. So do not, I often say, don't waste your suffering in this life, but also don't waste the suffering of your ancestors.

So it's suffering ultimately brings about awakening of human consciousness. For a long time, it awakened suffering as your spiritual teacher for a long time. And a lot of suffering inflicted by humans on other humans, a lot of suffering.

And don't waste the suffering. Use it. Honor that.

You can honor your ancestors and still realize that's part of your form identity. Then there's a timeless being, there's a timeless self, the unconditioned consciousness that is the essence of who you are. And that's your, ultimately, you derive your sense of being, your sense of beingness, your sense of who you are from that dimension.

That Buddha called it sunyata, which is translated as emptiness. It just means formless, spacious consciousness. Emptiness is a traditional term in Buddhism, but it really means formless, spacious consciousness.

In Christian terms, Jesus said, the kingdom of heaven that is within you, heaven is the vast expanse of the sky. The kingdom is the dimension. So the kingdom of heaven is a dimension of vast spaciousness.

So he's pointing, he's using that analogy to point to an inner reality. Same as the Buddha. The Buddha said spacious consciousness, which is sunyata, emptiness.

Jesus said, the kingdom of heaven that is within you, which, what is the kingdom of heaven? It's an analogy for an inner dimension of consciousness. Heaven is pure consciousness, spacious awareness, like now, this moment.

You don't need to think, you don't need to affirm your form identity, but you can sense that within yourself, there is an essence that is, we could call presence, we could call awareness, we could call the realization of being, we could call the primordial I am, the I am. And that presence or beingness is an alive, it's alive. It's, it can't be defined or explained.

It has no age, no gender, no color, none of that, but become aware of yourself as an underlying quiet presence. Your historical self becomes unimportant, but something that's left there is more vital and more essential. This underlying quiet, alert, calm presence, we could call it stillness too, inner stillness.

And that you might also notice that your thinking subsides and you don't have to affirm through thinking who you are anymore. And that spacious awareness can be there even in everyday life, to little spaces between thoughts, moments of just aware presence, while you listen to somebody, looking at the sky, looking at a tree, a flower, breathing, moments of spacious awareness. And then you use your mind again, and then you're aware again.

And after a while, the awareness remains even while you're using your mind.

[Speaker 2] (4:11:30 - 4:11:32)
Ah, so liberating.

[Speaker 1] (4:11:47 - 4:12:37)
Thank you so much for your presence, which is also my presence. There's only one presence. This mind made sense of self is also much more focused on the negative than the positive.

To be free, you awaken to who you are beyond your history and your life situation.

[Speaker 5] (4:13:10 - 4:13:30)

Good afternoon, Mr. Tolle. My name is Liz Bluestam, and I'm very grateful to be here today. I'm also very aware right now that I am so not in the present moment because I'm so nervous.

So I think I need to take a breath and be still for a second, and this is the perfect group to do it with.

[Speaker 1] (4:13:31 - 4:13:31)
Feel the inner body.

[Speaker 5] (4:13:36 - 4:16:01)
Thank you. I was fortunate enough to read The Power of Now when it was first published, and it had a tremendous impact on me. And I have followed your spiritual teachings ever since.

As I went through my daily life and my daily practice, the unimaginable happened. My husband and I lost our son two years ago this August. And suddenly, I seemed to go from The Power of Now to the nightmare of The Power of Death.

And as you talked about this morning, which I found so interesting, it's the first time I've heard you mention loss. One needs to recover and cry. And I absolutely believe that you have to go through the grieving process to heal your soul.

But here's the rub. I can't help but think about my son every day, human nature. But what that does is catapult me consistently into the past because all I have left of him are my memories, which are in the past.

And conversely, even though I know there is no future, I fantasize about what it might have been like for all of us had he lived. So my question is, can you help me understand and reconcile being in the present, creating space for consciousness as it relates to profound grieving with the death of a loved one that has done nothing but propel me into the past and to a non-existent fantasy future? Thank you.

[Speaker 1] (4:16:03 - 4:16:48)
If I may ask you another question. When you think about your son, apart from the activity of thought, which may be memories of the past, or as you say, fantasizing about what might have been future or fantasies, can you also feel your son somewhere within? Apart from the memories, can you somehow feel his essence in yourself?

[Speaker 5] (4:16:48 - 4:16:49)
Absolutely.

[Speaker 1] (4:16:53 - 4:22:19)
And that essence is not in the past, of course. It's in the now. And so what is required then is a greater focus on that than on giving attention to the thoughts.

Once perhaps the thoughts have a limited usefulness when the memory comes, it also brings up the feeling of his essence. The memories of the past, the feeling of essence is now, it's alive now. If you can then give that more attention than to the thoughts, directing more attention there, closing your eyes perhaps, directing more attention there than to the memories.

The memories were fine, but now they've taken you there. Or if fantasizing about future, possible things that could have happened, again, bring attention as a conscious choice, take attention into the sense, that feeling of the essence of who he is, because the essence is. And then what you, this enables you to connect with the formless essence that was actually the thing that you loved and still love in him, the indestructible.

And you can only find it through your own, so they come together really. When you feel him, you also feel yourself as part of that. And so as a conscious choice then, take more attention to that.

If you can, if it's an occasion when it's not dangerous to close your eyes, then close your eyes and go in there and feel that and realize it's alive and it's now. Then gradually your son, you retrieve, you rescue your son from where he has been the past two years in the past and the alive essence, you still, you feel within yourself. And so, and that means gradually the memories will not disappear, there will be memories, but the heaviness that's associated with the memories and the deep sadness gradually through that becomes transmuted into something else.

And there will be then, the memories will still, there will still be a gentle sadness with the memories, but there's a rising realization of that which is beyond death in him, that's what you loves. You love and loved and still love. Now the mind says, the object of my love is gone and that's the dreadful thing.

The mind says, so the love has no object, but the love, what you loved in him was never the form. What you loved in him and still love is the formless essence of who he is. And I don't want to go into any kind of belief that you need to have of survival, but I know, all I know is that there is an essence in every human being, I know it in myself, that is beyond death, I know that.

I don't want to go beyond and tell anybody that they should believe this or that about. I don't never step beyond my experience. I know the deathless as the essence in myself and in all humans.

And you need to, you know that too, you just need to go there more deeply. And I also, anybody who has been touched by death I also recommend, in addition, it sounds a little strange, to occasionally take a walk around the cemetery. I recommend it to anybody because you get a very distorted view of life if you never have the realization of how imminent death is for every human being, the so-called death of the form.

And then the personal, the excessively personal thing about death as it becomes, you see how universal it is. And I find it extremely peaceful to walk around a cemetery and just, the mind goes totally still in just amazement of all these lives that have dissolved, the forms that have gone. That's why Buddhist monks in some traditions regularly go to the morgue and they meditate for a few hours at a time there just with the dead bodies around them.

And so they go deep within to touch what in Buddhism is called the deathless. So that is, the freedom from what you've been trapped in lies there within you. Just go there, go there, there.

Don't go into the mind excessively. Conscious choice. And then the transmutation happens.

[Speaker 6] (4:22:34 - 4:22:38)
And so your mind is just absorbing whatever is playing.

[Speaker 1] (4:22:38 - 4:57:19)
It's the TV mind which is receiving stuff from wherever it comes from. It's going into your mind and you become no longer thinking your own thoughts. Occasionally your mind is saying, oh, this guy is so stupid.

And then you're watching again. What do you think about Facebook? Is it a healthy format?

It seems a bit egoic. Not a whole lot of transmission of connection, love, et cetera. Posting pictures of yourself and quantifying friends, likes, et cetera, seems like enhancing the ego.

Are we going down the wrong path with social media? Well, the questioner has a point. As even before the advent of Facebook and similar things for hundreds of years or thousands of years, people constructed for themselves an identity in their head.

That's me. Me and my story, as I sometimes call it. And that was partly inherited from what your culture tells you you are or your family and your culture.

And partly by choice, certain things you choose to identify with and then incorporate into your sense of self. Certain possessions, certain achievements, or the lack of certain possessions and achievements can all be cooperated. They become mind forms or thought forms, which you identify with.

So there's a mental image that forms and that's the essence of ego, a mental image that's me. So that's been going on for a long time. And then people live through that mental image of me.

They seek out things or people that can improve the mental image of me and try to keep away things or people that could weaken or threaten the mental image of me. It all means not being in touch with who you are beyond any mental image, which is why we are here to go deep into that. And now we got the technology of Facebook where you can externalize the image and you can create on the Facebook page, you can create the image of me and show it to the whole world.

And so many young people, and maybe not so young, I believe the oldest Facebook user, I saw a video clip in the States, the world's oldest Facebook user is 105 years old. And it is often used unconsciously in enhancing the image one has of oneself and the image one wants to show to the world. And then you read other people's images on their Facebook page and you think that's who they are.

And then you try to compete with that image and you try to polish up your image and compete with them. Most people want to show off, it seems, I'm not that familiar with it, but most people want to show the good things. I'm having this great meal, here's a picture of it.

Why would anybody want to see what you're eating right now? But they do, it seems. Or I just bought this thing, do you want to see it?

And then you can connect people to a place where you bought it, it's another thing. And all kinds of things that I don't understand. So you can, in many cases, it becomes an artificial construct that you add to every day and everybody else has their artificial construct.

And it can actually strengthens the delusion of the false self. Doesn't have to, but often it does. Facebook can also be used in conveying interesting information and to connect with people at a deeper level or bringing about some spiritual knowledge.

So that's not impossible. I used to post occasionally things, I don't do it myself, but I would send it to Steve and he would post it. But I haven't, I must admit, I haven't done it in a while.

Although some things do get posted, quotes and so on, that's fine. Twitter is another one that is, there's a Twitter message coming in. No.

The last time I tweeted was when a few months ago in February, the Oprah Channel in the States, I don't know if you can get it here, it's called the OWN Channel, Oprah Winfrey Network. They showed a repeat of our webinar that we did a few years ago that I did with Oprah. They did a slightly shortened edited version over a period of 10 weeks, 10 Sundays, the new earth was shown again on this time, not on the internet, but well, also on the internet, but on TV on, and Oprah sometimes is an active tweeter.

And she said, it would be great if we could tweet at the same time while this program is being shown. And so I said, okay, I'll see what I can do. So I was on the phone with Steve while the program was running, and then I was watching it, and then people sent in these questions and they have to be answered immediately.

So I was attempting to dictate answers to Steve and his assistant to put in the answers. And my mind was quite, well, I felt almost dizzy afterwards because I tried to watch the program and at the same time, watch the incoming tweets and think of an answer. But Oprah must have realized it wasn't from me because she said, Twitter is the exact opposite of how you operate.

And before Oprah said it, Kim said exactly the same thing to me. And that's true. So I was glad when it was over, but while it was happening, I was surrendered to it, although I did feel dizzy afterwards.

So if you can avoid constructing some pseudo identity for yourself on Facebook and be more real, then you can avoid that trap of just the Facebook amplifying the human ego, which it does in many, many cases, especially for youngsters who have no idea what they're doing. Oh, yes. Can you speak about how to be in this world with this constant push for connectivity?

How did we get to the most profound things? Yes. From a relatively simple question.

Oh, yes, we talked about doing and being without feeling that being present is another thing to do. How to be in this world without this constant push for connectivity? Well, the first thing is you turn off your push notifications.

That's already a big step forward. And you need to be disciplined in the use of your device, your phone, whatever, tablet, phone, so that you can be in this world it doesn't take you over because it's simply an extension of the mind. And if it wasn't enough before we invented these devices, humans had already been taken over by their minds.

Even 2000 years ago, not as much as now, but even 2000 years ago, Jesus said, why are you always thinking about tomorrow? Why are you always worried about the next thing? Look at the flower, look how it lives in total alignment with the present moment.

And it's being sustained by the one consciousness. That's my translation of it. So already then, humans had been taken over by mind, but even more so since then, it's mind has proliferated.

And then the clever human mind came up with these devices said, let's extend ourselves into the realm of things. And then we can create this, which is an extension of the human mind. So when you, you might have noticed when you're with yourself, you have the voice in the head, unless you begin to awaken, in which case you're able to experience spaces of alert, still presence.

It's beautiful. But otherwise you have this thing, commenting, talking, arguing. And then this becomes a burden for many people.

Of course it is a burden because a lot of the stuff it says is actually not pleasant. And so you experience it as a burden. And since you derive your sense of identity from it, it becomes yourself.

This talking voice, you think that's you. It becomes the self. And you walk around with this burden of the self.

And in order to unburden yourself, one thing you can do, you think you can do, is you can watch the television or you can go on to watch, there are countless things that you can watch on the little screen. The entire world's knowledge at your fingertips. And the moment you watch the screen, whether it's television or a screen, you might have noticed that your own, your so-called own thought processes come to a stop.

So to some extent, you're free of the self. This is why people sometimes find watching television relaxing, say, okay, I just need to relax now, just turn it on. By this they mean, while they watch the television screen, they are not burdened by their self-induced thought processes.

What they do, however, they replace their own thoughts with the collective thoughts. So they just, you're in a state, you're not in a state of thoughtless awareness when you watch television or you watch something on the screen. You absorb the thoughts from there into your mind and you link in.

So for people often in a state of semi or hypnosis when they watch and it kind of paralyzes you, can also happen with the screen, with television already started, of course. I don't know when, whenever, 60 years ago, whenever television started as you go. And so your mind is just absorbing whatever is playing.

It's the TV mind, which is receiving stuff from wherever it comes from, is going into your mind and you become a, no longer thinking your own thoughts. Occasionally your mind is like, oh, this guy is so stupid. And then you're watching again.

And then another thought, why am I watching this rubbish? Half an hour later, this is so awful. But you can't, you can't turn it off.

Here's the, here's the remote. Let's, let's just try one more channel. There might be something else there.

Oh no, that's stupid. Try one more. This is, this is how an addict behaves.

And the device is even more addictive. You go, cause you have to carry them with you. And you have to admit, you may have to admit that you, there is an addiction in you.

Not everybody here, but quite a few. It would be almost normal to feel this draw towards it. And you use it even when you don't need to use it.

That's the amazing thing. When you're standing at the elevator waiting, so another person is standing next to you and he or she is pulling out the phone and then you pull out yours. You don't know why.

And, or anywhere you're in a, you're waiting, you're ordering a tea or coffee somewhere and you're standing in line. And if you look around, there's almost nobody and probably nobody who is not looking at this little thing. This is scary.

30 years ago, it was just radio and television and you would, people would sit there for hours. But nowadays you have countless sources of stimulus for the mind that draws you into continuously thinking about what's your next Facebook post? What's it going to be?

And you look at the ones that are coming in. All these people are doing these fantastic things. And me, I'm just sitting here.

And then you have to pretend that you're also doing fantastic things. And usually it involves taking a nice selfie. And then you project yourself image, which has existed for a long, long time before in humans.

They have a, they have a part of ego is to have this image of who I am. But in these Facebook, now we have the opportunity to project that image into the world and it'll reach hundreds or thousands of people all at once. And then you construct your life.

There are many people alive these days who without knowing it, they partly live for their Facebook image. And they're just looking for the next thing that they can project out into the world. It's Narcissus, you might remember the myth of Narcissus, the Greek, ancient Greek myth.

There was this young man who had never seen himself before because they didn't have mirrors at the time. But one day he happened to look into a little pool of water and he saw himself and he realized that he was extremely beautiful. He said, oh, that's me.

And if the story goes, he fell in love with himself, not in a good way, not by becoming one with who he is, but the separation happened. This myth shows the beginning stage of the egoic sense of self expressed as a story. The image that he saw of himself in the pool is the mental image of the ego set and stories are part of that image.

That's me, I'm me and my story. So you have the image of me and then, oh. So this guy, Narcissus, he experienced that separation.

And then I think something bad happened to him, but I don't remember what. So, and then you have other divine things that continuously stimulate the mind that almost designed for you not to become still. It's like the civilization has made a great effort to come up with as many things as possible to prevent people from becoming still and spacious and taking a moment of, ah, looking at the sky and feeling the inner spaciousness arise and becoming aware of the leaves of the tree or the branches and the wind blowing and the noise of water, the simple thing, becoming still, alert, sensing that stillness within. And of course, a minute later, another text message is coming in.

Of course, you have to look at it immediately. And then I'm told, I didn't know that when I first started using texts, Erin told me that the etiquette is that you have to reply immediately. And emails are coming in too.

Oh dear, I must be very important. I'm getting all these messages. Please talk about spiritual bypassing.

Sometimes it feels like I'm using presence and awareness as a way to deceive myself and avoid the muddle of unresolved pain within. Awareness or presence is never avoidance. In awareness, you allow yourself to feel whatever it is that you feel.

It's not repressing it in any way. There is a fundamental misconception, an unconscious misconception in human beings, and that misconception is this. They believe that the world has the ability to make them happy, but this is being withheld from them.

And they regard that as a personal insult by life. It's doing, why is life withholding happiness from me? Why all the things always happen to me?

Because it's not happening to others. You read their Facebook posts and they're all happy. They're eating meals.

You see pictures of meals. Look, I'm eating this, oh, okay. And then you see their happy faces.

And not only are they happy, they're also so good looking. Everybody's good looking. That's the technology of filters and stuff.

Everyone can look beautiful, even I, they did it to me too. So people watch that and say, wow, these people's lives are so great. What am I, so awful.

And then you maybe, then you also pretend because everybody else is pretending. Okay, like go to a restaurant, take a picture of a meal. I mean, this is what I'm eating right now.

Oh. So the misconception is the world is here to make me happy, but it's not doing it. And this is a very serious misconception because it makes your whole life miserable because that really means that something that should be happening is not happening in my life.

Something should, it's just not happening. But of course that misconception is that the world is here to make you happy and it can't do that. It's not here to make you happy.

It's here to make you conscious, to awaken you. Oh, I see, I was wrong all along. I've been complaining uselessly for 40 years or whatever your age is.

I've been complaining uselessly for 40 years that there's something wrong with the world and my so-called life, but there wasn't anything wrong at all because the world is here to awaken me. If humans are not challenged or not just humans, any life form only grows through being challenged, which means encounter obstacles and difficulties in their process of growth, even plants and animals, they all encounter, every life form is precarious. Its existence is precarious and it encounters obstacles to its unfoldment.

And that ultimately is how evolution happens through encountering difficulties, obstacles, challenges. Because as you encounter the obstacles and challenges, they seem to block you. And you think life would be much better if I did not have these challenges, but it wouldn't because you would go to sleep even more.

So you have the challenges and that brings about an influx of energy on whatever level, even if it's physical, every organism already encounters challenges on a physical level. And then it grows, it gains new strengths by attempting to overcome these limitations. I sometimes mention, example, if you want it, because it operates on every level.

If you want to become physically stronger, you have to exercise unless you have a job that is already physically hardworking, forces you to exert yourself physically. Otherwise you have to exercise. And you have to start doing, if you want to grow stronger, you have to lift weights.

I'm not doing it anymore, but I'm just demonstrating. You lift weight. Now, how does that feel at first?

What are you doing? The way I put it is this. You are making life difficult for your body because your body is not going to grow stronger unless you make the body's life difficult.

The same with jogging. The body doesn't really want to do it, but says, no, no, you have to do it. Why are you making life difficult for your body?

Your body would be so relaxed sitting on the sofa and watching Netflix. But it's not growing stronger, it's actually getting weaker because it's not being challenged. But challenge it, and then there is a demand for added energy.

And this just operates on the physical level. And this demand for added, there's a moment when there's a gap. You're exerting yourself and the energy isn't there yet, so it's very hard.

But at some point, the energy comes flooding in because there was a demand for it. And at that point, you may actually begin to enjoy the physical movement because there's added energy, and suddenly, ah, strength is increasing. And this is just on the physical level.

There's a demand and it comes. Also on a psychological level, it can operate. And on a spiritual level, when you become very unhappy in your life, then there is a possibility that the unhappiness causes you to awaken because at some point, you realize, either because you've had a spiritual teacher or teaching, or even to some people, it happens spontaneously, the suffering, the psychological suffering that humans undergo can, at some point, bring about an awakened, when you just can't stand it anymore. And something snaps, and suddenly, you, whoosh, it dissolves, and you're, oh, suddenly, an awakening has happened. But it would not have happened if you hadn't gone through those, sometimes, years of suffering.

Quite often, I have encountered people who tell me, I would never have come to you, or understood the books, or been open to anything spiritual if I had not experienced, in some cases, it's a serious, very serious illness, or an accident, or some deep loss in their personal lives. And they come, and perhaps some of you, with some of you, that is also the case, there would not have been an opening if you had not gone through that suffering. And at some point, the suffering awakens you, and that is really the ultimate purpose of suffering, is to awaken.

And then you realize that most suffering is actually unnecessary. It's actually created by the conditioned entity. I'm talking about real, there's physical pain, physical pain isn't suffering.

Suffering is a psychological phenomenon. So, and this suffering can be transcended. If you awaken, you transcend that suffering.

In other words, you transcend unhappiness. You are no longer unhappy. The mind loses its power to make you unhappy because most of your unhappiness is created by unconscious thought processes, not situations.

Most of unhappiness is created not by situations, difficult situations that you encounter, but what your mind is telling you about the difficult situations. The situation itself is as it is. Then you impose an interpretation on it.

The interpretation says this should not be happening. This is awful. Why always to me?

Why did he do that, et cetera, et cetera. Interpretations, what causes the unhappiness and strengthens the fictitious self is the commentary, the interpretation. And that is an amazing realization that most of your unhappiness is created by your mind.

And that's an amazing thing. And then as you become more present, unhappiness disappears from your life. Now, am I saying that you will then always be happy?

No, it's not. Happiness is a little bit superficial to the way I use the term happiness because it usually means, yeah, oh, it's so great, it's wonderful. It feels a bit superficial, although there are some spiritual teachers who use the term happiness and point it to something deeper.

For example, Ramana Maharshi says happiness is your true nature, but he's using it in a different sense. Obviously, there are situations, even as your unhappiness leaves you and you become more present, situations arise where you cannot say that you're happy. Somebody close to you dies.

Your father, your mother, or even a child, or somebody, or something very bad, an accident happens to someone, and you can't say, oh, I'm still happy, I'm so happy, he died. No. Sadness will come if that happens because that's the human on you, still the sadness comes.

And yet, you are not consumed by the sadness when it comes. You are not consumed by it. It comes as a wave, and you may weep because your father died, your mother died, your child died, or somebody close to you is going through suffering, and you may weep.

And yet, underneath that, there's still a substratum, this is a geological term, there's a substratum of peace underneath it. I don't call that happiness, but it's deeper than that. There is an all-abiding peace underneath it, although there may be tears on the surface, but then they disappear, and you don't perpetuate emotional pain by continuously thinking about it for months and years, and years pass, and you're still unhappy for years.

[Speaker 2] (4:57:20 - 4:57:30)
No, it comes as a wave, and then it subsides, and even when it's there, there is still a presence that you can sense underneath it.

[Speaker 6] (4:57:35 - 4:57:39)
Sometimes people try to exercise willpower,

[Speaker 1] (4:57:40 - 4:57:45)
and they try to manifest that, I really want this,

[Speaker 2] (4:57:47 - 4:57:55)
whatever it is, that is not necessarily a good way to manifest,

[Speaker 1] (4:57:58 - 4:59:35)
because by saying, I want it, you're also saying that you don't have it yet, but the most powerful way to manifest is the feeling that it's already here, and that can only arise out of the fullness of being, of presence in the present moment, because then you merge the image of what you want with a sense of fullness, the fullness of being, so the image and the fullness of being come together, and that is a powerful way of manifesting it, which means you don't need that thing for your happiness anymore, you don't need it for your ultimate fulfillment, the most powerful way to manifest is to regard it as a play or a game, the game of life, the play of life of manifesting, then there's also a sense of detachment from the outcome, an excessive attachment to the desired outcome is also an obstacle to manifesting, if you desperately need something, if you are unhappy, if you don't get it, then there's something wrong, so if you're unhappy, when you don't achieve whatever you want to manifest, then you didn't do it right,

[Speaker 2] (4:59:40 - 4:59:55)
so there needs to be a detachment, so to speak, from the desired outcome,

[Speaker 1] (4:59:56 - 5:02:37)
so that you don't project this, whatever you want to manifest doesn't become a future projection, but whatever you want to manifest needs to be realized as already existing on some level, in the unmanifested, that's why Jesus said, I want to go back to Jesus, because whatever you want to learn about manifestation, just read what he explained it all, in very simple words, he said, whenever you pray for something, believe that you have received it, and it will be yours, that's the entire secret of manifestation already there, and the importance of the words are, not believe that you will receive it, because then there would be too much wanting, I want this, I will get it, no, he said, believe that you have received it, and it will be yours, and it will be given to you, so believing that you have, in other words, it's already there, and how does that happen?

How does that happen when you know, when your senses tell you that it's not there, let's say you live in a trailer, there's nothing wrong with living in a trailer, I love trailers, but let's say you live in a trailer, but you want a nice house, okay, your preference would be a nice house, but are you unhappy in your trailer, or are you appreciating a trailer, and you can hear the pitter-patter of rain on the roof, well, I can hear it now, I'm not in a trailer, I can still hear it from the window pane, so in a trailer, but you want a nice house, okay, where's the house, because you look around, it's not here, are you creating some kind of dissatisfaction by telling yourself a story, this is what my life has come to, I've reduced to living in a trailer, I need to get out of here, is this all disempowering, all those narratives,

[Speaker 2] (5:02:37 - 5:02:48)
telling yourself stories that are not good enough, all very disempowering, yes, your senses are telling you

[Speaker 1] (5:02:48 - 5:05:44)
that you're not living in a nice house, you're just in a trailer, but that's fine for the present moment, so where's the house, the house is in your imagination, in your mind, you can, maybe you visualize it, or maybe you have certain verbal affirmations that you have a lovely house that you live in, and then the visualization and the verbal affirmation, you bring it together, allow the visualization of the verbal affirmation to be empowered by that sense of presence, so that it meets the presence, so that house merges with the sense of presence, and then inside you feel you already have it, and the weird thing is when you finally, when you do get it, let's say next year, or in six months time, or in two years time, or in three years time, when you do get it, the nice, and then suddenly you sit in your nice house, it makes no difference to your inner state anymore, because when you were in your trailer, you were already in the same state of fullness of life, when you're in the nice house, and you sit in a nice house, and say, okay, it's fine, but you're not, you say, yes, a certain amount of satisfaction may be there, but basically, your inner state is the same as it was before, because you already touched the fullness, you already rooted in the beingness, the dimension of being, the fullness of life. In other words, when it does manifest, you don't suddenly become, oh, I'm so happy, I've got it, oh, finally, I've got, no, it doesn't happen anymore, you say, oh, it's good, but your inner state is not, it's the same as it was before, no matter what you achieve, you already have the foundation for everything, you've already rooted in that, this is why Jesus called it, all these things will be added unto you, it's no more than that, an adding, or use the expression, icing on the cake, and when you have an enormous sense of freedom, of liberation,

[Speaker 2] (5:05:45 - 5:05:52)
because you're no longer, your inner state is no longer dependent on external conditions,

[Speaker 6] (5:05:58 - 5:06:04)
whatever you want to manifest in this world, people want what they want,

[Speaker 1] (5:06:06 - 5:06:39)
better, more abundance in their life, perhaps material abundance, there's a shortage of money, you want to experience an expansion on this dimension, fine, or they want to find some companion in their life, or they may want better health, or a better way of contributing to this world, as the expression goes,

[Speaker 2] (5:06:39 - 5:06:59)
to make a difference in this world, or they want to be a positive force in this world, these are all wonderful things, but the primary thing is to touch that,

[Speaker 1] (5:07:00 - 5:07:54)
to not touch, but to access that dimension within yourself, and stay rooted in that dimension of being, presence, that in itself is so fulfilling, that anything you can manifest becomes the English expression, if English is not your native language, I don't know if you've heard the expression, the icing on the cake, the icing on the cake is the stuff you put on top of that you have a cake, icing on the cake is the stuff you put on top of the cake, little ornaments to make the cake look nice, it's the icing on the cake, but it's not the cake itself is more important than the icing on the cake,

[Speaker 2] (5:07:54 - 5:07:55)

[Speaker 1] (5:07:55 - 5:08:02)
so the icing on the cake is the step of the realization of being,

[Speaker 2] (5:08:03 - 5:08:04)
that is this,

[Speaker 1] (5:08:05 - 5:09:25)
sorry, that is the cake, no, the icing is whatever you manifest, Jesus said the same thing, he didn't actually use, he was not familiar with English, and the expression icing on the cake didn't exist, I don't know whether they even had cake at that time, but Jesus used the expression, seek only the kingdom of heaven, everything else that you may think you, that you need will be added unto you, seek only the kingdom of heaven, everything else will be added unto you, it's only an addition, it's not the main thing, so whatever in this life, whatever you may want to achieve, it's an adding on to the main thing, the main thing is the kingdom of heaven, which is the realization of being, the realization of that which transcends the personal personality, the realization of being,

[Speaker 2] (5:09:25 - 5:09:43)
see, I am, without adding anything to it, presence itself, and so then, that's the foundation for all manifestation,

[Speaker 1] (5:09:44 - 5:09:53)
then out of that power, maybe some people like to visualize the situation,

[Speaker 2] (5:09:53 - 5:10:05)
others may want to use verbal affirmations, and that's fine, but as you use those things,

[Speaker 1] (5:10:05 - 5:10:09)
you stay connected with that dimension,

[Speaker 2] (5:10:11 - 5:10:16)
so that means when you want something in life,

[Speaker 1] (5:10:19 - 5:11:11)
the wanting is very different from the egoic wanting, because you no longer, you don't need it to be fulfilled or happy, so it's the different kind of wanting, you don't need it to be fulfilled, the fulfillment you have to find in the present moment, you have to go deep enough into the present moment, so you find, and again, quoting Jesus again, because he talked about it, in the present moment, you find what he called the fullness of life, that's actually the expression that Jesus used, he said, I want you to have the fullness of life, in some translations, it's called abundant life,

[Speaker 2] (5:11:12 - 5:11:35)
I want you to have abundant life, in other translations, it's I want you to have the fullness of life, and that fullness of life does not mean many things, it means that the essence of life itself,

[Speaker 1] (5:11:36 - 5:11:58)
that is the fullness of life, then all those things that you may want will be added, well, maybe not all of them, but many of things will be added unto you, so that is the essence of meditation,

[Speaker 6] (5:11:58 - 5:12:00)
the state of manifestation.

[Speaker 1] (5:12:09 - 5:19:55)
So if you focus on the awakening, whether you are conscious at any moment, the important thing in any situation that you encounter in your life is the state of consciousness with which you meet that situation, what is the state of consciousness in which you face whatever situation arises in the present moment, that determines the next thing, how it's going to go on in the next moment, in the next, how do you, what is, how do you perceive, react to this, whatever is arising in this moment? So whatever is arising in this moment, the situation that arises, they come and go, different situations arise, this is always maybe important, but it of secondary importance, more important is your state of consciousness now.

If you could remember only that and live that, that's really all you need, so whenever you encounter any situation, realize what's my state of consciousness right now, and there's a situation that perhaps you need to deal with, perhaps you need to take action right now, perhaps you, there's nothing you can do and you have to leave it alone, we don't know, but what is your state of consciousness in the present moment, vital question, and in order to answer that question, and it doesn't really have a conceptual answer because you immediately know whether you are present or not, that question can help you become present, what is my state of consciousness right now?

Maybe, are there certain thoughts that are happening that are telling you that something is very wrong? Emotions that are telling you that something is wrong, there are certain thoughts that are telling you you'd rather be somewhere else, very common thing, it's so common people don't realize it, some people live almost continuously as if they were longing to be somewhere else, but not here and now, to get away from here and now, this isn't right, there's something not right, never, and occasionally it seems right, ah, I have arrived, whatever it is that makes it right for a moment, it's an illusion, I'm in love, this is the completion of my life, I've fallen in love, there's a person who's going to complete me, when you go to a restaurant and observe other people sitting at various tables, you can tell if they're a couple sitting at a table, you can tell whether their relationship is relatively recent, they haven't known each other for very long, they're in that state that they call falling in love, the way they interact is very different from those who have been in a relationship for longer or are married, the ones that have just met, they've fallen in love, they are in a kind of state of delusion, you can see it in their eyes, everybody's playing their part in it, it's a theatrical performance but they don't know it, and that comes to an end at the latest when they start living together, so this, then the essence of all this is awakening, the awakened state of consciousness, and as I mentioned earlier, not surprisingly, this term awakening has been used over thousands of years since the time of the Buddha and before, the essence of the teaching of the Buddha is to awaken, the word Buddha itself means to be awake, the one who is awake, this is a Sanskrit root of the word is to be awake, Buddha is not a, it's not a name of a person, it describes a state of consciousness, and then go to Jesus and there are quite a few parables that talk about not going to sleep, about staying awake, and these are not, these are parables, they're not to be taken literally, obviously, literally you cannot tell a person stay awake because eventually, of course, you'll go to sleep, so we are just using this analogy of awake and asleep in order to point to something that most humans are not yet familiar with, to quote Jesus again from one of the gospels, he said, and this is quite a bit of what we read about Jesus' teaching, may not be quite what he said or distorted, but a few things I can sense are absolutely, literally what he said, a few things here and there, for example, he said, and what I say to you, I say to all, stay awake.

Huh, was that the Buddha or Jesus? No, it was Jesus. Oh, no, he's not talking about the normal state of wakefulness, nobody could stay awake for that long because there's something that pulls you into sleep, so we are not talking about that, we are using that as an analogy.

Everybody knows what it means to awaken in the morning when you've been asleep, which is a particular state of consciousness, you're asleep, and in sleep you have dream state and you have dreamless sleep, you have those two, and then you wake up, you awaken in the morning, and there's a huge difference between the state of sleep and the state of being awake. Everybody experienced that every morning, and you go, suddenly you open your eyes and go, oh, completely different world, you've just awakened. It's a different state of consciousness.

And so this analogy is used because there is something in ordinary consciousness, normal human consciousness, which really should be called unconsciousness, normal human consciousness could also be described as a kind of sleep because it's totally conditioned by the past.

[Speaker 5] (5:20:02 - 5:20:14)
I wanted to ask, what is the role of being in service to others in one's spiritual development? And I guess you can say it, in the overall evolutionary impulse of the universe, to borrow a phrase from your book.

[Speaker 1] (5:20:15 - 5:31:37)
Okay, thank you. It can be a wonderful spiritual practice if it arises from the right place inside you. And it can also be a strengthening of your ego if it arises from a different place inside you.

Jesus talked about that when he talked about giving arms. Some people, he said, like to be seen when they give arms to the poor. They want to be seen.

And he says, those people are not going to get a reward in heaven. What that means, we'll look at in a second, because they have their reward already. And of course, what their reward already is, is that it's a feeding of the ego.

That's their reward. So now there are two ways of being seen when you give service. Either you give something to somebody.

It could be help, providing active help, or giving something that you have away to somebody to help them, whatever it is. One needs to be able to look at the motivation and there are two ways of being seen. One is to talk about it more than is necessary, or to just make sure that others see what you're doing or aware of what you're doing.

Then you have your reward through that, which is the feeding of the ego. But there's another interior way of seeing it when you have your own self image and you're in service, because it makes you feel better about yourself. It improves your self image.

That is still fine. It may help somebody, so it's a good thing to do, but it doesn't really help you to become free internally. So there's a self image that some people need to feel that they are giving to others.

And there's this image of, I am giving to him, you're the doer. You see yourself as the doer of good and you see yourself as sacrificing something that you give to another. So it improves your ego, really, how you see yourself, because what is ego but an inner self reflection?

Ego is like an inner mirror, where you are not yourself. You have an image of yourself and you live through this mental image of yourself. And the image of yourself is usually not satisfying.

So every ego tries to improve the image of oneself and it can do it in many, many different ways. But, and then you have the image of me, the doer of the good deed, and that really strengthens the image. And then there's another way of giving I think the expression is where the left hand doesn't know what the right hand does or something like that.

The right hand doesn't know what the left hand is doing, which means you don't have the self image as you are giving of something that you own. You are helping the other. There's an outflow of energy in whatever form and it's not yours.

It's not yours, you're not giving anything that is yours because ultimately nothing is yours. You're giving energy because that energy in whatever form comes from the source of all energy. All energy derives from one source.

And so you give, you allow yourself to be a vehicle through which this energy flows out into the world. And then the sense of me, the doer isn't there. And the sense of there's a poor person that I am helping isn't there either, these concepts.

So I simply, the process that happens through you and that is the non-egoic way. And then to be of service is a beautiful spiritual practice too because the ego is out of the way, dissolves through that when you realize you are not, you don't own anything ultimately and the energy is not yours. It's universal energy that comes through.

So to be a vehicle for that and in that way you are a help really when that happens, you begin to live in that way. You're always in service to others. You're even in service to others in ordinary situations that would not normally be recognized as service to others because you recognize the other in their essential being, which is the greatest service that you can give somebody far greater than anything material, although there's nothing wrong with that either.

But the greatest service is to recognize the essence or the reality of the other person. Everything else passes away. Everything else is transitory.

But that recognition of the other as God, I don't use that word very often, and one with who you are, to see that that is the greatest service you can give, which this is the realization of who that person truly is beyond the form. Not to come from form, not believing this form is helping that form, but realizing there's something here that is beyond form. So if you're only in form, then you can also very easily deplete yourself.

I'm trying to be helpful. I need to, there are many people who are social workers or therapists, and after a few years, they experience a burnout because they're continuously trying to give and help, and then they need, they can't do it anymore. So in The Power of Now, I believe I wrote that whenever you help people, there needs to be a balance between the, maybe I didn't write it there, there needs to be a balance between the doing out there and being rooted in being.

And so that's, no matter where you are in life or what you do, otherwise you will lose yourself in your service to others very quickly, and then you're not of service to anybody anymore. Then you'll need therapy yourself, or you'll need charity yourself. So to stay, be rooted in being while you do is essential so that the energy can continue to move through you.

So you're addressing, you can address the causes of human suffering in the external world, sorry, the effects of human suffering in the external world, but the cause of human suffering is in the consciousness, in the human consciousness. So that is vital to be rooted in yourself, not be part of the unconsciousness that produces the dysfunction that is in this world. There are people who try to do their best, even organizations often try to do their best to help others, and they become part sometimes without wanting to, they become part of the mess.

There's infighting in the organization itself. It's amazing how many institutions and organizations, the enormous amount of infighting that there is, they are supposed to help people. Sometimes they are even religious organizations.

The enormous amount of conflict in there, and there's, stop, stop, stop doing. Just connect with the spaciousness that is within you. Stay rooted there and then do.

Never lose the rootedness in this. Remember, I use this and this, the two modalities or dimensions. This is the world of form and doing.

This is the formless and being. So when you help others, the two need to be there also. Always the balance between doing and being.

You cannot solve the problems of this world through doing only, because if there's only doing and you try to solve the problems of the world, you will contribute to the problems of the world. Hence the expression, the road to hell is paved with good intentions.

[Speaker 5] (5:31:43 - 5:31:44)
Thank you very much.

[Speaker 1] (5:32:09 - 6:37:34)
Just making sure that everybody is present. Almost everybody is. I can sense it in the energy field.

Wonderful to be back here after quite a few years in time, but it's still the now, it seems. Strange. Can't get away from it.

Although many humans try very, very hard to get away from it. It's part of the inherited collective mental patterns, is the compulsion to get away from the now. And that's at the root of a lot of dysfunction in human consciousness.

So here we are, the main purpose of being here. Well, both here in this space at this time, but also the main purpose of being here on this planet, incarnated as a so-called human being. The main purpose is to inhabit the world the now, well, everybody inhabits the now, but to inhabit the now, to be in the now consciously.

And we could call that the awakening of consciousness, learning to be present, which seems to be a process that happens in time. Although presence itself is a timeless state of consciousness. So a slight paradox, perhaps, the ability to live here and be present, develops over time, which means you're present for a while, and you lose it, and you're present again, and you lose it, and then you're present for a little bit longer.

This is the awakening of consciousness, we could call it. And you're all here because something in you is awakening to this dimension of consciousness. There's no, it's no surprise that this term awakening has been used in many spiritual traditions for thousands of years, awakening and to be awake.

That's the most important thing that could happen to a human being here. In fact, it's the only thing of absolute importance in your incarnation here. The only thing of absolute importance is the awake, whether you represent or embody the awakening of consciousness, that is the evolution of consciousness on this planet through you.

And on a larger scale, it is the evolution of consciousness throughout the universe. It is an awakening universe, and you are an essential part of the awakening universe. In fact, you are inseparable from the awakening universe.

You look like a person, but you are the universe in the process of awakening, disguised temporarily as a little person with its problems. And so much going on in my life. I have no time for presents.

Maybe when things are going better, I'll be present, but not now. Got too much on my plate, as the expression goes, English expression. I have a lot on my plate, they say, which means a lot of problems.

Of course, there's no end to the problems. But, so there's only one thing of absolute importance, and that is whether you embody the awakening of consciousness. All the rest is secondary, I call it.

It may be relatively important. All the things that make up your life, what people call my life, this very problematic thing that you call my life, that is all maybe important. Yes, there are things that are important.

Your health is important. Your relationships, of course, situation, important. Your home situation, your professional work situation, important.

All those things, whether you have money or not, not enough money, all these things are important, relatively important, but not absolutely important. So you have the two levels. I don't deny the relative importance of all these things that make up your so-called life, but what humans neglect and do not realize that there is a transcendent dimension to your life, and to encounter that, to consciously awaken to the transcendent dimension of your life, that is the only thing that is of absolute importance.

Most humans go through life only knowing themselves and knowing the world in one dimension. There was a man that many of you have heard of. Some of you read some of the teachings, Socrates, he lived roughly 2,400 years ago in Greece.

He never wrote anything. His disciples later wrote down what they remembered, and his main disciple was Plato. And Plato then wrote the Socratic dialogues.

We don't know, of course, whether what Plato wrote was exactly what Socrates taught. In a way, what Plato wrote in Plato's writing, Socrates is a literary character. So the characteristic of Platonic dialogues is that Socrates asks questions, his people who come to him for teaching.

He doesn't seem to immediately have the answer. He asks questions, and then the person answers, and he gradually leads the person to the answer. Now, in the dialogues, which some of you may have read, some of them, not perhaps many people these days read, Plato, in the dialogues, the impression is given that Socrates kind of manipulates a little bit the people who come to him, and the impression is given that he already knows the answer.

He just pretends not to know the answer. That's what comes across in the dialogues. And I think that is the character that Plato created, but I believe, and I have evidence for this belief, that that's not actually what happened.

I believe, and I'll tell you in a minute why, that Plato actually started every teaching session from a place of not knowing the answer. And so unlike the impression we get if you read, the Platonic dialogues, that he already knows, he's just pretending not to know. No.

How do I know this? Plato said, I'm sorry, Socrates said, they call me the wisest of all men. And the reason why they call me the wisest of all men is that I'm the only one who knows that he knows nothing.

So, and again, when we read it retrospectively, after having read the Platonic dialogues, we think, oh, he's just, again, it's some kind of affectation. He's saying, I know nothing. No, I believe that his genuine starting point was the ability to go into that state of not knowing.

Rather than coming from already having accumulated knowledge just waiting to come out of his head. And this is why he was able to think creatively. He actually taught, one could say, almost he taught humanity how to think for the first time, to think rationally, but his thinking is creative.

It's fresh and new. And it was a process between him and the people who came to him. There was an energy field that arose and out of this energy field, the answers came.

Sometimes they came through him. Sometimes they came through the people who came to him. Another interesting thing he said that's not reported in Plato, but written by another disciple of his called Xenophon.

And he said that Socrates frequently pointed out that he received counsel from a divine voice. And again, that's something that the Western rationalists try to ignore. To them, Plato is the absolutely clear, rational, analytical, conceptual thinker.

And they don't see, because they don't know that dimension within themselves, they don't see the depths out of which his thinking actually came. So he said frequently, as reported by Xenophon, that he received guidance from a divine voice, Socrates. Not in the sense, one doesn't get the sense that some entity spoke through him, but obviously he was referring to inspiration from a dimension within him that was beyond thinking, beyond conceptualization, beyond the rational thought.

So the impression we get of Socrates is really we see half the story. We see only the upper half of the iceberg. Well, it's the iceberg, actually you see far less than half of it.

You see only a tiny fraction of it. And that was when these things are taught at universities and so on. The more important dimension is actually completely missed.

They only look at the upper. What's he saying? But where did all that come from?

What was the state of consciousness out of which such a creative teaching, such creative thinking could arise? And so it is that most these dimensions the dimension of conceptualization of thinking is in everyone, but the dimension of non-conceptual intelligence is also in everyone. But in the same way that we only see one half of the whole or less than one half of the whole when we look at Socrates through the eyes of Plato and through the eyes of Western interpreters, in the same way, most humans go through life only knowing themselves and knowing the world in one dimension.

And that's the, we could call that the dimension of form. And so let's bring it now after having gone to Greece, let's bring it to a very immediately verifiable place here and now. As you sit here, you are aware of yourself as a form identity, obviously, because you are aware of your body, which is a physical form.

You are aware of, although you may not remember your past, you have vaguely, you know that you have a past, you have a name, you have an address, and you have a life situation that may not be happening right here now unless you're thinking about it, but you have a life situation, your whole personal past is there. And you have thoughts going through your head, perhaps. And this is what most people identify with and know, that's all they know.

They know themselves as that form-based entity. And what else is there? There is that in you which is continuously overlooked because the world of form, which includes thinking, thoughts that continuously arise, the world of form has such a hypnotic pull, it's so seductive that you follow it.

First, you have the senses, the outer senses, but more importantly, you have the seduction of continuously arising interpretations of what the senses, the sensory input. If you look at your consciousness, your state of consciousness, the sensory input plays a relatively small part in what goes on in your mind. A much greater part of what goes in your mind is either an interpretation of the sensory input that's immediately interpreted through the conditioning of your mind, the filter, or it is ignored completely and you are totally absorbed in the stream of thinking.

In other words, totally unaware of your surroundings because you're absorbed in the seduction of thoughts arising and drawing in the totality of your attention, your consciousness, and so you become an entity that is entirely, consists entirely of thought, the me, and you know no other dimension in you. It's all, and anybody else who says, even if you're totally identified with that, even the suggestion that there may be another dimension would immediately be ridiculed or the mind-made entity feel threatened by it. There is a fundamental misconception, an unconscious misconception in human beings, and that misconception is this.

They believe that the world has the ability to make them happy, but this is being withheld from them. And they regard that as a personal insult by life. It's doing, why is life withholding happiness from me?

Why all the things always happen to me? Because it's not happening to others. You read their Facebook posts and they're all happy.

They're eating meals. You see pictures of meals. Look, I'm eating this, oh, okay.

And then you see their happy faces. And not only are they happy, they're also so good-looking. Everybody's good-looking.

That's the technology of filters and stuff. Everyone can look beautiful, even I, they did it to me, too. So people watch that and say, wow, these people's lives are so great.

And mine's so awful. And then you also pretend, because everybody else is pretending, okay, let's go to a restaurant, take a picture of a meal. This is what I'm eating right now.

How? So the misconception is the world is here to make me happy, but it's not doing it. And this is a very serious misconception because it makes your whole life miserable because that really means it's something Something that should be happening is not happening in my life.

Something should, it's just not happening. But of course that misconception is that the world is here to make you happy and it can't do that. It's not here to make you happy.

It's here to make you conscious, to awaken you. Oh, I see. I was wrong all along.

I've been complaining uselessly for 40 years, or whatever your age is, I've been complaining uselessly for 40 years that there's something wrong with the world and my so-called life. But there wasn't anything wrong at all. Because the world is here to awaken me.

If humans are not challenged, or not just humans, any life form only grows through being challenged, which means encounter obstacles and difficulties in their process of growth. Even plants and animals, they all encounter, every life form is precarious. Its existence is precarious.

And it encounters obstacles to its unfoldment. And that ultimately is how evolution happens, through encountering difficulties, obstacles, challenges. Because as you encounter the obstacles and challenges, they seem to block you, and you think life would be much better if I did not have these challenges, but it wouldn't.

Because you would go to sleep even more. So you have the challenges, and that brings about an influx of energy on whatever level, even if it's physical. Every organism already encounters challenges on a physical level.

And then it grows, it gains new strengths by attempting to overcome these limitations. I sometimes mention, for example, if you want it, because it operates on every level. If you want to become physically stronger, you have to exercise, unless you have a job that is already physically hard-working, forces you to exert yourself physically.

Otherwise, you have to exercise, and you have to start doing, if you want to grow stronger, you have to lift weights. I'm not doing it anymore, but I'm just demonstrating. You lift weights.

Now, how does that feel at first? What are you doing? The way I put it is this.

You are making life difficult for your body, because your body is not going to grow stronger unless you make the body's life difficult. The same with jogging. The body doesn't really want to do it, but says, no, no, you have to do it.

Why are you making life difficult for your body? Your body would be so relaxed sitting on the sofa and watching Netflix. But it's not growing stronger, it's actually getting weaker, because it's not being challenged.

But challenge it, and then there is a demand for added energy. This just operates on the physical level, and this demand for added, there's a moment when there's a gap. You're exerting yourself, and the energy isn't there yet, so it's very hard.

But at some point, the energy comes flooding in, because there was a demand for it. And at that point, you may actually begin to enjoy the physical movement, because there's added energy. And suddenly, ah, strength is increasing.

And this is just on the physical level. There's a demand, and it comes also on a psychological level, it can operate, and on a spiritual level. When you become very unhappy in your life, then there is a possibility that the unhappiness causes you to awaken, because at some point, you realize, either because you've had a spiritual teacher or teaching, or even to some people, it happens spontaneously, the suffering, the psychological suffering that humans undergo can, at some point, bring about an awakening when you just can't stand it anymore. And something snaps, and suddenly you, it dissolves, and you're, oh, suddenly an awakening has happened. But it would not have happened if you hadn't gone through those sometimes years of suffering.

Quite often, I have encountered people who tell me, I would never have come to you or at least understood the books, or been open to anything spiritual, if I had not experienced, in some cases, it's a serious, very serious illness, or an accident, or some deep loss in their personal lives, and they come, and perhaps some of you, with some of you, that is also the case, there would not have been an opening if you had not gone through that suffering, and at some point, the suffering awakens you, and that is really the ultimate purpose of suffering, is to awaken. And then you realize that most suffering is actually unnecessary. It's actually created by the conditioned entity.

I'm talking about real psychological, there's physical pain, physical pain isn't suffering. Suffering is a psychological phenomenon, and this suffering can be transcended if you awaken, you transcend that suffering. In other words, you transcend unhappiness, you are no longer unhappy.

The mind loses its power to make you unhappy, because most of your unhappiness is created by unconscious thought processes, not situations. Most of unhappiness is created not by situations, difficult situations that you encounter, but what your mind is telling you about the difficult situations. The situation itself is as it is.

Then you impose an interpretation on it, the interpretation says this should not be happening, this is awful, why, always to me, why did he do that, et cetera, et cetera, interpretations. What causes the unhappiness and strengthens the fictitious self is the commentary, the interpretation. And that is an amazing realization that most of your unhappiness is created by your mind.

And that's an amazing thing. And then as you become more present, unhappiness disappears from your life. Now, am I saying that you will then always be happy?

No, it's not, happiness is a little bit superficial, the way I use the term happiness, because it usually means, yeah, ah, it's so great, it's wonderful, it's a bit superficial, although there are some spiritual teachers who use the term happiness and point to something deeper. For example, Ramana Maharshi says happiness is your true nature, but he's using it in a different sense. Obviously, there are situations, even as your unhappiness leaves you and you become more present, situations arise where you cannot say that you're happy, somebody close to you dies, your father, your mother, or even a child or somebody, or something very bad, an accident happens to someone, you, and you can't say, oh, I'm still happy, I'm so happy, he died, no, there's, there's, sadness will come, if that happens, because that's the human on you, still, the sadness comes, and yet, you are not consumed by the sadness when it comes, you are not consumed by it, it comes as a wave, and you may weep, because your father died, your mother died, your child died, or some recourse is going through suffering, and you, you may weep, and yet, underneath that, there is still a substratum, this is a geological term, there's a substratum of peace underneath it, I don't call that happiness, but it's deeper than that, there is an all-abiding peace underneath it, although there may be tears on the surface, but then they disappear, and you don't, you don't perpetuate emotional pain by continuously thinking about it for months and years, and years pass, and you're still unhappy for years, no, it comes as a wave, and then it subsides, and even when it's there, there is still a presence that you can sense underneath it, so in English, we don't have a word that applies to both men and women, I don't know if in Swedish, in German, you have the word mensch, which means, could mean, it's man and woman, but the English language doesn't have that, so you have to say human being, human being, and that's great, I like that, because I realize that, that points to the two dimensions that constitute your reality, you are a human, undoubtedly, which means you have a past, you have mental-emotional conditioning that makes up the person, the ego, the personality, you have a life situation, just, you are a human, and you have your desires as a human, you have your goals, and so on, all the things that you experience as a human, right, okay, but what about being? The being dimension is overlooked by most humans, they are lost in their human nature, they are completely unaware of that transcendent dimension of consciousness that actually is the essential reality to who or what they are, I sometimes call it your essence identity, the essence, your essence identity is the being of you, and the being is timeless, the being is consciousness itself, and then there's a human, and the two are together, and if you can awaken to the beingness of you, then of course you continue to be a human until you are no longer, until the body dissolves, but in the meantime, your task, your mission, your purpose, is to, as a human, to also embody the being, then you have both dimensions in your life, the limited dimension of here that is temporal, inseparable from time, and you have the transcendent dimension to who you are in the timeless realm of consciousness itself, and that is a continuous realization. At first, it may only come to you as glimpses in brief moments, and you feel suddenly a sense of lightness, and very peaceful, but very intensely alive, and you go, oh, and you may realize you're not thinking in those moments, thinking has subsided, but you haven't fallen asleep, you're awake, and then you may remember those moments, this was so wonderful, sometimes it happens when you go into nature, if you can really be there, nature can help you in your awakening, if you can really be there with all the senses, and be aware of the awareness itself when you are out there in nature, and sometimes it can happen to some humans almost accidentally, they're out climbing a mountain, or they're swimming, or somewhere in nature, and suddenly the person subsides, and just an awareness arises, and they go, oh, oh, and they think it's been caused by the beauty that they see, but it's not really that, it's been caused by the cessation of thinking, and you can have that in the middle of a city, and that's a, this is your continuous practice, is are you able to, as much as possible, let go of habitual, especially habitual, useless, self-serving thinking, thinking that only feeds the fictitious self, the ego, the entity, that loves, actually loves its problems, whether it's, it says, no, I don't love my problems, yes, you do, because you talk and think about them continuously, in fact, you create them continuously, through unconscious thinking, you create them, no, no, I don't, yes, you do.

And that this entity then becomes, as you, at first you have glimpses, sometimes accidental, they may only be a few seconds, and then perhaps a little bit longer, and then the two, gradually, the being and the human kind of merge, the being seeps into the human, and so the human, the conditioned entity, the human becomes less and less obnoxious, and less and less dysfunctional, and less and less creating completely unnecessary and absurd suffering for yourself and others, completely unnecessary and absurd suffering, created unconsciously by the ego, this entity, in its attempt to strengthen itself, it loves its problems and its enemies, oh, I feel much bigger, anger is great, and really, and you can revive, talk about it all the time, this is completely asleep, completely asleep, and so, as the awakening happens, the presence begins to sometimes completely replace the person, and at other times, it kind of shines through the person, in the same way that a light shines through the lampshade, the light shines through the lampshade, and the person still, yes, the person still has its conditioning, to some extent, and can never be totally free of the conditioning, there's always certain ways in which you behave, that's part to do with how you were brought up, your environment, all the conditioning, the country, even the language that you speak is the form of mental conditioning, all those things, they are still there, but the most dysfunctional and unhappiness-creating patterns, they subside more and more, certain patterns remain, as long as you are a person, a human, certain patterns remain, but not the heavy, deeply unhappy and obnoxious patterns, they gradually dissolve, and all is left are certain idiosyncrasies in your personality, and so on, that's okay, so that, the person remains, but it undergoes a substantial transformation, it no longer creates suffering, even in the face of challenges, because they continue to happen, even as you awaken, the universe will continue to present you with challenges, new ones, no matter what situation you go into, at first you, oh, this is great, I'm in a new situation, and before you know it, oh, it comes up from behind, another challenge, it won't, the universe won't leave you alone, even, but the wonderful thing is, if you're not undergoing the awakening process, every challenge that arises will make you more unconscious, it will strengthen the self, the self that is reacting, is reactive, and complaining all the time, and reacting, so the challenge will make you more unconscious, if you are not awakening yet, and that is, you can verify that in your, perhaps in your own experience, when things go wrong, there is a reactive entity there, that gets, works itself up, either you become angry, or despondent, or whatever the reactivity is, people like, in professions such as lawyers, often encounter people in their most unconscious states, because they tend to go to lawyers when things go wrong, they're being sued, or the divorce is happening, divorce lawyers, to be a divorce lawyer, potentially, could be a very enlightening job, because you encounter deep human unconsciousness, which most people, when they, in a conflict situation like that, become more unconscious than they are normally, deeply unconscious, and so that's, when you're being challenged by life, the challenge will create a reaction, and the reaction will, you become completely identified with the reaction, and you can even more unconscious in your normal state, which is unconscious enough, but it's now, it's more unconscious.

Oh, I can't stop thinking about it, and now, as you're awakening, challenge comes again, and then you suddenly see the possibility of actually being more intensely present when a challenge comes, and you go, it's like a, you know what a dimmer switch is on an electrical switch, you can turn up the light, a dimmer switch, so when a challenge comes, something goes wrong, so to speak, a difficult person arises, a difficult situation arises, some kind of loss arises, whatever kind of loss it may be, and instead of reacting, and becoming more unconscious, you suddenly sense you're becoming more present in the face of a challenge, and that is when the challenges of the world are becoming helpful to you, rather than make you unconscious, they can intensify the awakening process. Dear Eckhart, if you had to name the moment, achievement, accomplishment, of which you are most proud, what would you say? Well, some of you know it already, because I have spoken about it once or twice, I don't have to think anymore when I don't want to think, I can stop thinking, just like that, that's my greatest achievement.

It's a good thing I'm not in a position anymore where I have to fill in and submit a resume, list your accomplishments, I might get a job at an enlightened company, I don't know if they exist, I did meet somebody at Google, who is responsible for the spiritual dimension of well-being of Google, I might get a job there if he doesn't want it anymore, the job title, which is official, his job title is Jolly Good Fellow, it's on his card, I don't remember his name, he's written some books too, so that's a great thing for a company to have somebody who is responsible for the spiritual well-being of the company as a whole and the employees, not a professional therapist or anything like that, although that's not bad either, well, depending what kind of therapy he practices, yes, and if that is your achievement, then your life is a success story, if you are in prison and you've messed everything up in your life and you're in prison or whatever, wherever you are, a homeless shelter and suddenly you're able to enter prison, your life is a success story, well, it's not even a story, it's just a success, it's a success because there's no story anymore, why is it a success?

Because the shift in consciousness has happened into awakening, which is the very purpose of human existence here, I want, as you mentioned yesterday, and it's also the question here, I want to know the mind of God, the rest is details, said Einstein, well, that's basically what it is, the mind of God is in you, the mind of God is, your consciousness is the emanation of the mind of God, as I said, in the same way as the sunlight is an emanation of the sun, so if you know your consciousness, you know the mind of God and you realize you are an aspect of the mind of God and then knowing that is the fulfillment of human existence, the universe suddenly knows itself and the rest is details, what happens then in your life doesn't matter that much, but the likelihood is that there will be a great improvement because when you live in that connectedness, that even affects the externals of your life, it affects the way in which you relate to people, the energy that you emanate on a daily basis and the energy that you emanate on a daily basis is reflected back to you as certain events and people you meet and how people relate to you, how people like you or dislike you, that is the energy you emanate comes back and so if you live in that presence, if you're able to access the awareness dimension, then it changes very much how you relate to things, situations and people and that in turn determines how things, situations, people relate to you, so the tendency is for the universe to become, to be experienced as more helpful rather than antagonistic, not meaning though that it will be free of challenges, it will continue to challenge you one way or another also, so challenges come in mixed in with many helpful things and suddenly there, there you have another challenge and the challenge will just take you deeper again or it'll pull you out of presence and then you'll notice it and then it'll take you deeper. And so as the adult builds up a, see the identifications that form the identity and unfortunately it's never quite enough, there's always something missing and quite often it is painful to compare yourself to others, the more am I, do I have more or less than the others, so the ego is to do with what I can do, how I look, what I have, my possessions, abilities, playing an instrument, sports, good at this, good at that, whatever it may be. For a long time I struggled with an identity because I had an unhappy sense of identity, I couldn't identify with possessions because my parents didn't have any possessions or just basic ones and I didn't have any, I couldn't identify with a great, strong, good-looking body, I didn't have that, so I was struggling, I felt diminished, let's say compared to others I felt diminished and it's been very painful and so after many years I suddenly realized, ah, I got it, I know what I can do, I can be more knowledgeable than others, I can read books and then I can talk about these books intelligently and I can show others that I know more than they do. It worked, but it didn't make me happy, I was still very insecure and basically unhappy, trying to show off how, what a great intellectual I was, dropping names of famous authors, I just dropped Kafka but that was for another reason, that was not for egoic reasons, I can assure you, and so you live in a precarious way, feeling, my identity is not complete yet, I need something, there's something missing that's a very fundamental feeling for humans who are trapped in their own ego, there's something missing, there's something not right and so they are seeking, seeking, seeking and they are seeking to add something to who I am or who I think I am, it's always conceptual and so the ego also needs boundaries, the ego needs a boundary, it needs to say this is I, me and this is the other, without the boundary it cannot sustain its sense of identity, so it needs to feel better than or superior to somebody else, the boundary around the ego needs some kind of enemy, the other, people have, I forgot to mention an important part of conceptual identity for many people is also collective identity, it's not just personal, you also take things from the collective, the country where you live or your religion, whatever it may be or your political persuasion and that becomes part of your identity, your conceptual identity of a collective identity, it could also be race, if you are a racist then you identify with your race as superior than another race, another conceptual identity, religion can be an important part of your conceptual identity too and what it usually means, my religion is the only one that is true and all the others are false, when you hear that, it's a clear sign that it is the ego speaking, the ego has adopted, identified with the religion and it needs to pronounce all the others as inferior, only ours or mine or our religion is the only true one, all the others are going to hell, we are the only ones who are going to heaven, well that's very satisfying to the ego, wow, I'm one of the few chosen ones, look at me, wonderful, but then you need others that disagree with you because without the others you cannot sustain your conceptual identity, if the others don't disagree then your identity becomes fluid and dissolves, so you need the others who have opposite interpretations of your same religion or some other religion and they are your enemy because they are probably controlled by the devil, and so there, that's them, politically you can do it too, you have a political system that pronounces the other as not just inferior, as actually evil, that's all kinds, collective identities, any kind of prejudice that people have is to do with conceptual identity, race is one that many people have, if you don't have much else in your life you could identify with your race and say okay, our race is the greatest and all the others are inferior, and then that gives you your sense of identity, now you can see how you need the other, let's, in an imaginary scenario, let's say a person is a racist, one morning he or she wakes up, not having become a beetle as in Kafka, no, one morning he or she wakes up, suddenly finds himself on another planet and then begins to realize that everybody on this planet is exactly the same race as me, there is no other race, in fact, on this planet where this person suddenly finds himself, the word race does not even exist, because if everybody is the same race and the same skin color, you will not even have a word for race, so the entire identity that was built up on race would collapse immediately, without the other, it cannot be sustained, you could also say, you can take any example, let's say you have a noisy Italian sports car, because Italian sports cars are meant to be noisy, to attract attention, so you have a Lamborghini and it's painted red to attract even more attention and it gives your ego a boost, look at me, everybody looking because it's so noisy, and then in another imaginary scenario, the next day you wake up in another dimension and in this dimension every human being has the same red Lamborghini or whatever it is, immediately your ego cannot use it anymore, it becomes totally meaningless, so then your conceptual identity would then collapse, without the other, the egoic identity desperately needs the other, who is not the different me, the enemy, it loves its enemies, that's actually how many wars even start like that, you demonize an entire group of people, make them into an enemy, and then you feel a much stronger sense of identity, another identity is for people to identify even with their gender, male or female, I'm not sure gender has become a problematic thing, I'll put that aside for a moment, let's just say there's male and female, and in older cultures or still in some cultures now, an important part for a person's identity is actually their gender, if they are male, for example, they are male, that becomes a very important part of their conceptual sense of self, because it is implied that male is automatically superior to female, so you already have 50%, you can be a very stupid man, but you have superiority over 50% of the population that is female, no matter how stupid you are, you're a man, in some countries that still operates more or less, so I'm a man, and in some countries also females are conditioned to identify with and act out a particular way of behaving and speaking, female, they don't know it's totally conditioned, it's part of their identity, so I've been talking about the ego, the human ego, one could talk for hours, but I won't go on and on, you're all familiar with the ego, because at some point, before you went through a spiritual awakening, you also had an ego.

So, it all comes back to conceptual identity, is that who I am, is that all there is to me, or is there maybe a dimension to who I am that I have never known, I'm not aware of at all, is there more, or am I just this ego entity, the I, and that's why we are here, we need to, part of awakening to this dimension that exists in every human being, the possibility of realizing that there is in you the potential of a deeper dimension of consciousness in every human, and the discovery of this deeper dimension of consciousness in every human is the most important part of your life journey here on this planet. It is probably not possible to eliminate difficult humans completely from your life, challenging humans, unconscious humans, of course there are degrees of unconsciousness, there are some very extreme forms of unconsciousness, such as humans who are so unconscious that they perpetuate violence and so on, so extreme forms of unconsciousness, and then less extreme forms of unconsciousness, but it's still unconsciousness.

[Speaker 1] (6:37:50 - 6:49:11)
So, as far as extreme forms of unconsciousness are concerned, yes, it would be probably advisable not to associate with humans who manifest extreme forms of unconsciousness, so not to live with a violent partner, or it could also be just emotional violence or somebody who's getting the grip of deep negative emotions or pain bodies that almost never leaves, but then there are other more regular forms of unconsciousness that most humans that you meet will manifest.

First of all, there are family members, everybody has family members, and that in itself is challenging. Family can be a very loving and wonderful thing in some cases, and in other cases family can be extraordinarily challenging, and sometimes even both. You can have a parent and you can love them, but they can also be very challenging.

That reminds me, it's very funny, well it's funny or maybe not, when I was a child I had a dream once, one night, and that was such a remarkable dream that I remembered it all my life. I must have been about 11 or 12. Before I tell you the dream, I have to add my dad was very much in the grip of his ego and prone to outbursts of extreme anger.

Not directed, fortunately, not directed towards me, but usually directed towards my mother and sometimes other people too. So, living with him was like living with an unexploded bomb that could go off at any moment. So, I had this dream.

I had just killed my dad and I had cut him into little pieces and put him into a sack and I hid the sack under the bed. And after I had done that, the door opened and my dad came home from work and I ran towards him and I gave him a hug. Into such amazing dreams, so it means I both hated him and I loved him.

Both emotions existed because there was a real being there behind the anger and his ego. There was a being and I loved the being of my dad, but then there was the ego which I hated and so these ambivalent emotions were there at the same time. And often it is the case that humans, especially family members, you may have a very conflicting relationship.

You feel drawn to them and yet they're so difficult. But now, unless these are extreme forms of unconsciousness, they're family members, you just have to accept that these are family members. Maybe you don't live with them anymore, but you see them occasionally or whatever, you have interactions.

And that is a good way of practice, unless they are, as I said, unless they display extreme forms of unconsciousness, it is better to continue with and use them as challenging humans that help you become more conscious. Because you become more conscious of your reactions towards their challenging behavior. So that your reactivity is for you to, you awaken by becoming conscious of your reactivity, whatever, so that you're able to accept them as they are without resistance.

And that is a great shift that happened to me after I went through the awakening when I was 29. After that, the relationship with my father, of course, I was no longer living with him. I left at 18.

One of the happiest moments of my life when I left home, not just my dad, it's also his second marriage. And so I left wonderful, but I was still at this ambivalent emotions towards him. At 29, after the awakening, I was able to accept him totally.

It was easier because I was not a child would not be able to do that, a child living, but was able to accept him totally allow him his ego. When whenever we met come together, it was fine. And he changed a little.

His ego was not less, less and less extreme, it was still there. But chunks broke off his ego. So in some areas of his life, he was actually quite conscious suddenly.

And then in other areas of his life, the ego was still there very strongly. But that was the life that was a wonderful liberation when I was able to accept him, instead of demanding that he should be more conscious. That is a demand that that nobody couldn't meet.

If you demand of another human, they should be more conscious. They can't because nobody can display behavior that is beyond their level of consciousness. So whatever this behavior they display is a reflection of their level of consciousness.

And many humans have still have very little choice, because they are totally in the grip of their conditioning, the mental emotional conditioning. And so that applies not, of course, not just to family members. There are also then other humans that you interact with in daily life, in your work, usually.

Most people go, many people go to work, and then you interact with other humans. And then you don't have much of a choice, you have to interact, or you leave, you have to leave your job. But then you go into another job, and you get other unconscious humans.

So you might as well do it there. Unless again, there's extreme forms, some companies are totally toxic, then it might be better and more wise to leave. But unless they're extremely unconscious and toxic, then you might as well practice there.

So you practice with difficult humans. And you practice by, first of all, dropping the demand that they should be different. It doesn't mean that you put up with everything that they do.

Sometimes you may have to state clearly, your behavior is not acceptable. And I don't want not having it. If you're able to do that, probably can't do it.

If you do it to the director of your company, then it has to be associated with giving in your notice that you want to leave, then you can tell him that your behavior is unacceptable. But if you're not ready to leave yet, then maybe better not to tell him that. Unless you want to be sacked, that's another possibility.

But seeking out other humans who are more conscious, that kind of happens more naturally. As you grow in consciousness, you more naturally will come into contact and attract other humans who are also more conscious, who are also awakening. And it could even happen that some people who are in your immediate environment begin to awaken because of you.

There's no guarantee. It's certainly not everybody. But it could be that some, because they may notice, maybe not even consciously notice, but something in them registers that you are not quite the same person that you were before.

And so, and you do not reinforce or feed their unconsciousness, because you're, you bring in more presence. And then you may be able to, but not by thinking that I need to make this person more conscious, because that's not how it works. It works in a more organic way.

If you do not contribute to unconscious interactions, then perhaps, let's say a friend of yours is very much almost addicted to gossiping about others. And the main thing when you get together is that he or she starts gossiping about others. And in the past, you perhaps participated.

And now as you are awakening, you no longer participate. Then it's possible that some of their presence that the stream of gossiping, which is a mind stream of a particular type, may not, because you're not feeling it anymore, it may begin to dissipate. Because it means it's easier with two people gossiping.

One feeds the other, they feed themselves mutually, feed each other. But it could also happen that this person begins to lose interest in you, and will then interact less and less, and you don't meet them much anymore. And finally, you don't hear of them anymore, or they say, you're no fun anymore.

So that could happen.

[Speaker 2] (6:49:11 - 6:49:21)
But also, as I said, more conscious humans will most likely also come into your life. So you have both.

[Speaker 1] (6:49:40 - 7:16:34)
But your happiness or fulfillment does not depend on any other human's acceptance of who you are, that would be a deluded thought. It sometimes happens that members of the same family evolve at very different rates. So the sense of separation can come if one member of the family evolves spiritually much more rapidly than another.

And that is something that you cannot do anything about. You need to accept that your sisters, their viewpoints and their judgments of you arise because of the way in which they have been conditioned by their culture. So this is part of the mental conditioning.

There's nothing really personal about it. They have been conditioned in a certain way. To some extent, you have gone beyond your conditioning because anybody who begins to awaken spiritually goes beyond, also simultaneously, begins to go beyond their cultural conditioning.

And that applies whether you're from Somalia, whether you're from Australia or whether you're in the United States or anywhere. If you are not awakening spiritually, you are your behavior, your viewpoints, your opinions, the way in which you judge other people, the way in which you judge other cultures, all that is conditioned by the content of your mind, the culture and family and so on that you grew up in. So you are basically a conditioned entity.

And your opinions and viewpoints are not really yours. They are the product of your conditioning. And so that's the case with your sisters.

So sometimes the same thing applies to close friends. I've had many similar questions of people who had a close friendship with someone, and sometimes it's the case with a husband and wife. Often I've had many, in many cases, one of them, either she or he, began to evolve and awaken spiritually.

And a gap suddenly arose between the one that was still totally conditioned and the one that was beginning to awaken spiritually. In some cases, they can still live together. It depends on the nature and degree of the person who is not yet awakening spiritually.

Depends that the ways in which this non-awakened state manifests differs from person to person. Some you can live with, you can awaken, and you know your partner is not, and you can totally surrender to that fact that your partner is not awakening yet. In other cases, it will create a hostility, a growing hostility in your partner.

The ego objects to the other beings becoming so different and changing it. They don't understand you anymore. And so, and then a separation happens.

With husband and wife, then it sometimes happens that they do that different ways. In the case of a family member, there's a link that remains, so you cannot just say, we go our different ways. There's always a certain bond between you and your family members.

But the first thing is, you ask me what I would do. What I would do is, first of all, understand why. And this is what I've just been talking about.

If you understand, then already it is a helpful thing. If you don't understand why is this happening, but if you understand that these people act out of their, your sisters act out of their conditioning, you have begun, already are in the process of transcending your conditioning. Whether or not they will also awaken or begin to awaken spiritually, we don't know.

So in the meantime, all you can do, or all I could, if I were you, all I could do was continue to recognize the limitation in them. It is, they are conditioned in their responses. Recognize that that is what happens, not to blame them for it, not to feel guilty because you make them angry, because you don't.

It's their conditioning that makes them angry. So you don't feel guilty because you are different from them. I wouldn't.

I'm talking about, I would not feel guilty. I would simply recognize compassionately what it is that makes them say and do the things they say and do towards you. And you cannot even explain to them.

You can't, you, it would be futile to say to them, I know why you're saying that to me because you're totally conditioned. What? They wouldn't know what you're talking about because they know nothing outside of their conditioning.

So compassion arises, compassion and acceptance of a person's limitations. You can still hold them in your heart and realize there is an essence in them that is lovable. And you can continue to be connected to that essence of who they are.

If they refuse to talk to you, then you have to accept and surrender that you can hold them in your meditation. You can even sometimes look at their photo, look beyond the surface appearance of who they are, and the photo can be a little help to establish the inner connection. Then you don't need the photo anymore to establish the inner connection, feel the inner connection with their innermost selves.

And even if they don't talk to you, that can still be there. And then you send in the conventional new age language, you send loving energy to them. There's some truth in that.

So there's a loving, still a loving connection, even though you don't talk. So recognition to summarize, recognition of why this is happening, accepting their, your family member's limitations and not judging them. They judge you, of course, because their judgments of you are part of their conditioning, but you don't need to judge them.

You simply see that this is a limitation of their state of consciousness at this present time. They will awaken too, in time, eventually, this lifetime or the next. So then you can begin to feel peaceful about it so that it does not become a source of suffering, continuous source of suffering at the back of your mind.

So if you can be in a loving relationship, even though you might not meet them much anymore, or at all, you can stay in a state of love towards them, compassionately accept their limitations, and then see what happens. Sometimes in that way, a healing does happen. It may be that at some point, there's a crack in their conditioning, and they're suddenly able to accept you, who you are for who you are now.

But your happiness or fulfillment does not depend on any other human's acceptance of who you are. That would be a deluded thought. You think you can only be happy if these people accept and understand you.

Some people have that with their parents. They say, my dad, my father, they don't understand me at all. It's terrible, terrible.

I'm trying to explain what I'm at. Of course, they cannot understand you. It's beyond their comprehension if you have awakened spiritually, and they haven't.

So compassionately accept that they cannot understand you. Instead of trying to explain yourself to them, just be there in a loving way with them when you meet for Christmas or Thanksgiving, and you hear all the judgments coming at you from them. You should have, why don't you, look where it's taken you, look at your sister, she married a millionaire, and you are into that weird kind of meditation stuff that's not getting you anywhere.

Whatever judgments come, say, okay, I know that this is what you think and feel, and I think and feel differently, that's all. So you don't need to justify accepting people's limitations and suddenly realizing whether or not your father, your mother, your sister, your brother, or anybody else close to you accepts you for who you are is really not, you become free of the need to be accepted, but you can nevertheless have a deeper connection, keep that deeper connection and connectedness with them. And the other is, another great thing you want to practice is, and this is so important, awareness of sense perceptions without labeling.

You can do it anywhere, in the middle of the city, in the country, on the beach, at home, in the office, in the restaurant, in a cafe. Let's take, let's take cafe as an example. You sit, you're having a cup of tea or coffee, and you sit in a cafe and use it, instead of going to your phone, use it as a spiritual practice.

It's a cafe practice, but you don't have to drink coffee with it, you can drink anything. It's a public place, and you sit there for 10 minutes, let's say, looking around at all, what's happening around you, all the people and what they are doing, and sitting, most of them will be on their phones, that's okay, but you are not. And you look, and there's the room, and you might see what's happening in the street also.

And as you sit there, you get in touch with your presence, the sense of presence and beingness. Maybe feel the inner body, and feel your own presence, the presence of consciousness, you as consciousness. And then you look around, and you listen, there are sounds, and you look.

And your practice is not to label your sense perceptions mentally. In other words, you're just looking, and as you look, feel the presence of yourself. And then look around in thoughtless awareness.

It's a wonderful practice. And you will love what you see, because every human is an expression of the one life, in their own way. Every human is quite lovely and lovable, but you don't have to say that in your mind.

It's a realization of the aliveness of every human. But you cannot sense the aliveness of every other human if you cannot sense your own aliveness. So your own presence or aliveness is the basis for sensing the aliveness of other humans.

And by doing that, you love them, in a way. Not the clinging love that says, oh, I want you. You're quite happy with them doing what they do.

You don't need to want to interact, necessarily. You just be there. You just love them.

They're all manifestations of the one, the one life. And they're all so different. Isn't that amazing?

Not a single human is the same. Out of billions, they're all different. That's wonderful.

And yet, the essence in each one is the one essence that is one with your essence. And you can sense that if you don't label them. So that's a lovely practice, to enjoy the aliveness of things in a limited space.

If you sit, I mean, you're in a relatively passive situation when you sit in a cafe, there's a coffee, you might be tea, whatever you are drinking, but you're not doing much. So it's relatively easy to be there as the presence. And you don't have to do it in a way that people necessarily notice, or they probably won't notice anyway, because they're on their phones.

They don't see anything. But if they happen to be looking up from their phones, it might look a bit weird that you are not on your phone. There's something wrong with you.

So that's one place. Another place, of course, is in nature. And that's a wonderful way to practice also.

Choose a spot where you stand or sit somewhere. And lying is not immediately advisable if you lie down, because that can easily take you below thought. You want to remain above thought.

So you stand or sit, and then nature. That might even be easier than in a cafe, because in a cafe, there's lots of things still happening that stimulate thought, because people are talking, or the general energy field is mind. If you go into nature, you're in no mind.

And then the same way you perceive, in that alert awareness, the miraculous life forms around you that have no name, if you don't give them names, have no name. And if you don't obscure things with names, you can sense the inherent aliveness. They speak to you.

So there's another dimension that reveals itself to you that is everywhere in nature that you don't know when you're stuck in your mind and label things. And that's a beautiful way of practicing presence. Don't destroy nature by getting...

I mean, dreadfully, you're sitting under a tree in this miraculous place, the same place where the Buddha found enlightenment, sitting under a tree, and you get out your phone. It's such a wonderful opportunity under this... Trees are wonderful beings.

And you sit under the tree, and there's the vastness of the sky and nature, and to just be there in that moment as, not as a person, but as a conscious presence. And don't overdo it. Even if you just do it for 10 minutes, just be there.

Watch. So the practice is sense perception without mentally labeling them. It requires an alertness.

It's a choice. You make that choice to... And that's a shift in consciousness.

And every time you do that, you are not there as a person. The person is kind of temporarily disappeared. You are there as a conscious presence, as the deeper presence of life itself.

And that's beautiful. So that's a practice. Same thing, practice nature, practice in a public place.

You can practice at every traffic light, if you're driving. Every time the light is red, practice presence. Red light, presence.

And look at the beauty of that red light. It's not an... Ultimately, everything is natural, because that's energy, too.

It's a manifestation of energy, the red traffic light. It has an aliveness, too. It sounds weird, but it does.

And so there's a light, and it's telling you to be present. People have worked out... I don't know who did it.

Somebody reaches the age of 70, and they start driving at the age of 20. Somebody worked out how many... Unfortunately, I don't retain a lot of information in my mind.

So you would have spent a year or so or more of your life sitting at traffic lights. And for most people, that is something they don't like. But why not choose that?

Be present. Also, another thing I mentioned, little activities, washing your hands, be there completely, takes you out of your mind, sensory perception. Ah, water, beautiful.

Maybe scent of soap. And you give it complete attention, which means you're not thinking. You're just experiencing.

Elevator, lift, elevator, you're waiting for it. You can either get out your phone, or you can just be... choosing presence.

And the more you choose it, the easier it gets, and the deeper you go into presence. And then you realize after a while, you didn't really choose. Presence chose you.

Presence wanted to come through you. Because sometimes people ask me, well, who is choosing presence? Well, it's just one way of looking at it.

Presence, when you get out of the way as a person, presence is there. That is... So use all those things to transform your life.

Use the opportunities of obstacles when they arise, seemingly obstacles. Accept each moment as if you had chosen it. That's vital.

So I've given you these portals into out of the mind and into presence. And of course, a primordial portal into presence is the present moment. So that is always there.

Coming into the present moment is an aspect of every practice that I have given. It always involves coming into the, whether you go into the body, whether you're aware of your breathing, whether you practice sensory perception without labeling, it always involves being more conscious and more fully in the present moment. So therefore, an associated practice is to simply become aware of the present moment.

And that's an amazing thing too, because, and it's so vital because there is nothing else. So if you never fully acknowledge the is-ness of this moment, you miss the whole thing, which is called your life. You miss the whole thing if you're not aware of the present moment.

But how to become aware of the present moment is, encapsulates all that we have spoken about. First step, it has first level of being aware of the present moment is to be aware of your sense perceptions. That brings, it's the first step into the present moment.

Then perhaps you're aware of your breathing and your inner body and sense perception at the same time. So first you become aware of where you are, what's around you, or what you're doing. And then you go deeper into the present moment, and the essence of the present moment is you.

So if you get the essence of what we call the present moment is consciousness, and consciousness is the space in which everything happens. Consciousness is, the one thing that never changes is the present moment. It's always now, it's always now.

And what is the present moment in essence? In essence, the present moment is not what happens in the present moment. The deeper essence is the present moment is the space for whatever happens.

And there's the space like the canvas, however you want to call it. So you are aware of yourself ultimately as the present moment. And this realization that ultimately you are the present moment, those words had not come to me when I was writing the power of now.

So it never got into the book, because the words came to me after I'd already written the book, said, oh, I should have put that in. Oh no, why didn't I put that in? Oh, you're no good.

I didn't do that. So you can, you sense the essence of what present moment really means as consciousness. The one thing that is beyond any doubt that you are right now conscious, and that's not the right way of putting it.

If I say you are conscious, you are consciousness is better. You are consciousness. Everything else could be a dream or an illusion, including this room and me talking.

Am I dreaming this? He's talking, he's saying, I may be dreaming this. Okay.

Maybe you are, maybe all of sensory perceived so-called reality is a kind of dream. It's a way of looking at it. Certainly everything dissolves quickly.

And then where was it? Where is it gone? It's gone.

And the dream dissolves too. But what remains beyond any doubt, even if it is all a dream, there needs to be a consciousness for the dream to be perceived. And you are that.

But what scientists don't look at is their own consciousness. So you have the two realms, the two mysteries, the outer space, and then the macrocosm, and you have the microcosm for most fundamental mystery. The fact that the universe is conscious, that is the most amazing miracle.

[Speaker 3] (7:16:58 - 7:17:28)
Our goal is to reach as many people as possible with this new program, and that there's a generous scholarship fund that's available as well, because we want to make sure that all of the people that are interested in a spiritual guide to conscious manifestation can attend. And now it is a true honor to bring forward the renowned author of The Power of Now and a New Earth, Eckhart Tolle.

[Speaker 1] (7:17:29 - 7:17:42)
Eckhart, welcome. Thank you, Tammy, and hello to everybody, wherever you are in this present moment.

[Speaker 3] (7:17:49 - 7:17:52)
Are you ready, Eckhart, for our first question?

[Speaker 1] (7:17:53 - 7:17:55)
I suppose I'm ready, yes.

[Speaker 3] (7:17:57 - 7:18:13)
You're always ready. Here we go. I've heard different things about manifesting, and I'm curious to know what Eckhart's approach is and what makes it a spiritual approach versus other kinds of approaches.

[Speaker 2] (7:18:17 - 7:18:18)
Thank you.

[Speaker 1] (7:18:40 - 7:35:47)
Perhaps the conventional approach to manifestation, we could, before I go into that, we could talk of manifestation, conscious manifestation, and spiritually conscious manifestation as a temporary division. Manifestation happens continuously, whether you're aware of it or not. It simply means that there's a correlation between your state of consciousness, which we may also call vibrational frequency, and the way in which you experience reality or the world.

There's a correlation between your reality, your world, and your state of consciousness. That is undoubtedly true. Now, for most humans, most humans are still not aware of that.

They believe that the world they find themselves in, their reality, is a totally separate thing from their inner being. They've been put into this reality. Everybody is born into a particular set of circumstances.

Then humans grow up, and they become conditioned. In some way, they're already conditioned when they are born, although there is a belief that every baby is a blank slate, but that is not entirely true at all. Every baby already comes into this world with a certain baggage, which in Eastern terminology, we could call karma.

Obviously, the baby is not a blank slate. Even if you don't believe in karma, you can see that genetic, your genes play a particular role. As far as the person that you become is concerned, your genes have a lot to do with it.

Even the time you spent in the womb of your mother already is a form of conditioning. We all know if a mother indulges in alcohol, that can negatively affect the life of the fetus and the embryo, and then has negative effects for the rest of his or her life. Certainly, there are two factors when you look at external circumstances.

There's the conventional expression of nurture and nature. Nurture and nature, that means nature means who or what you are is your conditioning. Nurture is the external circumstances of your life that contribute to who you become as a human being, the world you're born into.

We all get conditioned in a particular way through our upbringing. I would suggest we're already conditioned through past lifetimes. The emotional state of our mother even before we were born, et cetera, et cetera.

Everybody comes into life with a particular set of mental-emotional conditioning. This mental-emotional conditioning determines how you perceive the world. It determines the way in which you respond or react to the circumstances of your life, what you say, et cetera.

You manifest your life unconsciously through the mental-emotional conditioning that you are born into. There's no freedom in that. You don't really have a choice because in that state, there's a lack of awareness.

You do not realize that you perpetuate the circumstances of your life according to your conditioning. Often, you find that the same dysfunction that were already manifested in the parent's life and the grandparent's life are then repeated and perpetuated in the child's life. Then that child has children and similar dysfunctions operate again because you inherit them.

The conditioning of your thinking mind that you identify with when you're trapped in the egoic consciousness determines how you respond or rather react to what's going on around you in your life. And you can see with very unconscious people, they always blame the circumstances of their life for what's wrong. It's always somebody else's fault that there's something not right in my life.

There's always somebody else to blame, whether it's actual human beings or fate or

God or the politicians or the social conditions. I'm not denying that social conditions often are an important factor, but people then put all the blame outside. They never look within into their own conditioning.

And so, they manifest the circumstances of their life unconsciously, often in a very negative way, because that's all ego. This unconscious identification with the mental emotional conditioning is ego. And so, they manifest from their ego.

They react to circumstances. And let's say something challenging or negative happens to you, a person or whatever it may be, and you react in the same old way. And by reacting against something challenging, you amplify it through your reaction.

You can see it when you react to an unpleasant or unconscious person. If you react, you amplify his or her unconsciousness. And you even amplify your own unconsciousness through your reaction.

If you react to difficult circumstances in your life, like lack of money, unpleasant living situation, problematic relationships, if you react against the circumstances of your life, which always manifests in the present moment, you amplify those circumstances through your reaction. And so, people don't realize that. So, they become trapped in a vicious circle.

Something negative happens, and they react negatively and amplify that thing and make it even worse. And that then becomes a confirmation that they have always been right in assuming that the world is doing it to me. So, you become the victim of the world in your own perception.

You become the victim of other people. You're the victim of the world. You're complaining constantly.

And by doing that, you perpetuate all those things that are happening to you. And not only that, you amplify them. That's karma.

You're experiencing, you're manifesting through your karma and create new karma. You make other people unhappy. You're already unhappy.

You make more people unhappy. You create new, in Eastern terms, that is karma. So, everybody's manifesting without knowing it.

Then a moment comes when you become conscious of the conditioning of your mind and emotions, your mental emotional conditioning. And then you become, you realize that it is possible for you, to some extent, step out of the conditioning of your mental emotional field. And this means awareness has arisen in you, a vital part of awakening.

You begin to become aware of your own conditioning. And then some freedom comes in. Choice comes in.

The possibility of choosing when you become conscious in certain situations, that you no longer need to react in the old conditioned way. You become conscious of what your mind is doing. The self-talk that everybody lives with, the voice in the head.

What kind of self-talk are you experiencing in your mind? Is it very negative? What is the running commentary in your mind when you go through your life every day?

What is it saying about certain circumstances and people that you encounter every day? What is that? And suddenly, you become aware of that running commentary, the voice in the head.

And that awareness is the beginning of your awakening. And when that awareness arises, you can begin by changing dysfunctional mind patterns as you discover them. For example, you may discover that you do a lot of mental complaining, both internally and externally, about other people and situations.

There's always something to complain about. And suddenly, you become aware of it. And that awareness gives you some degree of freedom.

And you can then detect the pattern and say, I'm going to let go of that. And instead, you can welcome circumstances as they arise. Instead of treating every circumstance that arises and every challenge as an enemy, you can begin to welcome it.

That's the beginning of conscious manifestation. So, you realize there is an important correlation between what your inner being and your outer circumstance. And then slowly you realize, as you change the way in which you respond to situations, the situations also begin to change.

And that's at first in a very subtle way. That first, I realized that first time in my life, when I was 17 years old, somebody left some books with us. And for the first time I read about that there is your state of consciousness and your life experience are linked.

And that was my first awakening. It wasn't the deepest awakening yet, but it was an awakening. And then you can begin to consciously manifest by making positive statements, instead of negative statements, by manifesting gratitude towards whatever arises in the present moment, appreciation and gratitude instead of complaining.

And then things actually improve slowly, you notice a definite change, you let go of the patterns of resistance, which are loosely linked to the egoic consciousness, and gradually experience positive change in your life. So, that's already the beginning of conscious manifestation. So, when you look at conscious manifestation in conventional terms, and the assumption is that you realize that you can bring about circumstances, more positive circumstances in your life.

And the assumption is that the goal is to that when you get, you can get what you want. And when you get what you want, that will be the fulfillment of your life, the satisfying fulfillment of your life is getting what you want. That's often the assumption behind conventional ways of manifesting.

That, however, has certain limitations. Because even if you become very good at getting what you want, you will find at some point that even that is not ultimately satisfying. You will find no matter what you get, and what you achieve, whatever new set of circumstances arise in your life, you will find there too, it is not in the long term, not ultimately fulfilling, there's always still something missing.

And often, the wonderful thing that you manifested can easily turn around and create suffering again, turn into its opposite. I've met many people who were able to manifest great fame and wealth, I've met quite a few of those people. And so they were poor, then they manifested.

One person I know wrote himself a check, a fictitious bank check with $10 million with his name on, put it in his wallet. And every day, every time he took out his wallet, he saw the check written to himself. He didn't have any money written to himself $10 million.

And for I don't know how long, three years, four years, every day he saw this check of $10 million. And four years or so later, he received a check for $10 million. Well, he happened to be an actor, and a good one.

So that we need to look into that also. But that's how it worked. And the next stage of the story is great success.

And then in the midst of this person's successful story, in the midst of the mansion that he then lived in, deep depression overcame him. Periods of despair and depression and darkness. How is that possible?

He got what he wanted. And that's not an isolated case. That is very common.

So getting what you want is not the ultimate aim. It will not be the ultimate fulfillment. It can be a byproduct of something deeper.

[Speaker 2] (7:35:48 - 7:35:51)
A byproduct of something deeper.

[Speaker 1] (7:35:51 - 7:39:15)
And this something deeper is realizing that in life, there are two dimensions. There's a dimension of doing and activity and action. And there's a dimension of being.

Being and doing. If there's only doing in your life, and manifesting has a lot to do with doing, because the first doing is having a thought. It's already a doing.

You create a thought. And then the thought, if done rightly, may create an external reality. But it still operates in the realm of doing.

That's fine. We need to do here. But we are also here to awaken to a deeper dimension of who we are.

We are here to awaken to the dimension of being. And the foundation, then, for whatever you do in your manifestation practice, the foundation is not something that you create at some future point. The foundation is going more deeply into being.

It's the realization of being. And that only can be realized in the still. And you realize of the presence within you.

You could call it the consciousness, the light of consciousness. You realize that you are. There's suddenly a depth that you discover within yourself.

And that is the depth of being. And that is true spiritual awakening. It's realizing the essence of who you are, which is not the person.

The person is here to do things, but there is something deeper, a source of who or what you are. And that's being. So, you realize your own beingness.

I am. In that moment of stillness, you realize the beingness of you without any thought or reference to your personal history. There's only the realization that when you forget about who or what you are as a person, when you forget about your age and your gender and your problems, what is left?

Forget about all that. What is left of you without that? There's only this moment.

And you realize that there's something essential that's left. That's the sense of beingness, of being.

[Speaker 6] (7:39:15 - 7:39:16)
I am.

[Speaker 1] (7:39:17 - 7:47:11)
That is the realization of being. And that becomes the foundation for everything. When you once you're rooted in that, from there you can manifest.

But it is whatever you you manifest in your life, it will come from a deeper level from that realization of being rather than from egoic consciousness. Because the only way to transcend ego is to discover that which is beyond the mental emotional entity that you usually call yourself, that you think you are. The only way to transcend ego is to go to that deeper place within yourself.

Then that deeper place has a vast intelligence in that depth of being that is connected to universal intelligence, not your personal intelligence. There's a vast intelligence and that intelligence can use your mind. It can flow into your mind and through that this intelligence can then create and manifest in your life whatever it wishes to create.

In order to bring more goodness, more harmony, more love, more abundance into this world, it can create through you and use your mind. And that is spiritual, that is what is spiritual way of manifesting. No longer from ego, but from the deeper level of being.

And so that's, one could say that then whatever it is that you create in your life, what you manifest in your life, is always a byproduct of something deeper. It's always, whatever circumstances arise in your life, they are important, but not absolutely important. They are relatively important.

All these things, your health, your financial situation, your relationship, your, whatever you do for work, activities, they're all important, relatively important, but not absolutely important. But only one thing is absolutely important and that is your connectedness with being, the realization of being, to be rooted in that deeper level of who you are. And so the ability to manifest is not the ultimate spiritual realization.

It is a lovely thing and for many people it's an important thing in here as, because you live in two dimensions. You live in the dimension of this world of doing activity, thinking, doing, but you are also connected to the transcendent dimension, that spiritual dimension. Now, that connectedness with the spiritual dimension is most vitally important thing in your life.

All you need is to discover that. Then if you have enough time, then from there you can manifest. I'm saying if you have enough time, because it could be that you discover that dimension when you are 80 years old, or maybe you are very ill and you discover it just a month before you die.

There's not much time to manifest anything externally. It's no longer necessary for you in those circumstances. But the most vital thing, however, has already happened.

It's the realization of being. So manifestation is important, but not absolutely important. They go together, the being and the doings.

But the rootedness in being is the foundation for spiritual manifestation. So always go back to being. So whenever you begin to use affirmations or visualizations of what you want in your life, go into stillness first.

Connect with that, the depths of stillness within yourself. Become aware of yourself as the being rather than the person, the presence, here and now. So all power resides in the present moment, because that is, you access the power of the present moment.

From there, you can manifest. And that we could call spiritual manifestation. And what it is that you want to manifest from that level also will no longer be egoically motivated.

It comes from a deeper place. So I could talk about that for a long, long time. But it's vital to realize where the power actually lies.

The power lies in the presence, in the present moment. The point of power is always in the present moment, but the present moment is ultimately the essence of who or what you are. And so that's the most vital thing in your life, that realization.

And that then changes the vibrational frequency of your entire being changes. And even if you never used any affirmation, you would still manifest certain life situations and circumstances around you because of your vibrational frequency. If you did not have any desire to manifest anything in particular, you would still manifest a reality around you that corresponds in whatever way to the vibrational frequency of your being.

So you're always manifesting, even if you're not really interested in manifesting, the vibrational frequency of your being will still determine the way in which you experience this world, your reality. So this is a very deep thing. One could talk about it for a long time.

I've already spoken for too long. Let's go on to the next question. They're all connected anyway.

[Speaker 3] (7:47:14 - 7:47:23)
The next question, Eckhart, is why is teaching on conscious manifestation at this particular time important and relevant for you?

[Speaker 1] (7:47:24 - 7:47:32)
Yes. No, we're living in a very interesting time. Interesting.

[Speaker 2] (7:47:34 - 7:47:47)
We are moving into a time of, collectively, of, I would say, turmoil, perhaps even chaos.

[Speaker 1] (7:47:48 - 8:00:15)
There is always, in the world, on every level, there's always the play between order and chaos. There are periods of dissolution, things breaking apart, and there are periods of time when things come together again. So one could say, well, isn't this a particularly difficult time if you want to manifest something growing, something new coming into this world?

But the collective around you is manifesting dissolution and chaos and decay. Well, it's doubly important in these circumstances to pay particular attention to the, what I just called the vibrational frequency of your being, because there is a gravitational pull around you in the collective towards unconsciousness. Because that is, many people, when things begin to fall apart, in many people's lives that manifest this, their level of consciousness goes down.

They become very reactive. There's conflict between groups of people, enemies, within countries even, not just one country against other countries, even within countries, there is and will be increasing turmoil. And there's a gravitational pull of that that could draw you into unconsciousness also.

So you need to stay awake and then you manifest. Your contribution could be very important so that you manifest to a greater or lesser degree a certain field of light around you so that you don't get drawn into the collective darkness that's descending. So there is, even if you don't manifest anything in particular, although you may do, you are connected with the depths of being or presence.

And that not only protects you to a great extent, it protects you, but it also alleviates the effects of the surrounding unconsciousness. It counteracts the collective unconsciousness. So if a sufficient number of humans are able to stay conscious, that will also manifest in their outer environment.

And perhaps the chaos will not be as extreme as it would otherwise have been, because your state of consciousness affects the world. It's a correlation between your state of consciousness and your surrounding reality. So at this particular time, it's very important to stay conscious.

And then if you stay conscious, that will have a certain effect on the world. So it becomes a manifestation of what happens around you. Whether perhaps where you live will be less affected by the turmoil that's coming, or if it does touch you, if the turmoil does come to you and touch you from the external, internally, you will be still be free.

Internally, you will be at peace. Even if it does come, there is a transcendent dimension within you that you're aware of. And nobody can predict how or to what degree the turmoil in this world will affect you.

But what we do know is your vibrational frequency is of utmost importance here, not only for yourself, but also for the totality. Let's see as many humans as possible. If they stay conscious, not being drawn into the collective unconsciousness, which manifests everywhere, even on the internet and social media, it's everywhere, the collective.

Don't get drawn into that. Stay conscious so that you manifest a more conscious world, even though the totality around you may be drawn into deep unconsciousness and turmoil. And another important thing is, it is at a time of collective, whether individual or collective, suffering, because when this turmoil comes, it brings about suffering for humans.

It's a time of suffering that the possibility arises for more humans to awaken out of their egoic consciousness. Many will be drawn into unconsciousness, yes. But for others, the possibility arises of awakening out of the egoic and through the suffering.

Suffering is the great awakener. Suffering can make you more unconscious. Often it is the case.

Suffering can also awaken you. The ultimate purpose of suffering is to awaken. It doesn't always happen.

You may have to wait another lifetime, and another, and another, and suffer more, and more, and more, and finally it happens. Or it could happen in this lifetime that the suffering comes, and it brings about an awakening. I've met countless people who have only become interested in awakening, or not interested in it, have come to realize that what this is about is extremely important, because they have suffered.

And this brings me to another point connected with manifestation. Sometimes you don't get always what you want to manifest. Now there can be, I think we may have another question about that, but let me already say this.

Sometimes people say, I'm trying to manifest and it's not working. I'm not getting it. Well, there can be various reasons for that.

I may go into these reasons a bit later. But one reason can be that, let's say, I met somebody years ago who told me the story. She wanted to become, help people through spiritual teaching.

And she'd read many books and been to many workshops. And she knew all the basics about spirituality, and she wanted to manifest being a teacher, and helping many people. And money was coming in also, all the abundance was manifesting as she was helping more and more people.

But it wasn't happening. And nobody came. Very few people came.

And then not only that, then very bad things happened. She fell ill. She developed a potentially life-threatening illness.

She lost her job and her home. Everything was collapsing. The total opposite of successful manifestation.

Everything was collapsing around her. But she just managed to survive that illness. But in the process of losing many things, even a possible approaching early death, a deepening happened within her.

A deepening happened. The ego dissolved. And when she realized she might die, because she just had a serious illness, something happened within her.

And she realized the depths of the being of the presence within through surrender. And suddenly she realized she became healed, and suddenly she realized that the best thing that ever happened to her was losing all that, her home and her job, and being ill, because that brought about the deepening. And then she became a true spiritual teacher.

So, she didn't get what she wanted, because there was something deeper that was necessary to happen. And so, that can be the case. Perhaps what you want is not ultimately what it is that you need.

So, sometimes when you are not able to manifest, that may be the reason that the universal intelligence knows more than you, your limited intelligence, or you may have some connectedness, but not enough to know what it is that you need. And you would never want to manifest anything negative, nor do you need to. But when it does happen, use that to go deeper.

When a period of turmoil happens in your life, a period of suffering, use that to go deeper, live in acceptance of the present moment. And then you emerge again. And then your powers will be greatly enhanced, their powers of manifestation, because they will come from a deeper place.

So, it's a very complex matter. I believe we may have a question, Tammy, about people not succeeding and wondering why it's not happening. Is that right?

[Speaker 3] (8:00:17 - 8:00:39)
That's exactly right. People say things like, I've done everything I was supposed to do, and still things haven't turned out the way that I hoped they would. Various aspects of my life continue to be really hard.

I'm disappointed and frustrated, and I'm not sure conscious manifestation works, or at least it doesn't seem to be working for me.

[Speaker 1] (8:00:40 - 8:27:52)
Yes, that's not uncommon to hear that. There are many possible reasons. I just mentioned one, you need to suffer a bit more for deepening to happen.

But realize if that is the case, make sure that the suffering does not make you unconscious through reactivity, and resistance, so that whatever challenge arises in your life, you're able to use it to go deeper. But there can be many other reasons why it's not working for you. For example, you're not doing it right.

That's one. You're not doing it right. You are not fully, there's not enough energy flowing into it.

Or you're confusing energy that flows into your manifestation, you're confusing it with willpower. Willpower is wanting to make something happen. And that is counterproductive.

That is not how true manifestation works. Now, willpower is something that, in some cases, it can work, but then it works for other reasons. And willpower, when you create something through sheer willpower, force rather than power, I would call it force.

But what we call willpower is that, let's say you want abundance in your life. I'm going to make it happen. Abundance, I have kind of agreed, let's say, yeah, okay, you already know that you should use the present tense rather than the future tense for manifestation practice, for affirmations.

Never the future tense. Okay. By the way, if you ever use the future tense, I am going to be successful in this.

I'm going to be healthy. I'm going to be living in a nice place. Whatever it is, that never works because you put into the future, then it remains in the future.

Every affirmation needs to be in the present tense. As Jesus already said, when you ask for something, when you pray for something, believe that you have received it and it will be yours. Believe that you have received it, he said, and it will be yours, which means he did not say believe that you will receive it.

Jesus said, believe that you have received it. So that's a little secret for manifestation is to feel that it is already a reality in your life. You visualize it, but that feeling of fullness comes from the depths of being.

So whatever it is that you want to manifest externally, the feeling of already having it comes from the connectedness with being because being is the, being is the, I sometimes call it, it's a little, it's a strange analogy, that's the cream, but whatever, the rest is the skimmed milk that is part of that. So you connect with the essence of it all, the essence of all life. And then you bring a visual image or also verbally, a verbal affirmation and or a visual image, and at the same time, you feel the power of presence within you.

You feel that, and then you bring two together. And there you have it, you're ready. It's already, it's a reality already.

And so you're manifesting from the fullness of being, not wanting something to happen, pushing and wanting. No, you are not doing it. You're simply putting it out so that the universal intelligence can bring it about.

It's not, you are not doing it. So willpower could be an obstacle if you think you need willpower. That's not it.

In fact, you need, yes, intensity, yes, intensity, the energy, there is an energy behind your manifestation practice, but it's not willpower, there's no force. It's a relaxed energy that flows. And you feel the fullness of being is a lovely expression.

Jesus, by the way, also used that expression. He said, I want you to have the fullness of life, the fullness of being. In some translations of the New Testament, it's translated as abundant life.

I want you to have abundant life. I want you to have the fullness of life, he said. And another thing, he was a master of manifestation, but he said, seek only the kingdom of heaven, which is the transcendent dimension within you, that is within you.

And all the things that you need will be added onto you. Added on. This is exactly what I said a little earlier.

Whatever it is, anything that you manifest is a byproduct of something deeper. It's not the ultimate thing. It's a byproduct of something deeper.

So, Jesus called it, seek only the kingdom of heaven, and all else will be added onto you. It's very profound. And then you can also have a playful attitude towards manifestation rather than a desperate need to make something happen.

If you have a desperate need to make something happen, you're already sabotaging yourself through that. Manifestation needs to happen out of the fullness of being rather than a sense of lack, a sense of neediness. That doesn't really work very well.

Through sheer hard work and determination, yes, you could still achieve things, but you'll be very unhappy doing it. The action won't make you happy, and the end result won't make you happy. So, that's not where we want to go.

What is the point in achieving anything if on your way towards achieving it, you're in a continuous state of stress? And when you achieved it, it doesn't make you happy. You still feel there's something missing.

So, there's no point in any activity or endeavor if it induces stress within yourself. Any stress that arises while you are engaged in any activity is counterproductive. You would be sabotaging your manifestation practice through stress.

The moment stress arises, you're sabotaging yourself. You're making yourself unhappy and everybody around you, too. It's horrible.

And there are many people who conduct their whole life like that, continuously in the state of stress. And nothing to do with true manifestation practice. So, for manifestation to be powerful, we need to be aware that a very dangerous obstacle to successful manifestation is the arising of stress while you're engaged in any activity towards that desired goal.

Are you stressed out? Stop. That's not how to go about it.

If you're not enjoying the activity, your manifestation cannot be powerful. You need to enjoy the doing of it. And you enjoy the doing by continuously being connected with the dimension of being while you do.

And connected with that is excessive attachment to a result can be a great obstacle to manifestation. And you desperately want this particular thing to happen. But in the meantime, you disregard if you're not stressed.

Perhaps you're stressed, too. But you disregard the present moment because you really want to arrive there already. So, while you're engaged in this and that, it's regarded as not really important.

You don't really want to be here because you haven't arrived at this thing that you want to achieve yet. So, you're doing things with resistance, reluctance, don't really want to be doing it. All that is counterproductive.

So, we have to be really alert continuously. What is your state of consciousness in the present moment? So, there needs to be an enjoyment of the doing towards that.

But not an excess. You know what your goal is. But the doing is as important as the arriving.

One could say more important because everything is a journey. Your life is a continuous journey. The doing is more important than the arriving.

Enjoy the doing. And even if you never arrive, at least you enjoy the journey. It makes no difference because you're already connected with the essence of being.

Whether or not that thing happens or not, whether or not you arrive or not is secondary. It doesn't really matter. The more you're connected with the essence of being, the more you can treat the activities and the world around you as a play.

In India, they have the term Leela, the divine play. You participate in this play of forms that come and go. And so, you can treat your manifestation in a playful manner that is most powerful.

In that way, yes. Energy, yes. But also detachment from the outcome.

You don't need a particular outcome anymore to enhance your sense of identity, which is the ego says. When I'm wealthy, then I will be somebody. When I'm wealthy, somebody will recognize me for who or what I am.

I will get recognition. People will envy me. Ego stuff.

And so, all these things are unhelpful and counterproductive. If you're looking for an identity in some particular outcome, it's not going to work because nothing external, no achievement or possession can actually show you your true identity. Your true identity is inseparable from the present moment, has nothing to do with any circumstances in your life.

You have to become still, present, go within and realize the beingness of you. You are. The rest is just a play of form.

Einstein said, I want to know the mind of God. The rest is details. To me, what that means is Einstein had a strong mystical part to him.

And the mind of God is that. The mind of God is the consciousness that you are. It emanates from, it's an emanation of source, which is God.

So, the rest is just details. Whatever you manifest is the details. It's fine.

And adding onto, as Jesus said, and adding onto. So, all these, not realizing that, they can all be obstacles in your manifestation practice and prevent you from manifesting. So, especially remember stress, etc., excessive attachment to outcome. Another reason why manifestation may not be working for you is time scale. Some things come very quickly. They can come in a matter of a day or two.

Some things take weeks or months. It depends what your manifestation is. In some cases, it can take years, three, four years, and suddenly it's there, depending what it is.

So, also give it enough time. Do not, another thing, obsessively engaging in manifestation practices also is not helpful. Don't overdo it.

There's a time when you do it, and then you let go of it. Just come back in the present moment. Do it, and then you let go.

There may be a time period when you practice intensively, and then for a little while, for a few days or a week or two or three, you leave it, except perhaps for little practices at the beginning and end of each day. So, not overdoing it. Intensity, yes, but not obsessively engaging in it.

Another reason why it may not be working for you is, well, let's put it bluntly, you have a stupid goal, a totally unrealistic goal that you want to achieve. Of course, miracles are possible. Miracles do happen in this world.

There's no doubt what we call miracles. However, there is such a thing as a totally unrealistic goal, and you need to know that. I could give countless examples.

Let's say, if I could be deluding myself, okay, I'm very, very present. I can feel the presence, and it's great, which means, okay, I'm going to become a great golf player. I'm going to play golf now, and I'm going to succeed because the presence is manifesting through me, and I become one of the greatest players of golf in the world.

Then you start. Now, the question is, are you practicing? How long have you been playing?

How old are you? The body has something to do with it, too. Are you enjoying it, or do you just have this idea of you as the greatest golf player, but you're not even totally enjoying it?

This could be anything. Golf could be a substitute for anything. Are you practicing every day for five hours so that the vehicle is ready for presence to flow into it and use it?

If the vehicle is not ready, presence cannot flow into it and use it, no matter how much time you spend with your manifestation practice. Is the vehicle ready? Could be anything.

I want to be a great musician. Okay. Are you good at it?

Okay, you may not be good at it right now. That doesn't necessarily mean you cannot be a good musician, but do you enjoy playing? Yes.

Do you play every day? Yes, I play every day for 15 minutes, and I like it. Okay.

The vehicle cannot be ready for presence to flow into it and power it. A good musician practices every day for hours, but the question is, are you enjoying it? If you're not enjoying it, why do it?

Are you only thinking of the desired outcome? When I reach this outcome, then I will enjoy it. This is not uncommon, dysfunctional thinking.

You're not enjoying the journey towards it, but when you get it, then you'll be happy, you tell yourself. That brings me to an important point that's connected with that. You may have heard the impression, I think the impression is deferred gratification, so-called postponed satisfaction, postponed gratification, which usually what it means is here's one person who is indulging in sensory pleasures and enjoying drinking and watching Netflix and hanging around, not hanging around with friends, whatever, just not pursuing any.

Next door, there's another person, let's say it's a young man or woman, there's another person who wants to go to university and study to become this or that, works every day, studies. So, one person is continuous sensory gratification every moment in conventional terms. The other person is deferring gratification and saying, well, I need to work hard because I want to achieve there.

And usually what you are told is deferred gratification actually is preferable to indulging in low-level sensory pleasures and enjoying a low-level sensory enjoyment of this or that. So, for a successful life, you're usually told you need to be practicing deferred gratification, postponed gratification or fulfillment. On the surface, this is very true, but I would suggest it's not the whole truth.

It's also dangerous because if you continuously defer gratification, which means deferred gratification, you're not gratified in the moment, but you're hoping that you will achieve your goal. But after practicing deferred gratification, postponed gratification for several years, it becomes a mind pattern within you. And even when you reach your goal, you won't be gratified because the mind pattern is you're always doing this.

Then there's the next goal that you need to achieve. It's not enough. Now is the next one.

So, you're continuously deferring gratification, never finding gratification. So, what you need to do, you need to let go of inner resistance to what you're doing in the present moment so that you can enjoy the doing of it. Be aware of your inner state while you're engaged in your activity towards a particular goal, yes, but why not enjoy the doing while you're doing it instead of hoping that the enjoyment will come when you finally achieve your goal?

Because it's most likely that the enjoyment will not last very long at all. So, that's part of successful activity is, yes, I would not say delay gratification, no, learn how to be gratified, so to speak, in the present moment while engaged in the activity. So, let's go back for a moment to unrealistic goals.

You need to make sure that you enjoy the journey towards your goal. You also need to enjoy that you take appropriate action so that it's not just the affirmation that you use, there needs to be also appropriate action towards it, then it becomes much more powerful. At the same time, if there's not appropriate action, it may still work depending on what it is, or it may not.

It's certainly usually more powerful as action behind it. So, again, unrealistic goals are many. Make sure that your goal is not whatever you want to achieve is not unrealistic.

I gave the example of golf playing, I could say almost anything if I can. At my age, there are many things that I can no longer do, because of the age of the body. So, no matter how many affirmations I use, thousand times a day that I'm going to win a gold medal in the Paris Olympics that are coming up this summer, in whatever capacity, it's not going to happen.

I cannot think of any sport that this aging body would be good at and achieve a gold medal, no matter how I'm giving an extremely absurd example, but it's easy to delude yourself. I haven't watched cable television for a long time, there used to be this thing on television about American Idol, where people would come hoping to become famous, they had a talent. Later, other countries copied it, I think in England it was called Britain has got talent, or something like that.

And so, these people, they're all performing, given two or three minutes to do their performance. And sometimes you would say, some of these people are so deluded about their abilities that it's quite funny. They were so dreadfully bad, and they thought they could be the greatest singer in the world, but they were just dreadfully bad.

True, true. Yes, it's quite funny, discrepancy between why not do something that you might succeed in. Having said that, it's also true that sometimes people who seem very unlikely to be successful in one particular thing, prove to be successful.

For example, there was this famous singer, I think Louis Armstrong, I believe it was, he had this croaky, deep voice. I can't think of any songs, but he had this, nobody would have thought that he could be a singer. I mean, if he had gone to American Idol and done, please, your voice is not suitable to be a singer.

But the miraculous thing is, despite the fact that in conventional terms, I would say his voice is not, there was an essence that moved into this voice that otherwise would not have been considered suitable, that was enormously powerful in his songs. So that can happen too.

[Speaker 2] (8:27:57 - 8:28:00)
But that's an exceptional case.

[Speaker 1] (8:28:07 - 8:29:24)
So at some point, we'll talk more about these obstacles. I've mentioned quite a few obstacles in your manifestation practice. All these things are, one learns after a while, if you make a few mistakes, you don't succeed and you rectify.

But really, I can't summarize it all, but the journey is the most important thing. It makes important that the present moment becomes enjoyable, whatever it is. The present moment is the portal into the spiritual dimension.

So never lose touch with the power of the present moment. And then that power can flow into whatever it is that you do. Then you achieve the balance between being and doing.

And that is a skillful life, a life that is of service and brings harmony into this world, loving kindness.

[Speaker 2] (8:29:25 - 8:29:36)
And all this comes to you when you are in balance between being and doing.

[Speaker 1] (8:29:37 - 8:30:57)
And then the being, the power of being flows into what you do. And that is the power that is behind manifestation. I could go on for many hours, but I won't.

So I believe we have explored quite a few interesting aspects of manifestation and deeper things that lie behind manifestation. And so it's now a question of, before we conclude, I invite you to, right now, here, become aware of yourself, not of yourself as a person, but of yourself as a being behind the person, the presence. Nothing to do with your personal history.

Nothing to do with how old you are.

[Speaker 2] (8:31:00 - 8:31:02)
Nothing to do with your gender.

[Speaker 1] (8:31:11 - 8:31:13)
Nothing to do with your life history.

[Speaker 2] (8:31:24 - 8:31:53)
The power of presence. The mind becomes still for a moment, but something remains. You can call it stillness or presence.

And it's very simple.

[Speaker 1] (8:31:53 - 8:32:23)
That's the essence of who or what you are. And once you have that, the rest is an adding onto, or as Einstein said, it's details. Or we can use the conventional expression, it's the icing on the cake.

That's all.

[Speaker 3] (8:32:33 - 8:34:05)
Thank you so very much, Eckhart, for this session that covered so much ground. And I want to thank everyone for joining us, our studio Zoom room audience, all of you on YouTube and Facebook, and who joined us on the player page. And a special thank you to our friends at Eckhart Teachings.

Also, as I mentioned earlier, this session is something of an introduction to the upcoming program, The Spiritual Guide to Conscious Manifestation. It's a four-month immersion in the practice of conscious manifestation from a spiritual perspective that begins on May 30th with a four-day online retreat. And you can visit EckhartTolle.com for more information and to register. And again, I want to repeat that we have a generous scholarship program available. We want to make sure that all of the people worldwide who are interested in The Spiritual Guide to Conscious Manifestation can attend. So please come join us.

Once again, Eckhart, thank you so much. And I hope to be with many of you as part of our four-month online immersion program, if it sounds true. Thank you.

Thanks so much for being with us, waking up the world together. Thank you. Thanks, Eckhart.

[Speaker 7] (8:34:06 - 8:34:07)
Thank you.

[Speaker 3] (8:34:10 - 8:34:11)
Thanks, friends.

[Speaker 7] (8:34:57 - 8:34:57)
Bye.

[Speaker 5] (8:35:20 - 8:35:22)
Thank you so much for joining us. Thank you, Eckhart.

[Speaker 2] (8:35:23 - 8:35:24)
Thank you.

[Speaker 5] (8:35:25 - 8:35:27)
Wonderful to be with you all tonight.

[Speaker 2] (8:35:27 - 8:35:28)
Thank you.

[Speaker 1] (8:35:35 - 9:06:32)
So here you practice being. And one of the very helpful practices here in order to avoid adding to the clutter of your mind and in fact letting go of the clutter is practice awareness of the simplicity of the present moment, the sense perceptions of the present moment. Acknowledge the is-ness of all things.

Give it attention and refrain as much as possible from labeling your sense perceptions. That is not impossible. It is, of course, a deep-seated habit to continuously have to label your sense perception, what you're seeing.

Oh, look at that. Isn't that nice? Oh, this was something I saw last year.

My aunt had that. Oh, I wish I had that in my book. Where can you buy that?

I wonder. Oh, isn't this interesting? I wonder what the tree is called.

There's nothing wrong with finding the names of trees, but don't lose yourself in that. There is another way of being in the world that is non-conceptual, that awakens the non-conceptual dimension, the non-conceptual intelligence in you. Because there is a vast intelligence waiting to be awakened, and I call it non-conceptual intelligence.

It cannot be measured in IQ tests. So you might have a high IQ, doesn't mean you're closer to awakening. In fact, if you're identified with all the knowledge, then you're further away from awakening, if you're identified with it.

Practicing sense perception without labeling mentally, and this is a beautiful, and this is part of the beingness of the practice of being. Sense perception is visual, auditory, the birds, visual, sky, amazing things to see, vegetation, plants, even feeling the breeze on your skin, the warm air. Sometimes the wind can get quite strong here.

We had it on the first day I came here, there's a trade wind that sometimes blows across the ocean that can last for hours and days, and it's a continuous, and you can feel it on your skin. It's not unpleasant, and so you can feel that, and breathe whatever scent there may be in the air, all senses, and experience that. Be there as the awareness for the sense perceptions, and that awareness is the space, so you are the space for whatever arises, but knowingly.

Right now, here we can practice that. Sit here, aware of the room, the totality of it. Look around, ceiling, there's a man sitting on the chair up here.

Who is that? Body, okay. Quite pleasant, but I'm already labeling it, but you don't, there's no need to label it, just let it be.

So in this moment, there are your sense perceptions, mostly visual probably, and auditory, because that's the sound of my voice, sense perceptions. And yes, of course, you might feel the weight of your body on the chair, all that, yes. And what else is there?

That which enables the sense perceptions to be in, we could call that consciousness, but that is the essence of you, that is the deep I. So can you be aware of that deep I at the same time as you perceive through your senses, whatever is there? So you have, there are two dimensions here now.

One dimension is the world, whatever it contains, and you take that in through sensory perception. And then you're aware of the awareness that makes sensory perception possible. You can, you feel that you are, you can sense the I am.

And here things happen, but in the depths of your being, nothing is happening. It's beyond any happening, because there's no time there. There's time here everywhere.

Time is the thing that enables you to do everything that you do. Time does that, and then it takes everything away. Time gives you all kinds of stuff, and it helps, it makes you grow, and they get stronger, and then it starts eroding you, and then in the end it kills you.

Oh my God. Time is killing me. Some people, I already realized that a long time ago, that time is killing, but the older one gets, the more you realize that time is engaged in killing you.

And that's scary. If all that you know of yourself is the physical body and the personality, then that's, there's great fear, because that's all you know. You've never gone any deeper.

Oh, so the timeless dimension, present moment, present moment is the portal into that dimension, transcendent dimension. Now, this is a beautiful practice, sense perceptions without, let go of labels. When they arise, just don't become too interested in the labels, they are thoughts.

Just let go. And then you are, while you're here especially, the practice is to be as present moment centered as possible, because your life, otherwise your normal, your life is usually, consists of your past, the present moment, and your future. Now, for most people, either future or past almost completely occupy their attention.

For younger, until you get old it's usually future. When you reach a certain age and you realize that you don't have much future left, then you become more interested in the past and you start thinking about it. Oh, that was then, now, oh, I remember that, yeah.

But the present moment is rarely fully acknowledged. It's always, it's just a stepping stone to the next moment, which is the future. Or you actively hate it, that's not uncommon too.

There are people who live in an antagonistic relationship with the present most of their lives. And sometimes older, some older people, they get, cantankerous old men, hey, don't talk to me about that, I know it all, it's all rubbish, nonsense. So here you practice living in the two dimensions, the deep eye and the surface eye is fine, it has its place, you acknowledge it, but practice present moment living.

You don't need to, the future and the past never, obviously everybody knows that, that they actually don't exist as such. One realization came to me first when I talked to a Zen monk, I happened to see a Zen monk and he, we talked a bit about spirituality and Zen, and he said quite simply, well he said, Zen is really quite simple, you stop thinking. I had expected a more complicated answer, but then I realized that's actually happened to me, I stopped thinking.

Especially overthinking, I could still think, and some thinking of course still happened, but there were long stretches, but there was just very peaceful awareness. And there was, and then what was building up was, out of that awareness came a deep joy. And that was very strange, not, sometimes the joy was so intense that it was incredible, and I was just sat there forever on my bench in the park for long periods.

That really is what's called bliss, and it's just, oh. That intensity of bliss that I had for two or three years, I don't seem to have anymore, I have peace. But the intensity of bliss, now I don't know what, it could be that when you get used to something, it doesn't stand out that much anymore, and it becomes quite normal.

And perhaps I experience, he said, bliss, because there was still the contrast, I remember my previous state of consciousness, and then I was that one, who knows. But this is the main teaching then, all spiritual teaching come down to this. Consciousness has to be rescued from where it's been, the conscience has been kidnapped by thought.

It's trapped in that, and this is, your task is to free consciousness from where it's been trapped. In involuntary compulsive thinking, that's always thinking that is imbued, we identify with, imbued, so every thought is imbued with a sense of self. And so that's the spiritual practice, is that the stepping out of the movement of thought, so that I is no longer confused with the movement of thought, that would be the super, the surface I.

So the cessation of thought, and when you practice present moment awareness, and make that the main, the central focus of your life, whether you're active or passive in that moment, it doesn't matter. If you're active, you give your attention to the doing, you honor it, you give it attention so that it doesn't become stressful, that sounds almost impossible, I know, to many people. If you give your fullest attention to the doing, it's not really stressful, unless your mind projects itself to some future point, or your mind, while you're doing something, thinks of several other things that you really should be doing also at the same time, of course you can't, you can only do one thing at a time.

Another definition of Zen that a master gave is, Zen is doing one thing at a time. Now, that's too simple, isn't it, too simple? One, so you give, if it's doing, you give your attention to it, then, as I said yesterday, high quality, it is a high quality, if inspiration is helpful in that particular activity, it will flow into what you do, because you're connected with the unconditioned consciousness, the presence.

With some doings, you don't need any inspiration, you just need to get it done, you do the dishes, or whatever it is, you don't need particular inspiration, all the while you do it in a place of giving it your attention, honor it, rather than do something, but would rather not be doing it, but I'm doing it anyway, that's how many people live all the time. If you have a work situation where you work for, your daily work, you need to decide, is it possible to honor the work that I'm doing, or even if it's something simple and may not be what I ultimately want to be doing, but right now, I need to honor the present moment, whatever it is, in whatever form it arises, my responsibility is to honor life by honoring the present moment, and if your work situation is so dysfunctional that the environment in which you work, for example, or the kind of work that is demanded of you, may be what is perhaps conventionally called soul-destroying, so that this is not a work that you could do and honor it, because it's just very unpleasant, if it's that kind of thing, then you need to remove yourself from that situation, even though you may be stepping into uncertainty, you cannot remain in a toxic situation like that, where the honoring of what you do seems impossible, because, for example, you might be surrounded by people who are in very negative states, there are many situations like that, but in other situations, you may be able to say, okay, this is not the ultimate thing that I want to be doing, but for right now, this is what I'm doing, and I'm able to honor what I'm, and I do it carefully and consciously, so only you can know whether you're able to do that, or whether you need to remove yourself from that situation, in order to seek something else that is more compatible, that is compatible with presence, many, many things are compatible with presence, and quite a few other things are not, so when you, your attention is in the present moment, let's say now, we've been talking about activity, then there are other many moments when you're not actively doing something, you're just sitting somewhere, or standing somewhere, or walking, and that is a more kind of passive state of presence, and that's very important too, are you the observing presence at this moment, as you're sitting on a plane, looking out of the window, or looking at the aisle, if you don't have a window seat, and you're sitting there, now you might say, well, this environment on the plane, maybe you don't have a window seat, but it's not particularly inspiring, and after you've looked at it for a few minutes, you say, okay, what else is there to look at, nothing, and then you might get drift off into something else, so it's important to realize there's not just, present moment awareness is not just the awareness of what is around you, it is more fundamentally the awareness of yourself in that moment, so it doesn't, your environment does not need to be particularly interesting, and if it's not interesting, like as it would be if you're going out into nature, there's wonders all around you, but if it's not particularly interesting, like you're trapped on, you're sitting on a plane, or on a bus, or wherever, or at the airport, then direct your attention to yourself, this is the essential part, the deeper part of being present, is to be consciously, to realize that you are, not to realize who you are, but to realize that you are, and that is the sense of beingness, or presence, present within, when you are conscious of your surroundings, you are present without, then being conscious of yourself as the presence being present within, one could say, it's a good thing to start and end this by looking around wherever you happen to be before you close your eyes, so you just become comfortable wherever you are, and look around, very casual way, and you're beginning to step out of thought, you're just looking around, then you close your eyes, and what helps is to take a few breaths into the abdomen, so it is, because that can put you in touch easily with the entire energy field of the inner body, as you breathe in, the abdomen expands a little, then you hold it at the end of the in-breath for two or three seconds, feel the energy expanding then throughout the body, and then you breathe out, and in again, and you follow the breath with your attention, this is the ancient breath awareness practice, and you can't be thinking at the same time and follow the breath with your attention, that's why it's such a good practice, and you become aware of your body, the inner body, the aliveness, or gradually you feel that the awareness of the inner body, the aliveness of the inner body, and the inner body become a single thing, a single whole thing, so you merge with the sense of aliveness and stillness, instead of observing it, you feel you are it, remnants of visual image of the body, but it's not necessary anymore, you just focus on that sense of pervasive presence, and that is not other than you, that is essentially you, that is the essence of who you are, that is the I, before it becomes something, it's pure presence, meditation that starts with the question, who am I, the answer is not to be found in thought, or in words, the answer is this, the presence that you sense, you sense yourself as the presence, that's the answer to who am I, for success, sense of enchanted state is deep, sense of beingness of I, nothing needs to be added to it, any better than this to use a common expression, this moment, being conscious of being, listening to awareness on the surface of things, witness with the source of all life, from which the consciousness emanates, the consciousness that you are, that realization is the very fulfillment of your life in this moment, what is there to add to it, there's still nothing that you need to become, there's nothing missing, maybe things missing on the human level, the human dimension, but not on the being level, there's nothing missing, that's the fullness of life that Jesus talked about, or the emptiness he talks about,

[Speaker 2] (9:06:33 - 9:07:07)
spaciousness is a better word for it, spaciousness, and then as you open your eyes

[Speaker 1] (9:07:07 - 9:25:31)
and look around the room again, continue to feel the stillness or the spaciousness within, as you look around the room, and that is how you realize the possibility of being present within and without, and of spaciousness, no thinking is required at this moment, it wouldn't add anything to it, and be aware of yourself and what's around you, the consciousness that you are makes this possible, the light of consciousness, you cannot yet in your daily life step from thinking into awareness, freedom from thinking for a moment, and you just use one of the portals in our body, breath awareness, acute attention to sensory perception, and after a while you can just step out of thinking when it's not needed, or reduce thinking to just a trickle, and then presence arises when you sense it with the entire energy field, and gradually this power grows in you, the power itself doesn't grow but its manifestation in you grows, presence power grows in you, at first it seems nothing remarkable and uninteresting, but first you notice it frees you from a lot of turmoil, mind generated, and then it deepens you, because it is the deeper eye, the deep eye that emerges, the deep self, the deep eye, don't wait for emergency situations to become present, don't wait for life to knock you, give you a jolt, a shock, choose it, in ordinary moments, then it grows in you, when life does something to you to intensify the presence instead of taking you out of presence into reactivity, you respond but don't react, reaction is on the conditioned mind, responding is out of presence, so when you realize that what's important is already here and not in the next moment, what really matters, that means you already have shifted to a different state of consciousness, very simple, just that realization, but it's so deeply ingrained, the illusion, the belief, the unconscious assumption, that the next moment matters more than this one, everybody inherits that mind pattern and that makes life very frustrating, you all know that, life consists only ever of this moment, so we're here to go deeper into this moment and not wait for something more significant in the next one, so we become comfortable with being here now and get rid of the illusion that there is something important missing from your life, or there's something not quite right that hasn't arrived yet, something, a very deep-seated illusion, there's something not right, but it's going to be right perhaps one day, earthly things believes it's going to be right when this or that happens or I attain this or that, and the spiritual seeker believes it's going to be right when I become enlightened, and in both cases it's future, the promise, continuously overlooking something vital that is very easy to overlook because moment of thought is so seductive and hypnotic, right individual presence that is essentially who you are and has nothing to do with your past or future, for you this moment here and to hear this and almost let's say to realize the truth of it, that means that's it, just a sense of goodness and brightness of being here, that means that dimension that has no form is already arising, so there's a huge difference between saying I'm angry and slightly, I feel angry or there's anger in me, I feel that there's anger in me, I feel angry, there's a somewhat a different when I am angry because then you equate identity with the emotion, so the letting go of any kind of complaining unless something can be done and you talk to somebody about it and again then not in a complaining way but in a factual way,

[Speaker 2] (9:25:32 - 9:25:43)
that's already a huge shift and then continuous self-observation is part of that also,

[Speaker 1] (9:25:44 - 9:25:59)
what are the thoughts that go through your mind and be the awareness of what is happening in your emotional field, as you're sitting here, are you carrying something in your emotional field

[Speaker 2] (9:26:00 - 9:26:27)
that is a residue of something that happened an hour ago, this morning, while you were traveling here, yesterday, some imaginary situation your mind is creating and the emotion reflects that

[Speaker 1] (9:26:27 - 9:27:34)
as if it were reality and again without the awareness it takes you over, you don't need to get rid of anything, you don't need to get rid of the emotion, without the awareness you don't have an emotion, the emotion has you and the emotion is an energy form, an energy field, a thought is an energy formation, everything is energy and this is emotion and thought are non-physical energy formations, so the thought then has you, you don't have it, you're not even there, you are spiritually speaking asleep and you're being run by the conditioned emotions, the mental, you're run by the mental emotional conditioning, the mental emotional conditioning says I and it refers to all that stuff, that accumulated stuff, I, everybody says I continuously,

[Speaker 6] (9:27:36 - 9:27:45)
everybody's favorite pronoun is I and what they refer to usually is

[Speaker 2] (9:27:47 - 9:27:56)
that entity, the problematic entity, the ego, that's the word, the egoic self,

[Speaker 6] (9:27:57 - 9:28:12)
I, there's a deeper I that is not the egoic self and that deeper I, this is why we're here,

[Speaker 1] (9:28:14 - 9:28:22)
to access that, to deepen that, most of you already have access to it but it may periodically

[Speaker 2] (9:28:22 - 9:28:47)
become obscured in this world, not surprisingly, when things go wrong that's a moment of

[Speaker 1] (9:28:47 - 9:29:00)
becoming more conscious, it's every, even the smallest things, if you don't react out of the conditioning, the mental emotional conditioning but be the awareness

[Speaker 2] (9:29:01 - 9:29:12)
and then oh, and you observe if emotions arise, you are there and you can say oh,

[Speaker 1] (9:29:12 - 9:30:02)
there's the anxiety again and then you know that there's anxiety without calling it anything, so that is a huge difference to know that anxiety is in you, anger is in you right now, for example, or anxiety, whatever else it may be, or some mood that suddenly gets a hold of you and you're suddenly in a bad mood, don't talk to me, don't say I'm grumpy, well to say I'm grumpy is already a little bit step forward because at least you know that you're grumpy, if you're totally unconscious, the grumpiness is you and you don't even know that you're grumpy, to say don't talk to me, I'm grumpy, that's already means there's a little bit of

[Speaker 2] (9:30:02 - 9:30:26)
awareness there, it's great, so there's a huge difference between saying I'm angry and slightly, I feel angry, or there's anger in me, I feel that there's anger in me, I feel angry,

[Speaker 1] (9:30:27 - 9:31:45)
there's a somewhat different when I am angry because then you equate identity with emotion, so it's not I am angry, that's a huge, you've fallen into a huge trap, if you equate emotion with your identity, or if you equate a thought with your identity, or a story in your mind, you equate that with your identity, or an opinion which is thought, the world is full of people who don't know the difference between their opinion and their identity, their opinion becomes their identity, and then they have lots of fights with other people, because they are totally confused about who they are, they derive their identity from a set of opinions, politics for example, you derive, it doesn't mean you cannot have opinions, everybody has opinions, but where does your sense of identity come from, does it come from the opinions, or do you realize that you have certain opinions which may be valid or not, you're on a human level, you have opinions, or viewpoints, or perspective, mental positions, you have them, they are there,

[Speaker 2] (9:31:48 - 9:31:59)
but do these give you your sense of self, or if they do, then you're continuously

[Speaker 1] (9:32:01 - 9:32:36)
arguing with other people, making other people into enemies, because when you contradict somebody who equates opinion with identity, unconsciously they believe that you are attacking their very self, because there's a confusion about who they are, they don't know who they are, so you attack the opinion of somebody who's totally identified with their opinion, and you become their mortal enemy, they might even try to kill you, in an extreme form of

[Speaker 6] (9:32:36 - 9:32:37)
unconsciousness.

[Speaker 1] (9:32:44 - 9:34:05)
So, this is why it's so important to transcend that, transcend doesn't mean you exclude it, it doesn't mean no more opinions, I'm now, I'm having no opinion about anything or anyone, no, that's not going to work. What do you think of the Republican Party, the Democratic Party? Nothing.

But there is a deeper level, if you can go to a deeper level, and your sense of I does not come from the movement of thought, it comes from a deeper place, your identity, who you feel or sense you are, does not come from the emotional field, or from the mental formations. And that is the awakening, that is to be awakened, is to discover, first of all, is to discover that dimension.

[Speaker 2] (9:34:07 - 9:35:07)
For some people at first it comes in little glimpses, perhaps sometimes in protected settings, environments like here, and I say, are you able to, at this moment, are you able to let go of thinking, without falling asleep, but remaining alert, in a gentle way, not through willpower, just relinquish conceptualization, no need to interpret compulsively this moment, what could you add to it? Interpret, you like it, I like this, I don't like that, yes, likes and dislikes still exist

[Speaker 1] (9:35:07 - 9:35:18)
on the surface of your being, but when you become rooted in the deeper presence, the being of you,

[Speaker 6] (9:35:20 - 9:35:39)
then you are suddenly free, and you can sense that in that stillness, if we want to call it

[Speaker 1] (9:35:39 - 9:35:43)
that, stillness just means the absence of thought, and what remains when thought goes,

[Speaker 6] (9:35:43 - 9:36:00)
but you don't fall asleep, is conscious presence, pure consciousness remains, and that is the deeper I, the deeper I am.

[Speaker 2] (9:36:15 - 9:36:28)
So a moment of presence or stillness, in that moment you have transcended the person, the personal self.

[Speaker 6] (9:36:31 - 9:36:37)
Of course you go back into it after a while, and the question is, are you going to lose yourself

[Speaker 1] (9:36:37 - 9:36:52)
in it again, perhaps, and then you come out of it again, and after a while, this is your, the aim of spiritual practice, that your connectedness with the deeper dimension

[Speaker 2] (9:36:53 - 9:37:37)
is not lost, even when you are engaged in daily activities, or discussions, or whatever it may be, there is a, that connectedness remains in the background, which may be the case with you now, as you listen to this, and it's not this, something in you recognizes what the words are pointing to, and that's not the conceptual mind, that which recognizes it as true,

[Speaker 1] (9:37:38 - 9:38:30)
is the immediate realization of the truth of it, you don't have to think about it, you can't think about it, so you know immediately, yes, I know, there's a direct knowing, not conceptual knowing, conceptual means knowing through thinking, most people live through a conceptual reality, their identity is a conceptual identity, and they conceptualize everybody else, they meet, they immediately form judgments, they come very quickly, and you form a conceptual identity for the other, you trap the other person in this mental concept, but you do that because you've already done it

[Speaker 2] (9:38:30 - 9:39:21)
to yourself, so you live through a conceptual identity, me, and so we step, we go to a deeper place, or you could call it higher or deeper, it doesn't matter, I prefer deeper, well, you go to a deeper place, where the movement of thought ceases, and immediately you have transcended the self, the egoic self, if only for a few seconds, or a minute, and everybody is longing to be free of this problematic entity, unconsciously,

[Speaker 1] (9:39:21 - 9:42:26)
they want to be free, but they don't want to let go, there's a paradox here, they don't want to let go, and yet they can't stand it, they want to be free, so much drug-taking in this world, or they want to transcend this heaviness of life, experiencing life as this heavy burden, and their identity is very unsatisfying, so they're longing to be free, but they're going below thinking, the road that takes you below, you fall below thought, and to some extent, yes, you have become free of the self, before you go to sleep, there's a transitional moment when you're in bed, and you're halfway to sleep already, and that moment feels really good, you feel, ah, it feels, you can feel the pull of sleep, and you can feel, you can't think about your problems anymore, your entire sense of identity isn't there, because you're too tired, and then you're pulled into sleep. We lie in the lap of immense intelligence, it is within and without, we are pervaded by it, it fills the entire space of the universe, we lie in the lap of immense intelligence which makes us organs of its activity and receivers of its truth, if we are open to it, it's true, if you close the shutters, no matter how bright the sunlight is, it can't come in, it doesn't mean the shutters are more powerful than the sunlight, it just means shutters are closed, and so if a human being is closed, the vast intelligence cannot operate, or can only operate as a trickle, everybody has a trickle of it, otherwise they wouldn't be alive, so everybody has a little trickle of that coming into their lives, but the full power of it in most people's lives is missing, so they live not knowing what vast power is available to them, or to put it more accurately, what vast power they themselves are, it's not available to you that creates a separation, it is, in essence,

[Speaker 6] (9:42:27 - 9:42:28)
who you are.

I could see a deeper truth being expressed than I had ever heard in church, in what Jesus was saying, and I immediately had a deep realisation of what he was talking about. There was a couple went to church, a wife and husband, and they came back from church where they heard exactly what you just said, the pastor was reading from the bible, and the wife says to the husband, you know, outside our bedroom we have this little hill or mount that blocks our view, what I'm going to do tonight, I'm going to believe that it's going to disappear, because if Jesus says you can move mountains, surely you can move this little hill, and the husband says that's a good idea, okay, so the next morning the wife opens the curtains and it's still there, and she says to her husband, oh you see, I knew it wasn't going to work, so that's not faith either, so just telling yourself I believe this is going to happen, probably not, unless you're lucky, but faith, the true meaning of faith is power, and if you have faith means if you access the power that lies beyond all phenomena, if you access the source of life, if you have find access to that, then that means you have faith, faith is sensing in yourself the power of life itself, which is not of the person, which is deeper, the power of consciousness itself, sensing that in yourself, and when you connect with that, you realize it's not so much that you connect with it, it's just that is the essence of who you are, so having faith really is being fully who you are in your essence, and of course the way to that, this is the entire, our entire teaching here is to go beyond the noisy mind, or the whatever the mind produces into the dimension of alive stillness, and that's you're touching the source, if you touch the source, so the personality needs to surrender, so that you can go deeper, otherwise the personality which includes the thinking mind, or is primarily the thinking mind, stands as a closed door, with a heavy personality you cannot go any deeper, you're stuck, there's a closed door of the personality, so there's a, the Russian spiritual teacher Gurdjieff mentioned two aspects of a human being, which he called personality and essence, and he says some people, or most people in this world have a strongly developed personality, but there's very little essence coming through, so essence is who you are beyond the personality, and he said occasionally it happens that there's an enormous amount of essence in rare human beings, and very little personality, so most people you meet in this world have a fairly highly developed personality, especially in the western world, but the whole world is becoming westernized, so even in the east now, you can even with big personalities, but if the personality recedes, and this is happening to us, then something more vital and more essential can shine through, and that is essence, and that then, and that is our life purpose, the kingdom of heaven, somebody used that expression, my translation is, kingdom is dimension, heaven, sky, is spaciousness, so when Jesus talked about the kingdom of heaven, he's pointing to something in the sense-perceived world, in order to get people to sense what he's talking about on the inner level, so he chose the sky, or heaven, because it's the most spacious thing there is, and it is not, the sky is perhaps the only thing in this dimension where you, of sensory perception, the only thing that you can see that's not a thing, because the sky doesn't exist as a sky, there's no such thing as sky, you can never touch it, or be in it, or if you're going up in a rocket, you go through a cloud, but you can never say, I am now in the sky, because there is no sky, it's just a way in which we perceive spaciousness, and so he used that analogy in order to point to something within you, the dimension of spaciousness, the kingdom of heaven, the dimension of spaciousness that is within you, that is consciousness, pure consciousness, that is the only thing the most important thing, he said, the most important thing for you to be concerned about, find that within you, everything else will fall into place, it's a free translation of what he

said, everything else will fall into place, just your primary task as a human being here, is[Speaker 1] (0:00 - 28:55)
To find that dimension of consciousness in you. Then you have fulfilled your task as a human being. Not that necessarily your life will then come to an end because you can then be here in a much more beneficent capacity because something else expresses itself through you no longer the egoic, the limited ego identity.

And it can speak and act and do or just emanate through you into this world. You become an expression of the transcendent dimension. I don't usually, I don't use the word God very often because it's misleading.

First of all, it's because it's been misunderstood and misused over so many centuries. And also because the term itself seems to encapsulate it as if it were something that is a finite thing, God. Almost everybody imagines some kind of entity when you say God, where, where is he?

Oh, he, you see, most people still call him he. God is a slightly better pointer would be to say, for example, well, what I said just now, the dimension of the transcendent. And even what they used in Star Wars that became so popular, again, is a term they used that is not as encapsulated as the word God.

The force, may the force be with you. Okay, where's the force? It's everywhere.

It was, it's a kind of, there was a slight spiritual message in that. And this is why so many people loved, because they're all looking for it somewhere. They loved it.

May the force be with you. The divine, you could even say this is less enclosed than the term God. The divine is more of an open concept.

God is more of a closed concept. And inevitably, because of misuse, people inevitably imagine some kind of male entity still. You can't get away from that.

And a controlling one, a patriarch, or somebody who has not done a good job. I could have done better than God. Therefore, God does not exist.

You hear that sometimes. Doing God's will is an expression, been around for a long time, that has been misused a lot by the ego. And it was, in most cases, it was the ego's will.

And the ego called its own will, God's will. To the point of insanity, where people kill others and other groups of people and call it God's will. Different religions have done that.

In some, it's still happening. And for many other people who are not at such an extreme of unconsciousness, but nevertheless, there are people who are genuinely, genuinely wanting to do God's will, but it's very problematic, because how do you know whether a thought that comes into your head is God's will, or whether just a thought, it's just a thought that comes into your head? So being in the present moment really is the only way of being certain that you are becoming aligned with God's will.

What is God's will? God's will is being one with the intelligence, the consciousness that pervades and underlies the world of form, being one with that. And you can only be one with that if you become present in the now.

So the entry point into God's will, the realization of God's will, is always the present moment. Your inner alignment with the present moment, and there you have it. Now, you could say that whatever happens, you could say, in some religions or many religious people do that, well, it's God's will.

They can't explain it, but they say, well, it's God's will. I don't usually use that terminology. All I say is, it is as it is.

That doesn't require any belief whatsoever, because nobody can doubt that the present moment is as it is, always. Now, this is something you cannot doubt. But if I say, this is God's will, of course you can doubt that.

There's lots of reasons why you can doubt that. So the statement, it is as it is, and I might as well say yes to it because it already is, is something that is beyond any doubt. It is so obviously true that no philosopher could come and question that this moment is as it is.

So this is an ultimate truth. I was visiting my mother not long after that, and she had on her bookshelves, my mother was not religious or even spiritual, but I found the New Testament there, which had been left there many years ago when my mom was still married by a Jehovah's Witness, because my father would always invite the Jehovah's Witnesses into our home and then involve them in discussions. He had a love-hate relationship with them, and this is just a, he respected them enormously because my father was German, so he respected them enormously because they were the few people in Germany who refused to, in the Second World War, who refused to participate in war.

So they were pacifists, and many were brought to concentration camps and died because they refused to take up arms. And my father respected them highly for that, but when they started talking to him, he would get angry. But he must have accepted this New Testament.

Anyway, I found that New Testament on my mother's books, and I opened it at that point. Of course, I had read it at school. I had a Catholic upbringing.

I had read it at school, but then I read it, and I said, wow, I could see a deeper truth being expressed than I had ever heard in church in what Jesus was saying, I assume. And I immediately had a deep realization of what he was talking about, and realizing also that the New Testament is really fragments because nobody has a complete teaching of Jesus because people have the fragments that they remembered and they eventually wrote down. And I believe not all fragments are actually said by Jesus, but when they did, the ones that are actually uttered, but I knew beyond any doubt that certain things that I had read were actually said by someone who was deeply aligned with consciousness.

So I saw the truth there, and that shed light on it. And then you become aware of yourself as the one who is perceiving, but not of yourself as the historical person because if you were perceiving through the historical person, you would be labeling things mentally. No, you become aware of yourself as the underlying consciousness in which the perception happens, the light of consciousness in which the perception happens.

So you're aware of two dimensions, the dimension of form and the dimension of formless consciousness, the kingdom of heaven, the dimension of spaciousness, the emptiness, the spaciousness, the essence of all life. And it's not yours, it's not anybody's, it's the one. And now, as if you're thinking in terms of, well, how does that fit in with God?

You haven't mentioned God. Well, that's true. I haven't mentioned God because the term God has been misunderstood a lot over the millennia, not by everybody, but by most.

God, you cannot, obviously, you cannot understand God. It would be, it's just absurd to even make any statement because it's totally, I mean, language consists of just a few sounds, just a few sounds that are made by the vocal cords and air pressure. So you have the vowels, A, E, I, O, U, ah, oh, ooh, ooh, and then you add a few air pressure sound, psh, psh, psh, psh, psh, psh, psh.

Are you expecting to understand the secret of the universe? Through the combination of a few, ah, oh, psh, psh, psh, just, I mean, and you're asking God to explain God, but I'll carry on talking anyway. One can only give a, almost a poetic image or an analogy of what that is.

God is the source of all life, the transcendent source of all life. It has no existence in space and time. It does not exist because exist means to be manifested.

It is, God is the source of all life, that we perhaps can say. Now, we could compare that because we live in this sense-perceived universe in our dimension. We could compare God to the life-giving principle that we all share, which is the sun.

And there's no coincidence that many ancient cultures worshiped the sun because obviously, without the sun, all life would immediately disappear. The very warmth in your body is ultimately derived from the sun calories. So the sun continuously emanates.

Almost, one could almost say, yes, it has a lifespan, but relative to our lifespan, it's eternal. So it's an analogy. The sun continuously emanates.

It emanates, and what it emanates is it gives life. The stillness, the presence, whatever we want to call it, and by sensing it in yourself and being it, then you recognize it in another. And that recognition, that in the space of stillness is true love, which doesn't need the other because the other only reflects to you who you are.

So the question you're basically asking, would you then love everybody equally so there would not be one person singled out as special as the Course in Miracles calls it special relationship, which the Course in Miracles says, of course, it's of the ego to single one out as special. Now, if you single one out as special and what you see in the other is the form only and you're attached to the form, which doesn't just mean the physical form. Of course, that's an important part of it because it is part of the sexuality and all that, which is part of the attraction.

But it also includes the psychological form of the other, who you think that person is, their psychological makeup, how they behave and speak and act. That is also a form, that's a psychological form. And there can be strong attachment to those aspects, both the physical come together with the psychological, which includes also emotions.

There's an emotional link also there. And those coming, when they all come together, you fall in love. And aptly, it's called fall because it's a fall in consciousness.

But that's okay. If that's what you experience, then that life wants you to experience that. It's part of your learning, that fall in consciousness.

Now, it's not immediately, of course, experienced as a fall. It's experienced as a high. And only afterwards do you realize, oh, that was a fall.

And afterwards can be after a year. It can be after three months. It can be after the honeymoon.

It can be soon after you move in together. And then the suffering starts. What before was the love now becomes the suffering.

And then for a while, it can happen that you fluctuate or the next year or two or three between still feeling the love and the suffering. And then usually it comes to an end after a while or you compromise and for some other reason, stay together. So that's the...

Now, if you are able to feel in the other, well, first of all, in yourself, that which is beyond form, the essence, the stillness, the presence, whatever we want to call it. And by sensing it in yourself and being it, then you recognize it in another. And that recognition that in the space of stillness is true love, which doesn't need the other because the other only reflects to you who you are.

But even there, it can happen that the form of the other, because you are not just the formless. Temporarily, you're also the form. Temporarily, you are either a man or a woman.

Temporarily, you have this body and this form, this man or this woman and this body and the emotional field may find a certain resonance with on different levels, be it sexual, emotional, psychological levels, a certain resonance with the other form. And that resonance, that is what in the unenlightened romantic love makes up the entire relationship. But now, when you know who you are in your essence, all those factors are still there, but they do not make up the entire relationship beyond the resonance between the sexual or emotional or physical resonance, there's a deeper level present.

So you can go through the motions of romantic love with the transcendent level also present in yourself and recognizing it in the other. So romantic love may, after a while, of course, for the relationship to be truly deep in any relationship, some transcendent element has to be there because it's not going to last otherwise. It doesn't mean necessarily that people need to be totally awake already, totally awake knowing who they are, but some element of the formless must be there eventually in the relationship for the relationship to survive and be a true relationship.

Otherwise, all you have left in the relationship is your judgments about the other and physical attraction and just mind emotional. And that's ultimately, it's not enough, it's not enough. The added element, the transcendent element needs to be there.

And if the transcendent is there, you can be quite content even without the romantic relationship. You no longer say, I need that. It's when it's there, it's beautiful, but you don't need that.

A conscious conversation is basically a conversation where it's between two people. Each person is not identified with their viewpoint, their perspective, their mental position. They put forward their perspective, their positions, their viewpoints without any sense of self in it because they don't need that because their sense of self is derived from the presence that they can sense throughout the conversation in the background of their being.

And then they can play with concepts. They can play with opinions. They can play with words.

They can play with arguments even. My argument is this, and then the other person, well, and mine is that. There's the famous saying, we, what is it?

We agree to disagree or something like that. That sounds relatively conscious because if at least you're not identified with your positions, then that's fine. We agree.

That's okay. It's interesting. Self-identification with mental positions is the unconsciousness because then you will be defending your mental positions, but you're really defending your sense of self.

And this is why these conversations become easily and very quickly become very unpleasant. They are unconscious. So in unconscious conversation and with very unconscious people, it can even happen.

I mean, you can probably read about it in the papers all the time. They get so defensive and aggressive about their respective mental positions, they start physically attacking each other. It even happens sometimes.

You can see it in certain parliaments in some places. And suddenly all these members of parliament start attacking each other. Washington sometimes gets close, but it probably hasn't quite happened.

That what it could happen there too, who knows? Okay, so if you love everybody unconditionally, how can you possibly decide who is going to be your partner? That's the question.

Because it seems then there's no preference anymore. Or if it's physical attraction, isn't there a contradiction? If you're in a higher state of consciousness, then shouldn't or not be physically attracted to anybody?

Is that the implication in the questions? Isn't it? Well, the love we're talking about, the unconditional love towards human beings and life forms, is a, let's see, what is it that you love in the other?

When you love unconditionally, you don't love their physical form. You don't love their psychological form, their personality. The unconditional love goes deeper.

It's a transcendent love that what you love is not the form, but the formless essence of the other. And you can only love that when you can sense within yourself a dimension, a formless, when you can be still and present enough, and then look at another human being, and then you can recognize something. What you recognize is, for lack of a better word, the consciousness, which is the essence of the other human, as it is the essence of who you are, consciousness prior to the consciousness being born into some kind of form, personality, which is there, and the physical form, which is there.

But in every being, there is still the dimension of consciousness that is prior to form. Although the human being has become form, consciousness has assumed form, has incarnated, so to speak. But that doesn't mean that the formless and timeless consciousness is lost.

It's still there as the essence. And when you can sense it in yourself, you can sense it because you are still and present enough. From that dimension in yourself, you can sense it in the other, and that is love.

It's basically a recognition that in essence, the other is the same as you. But then, of course, there's always, that is the transcendent dimension to every human being. In addition to that transcendent dimension, there is a form identity of every human being.

Every human being has a physical form and emotional form and a mental form. That's the inner, that's the personality. So the physical appearance and the personality consisting of mental, emotional, conditioning, and so on.

So there are the two levels. The unconditional love towards all humans is the transcendent love. You love the formless, you recognize the formless as yourself in the other.

But then you are still here as a form too, and the form may respond to another form. The physical, there can be physical attraction. It is not incompatible with a transcendent realization, although some ancient or not so ancient traditions may tell you that.

It is not incompatible. You can have physical attraction on the level of form. You can also have an attraction towards the mental, emotional form of that other human being because it resonates with something in your own form.

So that means you may be drawn to another human being physically or mentally, emotionally, because you resonate with that. And then perhaps you enter into a relationship. So different levels operate.

The transcendent remains. It can become obscured through excessive attachment, of course, to the mental or emotional dimension in the other. So in a relationship, the realization of essence identity, as I sometimes call it, can become obscured when form identity takes over completely, which could happen through the pain body, which could happen through this emotional, getting identified with arising emotions and losing touch with the transcendent.

Yes, that can happen, but it's not incompatible. Everybody's challenge is to balance the two in their lives, in their relationships, to relate to the other on the transcendent level. And at the same time, if it's there on an emotional, mental, physical level.

For a while, it can be helpful, but not to become dependent on either, or to use it as a tool to help you, yes. But don't become dependent on listening to music so that you can be present only when you listen to music.

[Speaker 7] (29:00 - 29:14)
What is music? Somehow it does stop our minds and why it is so important to us, maybe about art in general also. And what is your favorite kind of music?

[Speaker 1] (29:21 - 1:03:55)
Yes, it certainly stops the conceptual mind, although music exists at different levels. There's some kind of music that very much stimulates the emotions. That's not the mind, but the emotions.

The listening of music can be a wonderful meditation and practicing of music even more so. Do you play an instrument? But do you listen to music?

What kind? Classical mostly. Classical music, yes.

Yes, there were several years, I don't know how many, maybe 15 years when I listened to very little music. And why? Because the strange thing, I actually said that to somebody at that time who asked me the similar question.

And I said, no, I don't listen to music much that was at that time. And why not, she asked. Because it felt to me that all those things like music and art, they were all inside me, in their, the essence of whatever music can express, I could continuously sense, well, I still can, I can continuously sense inside me and so I can appreciate music, I said to her at the time, but I don't need it.

It's like I have the cream and everything else is the skimmed milk. But even nature I perceived as a skimmed milk. I remember often sitting in nature and in a state of sometimes closing my eyes, especially when I was still living in London, I would go on Hampstead Heath every day, sit there on a bench and close my eyes and such beauty and depths of the formless life itself or consciousness.

And then when I opened my eyes again, nature was still very beautiful, but it seemed like a diluted version of what I had within or even what I was within. Not that there's anything wrong with that. For many people, it can be an entry point into that so it can take you into that.

Now, then the time came when I started listening to music again as an enjoyment and I do now, perhaps not every day, but from time to time, I listen to music. More recently on my iPad. All the speakers are very small, they're about that size on the side.

But yes, and I actually enjoy some of the kind of spiritual kind of music, some new age music, some of it I love very much, some of it can be a little bit tinkly and emotional or superficial, but other kinds of new age music, I love very much. And I found this, the other day I found a station, I think Kim found it, it's called Calm Radio. And I believe it may even be Canadian.

And Calm Radio has many channels, but it's one station and you can choose the type of music you like and it'll play that classical, oriental music, home music, healing music, spa music, folk music, classical music, opera, so many channels. Just a wonderful, yes, the practice of an instrument also can be a wonderful meditation for many people because it really stops your mind. The important thing, however, can be helpful is not for presence to become associated with any particular activity.

The activity can be helpful, but at some point, you have to see, use it as a help, like playing an instrument, the flute, whatever it may be. If I learnt an instrument, I would probably take up the flute, it's a simple thing, although not easy probably to master. This is the, I'm now playing the soundless flute.

The equivalent of one hand clapping. Not to become dependent on a particular activity so that you can be present, although for a while it can be helpful, but not to become dependent on either, use it as a tool to help you, yes, but don't become dependent on listening to music so that you can be present only when you listen to music. Don't become dependent on playing the instrument or dancing, beautiful thing too, moving your body.

Don't become dependent so that you can only be present when you're actually dancing. Well, at least it's a wonderful thing, you can be present when you dance, but you can't dance continuously. Well, unless you regard your whole life as a dance, then it might work.

Don't become dependent on climbing a mountain so that you can be present, because if you're not, you fall off. Don't become dependent on driving a fast car. Oh, really present, because, so that presence is not bound up with one particular thing that you do, but nevertheless, use those things as helpful ways of bringing you into presence, but then once more presence arises, switch off the music, doesn't mean you can't switch it on again an hour later or tomorrow, switch off the music, if music brings you into presence, the mind is not, there's just the pure act of listening. And you're aware that there's a pure act of listening and you are the consciousness, you know yourself as the consciousness that's listening. Beautiful meditation.

And then my next suggestion is, switch off the music and continue listening. To what? Nothing.

So when you remove the object of awareness, what remains is awareness itself. So this is how it can be a wonderful portal. The same thing, any activity that brings you into presence, once you feel presence is arising, it's there, stop the activity and just be aware of presence itself.

And then you can carry, if you enjoy it, then carry on doing, and then again, step out. So that's the, so that presence is not bound up with one particular activity or you can even, you can look at the, you can look at a photo of a spiritual teacher who is present to bring you into presence. Ramana Maharshi, there's one particular photo of him that was, is a beautiful photo where you actually truly feel the light shining through his eyes and that was where the photographer took that photo of 1930 or so, and the photographer said, no, Ramana Maharshi said, is there enough light?

The photographer said, you are the light. And that's a beautiful picture and the amazing thing, some people have even used pictures of me to look and you look, as long as you know you're not looking at a person, that's not why you have the photo. You're looking at, to put you in touch with a particular state of consciousness, you're ultimately looking at yourself, the essence.

So then a picture can activate that in you. And then the next step is, again, similar to what I said before, close your eyes or remove the picture and continue to feel that presence. So you can use whatever is there to help you but don't become dependent on it.

Whatever it may be, use it, enjoy it, but don't become dependent so that that then exclusively becomes associated with presence. And then you can only be present when you put a little altar with Ramana Maharshi up and then some, but as soon as you go away. So it seems we are going to spend the afternoon together, most of us, that is.

For some of you, a few, it may at some point get too much and you might feel the urge to remove yourself from here and go to a more stimulating place. Such as the beach or even more stimulating, such as the adjacent expo. The primal urge will have been stronger than the urge towards higher consciousness.

But most of you will probably stay here and to the extent to which the, what I sometimes call the new consciousness, has already arisen in you, to the extent of that, you will actually enjoy being here and listening for the whole afternoon with a short break, listening to a man sitting on a chair talking. It seems a little strange. How could that be interesting?

There must be something extraordinarily important in what he has to say to keep you here. And that is true, but of course, there needs to be something in you that recognizes that there's something extraordinarily important, not in the person speaking, but ultimately in you. So that recognition needs to be there in you.

And that's nothing to do with how much knowledge you have, spiritual knowledge or accumulated education or PhDs or degrees. Nothing to do with that kind of mental faculty. There is another faculty in humans that in most humans on the planet is as yet dormant.

And in some, a growing number of humans has awakened. I call it faculty, something, a dimension of consciousness that's different from the prevailing, ordinary dimension of consciousness on the planet. So that's a spiritual awakening.

That is the next step in human evolution because humans have not come to the end of their evolution. Humans are a work in progress. It's not finished yet.

It would be terrible, imagine that. Humans as they are now, a finished product, crazy. And that's why some people, because they have misperceptions about humans and they have misperceptions about God.

And then they say, how could God allow all this to happen? All this, this is based on two misperceptions that humans are a finished product, created by God a long time ago. And that God is a patriarchal figure controlling things from above or has lost interest completely and walked off maybe somewhere else because he didn't do a good job.

So our afternoon here works on two levels. There's the level of words and thoughts and that is necessary, but more importantly, there is that to which the words and thoughts that underlie the words point. And that is the essence of our gathering here.

And that to which they point is the essence of who you are. And the purpose of our afternoon is to either awaken or in the case of many of you, to deepen the realization or the connectedness with who you truly are. And when I say truly, I mean in the depth of your being, and I mean a dimension that is deeper than your personal history.

And most humans are completely unaware that there is a dimension of consciousness in them that is deeper than their personality, their personal self. So they are trapped on the surface level of reality. And that is not a pleasant place to be.

You are basically then trapped in your conditioned personality, the person, the egoic self, and you know somehow, you know that there is something not right. You know somewhere instinctively, you know there's something so important that's not here yet and that's missing in my life. There's something wrong.

And how humans interpret that mentally, what they perceive or feel to be wrong varies from person to person. One person might say, what's wrong is that all humans don't have the same religion that we have. There's something deeply wrong.

So we need to either convert them or kill them. Or other humans say there's something deeply wrong about society, they project it outward. Of course there's lots wrong with society, but what is society?

It's the sum total of the individuals. There's something deeply wrong with my personal history. It's so unsatisfying.

Why? Why did so many things go wrong in my life? Things that weren't supposed to happen.

I imagined things going very differently. Not all these failed marriage and divorce and all this dreadful suffering and then there was the illness and then there was that and then there were great achievements and then there were all again the opposite. So something is looking for the next thing to feel fulfilled by possessions, recognition, something missing, there's always something missing.

What they don't know is that what is missing, what they look for outside or they blame others for preventing them from finding it. You can blame entire groups of people for making you feel unfulfilled. It's a very common thing these days and very satisfying to the false sense of self because if you can see yourself as a victim either on a personal level or a collective level, that gives you a somewhat satisfying sense of identity, satisfying in a completely non-satisfying way.

It's a paradox. You feel good about feeling bad. And the more you can complain about others, and the better you feel, but it's bad.

But the ego thinks it's better. And you feel now you know who you are more fully. It's a fiction.

So you can emphasize your victim identity on the personal level to give you some kind of stronger sense of self or you can emphasize your identity as the one who is victorious in the world, me. The ego doesn't mind which one. They're both equally strong and equally false.

Usually ego, the egoic self is interpreted by people as people who have a high sense of exaggerated sense of who they are, who think they're better than others. And that is one aspect of ego. But there's another aspect of ego, which is equally strong.

And that is people who have a self image, a self identity of being more of a victim than somebody else or others. Oh, that works too. So whichever is most convenient to you, you can use that.

So people use all kinds of things to create a more satisfying sense of identity for themselves, but it's all in the head. It's ultimately all consists of the structure of thought. And that is what I call to be trapped on the level of the person or the personality.

Another way of putting it is to be trapped on the level of form, the form of who you are, which is the physical and the psychological form of who you are, the me, me and my story, me and my personal history. And then all the conditioning, the opinions and viewpoints and convictions and through which you interpret everything according to the conditioning of the personality. Then you look at things and you immediately have immediately labeled things and situations and people as they come into your perception.

There's the immediate labeling and you think it's all true. You don't realize that you are looking at reality through a veil of your conditioned mind. And really what you're seeing is the veil of your conditioning and there's something there behind it, but you can't clearly see it at all.

It's a dreadful state to be in, but it's normal. This is why I sometimes say normal equals insane. So you, and this is not such a fundamental question.

The question of identity is the most important question in your life. Who am I? And you know that, you know that it's important, but you don't know where your true identity is because at school, nobody taught you, should be the most important thing that children are taught, discover your essence identity.

Is that a subject at school? I haven't heard of it, never come across it. So your form identity relies on external things.

You compare yourself to others and according to what is most appropriate, you emphasize those aspects of your form identity where you are a little bit superior to others and that's where the ego gets in and forms a mental construct. It could be the history of your family as you come from a family, not so much in the new world here, but in the old world to some extent, a little bit still in Europe, even more so in some more traditional cultures. You think back, you have your family history, your ancestors and you have this long line of your ancestors going back and they're all more important than the rest of the population.

And you have come out of this long line of ancestry and that gives you your identity. You might even have a title. In some countries, they still have titles.

So you grow up and your 10-year-old girl is told, oh, your name is Lady So-and-so. Oh, now if you're trapped in that to get out of that, not easy. You've been given that sense of specialness and so the main, the core of your identity lies then in your ancestry and it can have you in its grip until you're on your deathbed and you never know that you are trapped in an illusory sense of identity.

Now, most people don't have that, but they may have other things. They may have more possessions than others in their family or they may have achievements in that they came out of nothing and then they achieved this, that and that and then they identify with the material achievements and so on, possessions and that can give you a great sense of identity too, never satisfying for long, that's the thing. There's always this element of unsatisfactoriness, of something really important is missing and even if you have an aristocratic title, Lady Diana, for example, going back, she was not fulfilled by her title and her ancestry, which goes back hundreds of years and, but was very unhappy and so, and this is quite normal that you have that identity but you're, and you're trapped in it and you are, there's always in the background the unhappiness and then, of course, you might have a body that's more beautiful than others then you can focus on that and that gives you a sense of superiority towards others.

So, and that's a temporarily a nice thing and then as the years pass, a day will come when you look in the mirror and something has changed. That beautiful body has shrunk or expanded, whatever the case may be. I see, I saw the other day in Sidney walking along the harbor front on a beautiful sunny morning, pleasant, not hot, less warm than it is here, people walking and there was one man who probably, who had taken off his shirt and he was walking through these crowds of people and the strange coincidence is that this man, of course, must have been so hot in this weather that he felt compelled to take off his shirt but by a strange coincidence, he had the most wonderful physique.

But, he was extremely masculine, just very impressive and many people looked and some tried not to look and just glance and you could see how satisfying it was for him to walk through there. So, he was lucky that he felt so hot that he had to take off his shirt. And of course, there will have been other egos ego identities walking and looking at him who felt diminished by looking, it's normal for the ego, it felt diminished.

And so, and then looked the other way, I'm not going to look at him. So, it's normal for the ego to feel diminished because it always compares itself to others and then the ego sometimes tries to compensate. Again, you have to arrange your identity somehow when he tries to compensate for this diminishment.

For example, by saying, just a few thoughts compensate for the diminishment of the ego and they're all, it's all unconscious thinking. For example, the thoughts go, oh, look at that beach bum there. I bet all he does is hang around the beach every day and surfing, not a thought in his head.

Okay, that makes you feel better for a little while. If you're in your big car, you can feel superior towards others and then others will look, but then there may be a man on a bicycle. He's looking at you in your big car and say, look at this materialist.

Whereas I am completely non-attached to these things. And I'm totally happy on my bicycle because I'm beyond these things. That's a very subtle, so-called spiritual ego.

You can feel superior because you're more spiritual than others, not realizing that also is a mind-made sense of self, a mind-made identity. Amazing. And many people carry a very unhappy or predominantly uneasy, unhappy, complaining, insufficient personality with them.

And that's who I think they are. And it's an awful way to be and nobody has taught them that that ultimately is not who you are. That's the conditioning of your mind.

And that is the emotions that also accompany the conditioning of your mind. And so the question arises, well, if I'm not that, if I'm not that, who am I? And that is the most important question you can ask yourself.

Now, in our mainstream culture, they will tell you that that question makes no sense whatsoever because they believe obviously you are your past and you are who you are as a person. They deny that there is anything else. So as you are here, I would suggest that that which is beyond the personality in you has already awakened and that has brought you here.

And that goes far beyond a personal thing. That which is beyond the personality, a dimension of consciousness in you, in the human, that is deeper. You could say higher, but I prefer the term deeper than the personality and then the continuous stream of thinking, which is the basis for the personality, has already awakened in you and has brought you here.

But that goes something beyond the personal. That is something, what has ultimately brought you here is the fact that human consciousness is evolving and the evolving human consciousness through you has brought you here in order to deepen the awakening. With a few exceptions, there may be some who didn't come of their own free will.

Or they were dragged here by somebody and then they reluctantly agreed, okay, I'll come along and listen to this guy for four hours. Oh my God. And then they sit here and say, what's he talking about?

It's just, makes no sense whatsoever. And because the words are being perceived by this person, this imaginary person, which may not be imaginary, maybe. The words are being perceived, but they do not go beyond the clutter of his or her mind.

So they get trapped in the clutter of the mind. So you listen to the words, but there's nothing in you that recognize that to which the words point. And so all you have is they get trapped in the clutter of your mind.

And so it's completely meaningless. And so there needs to be a little opening in the stream of, in the mind stream, there needs to be a little opening, a little crack. And most of you, that's there.

And in some of you, there's more than that already. And in that opening, then the words can go in and then that to which the words point is recognized. So when I say, for example, the essence of who you are, when I say beyond the personality, beyond your personal history, there is a deeper essence of who you are.

And for a moment, you can sense the recognition within you of the truth of that.

[Speaker 6] (1:04:20 - 1:04:34)
I wanted to ask, what is the role of being in service to others in one's spiritual development? And I guess you can say it in the overall evolutionary impulse of the universe to borrow a phrase from your book. Okay.

[Speaker 1] (1:04:35 - 1:15:56)
Thank you. It can be a wonderful spiritual practice if it arises from the right place inside you and it can also be a strengthening of your ego if it arises from a different place inside you. Jesus talked about that when he talked about giving arms.

Some people, he said, like to be seen when they give arms to the poor, they want to be seen. And he says, those people are not going to get a reward in heaven, what that means we'll look at in a second, because they have their reward already. And of course, what their reward already is, is that it's a feeding of the ego.

That's their reward. So now there are two ways of being seen when you give service, either you give something to somebody, it could be help, providing active help, or giving something that you have, a way to somebody to help them, whatever it is, that one needs to look at the motivation. And there are two ways of being seen.

One is to talk about it more than is necessary. Or to just make sure that others see what you're doing or aware of what you're doing. Then you have your reward through that, which is the feeding of the ego.

But there's another interior way of seeing it when you have your own self image and you're in service, because it makes you feel better about yourself. It improves your self image. That is still fine, it may help somebody, so it's a good thing to do, but it doesn't really help you to become free internally.

So there's a self image that some people need to feel that they are giving to others. And there's this image of, I am giving to him, you are the doer. You see yourself as the doer of good, and you see yourself as sacrificing something that you give to another.

So it improves your ego, really, how you see yourself, because what is ego but an inner self reflection? Ego is like an inner mirror, where you are not yourself, you have an image of yourself, and you live through this mental image of yourself. And the image of yourself is usually not satisfying.

So every ego tries to improve the image of oneself, and it can do it in many, many different ways. But, and then you have the image of me, the doer of the good deed, and that really strengthens the image. And then there's another way of giving.

I think the expression is where the left hand doesn't know what the right hand does, or something like that. The right hand doesn't know what the left hand is doing, which means you don't have the self image as you are giving of something that you own. You are helping the other.

There's an outflow of energy in whatever form, and it's not yours. It's not yours, you're not giving anything that is yours, because ultimately nothing is yours. You're giving energy because that energy in whatever form comes from the source of all energy.

All energy derives from one source. And so you give, you allow yourself to be a vehicle through which this energy flows out into the world. And then the sense of me, the doer, isn't there.

And the sense of there's the poor person that I am helping isn't there either, these concepts. So there's simply the process that happens through you. And that is the non-egoic way.

And then to be of service is a beautiful spiritual practice too, because the ego is out of the way, dissolves through that when you realize you don't own anything ultimately, and the energy is not yours. It's universal energy that comes through. So to be a vehicle for that, and in that way you are a help, really, when that happens, you begin to live in that way.

You're always in service to others. You're even in service to others in ordinary situations that would not normally be recognized as service to others, because you recognize the other in their essential being, which is the greatest service that you can give somebody, far greater than anything material, although there's nothing wrong with that either. But the greatest service is to recognize the essence or the reality of the other person.

Everything else passes away. Everything else is transitory. But that recognition of the other as God, I don't use that word very often, and one with who you are, to see that, that is the greatest service you can give, which is the realization of who that person truly is beyond the form.

Not to come from form, not believing this form is helping that form, but realizing there's something here that is beyond form. So if you're only in form, then you can also very easily deplete yourself. I'm trying to be helpful.

There are many people who are social workers or therapists, and after a few years, they experience a burnout because they're continuously trying to give and help, and then they need, they can't do it anymore. So in The Power of Now, I believe I wrote that whenever you help people, there needs to be a balance between the, maybe I didn't write it there, there needs to be a balance between the doing out there and being rooted in being. And so that's, no matter where you are in life or what you do, otherwise you will lose yourself in your service to others very quickly, and then you're not of service to anybody anymore.

Then you'll need therapy yourself, or you'll need charity yourself. So to stay, be rooted in being while you do is essential so that the energy can continue to move through you. So you're addressing, you can address the causes of human suffering in the external world, sorry, the effects of human suffering in the external world, but the cause of human suffering is in the consciousness, in the human consciousness.

So that is vital to be rooted in yourself, not be part of the unconsciousness that produces the dysfunction that is in this world. There are people who try to do their best, even organizations often try to do their best to help others, and they become part sometimes without wanting to, they become part of the mess. There's infighting in the organization itself.

It's amazing how many institutions and organizations, the enormous amount of infighting that there is, they are supposed to help people. Sometimes they are even religious organizations. The enormous amount of conflict in there, and there's, stop, stop, stop doing.

Just connect with the spaciousness that is within you. Stay rooted there and then do. Never lose the rootedness in this.

Remember, I use this and this, the two modalities or dimensions. This is the world of form and doing. This is the formless and being.

So when you help others, the two need to be there also. Always the balance between doing and being. You cannot solve the problems of this world through doing only, because if there's only doing and you try to solve the problems of the world, you will contribute to the problems of the world.

Hence the expression, the road to hell is paved with good intentions.

[Speaker 8] (1:16:02 - 1:16:03)
Thank you very much.

[Speaker 1] (1:17:11 - 1:33:12)
If you are a meditator, of course you can use whatever method you are familiar with, but ultimately don't confuse meditation with a method. This is very common. The method is designed to facilitate the state of consciousness.

At some point, every meditation method needs to be dropped so that you can be in meditation, which is state of presence, which is not a method. If you get too attached to your method, then the method, which was very helpful for quite a while, gets transformed into an obstacle. In some schools, such as Zen, they mostly use no method at all, and that is why they call meditation sitting.

So when you go to a Zen monastery, somebody may ask you, how long have you been sitting? And if you're not familiar with Zen, you're saying, I'm not sitting, I'm standing. But if you are familiar with the jargon, you'd say, yeah, I've been sitting for 25 years.

And then you will be asked, and you still haven't got it? So if you can enter presence directly without a method, it's, of course, best. And ultimately, there's no longer meditation, and the rest of my life is, they come together.

The rest of their life becomes meditation. Whatever you do, wherever you are, body, presence. And no drifting off into thinking.

That's the Zen master speaking, without the stick. If thoughts arise, don't get involved in them. Just let them drift past, drift in and out of awareness.

Be the sky, not the thoughts, not the clouds, you're the sky. Occasional cloud doesn't matter. You are the space.

You are the sky. You may encounter, Boredom sometimes in meditation, because meditation is not interesting. So you encounter a little barrier inside.

And then you surrender to that and you go beyond boredom. And then impulses may come.

[Speaker 2] (1:33:13 - 1:33:18)
You want to get up, start thinking about something.

[Speaker 1] (1:33:25 - 1:49:15)
And you observe that. And then it arises and passes away. Many things in meditation you can practice.

The arising of feeling or thought or some impulse. You can watch it. And if you don't have a reactive relationship towards it, you don't give it excessive importance.

It subsides again. And then you're left with just you as spacious awareness. And then the next thing comes.

And you're still there as spacious awareness, even though the thought has come in. And then it subsides. And then the body gets restless.

And then the mind says, I need to get up. I can't carry on sitting here. And then you watch that.

You watch the restlessness. Everything is allowed in the present moment. Any external disturbance immediately becomes part of your meditation.

There's never anything outside. Unless you're physically attacked by a mountain lion. There's never anything outside that can actually disturb your meditation.

Even a big, what they call in England, pneumatic drill, I can't remember what it's called here. Same thing. It starts up next door.

Imagine. And you say, I can't meditate in conditions like this. But the surprising thing is, you don't need ideal conditions for meditation.

In other words, every condition is ideal for meditation. If you totally accept the so-called disturbance, you surrender. It becomes part of the meditation.

You have transcended. If you want to overcome the pneumatic drill, you have to run out there and say, stop that. Then you have either overcome it or you are in an argument.

Transcendence is meditation. Whatever arises. And that becomes the way in which you live your life.

That you never oppose anything. Anything that comes in you. And then you go with it, around it.

You don't oppose it. It's accepted. The present moment is accepted.

So, and you can practice that during your meditation. All there ever is in your life, I think everybody must admit, be able to admit that, all there ever is is the present moment. That's how you experience life, as the present moment.

And if you disregard that and reduce it to a means to an end or actively dislike it, then your life is dysfunctional and extremely unconscious and you are a trouble to yourself. You create problems. You create conflict continuously.

It's insane. So the acknowledgement of the present moment is absolutely vital. So it begins with acknowledging whatever arises in the present moment.

Not internally resisting whatever arises in the present moment. And that's another practice here. As you let go of your habitual, the habits of your personality, they gradually recede, subside.

And you no longer argue with the present moment. Because for many people, there's a habit of discontent. They're not rooted in being, so they're discontent.

There's always a discontent somewhere floating around. And then they seek explanations for the underlying feeling of discontent. Easy to find explanations why you're not happy.

And they start even here. Various obstacles can arise here to the deepening of your consciousness. One of the obstacle is the patterns of your mind that travel with you, that are part of your personality.

The patterns of your mind, and the same thing, they create a reactivity to things or to people. But another obstacle is, it's too nice here. It's too pleasant.

How can you awaken in paradise? Nobody would awaken in paradise. You're much more likely to awaken in hell.

But don't worry, even here, you will be challenged, either by external events, seeing significant things, but they'll bring up some kind of complaint. I'm not talking about complaint when something needs to be rectified, something can be done about it, but the other kind of complaining. Ah.

So watch your mind, observe patterns of reactivity and useless complaining if they arise, because complaining is an important part of many egos. For many egos, complaining is a very important part of their sustenance, they thrive on it. Criticizing, complaining, finding fault here and there.

It's all part of the underlying discontent of something, always a sense of something not being right, something not right, something is missing, don't know what, something missing, sense of not enough, even this is not enough, this wasn't what I was expecting, I was expecting something else, there are too many people here, I was expecting something smaller. I can't do it here, there's too many, this isn't right, oh, it's too touristy, I don't like it here, there are tourists around, tourists. Well, but according to the latest research, tourists are actually human beings.

So if you come to a place of living aligned with the is-ness of the moment, this is a beautiful spiritual practice until it becomes second nature, being in alignment with the is-ness of now, and that means also the thinking mind slows down the more you are aligned with the is-ness of now, and you acknowledge the now and whatever arises in the now, including and especially the small things in the present moment.

And you begin to enjoy just walking from here to there, a few steps, conscious of taking one step at a time, handling an object, putting on your shoes or your saddles, making a cup of tea, you come to acknowledge the aliveness of everything, even so-called inanimate objects, because ultimately nothing is inanimate. I want to go more deeply into that during this retreat. All the ancient cultures, ancient civilizations, including the Polynesian civilization here, but going back everywhere, they all had the primordial spirituality of all ancient cultures was what is called, sometimes called in anthropology, animism.

Animism means not just the belief, but the feeling or the sensing that everything in this world has a spirit, has a soul, anima from soul, Latin from soul. Animism underlies all ancient spirituality everywhere. The sensing that the world is intensely alive, there is a hidden presence in all things, not just alive things, but also so-called inanimate things.

There is a hidden presence. And that is, we are returning to that realization now at a deeper level. Sometimes in ancient civilizations, they interpret it as everything has a little spirit.

There's this little spirit here and a spirit there. But of course, it's deeper than that. Everything is a manifestation of consciousness.

Consciousness is the intelligence that underlies the universe. There is a vast intelligence that is the organizing principle behind the manifestation of all life forms. There's a vast intelligence at work beyond sense perceptions.

And so everything has, the Romans believed it, Polynesians believed it, the ancient Europeans believed it, in Africa, everywhere, in China, in Taoism, all that, in Roman times, every house, they believed, had an energy field that they called the spirit of the house. And of course, in China, in Japan, you have feng shui, a similar thing, that still has survived from those times, since there is an energy field. Whereas for contemporary humans, the advanced humans, the world has become lifeless.

That started with scientific materialism in the 19th century. And the world has become, it's not really perceived as being alive. And even the natural world was regarded as a, they began to regard the natural world as a commodity.

So they lost, I think, that sense of the aliveness and ultimately the sacredness of all things that is hiding beyond the appearance. And that is a terrible loss, and this is why we have arrived at such a crisis point now. But that is a loss within the human, because through excessive conceptualization, the ego has grown and grown and grown, and this excessive conceptualization deadens the world around you, because everything is filtered through concepts.

Every human that you meet is called something, it's filtered through conceptualization. No longer, there's no longer the sense of connectedness, neither from human to another, nor from human to nature. And even the connectedness with an object.

I've had for many years, I've had this, people, when I mention it, people think I'm a little weird. Well, I suppose I am a little weird, but for always that sense of certain objects that I live with, they're kind of my friends.

[Speaker 2] (1:49:15 - 1:49:19)
It's not an attached, not an egoic attachment, just an acknowledgement.

[Speaker 1] (1:49:49 - 2:22:33)
The essence of meditation is, of course, stillness. Every meditation technique is designed to take you into stillness. So one could say that whatever technique you use is not the meditation.

Although techniques can be helpful. The true meditation, of course, is stillness, and then we don't need to call it meditation anymore. Because to be aware of stillness is the arising of your natural state, we could call that.

Your natural state of connectedness. Connectedness with what? Something deeper than the person that you also are.

You are a person, but there is a depth to who you are where the person merges with something huge. And we could call it the intelligence that underlies the manifested universe. Intelligence that pervades and at the same time is beyond the manifested universe and you as a person are one aspect, of course, of the manifested universe.

You are the universe manifesting for a very fleeting moment as a person. But there's more to you than the fleeting person. The fleeting person exists in time.

And even if you reach 100 years or beyond, it's still fleeting. So the person exists in time and the depth of who you are is outside of time. Please, as you sit here and listen, stay alert and become aware, particularly of the spaces between the words or this is not really spaces, it's one space.

Let's call it like that for a moment. We could also call it stillness. Become aware of the stillness between the words.

And realize that the moment you become aware of the stillness between the words and also the stillness behind the words, the moment you become aware of that, you have become still inside, which means you're not thinking, but fully conscious and alert. And already at that, right away, you are connected with something deep and vast. Although from the point of view of the thinking person, it may look as if you had become nothing.

So when you look into my eyes, as I'm not thinking, the words just come. I'm not thinking about them. So the mind is, the mind does operate the moment I speak, but not before and not after.

So when you look into my eyes, because I'm not thinking, you're not looking at a person. You're looking at that which is deeper than the person, which is consciousness. Of course, you can't look at consciousness, but you can connect with consciousness.

And although on the surface reality, it looks as if you were connecting with somebody out there, you're really connecting with a deeper dimension within yourself. And that's, we could call it stillness. Now the person, if the person is not connected with the dimension of stillness, it's hard for the person to realize how important stillness is.

In fact, the person is more likely to be either uninterested in stillness or even afraid of it. But if you ask me, what do you think is the most important thing in my life? What is the most important achievement in my life?

I would say it's the ability to become still, to be still. And as I said in the little book called Stillness Speaks, it's only when you become still that you are really fully yourself. So in daily life, it's important to be able to constantly step back into stillness as you go about your daily activities.

And while you think, use your mind, not think continuously, not being dragged along in a stream of one thought after another, and another, and another, and another, and another, until finally you fall asleep and then have restless dreams. Fortunately, you go into dreamless sleep for a little while, become still, you merge with something vast. But as you wake up in the morning, you quickly lose it again.

The mind immediately starts up. And we live in this era of digital gadgets. When it's become even more important than it was before, to cultivate, so to speak, your ability to be still, because the gadgets that we have, the smartphones, the games, computers, bombard us continuously.

And stimulate continuously the thinking mind. It goes from one thing to another and another. Emails, text messages, the phone ringing, Facebook, Twitter, everything demanding your immediate attention, and then you go there.

You're at the mercy of these devices, well, many people seem to be, and get addicted to the continuous constant stimulus. You get pulled this way, that way, that way. Never having any kind of stillness inside yourself, nor inner space, just stuff.

Stuff without space. And then of course, inevitably after a while, you feel depleted, and still you can't stop. And youngsters finding it harder and harder to focus on anything for very long, more than a few seconds.

Because they've been conditioned to always look to the next thing. They can never stay with anything for more than a few seconds. And now they call it an illness that needs to be treated with drugs, attention deficit disorder.

What's the answer? Give them drugs. So at this time, it's even more important to have this ability to be still, even while you're thinking, in between your thinking, back into stillness.

When you talk to somebody, you talk while you listen, you're still. Present, alert, just that field of attention while you listen. When you look at something, nature, the sky, a tree, you're still.

And you know that you're still, but not by saying in your mind, oh, I'm still. No, you can sense yourself as the stillness. So the most important thing in your life is to become familiar with stillness and have stillness as your constant companion, so to speak.

Your best friend. And that is spiritual awakening, which simply means not to be completely identified with every thought or emotion. That arises.

To realize there's something more to who you are than the continuously arising thoughts and emotions and also sense perceptions. There is more to who you are than that, meaning also there is more to who you are than your, what that in quotation marks, your life. There is more to who you are than what you conventionally consider to be my life.

What you think of as your life, your life situation, what's going on in your life, your relationships, your work, where you live, your finances, your health. Those things make up your life. They are the life of the person.

Are those things completely insignificant? No. They matter.

They have some importance. As I've said somewhere before, of course it matters whether you are poor financially or live in abundance, makes a difference. And most people would probably choose abundance except ardent spiritual seekers who believe that by choosing poverty, they might be able to discover, find God.

Or become spiritually awakened. Of course, there's no guarantee whatsoever if you choose poverty that will awaken you spiritually. It could.

It doesn't. In most cases, it doesn't for those people who practice it. Because true poverty is not to be identified with anything in the world of form.

Not to derive your sense of self, not only from things that you possess, but from any self image in your mind. So you may only possess a loincloth and a begging bowl and yet be identified with an image in your mind of who you are, a highly advanced spiritual being, infinitely superior to all these silly people who are still identified with possessions and other things. Of course, the moment this happens, you're not poor at all.

You are still rich in identification with who you are. And that's heavier than any external possession and mental image of who you are. And even, especially if the image is of spiritually highly advanced, is more of an obstacle than external possessions.

So this is why Jesus said the poor in spirit. That's what he really meant. And that somebody wrote it down correctly.

A lot of things were not written down correctly. I think a few people did take notes when he taught. Blessed are the poor in spirit, which means internally poor, no identification with anything.

So it matters whether you are rich or poor, healthy or not healthy, or have a nice job, or a nice family, harmonious, or live in a nice place. But all these things are very unstable. There's very, almost never a time, and if there is, it's very short, when all the factors that make up your life situation are working perfectly.

Health, finances, work situation, family, relationships, living situation. So, and that's how it is. It's in the nature of phenomenal existence to be in continuous flux.

It continuously changes. Things come and go and disappear. Things may satisfy you for a while, and then they no longer satisfy you.

Things make you happy for a while, then they make you unhappy, because they lose their ability to make you happy, or they disappear. So there's something that is much more important than anything in your life situation, and that's the ability to be still. That's one way of putting it.

And in that, you realize that a depth, there's a depth to who you are, a presence that shows to you without any doubt that whatever happens in your life situation out there is of secondary importance. And when things are not satisfying in your life situation, whether it's to do with money, work, relationships, living situation, health, it is often precisely at those moments when things don't work in one or several of these areas that there's an opportunity for you to go deeper within yourself and find that realm of stillness or spaciousness or presence, whatever you want to call it. So you become, to some extent, free from external conditions, from the conditions of your life, including the physical body, even that's still external, no longer have the ability to make you really unhappy, really upset and frustrated and fearful and anxious.

On the other side, this may sound like bad news, but it's not. All these external things also lose their ability to make you really happy. Wow, yeah, I got it now, yeah.

You can still feel enthusiastic and enjoy life tremendously, whatever life gives you in the world of form. But there's always something, there's something transcendent in you and something from where you observe and enjoy the beautiful things that come into your life. There is an enjoyment there, but you don't give them an importance that they don't have.

You don't attach yourself to them. You allow them to be. It may be a possession that comes to you and it's lovely.

You look after it, whatever it is, a house, an object. You appreciate it. It's lovely.

You look after it without that strong sense of attachment of mine.

[Speaker 2] (2:23:02 - 2:23:15)
If you place excessive focus on the imperfection or areas of unconsciousness, you can no longer meet this person in a space of openness.

[Speaker 1] (2:23:21 - 2:55:33)
I always start with not knowing what to say. That's the reason for the silence. And I recommend that you do that too before any creative activity or anything, just become comfortable with not knowing, which means not thinking, which does not mean you are going to sleep or unconscious, or it could happen that you suddenly drop below thinking.

It happens to some people here. Now, normally to sit in front of an audience and not know what to say could be a nightmare. In fact, some people have nightmares of that kind.

They're sitting somewhere and suddenly the curtain opens and it's a theater and they're all looking. I've forgotten my lines. Public speaking for many people is one of the most stressful things.

And that's because they can't go, become comfortable with not knowing. The big difference is becoming comfortable with not knowing and feeling, I don't know, but I should know. That's very uncomfortable.

Remember what the great philosopher, Socrates said, they call me the wisest of all men for the reason that I'm the only one who knows that he knows nothing. Nobody really has truly understood what he meant. People thought he was just pretending not to know, but I'm convinced that he was referring to the state of not knowing, which is also, of course, the state of not thinking, but awareness out of which the whole philosophy emerged.

The creative use of mind emerged out of the space of no mind. If you have no access to the space of no mind, then your mind will not be creative in any way. In other words, it's just, you can only have to rely on what you have acquired and you will be moving within the conditioned realm of the mind, whatever the mind has been conditioned by.

That's all you have then. Another area where it's very helpful, this not knowing, is not to formulate conclusions on limited, insufficient evidence, to come to conclusions that become rigid thoughts in your mind concerning, for example, other people or yourself, or what you call your life. Such as, for example, let's say you have a relationship, a intimate relationship, then he or she betrays you in the conventional narrative.

And then you've immediately, the mind jumps to this conclusion. I'm never going to trust any woman or man again, never. That's a term you've just would have constructed a dreadful prison for yourself.

So you have a thought that suddenly dominates your mind in order to, I'm not going to suffer again in that way. This is no more, these conclusions can become self-made prisons. And then you walk in and you shut the door and there you are stuck in that mind pattern and never again being able to relate openly to a man or a woman.

And then you've other weird, weird conclusions that people arrive at. Some of them are so-called prejudices and so on. They're very rigid mental formations that deprive you of openness towards reality.

So it's good to be with relation to other people, also frequently not to be very careful with formulating conclusions about other people, individuals or groups of people. Remain as much as possible in the state of not knowing conceptually. And yet there is a deep knowing there, but it's not a knowing that creates separation between you and the other.

And so it's easy to find imperfections in people when you start working with them or living with them. And if you place excessive focus on the imperfection or areas of unconsciousness, then that can obliterate the totality of that person. For example, let's say somebody lies to you about something for whatever, people lie for different reasons, maybe even to not to hurt you or whatever, who knows what the reason is.

And then you find out and then you say, oh, he's a liar, I know what kind of a person that is now, he's a liar, he lied to me, to me. Of course, that makes it much worse than me. And once you have formulated an opinion or a judgment of that kind, you can no longer meet this person in a space of openness because immediately the judgment you formulated is there between you and you relate, this becomes part of the screens of conceptualization through which you then relate to that person.

Now, if you formulate a judgment about an entire group of people, as political group of people, religious group of people, all, whatever they are, are like that, all, then when you meet an individual representative of that group, you will no longer be able to meet him or her because you're meeting your mental image that you have created. So the true meeting is no longer possible. So very dangerous traps in your mind, created by your mind, by unconscious mental activity, what is conventionally called, which is fashionable these days, identity politics and stuff like that is also dangerous because you have entire groups of people and anybody who belongs to that group, you don't no longer look at the individual human being, say, anybody who belongs to this group is like that. It could be a political, racial group or whatever it may be.

So it's all to do with forming mental screens so that make communication almost impossible, true communication. There are quite a few people who do not express emotions fully or don't express them at all. Perhaps even more so in Northern countries, the further North you go, the less they express their emotions.

That's how it seems to be. Maybe it's too cold to express your emotions. Now, the practice I describe of observing your emotions, allowing them to be, for somebody who habitually does not express emotions, it is not usually the best way to start.

Try and observe his or her emotions because they may not even know what emotions they are having. They may be so much pushed down. So particularly for those people who have been suppressing emotions, it is very helpful to express the emotions, if possible, without injuring anybody or yourself, to allow yourself to express emotions and witness that at the same time.

So the expression itself would not free you because emotions, if they are not observed and not witnessed, tend to renew themselves through renewed thinking because there's this vicious circle between emotion and thought processes. So the expression alone is not enough because you would simply be stuck with it and express the anger because the anger dissipates somewhat as you express it. But if you are not conscious of the relationship between your thought processes and the anger, the thought processes will create renewed anger.

And so you would be going to the same or other therapists and hitting the pillows for 20 or 30 years, not realizing that through your thought processes, you're continuously recreating emotion and you're identifying so much. So without the presence, expression is better than repression. Repression can make you ill, but to become, to transcend, it is essential to be alert and present and watch it as an energy field so that through the watching, it becomes depersonalized so that you don't feel you're not totally stuck in it.

And then you can express it, hit something, not a person if possible, the pillow, if it's anger or scream, and it feels good perhaps and feel the raw energy of it like fire and feel it, wow. And if you allow it completely and express it, it can even very quickly turn around and then you can do something useful that you have an enormous energy and suddenly it gets turned around and it's just, it's no longer, it can shift from anger to just being intense energy. Okay, now I'm going to clean my room.

Not angry anymore, simply with energy. You could also clean your room still being angry, but that's not good cleaning because you would be cleaning on the material level and on an energetic level, you would be polluting your room. And so to become free, for a while, some people need to express fully and then a time comes when there's enough presence and you have expressed it, then you can gradually more and more work on the inner level and bring presence to it on the inner, not that you ever hold it down.

If it wants to and needs to express itself, you may do something, maybe you can transform it into physical movement, vigorous movement or whatever it is and watch, but always be there as a witness. At some point, you may find that you have a choice. The emotion arises, you can express it or not express it.

And it can simply be transformed or transmuted through bringing presence to it. You will know in the moment whether it needs to express itself or not. If you have never or rarely expressed emotion, then by all means, allow yourself to express it without indulging and without personalizing it, recognizing it as energy, no more, just as energy.

And watch. So what in your life as you pursue a goal, another way of putting, of approaching it is to ask yourself if you are not really enjoying while you pursue the goal, whatever it is in your life, if you are not really enjoying the doing because you are so focused on becoming and achieving and arriving at this future point that the enjoyment of the doing is greatly diminished or disappears completely because all you want to do is arrive, but you're not there yet.

That's the nature of stress, how stress arises. Stress means there is a continuous focus on the next moment. So you are torn away, and this is produced by the human mind through thinking, you are torn away internally from the present moment into a nonexistent, because the future never exists except as a thought, you are torn into this so-called future, which is a never land because it can never arrive, you can never reach the future because the moment it becomes reality in your life, it's the present moment.

So by having this mindset, an excessive focus on becoming or arriving or achieving, you lose completely the being dimension. And then your life is completely out of balance, even if you achieve in the eyes of the world, fame or wealth or worldly success, and yet you are a frustrated and unhappy human being, perhaps pretending that you are happy, but you're not. And then you have to take drugs or alcohol or go from one relationship to another or compulsively pursue the next thing and the next thing and the next thing, accumulate more of this and this and this, and so that's not a mastery of life.

Even if you have your private debt, does not mean you have achieved mastery of life. In fact, you may be completely deluded. Not necessarily, you could have a private debt and have achieved the mastery, wouldn't that be great?

So that is, our purpose here is to have that balance and here the emphasis, of course, of this teaching is on finding the being dimension, awareness of being, which is why I talk so much about the present moment, because this is always the moment your attention goes fully into the present moment, you have withdrawn attention from becoming and doing, and what arises is the being dimension. So, and that is associated also with a sometimes brief, but vitally important cessation of thinking. In that moment, when you become completely aware of the present moment, and it starts with sense perception, you're suddenly aware of your surroundings.

You may also suddenly be aware of the inner energy field that you feel you're alive. In this present moment, there is aliveness all around you, and you can perceive it through your senses. You hear, you feel, you see, you smell, but there's also an aliveness, an inherent aliveness in your body.

So you become aware simultaneously in the present moment of a sense of aliveness within and without. So in addition to what you see with your senses, there is an underlying field of aliveness that you can be aware of in the present moment, and that's the being dimension or presence. And that's who you are in essence, but that's not only who you are in essence.

That is the essence of everything. So when you realize that for yourself, it's not the person who has that realization. The universe has that realization.

The universe, which for a moment, because your life is a moment on a cosmic scale, your life here as a person has a very short duration. It goes, choop, choop. Well, was that it?

Yeah. Then the element of continuous, frustration and discontent, and the feeling there's something not right here, or the feeling there's something vital missing in my life, but always looking to the next thing to find that vital thing that's missing in my life. I have to find it.

If you don't realize it's already here, so there's something. I don't feel, I don't feel complete. There's still something lacking, a sense of lack.

Something is missing. Don't know what it is. You might even not verbally say that.

There's just a feeling that something is missing or something is not right. Of course not, because your life is completely out of balance, but you're, I'm not nothing personal. I'm not talking to you.

I'm talking in general terms. If your life were completely out of balance, you wouldn't be here. Or if you had accidentally stumbled upon this place, you would soon leave.

So the being dimension is accessed, obviously, in the present moment. And the doing, of course, requires time. You cannot do anything without some dimension of time.

Make a cup of tea. You need some time to make a cup of tea. Learn to become this or that.

You need time to become a doctor or to become a musician or to become a dancer or to become whatever you need. Time, that's the time-temporal dimension. And yet, although you need time, the paradox is that you never really, not really, that you never actually experience time or the passing of time, except in your head as a thought, as an anticipation of the next moment or a memory of the last or other moments of the past.

That's how you experience time. But never as a direct experience. Time, you can never experience directly because whenever you ask yourself, where's time?

All you ever get is the present moment. So, on one level of your life, time seems vital or to do things. Now, on another side of that coin of time, where on one hand, time seems useful because you can, on the level, surface level of reality, you can do things in time and become, from being an ignorant person, become a very knowledgeable person in time.

It takes time to acquire knowledge on that level. And yet, that's a good aspect of time, but then there's something else aspect of time which you discover when you compare a photo of yourself taken at the age of 20, let's say you are now 40 or 50 or whatever, and you discover, oh, that's me 20 years ago, and then you look in the mirror, or 30 years ago, what happened to me? Time, who did this to me?

Time. Oh, my God. And if you're young and beautiful or strong and healthy, then you can still know that eventually, time is going to erode your good looks.

No, this is not tragic unless you are very much identified, you derive your sense of identity from your physical body, which might look good right now, but won't in time. Time will, and then, of course, what ultimately time, of course, what time does, it kills you. So first, it enables you to do things and to become, but then at the same time, you begin to wilt like a flower.

It does, so time does that to a flower too, much more quickly than a human, but very similar. It does it to a fruit, a piece of fruit. If you want to observe the passing of time, all you can do is to observe the effect that time has on things, but you cannot observe time because it's never there.

It's a paradox. One could go into this or make it into a huge philosophical thing, which I won't do. It's enough for you to see in your personal, your immediate experience, time is not something that you can ever experience directly.

It only leaves behind evidence it's been there. A dead body, for example. Or an apple that three, two weeks ago was very fresh and now it's all wrinkled and has gone.

And two weeks before it was, the apple looked, and it's the same with young humans. They can be very radiant and then gradually. Now, an interesting thing happens for those humans who are not totally identified with that level of form, but who have access to being dimension as they grow older, the being dimension, as the physical vehicle gets gradually eroded by time, the physical, sorry, the being dimension is actually able to shine through more.
